before us, and with us. We know, too, that the exceptions to this general belief are rare, - so very rare that they are sufficient only, like other exceptions, to prove a general rule.

Adams, Henry (February 16, 1838-March 27, 1918), was an American philosopher and historian. He was the great-grandson of John Adams, the grandson of John Quincy Adams, and the son of Charles Francis Adams. He authored The Education of Henry Adams, 1918; as well as a nine volume work, entitled, History of the United States, 1889-91; in which he stated:

The Pilgrims of Plymouth, the Puritans of Boston, the Quakers of Pennsylvania, all avowed a moral purpose, and began by making institutions that consciously reflected a moral idea.

Lecky, William Edward Hartpole (March 26, 1838-October 22, 1903), was a Irish historian. His works include: A History of European Morals; and History of England in the Eighteenth Century. He stated concerning Christ:

Amid all the sins and failings, amid all the...persecution and fanaticism that have defaced the church, it has preserved in the character and example of its Founder, an enduring principle of regeneration.

United States Congress (July 5, 1838), approved An Act to increase the present military establishment of the United States, and for other purposes:

Section 18. And be it further enacted, That it shall be lawful for the officers composing the council of administration at any post, from time to time, to employ such persons as they may think proper to officiate as chaplains, who shall also perform the duties of a schoolmaster at such post; and the person so employed shall, on the certificate of the commanding officer of the post, be paid such sum for his services, not exceeding forty dollars per month, as may be determined by the said council of administration, with the approval Secretary of War. In addition to his pay, the said chaplain shall be allowed for rations per diem, with quarters and fuel.

Congress had previously passed the order:

The commanders of all ships and vessels in the navy having chaplains on board shall take care that divine service be performed in an orderly and reverent manner twice a day, and a sermon preached on Sunday, except bad weather or other extraordinary accident prevent it, and that they cause all, or as many of the ship's company as can be spared from duty, to attend every performance of the worship of Almighty God.

Chap. 204. - An Act for the better government of the navy of the United States. Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, from and after the first day of September next, the following articles be adopted and put in force for the government of the navy of the United States.

Article 1. The commanders of all fleets, squadrons, naval stations, and vessels belonging to the navy are strictly enjoined and required to show in themselves a good example of virtue, honor, patriotism, and subordination; to be vigilant in inspecting the conduct of all who may be placed under their command; to guard against and suppress all dissolute and immoral practices, and to correct all who may be guilty of them, according to the laws and regulations of the navy, upon pain of such punishment as a general court-martial may think proper to indict.

Article 2. The commanders of vessels and naval stations to which chaplains are attached shall cause divine service to be performed on Sunday, whenever the weather and other circumstances will allow it to be done; and it is earnestly recommended to all officers, seamen, and others in the naval service diligently to attend at every performance of the worship of Almighty God. Any irreverent or unbecoming behavior during divine service shall be punished as a general or summary court-martial shall direct.

On March 2, 1849, Congress extended the 1838 Act in An Act to provide for the increase of the Medical Staff, and for an additional number of Chaplains of the Army of the United States:

Section 3. And be it further enacted, That the provisions of the Act of eighteen hundred and thirty-eight be, and hereby are, extended so as to authorize the employment of ten additional chaplains for military posts of the United States.

[Referenced in the House Judiciary Committee Report of 1854.]

Wanamaker, John (July 11, 1838-December 12, 1922), was a U. S. Postmaster General, 1889-93; a financier; and founder of one of the first American department stores. He had served as secretary of the Philadelphia YMCA, 1857-61. In 1861, he formed a clothing business with Nathan Brown; in 1869 he founded John Wanamaker and Company; and in 1875 he purchased the freight depot of the Pennsylvania Railroad to house the store. John Wanamaker made numerous advancements in the field of advertising within the retail industry, having run the first full-page mercantile advertisement in an American paper. In addition, the two magazines he founded to carry advertising copy became precursors to today's mail-order catalogues. His store in Philadelphia had a 33,000-pipe organ which was played daily and prominently displayed paintings of Christ.

On July 9-11, 1889, in Philadelphia, during the Eighth Annual Conference of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavor, John Wanamaker exhorted:

I came only to salute you, as one working with you, and as one in sympathy with you. Whatever skepticism of the day may say, there is a power in the Gospel of the Lord Jesus Christ. Keep uppermost the profound conviction that it is the Gospel that is to win the heart and convert the world. The things that were sweet dreams in our childhood are now being worked out. The procession is being made longer and longer; the letters of Christ's name are becoming larger and larger.

John Wanamaker help found the Bethany Presbyterian Church and served as a senior elder. He led a John Wesley Class Meeting, with attendance growing to over 5,000 people, and was an active Sunday school superintendent for nearly 70 years. John Wanamaker stated:

I like to be present at the meeting, in the middle of the week, feeling, as I sit among the people gathered, some of them deaf, hearing hardly a spoken word and others with failing sight, that as the Lord passed around amongst them He might give me a blessing too.

John Wanamaker stated:

I cannot too greatly emphasize the importance and value of Bible study - more important than ever before in these days of uncertainties, when men and women are apt to decide questions from the standpoint of expediency rather than of the eternal principles laid down by God, Himself.

John Wanamaker prayed:

Our Father, we have come to sit down together to rest, after a busy week, and to think. We are not satisfied with ourselves for we all, like sheep, have gone astray. What we have done is what we ought not to have done. We are stung to the quick with disappointment, sorrow and desolation.

It seems as though there were a cankerworm eating at the core of our hearts, and there is no rest for our souls day or night. Have pity on us, Lord, and cut us not down in Thy displeasure. We confess our sin and bring it to Thee. Let our prayers prevail in Heaven, and do Thou heal and help us to a new life in Christ Jesus. Amen.

Hay, John Milton (October 8, 1838-July 1, 1905), was an ambassador to Great Britain under President McKinley. He served as Secretary of State, 1898-1905; and helped negotiate over fifty treaties. From the Open-Door policy with China, to the Panama Canal, to the Alaskan boundary, to the Philippine policy, he exerted a lasting impact on American foreign policy. In addition to serving as private secretary to President Lincoln, he was a poet and editorial writer for the New York Tribune. John Hay composed the poem:

Sinai and Calvary

But Calvary stands to ransom
The earth from utter loss;
In shade than light more glorious
The shadow of the Cross.
To heal a sick world's trouble,
To soothe its woe and pain,
On Calvary's sacred summit

American Quotations.txt
The Pascal Lamb was slain.

Almighty God! direct us
To keep Thy perfect Law!
O blessed Saviour, help us
Nearer to Thee to draw!
Let Sinai's thunder aid us
To guard our feet from sin,
And Calvary's light inspire us
The love of God to win.

On July 3, 1905, President Theodore Roosevelt issued a Proclamation which stated:

John Hay, Secretary of State of the United States, died on July 1st. His death, a crushing sorrow to his friends, is to the people of this country a national bereavement; and it is in addition a serious loss to all mankind, for to him it was given to stand as a leader in the effort to better world-conditions by striving to advance the cause of international peace. He entered the public service as the trusted and intimate companion of Abraham Lincoln, and for well-nigh forty-five years he served his country with loyal devotion and high ability in many positions of honor and trust; and finally he crowned his life work by serving as Secretary of State with such farsighted reading of the future and such loyalty to lofty ideals as to confer lasting benefits not only upon our own country but upon all the nations of the earth.

Mahan, Alfred Thayer (September 27, 1840-December 1, 1914) was an American Admiral. He came out of retirement to serve in the Spanish-American War. He was a member of the American delegation to the peace conference at The Hague, 1899; and was elected president of the American Historical Association, 1902. He held the position of president of the Naval War College at Newport, R.I., 1886-89, 1892-93, and authored books on naval strategy. His great works, The Influence of Sea Power upon History, 1660-1783; and The Influence of Sea Power upon the French Revolution and Empire, 1892, were not only studied at Annapolis, but were responsible for persuading President Theodore Roosevelt to increase U.S. Naval power. Alfred Thayer Mahan stated:

Upon the Bible my life rests for whatsoever is good and strong. Convinced that Christ is the Son of God, in the deepest sense attributed to those words, I not only find in this belief all the power of my life, but, in the account of His personality, an intellectual satisfaction that surpasses any other in its inexhaustible freshness, daily renewing my strength, and throwing an ever-increasing light upon the problems and difficulties of life.

It is this intellectual satisfaction that most impresses me; that the teachings of Jesus Christ contains a philosophy of life in fullest accord with experience, and also inexhaustible, in that its revelation is continuous.

While the faith in His teachings thus meet all my mental exigencies, I in no way derogate from its supernatural sanctions. He is to me one who speaks with authority no less than Divine, to whom I submit where I do not understand.

Holmes, Oliver Wendell, Jr. (March 8, 1841-March 6, 1935), was an Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court for 30 years. Appointed in 1902 by President Theodore Roosevelt, he was known as the "Great Dissenter." The son of Oliver Wendell Holmes, the author and physician, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr., graduated from Harvard College, served in the Union Army during the Civil War, and later became the editor of the American Law Review. He was a professor at the Harvard Law School before becoming the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of Massachusetts.

Known for his remarkable brilliance and humor, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr. wrote to William James in 1907:

The great act of faith is when man decides that he is not God.

In a letter to John C.H. Wu, dated 1924, Holmes wrote:

Have faith and pursue the unknown end.

On March 8, 1931, in reply to a reporter's question on his ninetieth birthday, Oliver Wendell Holmes, Jr. stated:

Young man, the secret of my success is that at an early age I discovered I was not God.

Sill, Edward Rowland (April 29, 1841-February 27, 1887), was an American poet and essayist. His works include: Opportunity; and the Fool's Prayer, in which he stated:

But Lord,
Be merciful to me, a fool!

Connecticut, Motto of the State of (1842), stated:

Qui Transtulit Sustinet (He Who Transplanted Still Sustains)

James, William (January 11, 1842-August 26, 1910), was a philosopher and psychologist, considered by some to be the father of modern psychology. A Harvard professor, his theory of ethics, called pragmatism, considered the distinction between truth and falsity, even in the area of religion and morals, not as important as solving problems. His works include The Principles of Psychology, 1890; The Varieties of Religious Experience, 1902; Pragmatism, 1907. Contemporary social engineering of psychological attitudes has been influenced by his thought. William James stated:

There is nothing so absurd but if you repeat it often enough people will believe it.

Strutt, John William, Lord (November 12, 1842-June 30, 1919), 3rd Baron Rayleigh, was a scientist at Cambridge, 1879-84; a member of the Royal Institution, 1887-1905; and the chancellor of Cambridge, 1908-19. He was the co-discoverer of Argon, 1895; as well as other rare gases. He pioneered the studies of electromagnetic wave motion, optics, sonics, gas dynamics, as well as perfecting similitude and dimensional analysis as scientific tools. A pioneer in developing molecular acoustics, Lord Rayleigh John Strutt was awarded the Nobel Prize for Physics in 1904.

American Quotations.txt

In the introduction to his published papers, he stated:

The works of the Lord are great, sought out of all them that have pleasure therein.

McKinley, William (January 29, 1843-September 14, 1901), was the 25th President of the United States, 1897-1901, assassinated shortly after re-election; won the Spanish-American War, 1898; annexed Guam, Puerto Rico, the Hawaiian Islands, the Philippine Islands, under Admiral George Dewey; defeated the Spanish in Cuba under Colonel Theodore Roosevelt and the "Roughriders"; put down the Boxer Rebellion in China, 1900; arranged the permanent lease of Guantanamo Bay in Cuba, 1901; planned the Panama Canal; Governor of Ohio, 1892-96; Ohio delegate to the Republican National Convention, 1892, 1888, 1884; U.S. Representative, 1876-83, 1885-91, being Chairman of the House Ways and Means Committee; married Ida Saxton, 1871; Prosecuting Attorney of Stark County, 1869; President of the Young Men's Christian Association (YMCA), Canton, Ohio, 1868; admitted to the bar, 1867, delivering his first political speeches in favor of Negro suffrage; Acting Assistant Adjutant-General of the 1st Division, 1st Army Corps, on the staff of General Samuel S. Carroll; Major of the U.S. Volunteers, 1865, brevetted by President Lincoln for his gallantry; Captain, 1864, fighting the Confederate forces in the Shenandoah Valley; First Lieutenant, 1863; Commissary-Sergeant, 1862, fighting at Antietam; Private in the 23rd Ohio Volunteer Infantry, 1861; and attended Allegheny College, Pennsylvania, 1860.

During his 1892 gubernatorial campaign in Ohio, William McKinley declared:

The men who established this government had faith in God and sublimely trusted in Him. They besought His counsel and advice in every step of their progress. And so it has been ever since; American history abounds in the instances of this trait in our national affairs.

Our rulers may not always be observers of the outward forms of religion, but we have never had a president, from Washington to Harrison, who publicly avowed infidelity, or scoffed at the faith of the masses of our people.

On July 4, 1892, in an address to the Baptist Young People's Union in Lakeside, Ohio, Governor William McKinley shared:

Lincoln, like Washington, illustrated in his administration faith in God. On March 4, 1861, he said: "Intelligence, patriotism, Christianity, and a firm reliance upon Him who has never forgotten this favored land are still competent to adjust in the best way all our present difficulties."

On June 29, 1893, before the First International Convention of the Epworth League in Cleveland, Governor William McKinley declared:

We live to make our Church a power in the land while we love every other Church that exalts our Christ. That broad Christian liberality lies at the basis of your work.... Every organization of this kind demonstrates that Christian character is helpful in every avenue or emergency of life.... The demand of the time is the young man thoroughly grounded in Christianity and its Book.

On July 14, 1894, in Cleveland, Ohio, Governor McKinley stated in a speech to the Christian Endeavor's International Convention:

There is no currency in this world that passes at such a premium anywhere as good Christian character.... The time has gone by when the young man or the young woman in the United States has to apologize for being a follower of Christ.... No cause but one could have brought together so many people, and that is the cause of our Master.

In 1896, while speaking of the attributes of Abraham Lincoln, President-elect William McKinley declared:

The purposes of God, working through the ages, were, perhaps, more clearly revealed to him than to any other.... He was the greatest man of his time, especially approved of God for the work He gave him to do.

On Thursday, March 4, 1897, in his First Inaugural Address, President William McKinley proclaimed:

In obedience to the will of the people, and in their presence, by the authority vested in me by this oath, I assume the arduous and responsible duties of President of the United States, relying upon the support of my countrymen and invoking the guidance of Almighty God. Our faith teaches that there is no safer reliance than upon the God of our fathers, who has so singularly favored the American people in every national trial, and who will not forsake us so long as we obey His commandments and walk humbly in His footsteps....

It is consoling and encouraging to realize that free speech, a free press, free thought, free schools, the free and unmolested right of religious liberty and worship, and free and fair elections are dearer and more universally enjoyed to-day than ever before....

Illiteracy must be banished from the land if we shall attain that high destiny as the foremost of the enlightened nations of the world which, under Providence, we ought to achieve....

Let me again repeat the words of the oath administered by the Chief Justice which, in their respective spheres, so far as applicable, I would have all my countrymen observe: "I will faithfully execute the office of the President of the United States, and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States." This is the obligation I have reverently taken before the Lord Most High. To keep it will be my single purpose, my constant prayer.

On October 29, 1897, President William McKinley issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

In remembrance of God's goodness to us during the past year, which has been so abundant, "let us offer unto Him our thanksgiving and pay our vows unto the Most High." Under His watchful providence industry has prospered, the conditions of labor have been improved, the rewards of the husbandman have been increased, and the comforts of our homes multiplied. His mighty hand has preserved peace and protected the nation. Respect for law and order has been strengthened, love of free institutions cherished, and all sections of our beloved country brought into closer bonds of fraternal regard and generous cooperation.

For these great benefits it is our duty to praise the Lord in a spirit of humility and gratitude and to offer up to Him our most earnest supplications.

That we may acknowledge our obligation as a people to Him who has so graciously granted us the blessings of free government and material prosperity, I, William McKinley, President of the United States, do hereby designate and set apart Thursday, the twenty-fifth day of November, for national thanksgiving and prayer, which all of the people are invited to observe with appropriate religious services in their respective places of worship. On this day of rejoicing and domestic reunion let our prayers ascend to the Giver of every good and perfect gift for the continuance of His love and favor to us, that our hearts may be filled with charity and good will, and we may be ever worthy of His beneficent concern.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 29th day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and ninety-seven, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-second. William McKinley.

By the President: John Sherman, Secretary of State.

On December 6, 1897, in his First Annual Message to Congress, President William McKinley stated:

It gives me pleasure to extend greeting to the Fifty-fifth Congress...meeting under felicitous conditions, justifying sincere congratulation and calling for our grateful acknowledgment to a beneficent Providence which has so signally blessed and prospered us as a nation....

The wise utterances of President Grant in his memorable message of December 7, 1875, are signally relevant to the present situation in Cuba, and it may be wholesome now to recall them. At that time a ruinous conflict had for seven years wasted the neighboring island. During all those years an utter disregard of the laws of civilized warfare and of just demands of humanity, which called forth expressions of condemnation from the nations of Christendom, continued unabated.

On April 11, 1898, in a message to Congress, President

McKinley stated:

Yesterday, and since the preparation of the foregoing message, official information was received by me that the latest decree of the Queen Regent of Spain directs General Blanco, in order to prepare and facilitate peace, to proclaim a suspension of hostilities, the duration and details of which have not been communicated to me.

This fact, with every other pertinent consideration, will, I am sure, have your just and careful attention in the solemn deliberations upon which you are about to enter. If this measure attains a successful result, then our aspirations as a Christian, peace-loving people will be realized. If it fails, it will be only another justification for our contemplated action.

On April 20, 1898, President William McKinley approved the Joint Resolution of Congress, which stated:

Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battleship [U. S. S. Maine], with 266 of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Havana, and can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April 11, 1898, upon which the action of Congress was invited:

Therefore, Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, First. That the people of the island of Cuba are and of a right ought to be free.

In 1898, while deliberating the decision to annex the Philippine Islands, President William McKinley recorded:

I walked the floor of the White House night after night until midnight, and I am not ashamed to tell you... that I went down on my knees and prayed Almighty God for light and guidance more than one night. And one night late it came to me... that there was nothing left for us to do but to take them all, and to educate the Filipinos, and uplift them and civilize and Christianize them.

On May 9, 1898, in a message to Congress, President William McKinley stated:

The 4th of May Commodore Dewey had taken possession of the naval station at Cavite [Manila, Philippine Islands], destroying the [Spanish] fortifications there and at the entrance of the bay and paroling their garrisons. The waters of the bay are under his complete control. He has established hospitals within the American lines, where 250 of the Spanish sick and wounded are assisted and protected.

The magnitude of this victory can hardly be measured by the ordinary standard of naval warfare.

Outweighing any material advantage is the moral effect of this initial success. At this unsurpassed achievement the great heart of our nation throbs, not with boasting or with greed of conquest, but with deep gratitude that this triumph has come in a just cause and that by the grace of God an effective step has thus been taken toward the attainment of the wished-for peace.

On July 6, 1898, President William McKinley issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving:

At a time, when to the yet fresh remembrance of the unprecedented success which attended the operations of the United States fleet in the bay of Manila on the 1st day of May last are added the tidings of the no less glorious achievements of the naval and military arms of our beloved country at Santiago de Cuba, it is fitting that we should pause and, staying the feeling of exultation that too naturally attends great deeds wrought by our countrymen in our country's cause, should reverently bow before the throne of divine grace and give devout praise to God, who holdeth the nations in the hollow of His hands and worketh upon them the marvels of His high will, and who has thus far vouchsafed to us the light of His face and led our brave soldiers and seamen to victory.

I therefore ask the people of the United States, upon next assembling for divine worship in their respective places of meeting, to offer thanksgiving to Almighty God, who in His inscrutable ways, now leading our hosts upon the waters to unscathed triumph; now guiding them in a strange land, through the dread shadows of death, to success, even though at a fearful cost; now bearing them, without accident or loss, to far distant climes, has watched over our cause and brought nearer the success of the right and the attainment of just and honorable peace.

With the nation's thanks let there be mingled the nation's prayers that our gallant sons may be shielded from harm alike on the battlefield and in the clash of fleets, and be spared the scourge of suffering and disease while they are striving to uphold their country's honor; and withal let the nation's heart be stilled with holy awe at the thought of the noble men who have perished as heroes die, and be filled with compassionate sympathy for all those who suffer bereavement or endure sickness, wounds, and bonds by reason of the awful struggle. And above all, let us pray with earnest fervor that He, the Dispenser of All Good, may speedily remove from us the untold afflictions of war and bring to our dear land the blessings of restored peace and to all the domain now ravaged by the cruel strife the priceless boon of security and tranquillity.

On July 13, 1898, in a message to the Secretary of War, President William McKinley stated:

It will therefore be the duty of the commander of the army of occupation to announce and proclaim in the most public manner that we come not to make war upon the inhabitants of Cuba, nor upon any party or faction among them, but to protect them in their homes, in their employments, and in their personal and religious rights. . . . All churches and buildings devoted to religious worship and to the arts and sciences, all schoolhouses, are, so far as possible, to be protected.

On July 16, 1898, President William McKinley wrote from Washington, D.C., to General Shafer, Commander of the U.S. Forces in Santiago, Playa, Cuba:

The President of the United States sends you and your brave army the profound thanks of the American people for the brilliant achievements at Santiago. . . . One and all have displayed the most conspicuous gallantry and earned the gratitude of the nation. The hearts of the people turn with tender sympathy to the sick and wounded. May the Father of Mercies protect and comfort them.

On October 28, 1898, President William McKinley issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving:

The approaching November brings to mind the custom of our ancestors, hallowed by time and rooted in our most sacred traditions, of giving thanks to Almighty God for all the blessings He has vouchsafed to us during the year.

Few years in our history have afforded such cause for thanksgiving as this. We have been blessed by abundant harvests; our trade and commerce have wonderfully increased; public credit has been improved and strengthened; all sections of our common country have been brought together and knitted into closer bonds of national purpose and unity.

The skies have been for a time darkened by the cloud of war, but as we were compelled to take up the sword in the cause of humanity we are permitted to rejoice that the conflict has been of brief duration and the losses we have had to mourn, though grievous and important, have been so few, considering the great results accomplished, as to inspire us with gratitude and praise to the Lord of Hosts. We may laud and magnify His holy name that the cessation of hostilities came so soon as to spare both sides the countless sorrows and disasters that attend protracted war.

I do therefore invite all my fellow-citizens, as well those who may be at sea or sojourning in foreign lands as those at home, to set apart and observe Thursday, the 24th day of November, as a day of national thanksgiving, to come together in their several places of worship for a service of praise and thanks to Almighty God for all the blessings of the year, for the mildness of the seasons and the fruitfulness of the soil, for the continued prosperity of the people, for the devotion and valor of our countrymen, for the glory of our victory and the hope of a righteous peace, and to pray that the divine guidance which has brought us heretofore to safety and honor may be graciously continued in the years to come.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 28th day of October, A. D. 1898, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-third. William McKinley.

By the President: John Hay, Secretary of State.

On December 5, 1898, in his Second Annual Message to Congress, President William McKinley stated:

It is a pleasure for me to mention in terms of cordial appreciation the timely and useful work of the American National Red Cross, both in relief measures preparatory to the campaigns, in sanitary assistance at several of the camps of assemblage, and later, under the able and experienced leadership of the president of the society, Miss Clara Barton, on the fields of battle and in the hospitals at the front in Cuba. Working in conjunction with the governmental authorities and under their sanction and approval, and with the enthusiastic cooperation of many patriotic women and societies in the various States, the Red Cross has fully maintained its already high reputation for intense earnestness and ability to exercise the noble purposes of its international organization, thus justifying the confidence and support which it has received at the hands of the American people. To the members and officers of this society and all who aided them in their philanthropic work the sincere and lasting gratitude of the soldiers and the public is due and is freely accorded.

In tracing these events we are constantly reminded of our obligations to the Divine Master for His watchful care over us and His safe guidance, for which the nation makes reverent acknowledgment and offers humble prayer for the continuance of His favor....

The newly accredited envoy of the United States to the Ottoman Porte carries instructions looking to the disposal of matters in controversy with Turkey for a number of years. He is especially charged to press for a just settlement of our claims for indemnity by reason of the destruction of the property of American missionaries resident in that country during the Armenian troubles of 1895.

On May 26, 1899, President William McKinley wrote a brief note in his letter book:

My belief embraces the Divinity of Christ and a recognition of Christianity as the mightiest factor in the world's civilization.

On October 25, 1899, President William McKinley issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

A national custom dear to the hearts of the people calls for the setting of one day in each year as an occasion of special thanksgiving to Almighty God for the blessings of the preceding year. This honored observance acquires with time a tenderer significance. It enriches domestic life. It summons under the family roof the absent children to glad reunion with those they love.

Seldom has this nation had greater cause for profound thanksgiving. No great pestilence has invaded our shores. Liberal employment waits upon labor. Abundant crops have rewarded the efforts of the husbandmen. Increased comforts have come to the home. The national finances have been strengthened, and public credit has been sustained and made firmer. In all branches of industry and trade there has been an unequalled degree of prosperity, while there has been a steady gain in the moral and educational growth of national character. Churches and schools have flourished. American patriotism has been exalted. Those engaged in maintaining the honor of the flag with such signal success have been in a large degree spared from disaster and disease. An honorable peace has been ratified with a foreign nation with which we were at war, and we are now on friendly relations with every power of earth.

The trust which we have assumed for the benefit of the people of Cuba has been faithfully advanced. There is marked progress toward the restoration of healthy industrial conditions, and under wise sanitary regulations the island has enjoyed unusual exemption from the scourge of fever. The hurricane which swept over our new possession of Puerto Rico, destroying the homes and property of the inhabitants, called forth the instant sympathy of the people of the United States, who were swift to respond with generous aid to the sufferers. While the insurrection still continues in the island of Luzon, business is resuming its activity, and confidence in the good purposes of the United States is being rapidly established throughout the archipelago.

For these reasons and countless others, I, William McKinley, President of the United States, do hereby name Thursday, the thirtieth day of November next, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer, to be observed as such by all our people on this continent and in our newly acquired islands, as well as those who may be at sea or sojourning in foreign lands; and I advise that on this day religious exercises shall be conducted in the churches or meeting-places of all denominations, in order that the social features of the day its real significance may not be lost sight of, but fervent prayers may be offered to the Most High for a continuance of the Divine Guidance without which man's efforts are vain, and for Divine consolation to those whose kindred and friends have sacrificed their lives for country.

I recommend also that on this day so far as may be found practicable labor shall cease from its accustomed toil and charity abound toward the sick, the needy and the poor.

In witness whereof I have set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 25th day of October, A.D. 1899, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-fourth.

William McKinley.

By the President: John Hay, Secretary of State.

On December 5, 1899, in a message to Congress, President William McKinley stated:

From the earliest moment no opportunity was lost of assuring the people of the islands of our ardent desire for their welfare and of the intention of this Government to do everything possible to advance their interests. In my order of the 19th of May, 1898, the commander of the military expedition dispatched to the Philippines was instructed to declare that we came not to make war upon the people of that country, "nor upon any party or faction among them, but to protect them in their homes, in their employments, and in their personal and religious rights."...

On the 21st of December, after the treaty was signed, the commander of the forces of occupation was instructed "to announce and proclaim in the most public manner that we come, not as invaders and conquerors, but as friends to protect the natives in their homes, in their employments, and in their personal and religious rights."...

Everything indicates that with the speedy suppression of the Tagalo rebellion life in the archipelago will soon resume its ordinary course under the protection of our sovereignty, and the people of those favored islands will enjoy a prosperity and a freedom which they have never before known. Already hundreds of schools are open and filled with children. Religious freedom is sacredly assured and enjoyed....

No effort will be spared to build up the waste places desolated by war and by long years of misgovernment. We shall not wait for the end of strife to begin the beneficent work. We shall continue, as we have begun, to open the schools and the churches, to set the courts in operation, to foster industry and trade and agriculture, and in every way in our power to make these people whom Providence has brought within our jurisdiction feel that it is their liberty and not our power, their welfare and not our gain, we are seeking to enhance....

A right interpretation of the people's will and of duty cannot fail to insure wise measures for the welfare of the islands which have come under the authority of the United States, and inure to the common interest and lasting honor of our country. Never has this Nation had more abundant cause than during the past year for thankfulness to God for manifold blessings and mercies, for which we make reverent acknowledgment.

On April 7, 1900, in his instructions addressed to the Secretary of War, President William McKinley stated:

Upon every division and branch of the government of the Philippines, therefore, must be imposed these inviolable rules:... that no law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof, and that the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship without discrimination or preference shall forever be allowed....

That no form of religion and no minister of religion shall be forced upon any community or upon any citizen of the islands; that, upon the other hand, no minister of religion shall be interfered with or molested in following his calling....

The articles of capitulation of the city of Manila on the 13th of August, 1898, concluded with these words: "This city, its inhabitants, its churches and religious worship, its educational establishments, and its private property of all descriptions, are placed under the special safeguard of the faith and honor of the American Army."

I believe that this pledge has been faithfully kept. As high and sacred an obligation rests upon the Government of the United States to give protection for property and life, civil and religious freedom, and wise, firm, and unselfish guidance in the paths of peace and prosperity to all the people of the Philippine Islands. I charge this Commission to labor for the full performance of this obligation, which concerns the honor and conscience of their country, in the firm hope that through their labors all the inhabitants of the Philippine Islands may come to look back with gratitude to the day when God gave victory to American arms at Manila and set their land under the sovereignty and the protection of the people of the United States.

On Monday, October 29, 1900, President William McKinley issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Praise:

It has pleased the Almighty God to bring our nation in safety and honor through another year. The works of religion and charity have everywhere been manifest. Our country through all its extent has been blessed with abundant harvests. Labor and the great industries of the people have prospered beyond all precedent. Our commerce has spread over the world. Our power and influence in the cause of freedom and enlightenment have extended over distant seas and lands. The lives of our official representatives and many of our people in China have been marvelously preserved. We have been generally exempt from pestilence and other great calamities; and even the tragic visitation which overwhelmed the city of Galveston made evident the sentiments of sympathy and Christian charity by virtue of which we are one united people.

Now, therefore, I, William McKinley, President of the United States, do hereby appoint and set apart Thursday, the 29th of November next, to be observed by all the people of the United States, at home or abroad, as a day of thanksgiving and praise to Him who holds the nations in the hollow of His hand. I recommend that they gather in their several places of worship and devoutly give Him thanks for the prosperity wherewith He has endowed us, for seed-time and harvest, for the valor, devotion and humanity of our armies and navies, and for all His benefits to us as individuals and as a nation; and that they humbly pray for the continuance of His Divine favor, for concord and amity with other nations, and for righteousness and peace in all our ways.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this 29th day of October, A. D. 1900, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-fifth. William McKinley.

By the President: John Hay, Secretary of State.

On December 3, 1900, in a message to Congress, President William McKinley stated:

In November, 1800, the population of the United States was 5,308,483. It is now 76,304,799. Then we had sixteen States. Now we have forty-five. Then our territory consisted of 909,050 square miles. It is now 3,846,595 square miles. Education, religion, and morality have kept pace with our advancement in other directions, and while extending its power the Government has adhered to its foundation principles and abated none of them in dealing with our new peoples and possessions. A nation so preserved and blessed gives reverent thanks to God and invokes His guidance and the continuance of His care and favor....

On Monday, March 4, 1901, in his Second Inaugural Address, President William McKinley stated:

We are now at peace with the world, and it is my fervent prayer that if differences arise between us and other powers they may be settled by peaceful arbitration and that hereafter we may be spared the horrors of war.

Intrusted by the people for a second time with the office of President, I enter upon its administration appreciating the great responsibilities which attach to this renewed honor and commission, promising unreserved devotion on my part to their faithful discharge and reverently invoking for my guidance the direction and favor of Almighty God....

"Hope maketh not ashamed." The prophets of evil were not the builders of the Republic, nor in its crises since have they saved or served it. The faith of the fathers was a mighty force in its creation, and the faith of their descendants has wrought its progress and furnished its defenders....

As hereunto, so hereafter will the nation demonstrate its fitness to administer any new estate which events devolve upon it, and in the fear of God will "take occasion by the hand and make the bounds of freedom wider yet."

If there are those among us who would make our way more difficult, we must not be disheartened, but the more earnestly dedicate ourselves to the task upon which we have rightly entered. The path of progress is seldom smooth.

New things are often found hard to do. Our fathers found them so. We find them so. They are inconvenient. They cost us something. But are we not made better for the effort and sacrifice, and are not those we serve lifted up and blessed?

President William McKinley stated:

The Christian religion is no longer the badge of weaklings and enthusiasts, but of distinction, enforcing respect.

President William McKinley, who was a Methodist, stated concerning the Bible:

The more profoundly we study this wonderful Book, and the more closely we observe its divine precepts, the better citizens we will become and the higher will be our destiny as a nation.

On Thursday, September 5, 1901, at the Pan American Exposition in Buffalo, New York, President William McKinley stated:

We travel greater distances in a shorter space of time and with more ease than was ever dreamed of by the fathers. Isolation is no longer possible or desirable. The same important news is read, though in different languages, the same day in all Christendom...

At the beginning of the nineteenth century there was not a mile of steam railroad on the globe. Now there are enough miles to make its circuit many times. Then there was not a line of electric telegraph; now we have vast mileage traversing all lands and seas. God and man have linked the nations together...

Our earnest prayer is that God will graciously vouchsafe prosperity, happiness and peace to all our neighbors, and like blessings to all the peoples and powers of earth.

On the day following this address, President McKinley held a public reception in the Temple of Music at the Pan-American Exposition in Buffalo, New York. As hundreds of people were in line to shake his hand, an anarchist, named Leon Czolgosz, shot President William McKinley in the stomach. As he was being put under anesthetic, he was praying the Lord's Prayer. On September 14, 1901, infection from the wounds took its toll. From a near coma, President William McKinley spoke:

It is useless, gentlemen, I think we ought to have prayer. [Then, to his wife, he said], It is God's will. His will, not ours, be done.

His last words, spoken to his wife, Ida Saxton McKinley, were from the hymn:

Nearer My God to Thee.

On Saturday, September 14, 1901, President Theodore Roosevelt issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Mourning and Prayer:

A terrible bereavement has befallen our people. The President of the United States has been struck down; a crime not only against the Chief Magistrate, but against every law-abiding and liberty-loving citizen.

President McKinley crowned a life of largest love for his fellow men, of earnest endeavor for their welfare, by a death of Christian fortitude; and both the way in which he lived his life and the way in which, in the supreme hour of trial, he met death will remain forever a precious heritage of our people.

It is meet that we as a nation express our abiding love and reverence for his life, our deep sorrow for his untimely death.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, do appoint Thursday next, September 19, the day in which the body of the dead President will be laid in its last earthly resting place, as a day of mourning and prayer throughout the United States. I earnestly recommend all the people to assemble on that day in their respective places of divine worship, there to bow down in submission to the will of Almighty God, and to pay out of full hearts the homage of love and reverence to the memory of the great and good President, whose death has so sorely smitten the nation.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, the fourteenth day of September, A.D. 1901, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-sixth.
Theodore Roosevelt.

By the President: John Hay, Secretary of State.

United States Supreme Court (1844), in the case of Vidal v. Girard's Executors, 43 U.S. (How. 2) 126, 127, 132, Justice Joseph Story delivered the Court's opinion. The case concerned one Stephen Girard, a deist from France, who had moved to Philadelphia and later died. In his Last Will and Testament, he left his entire estate, valued at over $7 million, to establish an orphanage and school, with the stipulation that no religious influence be allowed. The city rejected the proposal, as their lawyers declared:

The plan of education proposed is anti-Christian, and therefore repugnant to the law... The purest principles of morality are to be taught. Where are they found? Whoever searches for them must go to the source from which a Christian man derives his faith - the Bible... There is an obligation to teach what the Bible alone can teach, viz. a pure system of morality...

Both in the Old and New Testaments [religious instruction's] importance is recognized. In the Old it is said, "Thou shalt diligently teach them to thy children," and the New, "Suffer the little children to come unto me and forbid them not..." No fault can be found with Girard for wishing a marble college to bear his name for ever, but it is not valuable unless it has a fragrance of Christianity about it.

The U.S. Supreme Court rendered its unanimous opinion, stating:

And we cannot overlook the blessings, which such men by their conduct, as well as their instructions, may, nay must impart to their youthful pupils. Why may not the Bible, and especially the New Testament, without note or comment, be read and taught as a divine revelation in the college - its general precepts expounded, its evidences explained and its glorious principles of morality inculcated? What is there to prevent a work, not sectarian, upon the general evidences of Christianity, from being read and taught in the college by lay teachers? Certainly there is nothing in the will that proscribes such studies. Above all, the testator positively enjoins, "that all the instructors and teachers in the college shall take pains to instill into the minds of the scholars the purest principles of morality, so that on their entrance into active life they may from inclination and habit evince benevolence towards their fellow-creatures, and a love of truth, sobriety, and industry, adopting at the same time such religious tenets as their matured reason may enable them to prefer."

Now, it may well be asked, what is there in all this, which is positively enjoined, inconsistent with the spirit or truths of Christianity? Are not these truths all taught by Christianity, although it teaches much more?

Where can the purest principles of morality be learned so clearly or so perfectly as from the New Testament? Where are benevolence, the love of truth, sobriety, and industry, so powerfully and irresistibly inculcated as in the sacred volume?...

It is unnecessary for us, however, to consider what would be the legal effect of a devise in Pennsylvania for the establishment of a school or college, for the propagation of Judaism, or Deism, or any other form of infidelity. Such a case is not to be presumed to exist in a Christian country; and therefore it must be made out by clear and indisputable proof. Remote inferences, or possible results, or speculative tendencies are not to be drawn or adopted for such purposes. There must be plain, positive, and express provision, demonstrating not only that Christianity is not to be taught; but that it is to be impugned or repudiated.

Christianity... is not to be maliciously and openly reviled and blasphemed against, to the annoyance of believers or the injury of the public.... Why may not laymen instruct in the general principles of Christianity as well as ecclesiastics.

It is also said, and truly, that the Christian religion is a part of the common law of Pennsylvania....

MacAlister, Alexander (1844-1919), was a professor of Anatomy at Cambridge, and an author of textbooks in physiology and zoology. He related:

I think the widespread impression of the agnosticism of scientific men is largely due to the attitude taken up by a few of the great popularizers of science, like Tyndall and Huxley.

It has been my experience that the disbelief in the revelation that God has given, in the life and work, death and resurrection of our Savior, is more prevalent among what I may call the camp followers of science than amongst those to whom scientific work is the business of their lives.

Hopkins, Gerard Manley (July 28, 1844-June 8, 1889), was an English poet and artist. He was professor of classics at the University College in Dublin. The death of five nuns in a shipwreck in 1875 inspired him to compose The Wreck of the Deutschland, in which he stated in No. 28:

Thou mastering me
God! giver of breath and bread;
World's strand, sway of the sea;
Lord of the living and dead;
Thou hast bound bones and veins in me, fastened me flesh,

And after it almost unmade, what with dread,
Thy doing: and dost thou touch me afresh?
Over again I feel thy finger and find thee.

In No. 31, God's Grandeur, Gerard Manley Hopkins wrote:

The world is charged with the grandeur of God.

Root, Elihu (February 15, 1845-February 7, 1937), was appointed Secretary of War in President William McKinley's administration, 1899-1904; Secretary of State in President Theodore Roosevelt's administration, 1905-12; won the Nobel Peace Prize, 1912; was a U.S. Senator, 1909-15; president of the New York State Constitutional Convention of 1915; a U.S. district attorney for the southern district of New York, 1883-85; and chairman of the judiciary committee.

He practiced law in New York City, acting as junior counsel for the defense in the trial of "Boss" William Tweed, and was personal counsel of Jay Gould, Chester A. Arthur, Charles A. Dana, Edward H. Harriman and many large financial institutions.

President Woodrow Wilson appointed him as "ambassador extraordinary" and chief of a special diplomatic mission to Russia. He was also active in the League of Nations; the Permanent Court of International Justice; and was the president of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Elihu Root stated:

When a teacher of the future comes to point out to the youth of America how the highest reward of intellect and devotion can be gained, he may say to them - not by subtly and intrigue, not by wire-pulling and demagoguery, not by shiftiness or following expediency;

but by being firm in devotion to the principles of manhood and the courage of religiousness in public life; by being a man without guile, without fear, without selfishness, and with devotion to duty, devotion to his country and his God.

Florida, State of (March 3, 1845), was the 27th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Florida, adopted 1838, stated:

Bill of Rights. That all men have a natural and unalienable right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience; and that no preference shall ever be given by law to any religious establishment or mode of worship.

The Constitution of the State of Florida, adopted 1885, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of the State of Florida, grateful to Almighty God for our constitutional liberty... establish this Constitution.
Page 754

The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship shall forever be allowed in this State, and no person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness on account of his religious opinions, but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to justify licentiousness or practices subversive of, or inconsistent with, the peace or moral safety of the State or society.

Texas, State of (December 29, 1845), was the 28th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Texas, adopted August 27, 1845), stated:

Preamble. We, the people of the Republic of Texas, acknowledging, with gratitude, the grace and beneficence of God, in permitting us to make a choice of our form of government, do, in accordance with the provisions of the Joint Resolution for annexing Texas to the United States, approved March 1, one thousand eight hundred and forty-five, ordain and establish this Constitution.

Article I, Section 4. All men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences;...

no human authority ought, in any case whatever, to control or interfere with the rights of conscience in matters of religion;...

but it shall be the duty of the Legislature to pass such laws as may be necessary, to protect every religious denomination in the peaceable enjoyment of their own mode of public worship.

Article I, Section 13. Every citizen shall have the right to keep and bear arms in the lawful defence of himself or the State.

Article I, Section 15. No person shall ever be imprisoned for debt.

Article III, Section 27. Ministers of the Gospel, being by their profession dedicated to God, and the care of souls, ought not to be diverted from the great duties of their functions.

Article VI, Section 3. No licensed Minister of the Gospel shall be required to perform military duty, work on roads.

Article VII, Section 1. Members of the Legislature, and all officers, before they enter upon the duties of their offices, shall take the following oath or affirmation:

"I (A. B.) do solemnly swear, (or affirm,) that I will faithfully and impartially discharge and perform all the duties incumbent on me as according to the best of my skill and ability, agreeably to the Constitution and the laws of the United States, and of this State; and I do further solemnly swear (or affirm,) that since the adoption of this Constitution by the Congress of the United States, I being a citizen of this State, have not fought a duel with deadly weapons within this State, nor out of it;

nor have I sent or accepted a challenge to fight a duel with deadly weapons;

nor have I acted as second in carrying a challenge, or aided, advised, or assisted any person thus offending - So Help Me God."

Article VII, Section 17. No Lottery shall be authorized by this State; and the buying or selling of Lottery Tickets within this State, is prohibited.

Article VII, Section 18. No divorce shall be granted by the Legislature.

Article XIII, Section 13. Done in Convention by the Deputies of the people of Texas, at the City of Austin, this twenty-seventh day of August, in the Year of Our Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-five.

On Friday, July 4, 1845, Thomas J. Rusk, President of the Convention, addressed the delegates at the opening of the Texas Constitutional Convention:

The object for which we have assembled, deeply interests the people of Texas. We have the hopes of our present population, as well as the millions who may come after us, in our hands; the eyes of the civilized world are upon us; we present this day a bright spectacle to all lovers of freedom and republican government.

The history of the world may search in vain for a parallel to the present instance of two Governments amalgamating themselves into one, from a pure devotion to that great principle, that man, by enlightening his intellect, and cultivating those moral sentiments with which his God has impressed him, is capable of self-government....

Let us...march boldly and confidently up to the formation of a Constitution which, while it secures our own rights, shall satisfy our friends abroad, and meet the sanctions of that God to whose bountiful Providence Texas is already so much indebted.

On Thursday, August 28, 1845, Thomas J. Rusk, President of the Convention, addressed the delegates at the close of the Texas Constitutional Convention:

Gentlemen of the Convention: -

....Our labors have now drawn to a close. The important duties we were called upon to discharge, on the part of the people of Texas, are discharged....

The proceedings of this Convention...have been marked by a degree of decorum, and a spirit of good feelings which, I trust in God, will continue to characterize the people of Texas.

The Constitution of the State of Texas, adopted 1876, stated:

Preamble. Humbly invoking the blessings of Almighty God...we establish this Constitution.

Article I, Section 4. Nor shall any one be excluded from holding office on account of his religious sentiments, provided he acknowledge the existence of a Supreme Being.

Article I, Section 6. All men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences.

Florida, Motto of The State of (1846), stated:

In God We Trust.

South Carolina Supreme Court (1846), in the case of City of Charleston v. S.A. Benjamin, cites an individual who wilfully broke an Ordinance which stated:

No person or persons whatsoever shall publicly expose to sale, or sell...any goods, wares or merchandise whatsoever upon the Lords's day.

The prosecuting attorney astutely explained the premise, stating:

Christianity is a part of the common law of the land, with liberty of conscience to all. It has always been so recognized....If Christianity is a part of the common law, its disturbance is punishable at common law. The U.S. Constitution allows it as a part of the common law.

The President is allowed ten days [to sign a bill], with the exception of Sunday. The Legislature does not sit, public offices are closed, and the Government recognizes the day in all things....The observance of Sunday is one of the usages of the common law, recognized by our U.S. and State Governments....The Sabbath is still to be supported;

Christianity is part and parcel of the common law....Christianity has reference to the principles of right and wrong....it is the foundation of those morals and manners upon which our society is formed; it is their basis. Remove this and they would fall....[Morality] has grown upon the basis of Christianity.

The Supreme Court of South Carolina delivered its decision, declaring:

The Lord's day, the day of the Resurrection, is to us, who are called Christians, the day of rest after finishing a new creation. It is the day of the first visible triumph over death, hell and the grave! It was the birth day of the believer in Christ, to whom and through whom it opened up the way which, by repentance and faith, leads unto everlasting life and eternal happiness! On that day we rest, and to us it is the Sabbath of the Lord - its decent observance, in a Christian community, is that which ought to be expected....

What gave to us this noble safeguard of religious toleration? It was Christianity... But this toleration, thus granted, is a religious toleration; it is the free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, with two provisos, one of which, that which guards against acts of licentiousness, testifies to the Christian construction, which this section should receive!

What are acts "of licentiousness" within the meaning of this section? Must they not be such public acts, as are calculated to shock the moral sense of the community where they take place? The orgies of Bacchus, among the ancients, were not offensive! At a later day, the Carnivals of Venice went off without note or observation. Such could not be allowed now! Why? Public opinion, based on Christian morality, would not suffer it!

What constitutes the standard of good morals? Is it not Christianity? There certainly is none other. Say that cannot be appealed to, and I don't know what would be good morals. The day of moral virtue in which we live would, in an instant, if that standard were abolished, lapse into the dark and murky night of Pagan immorality.

In the Courts over which we preside, we daily acknowledge Christianity as the most solemn part of our administration. A Christian witness, having no religious scruple about placing his hand upon the book, is sworn upon the holy Evangelists - the books of the New Testament, which testify of our Savior's birth, life, death, and resurrection; this is so common a matter, that it is little thought of as an evidence of the part which Christianity has in the common law.

I agree fully to what is beautifully and appropriately said in Updegraph v. The Commonwealth... Christianity, general Christianity, is, and always has been, a part of the common law: "not Christianity with an established church... but Christianity with liberty of conscience to all men."

Iowa, State of (December 28, 1846), was the 29th State admitted to the Union. On August 7, 1789, slavery was prohibited from entering the territory of Iowa by an Act of Congress entitled "An Ordinance for the Government of the Territory of the United States Northwest of the River Ohio," Article VI, introduced by Rufus King and signed into law by President George Washington. The Constitution of the State of Iowa, adopted 1857, stated:

Preamble. We, the People of the State of Iowa, grateful to the Supreme Being for the blessings hitherto enjoyed, and feeling our dependence on Him for a continuation of these blessings... establish this Constitution.

United States Congress (1848), ratified the peace treaty with Mexico which ended the Mexican War and brought the territories of California, Nevada, Utah, and parts of Arizona, New Mexico, Colorado and Wyoming, into the Union. The treaty began:

In the Name of Almighty God:

The United States and the United Mexican States animated by a sincere desire to put an end to the calamities of the war...who, after a reciprocal communication of their respective full powers, have, under the protection of Almighty God, the Author of Peace, arranged, agreed upon, and signed the following: Treaty of Peace, Friendship, Limits, and Settlement between the United States of America and the Mexican Republic....

If (which is not to be expected, and which God forbid) war should unhappily break out between the two republics, they do now, with a view to such calamity, solemnly pledge themselves to each other and to the world to observe the following rules....

All churches, hospitals, schools, colleges, libraries, and other establishments for charitable and beneficent purposes, shall be respected, and all persons connected with the same protected in the discharge of their duties, and the pursuit of their vocations....

Done in quintuplicate, at the city of Guadalupe Hidalgo, on the second day of February, in the year of the Lord one thousand eight hundred and forty-eight.

Wisconsin, State of (May 29, 1848), was the 30th State admitted to the Union. On August 7, 1789, President George Washington signed into law an Act of Congress which prohibited slavery from entering the territory, entitled "An Ordinance for the Government of the Territory of the United States, North-West of the River Ohio," Article VI. Congress enabled the establishment of the government of Wisconsin, provided it followed the general tenets of the Northwest Ordinance of 1787.

The Northwest Ordinance stated:

SECTION 13. And, for extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which form the basis whereon these republics, their laws and constitutions are erected: to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, constitutions and governments, which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said territory: to provide also for the establishment of states, and permanent government therein, and for their admission to a share in the federal councils in an equal footing with the original states, at as early a period as may be consistent with the general interest:

SECTION 14. It is hereby ordained and declared by the authority aforesaid, That the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact, between the original states and the people and states of the said territory, and forever remain unalienable, unless by common consent, to wit:

ARTICLE I. No person, demeaning himself in a peaceable and orderly manner, shall ever be molested on account of his mode of worship or religious sentiments in the said territory....

ARTICLE III. Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged.

The Constitution of the State of Wisconsin, 1848, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of Wisconsin, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, domestic tranquility and to promote the general welfare, do establish this Constitution.

Article I, Section 18. The right of every man to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of his own conscience shall never be infringed.

California, State of (September 9, 1850), was the 31st State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of California, adopted May 7, 1879, stated:

Preamble. We, the People of the State of California, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, in order to secure and perpetuate its blessings, do establish this Constitution.

Article I, Section 4. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever be allowed in this State; and no person shall be rendered incompetent as a witness on account of his opinions on matters of religious belief; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness, or justify practices inconsistent with the peace and safety of this State.

The Constitution of the State of California, November 5, 1974, stated:

Article I, Section 4. Free exercise and enjoyment of religion without discrimination or preference are guaranteed. This liberty of conscience does not excuse acts that are licentious or inconsistent with the peace or safety of the State. The Legislature shall make no law respecting the establishment of religion. A person is not incompetent to be a witness or juror because of his or her opinions on religious beliefs.

Article I, Section 6. Slavery is prohibited.

Article III, Section 6. (b) English is the official language of the State of California.

Stevenson, Robert Louis (November 13, 1850-December 3, 1894), was a Scottish author and novelist. He wrote: New Arabian Nights, 1882; Treasure Island, 1883; A Child's Garden of Verses, 1885; Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde, 1886; and Kidnapped, 1886. He suffered from tuberculosis, and in an effort to improve his health, sailed with his American wife to the Island of Samoa. They settled there and he continued to write.

In Songs of Travel - If This Were Faith, Stevenson wrote:

God, if this were enough,
That I see things bare to the buff.

In 1889, in his work The Master of Ballantrae - Mr.

Mackellar's Journey, Stevenson wrote:

Not every man is so great a coward as he thinks he is - nor yet so good a Christian.

Shortly before he died, Stevenson wrote:

Written in the East, these characters live forever in the West; written in one province, they pervade the world; penned in rude times, they are prized more and more as civilization advances; product of antiquity, they come home to the bosoms of men, women, and children in modern days. Then is it any exaggeration to say that the "characters of the Scripture are a marvel of the mind?"

On the bronze memorial to him in St. Giles Cathedral, Edinburgh, Scotland, Robert Louis Stevenson's prayer is engraved:

Give us grace and strength to forbear and to persevere. Give us courage and gaiety and the quiet mind, spare to us our friends, soften to us our enemies.

United States Congress (January 19, 1853), as part of a Congressional investigation, records the report of Mr. Badger of the Senate Judiciary Committee:

The [First Amendment] clause speaks of "an establishment of religion." What is meant by that expression? It referred, without doubt, to that establishment which existed in the mother-country, and its meaning is to be ascertained by ascertaining what that establishment was. It was the connection, with the state, of a particular religious society, by its endowment at the public expense, in exclusion of, or in preference to, any other, by giving to its members exclusive political rights, and by compelling the attendance of those who rejected its communion upon its worship or religious observances. These three particulars constituted that union of Church and State of which our ancestors were so justly jealous and against which they so wisely and carefully provided. . . .

If Congress has passed, or should pass, any law which, fairly construed, has in any degree introduced, or should attempt to introduce, in favor of any church, or ecclesiastical association, or system of religious faith, all or any one of these obnoxious particulars, - endowment at the public expense, peculiar privileges to its members, or disadvantages or penalties upon those who should reject its doctrines or belong to other communions, - such law would be a "law respecting an establishment of religion," and, therefore, in violation of the Constitution. But no law yet passed by Congress is justly liable to such an objection. . . .

We have chaplains in the army and navy, and in Congress; but these are officers chosen with the freest and widest range of selection, - the law making no distinction whatever between any of the religions, Churches, or professions of faith known to the world. Of these, none by law is excluded, none has any priority of legal right. True, selections, in point of fact, are always made from some one of the denominations into which Christians are distributed; but that is not in consequence of any legal right or privilege, but by the voluntary choice of those who have the power of appointment.

This results from the fact that we are a Christian people, - from the fact that almost our entire population belongs to or sympathize with some one of the Christian denominations which compose the Christian world. And Christians will of course select, for the performance of religious services, one who professes the faith of Christ. This, however, it should be carefully noted, is not by virtue of provision, but voluntary choice. We are Christians, not because the law demands it, not to gain exclusive benefits or to avoid legal disabilities, but from choice and education; and in a land thus universally Christian, what is to be expected, what desired, but that we shall pay a due regard to Christianity, and have a reasonable respect for its ministers and religious solemnities?...

How comes it that Sunday, the Christian Sabbath, is recognized and respected by all the departments of Government? In the law, Sunday is a "dies non;" it cannot be used for the service of legal process, the returns of writs, or other judicial purposes. The executive departments, the public establishments, are all closed on Sundays; on that day neither House of Congress sits....

Here is a recognition by law, and by universal usage, not only of a Sabbath, but of the Christian Sabbath, in exclusion of the Jewish or Mohammedan Sabbath. Why, then, do the petitioners exclaim against this invasion of their religious rights? Why do they not assert that a national Sabbath, no less than a national Church, is an establishment of religion?... The recognition of the Christian Sabbath is complete and perfect. The officers who receive salaries, or per-diem compensation, are discharged from duty on this day, because it is the Christian Sabbath, and yet suffer no loss or diminution of pay on that account....

They intended, by this Amendment, to prohibit "an establishment of religion" such as the English Church presented, or any thing like it. But they had no fear or jealousy of religion itself, nor did they wish to see us an irreligious people; they did not intend to prohibit a just expression of religious devotion by the legislators or the nation, even in their public character as legislators; they did not intend to send our armies and navies forth to do battle for their country without any national recognition of that God on whom success or failure depends; they did not intend to spread over all the public authorities and the whole public action of the nation the dead and revolting spectacle of atheistical apathy. Not so had the battles of the Revolution been fought and the deliberations of the Revolutionary Congress been conducted. On the contrary, all had been done with a continual appeal to the Supreme Ruler of the World, and an habitual reliance upon His protection of the righteous cause which they commended to His care.

Me. 398 (Me. 1854), stated:

The common schools are not for the purpose of instruction in the theological doctrines of any religion or of any sect. . . . No interference, by way of instruction, with the views of the scholars, whether derived from parental or sacerdotal authority, is shown. The Bible was used merely as a book in which instruction in reading was given. But reading the Bible is no more an interference with religious belief than would reading the mythology of Greece or Rome be regarded as interfering with religious belief or affirming the pagan creeds. A chapter in the Koran might be read, yet it would not be an affirmation of the truth of Mohammedanism, or an interference with religious faith.

United States Congress (March 27, 1854), received the report of Mr. Meacham of the House Committee on the Judiciary:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion." Does our present practice violate that article? What is an establishment of religion? It must have a creed, defining what a man must believe; it must have rites and ordinances, which believers must observe; it must have ministers of defined qualifications, to teach the doctrines and administer the rites; it must have tests for the submissive and penalties for the non-conformist. There never was an established religion without all these. Is there now, or has there ever been, anything of this in the appointment of chaplains in Congress, or army, or navy? The practice before the adoption of the Constitution does not seem to have changed the principle in this respect. We ask the memorialists to look at the facts.

First, in the army: chaplains were appointed for the Revolutionary army on its organization; rules for their regulation are found among the earliest of the articles of war. Congress ordered, on May 27, 1777, that there should be one chaplain to each brigade of the army, nominated by the brigadier-general, and appointed by Congress, with the same pay as colonel, and, on the 18th of September following, ordered chaplains to be appointed to the hospitals in the several departments, with the pay of $60 per month, three rations per day, and forage for one horse.

When the Constitution was formed, Congress had power to raise and support armies, and to provide for and support a navy, and to make rules and regulations for the government and regulation of land and naval forces. In the absence of all limitations, general or special, is it not fair to assume that they were to do these substantially in the same manner as had been done before? If so, then they were as truly empowered to appoint chaplains as to appoint generals or to enlist soldiers. Accordingly, we find provision for chaplains in the acts of 1791, of 1812, and of 1838. By the last there is to be one to each brigade in the army; the number is limited to thirty, and these in the most destitute places. The chaplain is also to discharge the duties of schoolmaster. The number in the navy is limited to twenty-four. Is there any violation of the Constitution in these laws for the appointment of chaplains in the army and navy? If not, let us look at the history of chaplains in Congress. Here, as before, we shall find that the same practice was in existence before and after the adoption of the Constitution. The American Congress began its session September 5, 1774. On the second day of the session, Mr. Samuel Adams proposed to open the session with prayer. I give Mr. Webster's account of it:

"At the meeting of the first Congress there was a doubt in the minds of many about the propriety of opening the session with prayer; and the reason assigned was, as here, the great diversity of opinion and religious belief; until, at last, Mr. Samuel Adams, with his gray hairs hanging about his shoulders, and with an impressive venerableness now seldom to be met with (I suppose owing to different habits), rose in that assembly, and, with the air of a perfect Puritan, said it did not become men professing to be Christian men, who had come together for solemn deliberation in the hour of their extremity, to say there was so wide a difference in their religious belief that they could not, as one man, bow the knee in prayer to the Almighty, whose advice and assistance they hoped to obtain; and, Independent as he was, and an enemy to all prelacy as he was known to be, he moved that Rev. Mr. Duche', of the Episcopal Church, should address the throne of grace in prayer. John Adams, in his letter to his wife, says he never saw a more moving spectacle. Mr. Duche' read the Episcopal service of the Church of England; and then, as if moved by the occasion, he broke out into extemporaneous prayer, and those men who were about to resort to force to obtain their rights were moved to tears; and floods of tears, he says, ran down the cheeks of the pacific Quakers, who formed part of that interesting assembly; and, depend upon it, that where there is a spirit of Christianity, there is a spirit which rises above form, above ceremonies, independent of sect or creed and the controversies of clashing doctrines."

That same clergyman was afterwards appointed chaplain of the American Congress. He had such an appointment five days after the Declaration of Independence.

On December 22, 1776, on December 13, 1784, and on February 29, 1788, it was resolved that two chaplains should be appointed. So far for the old American Congress. I do not deem it out of place to notice one act, of many, to show that Congress was not indifferent to the religious interests of the people; and they were not peculiarly afraid of the charge of uniting Church and State. On the 11th of September, 1777, a committee having consulted with Dr. Allison about printing an edition of thirty thousand Bibles, and finding that they would be compelled to send abroad for type and paper, with an advance of 10,272 pounds sterling, 10 shillings, Congress voted to instruct the Committee on Commerce to import twenty thousand Bibles from Scotland and Holland into the different ports of the Union. The reason assigned was that the use of the book was so universal and important. Now, what was passing on that day? The army of Washington was fighting the battle of Brandywine; the gallant soldiers of the Revolution were displaying their heroic though unavailing valor; twelve hundred soldiers were stretched in death on that battle-field; Lafayette was bleeding; the booming of the cannon was heard in the hall where Congress was sitting, in the hall from which Congress was soon to be a fugitive. At that important hour Congress was passing an order for importing twenty thousand Bibles: and yet we have never heard that they were charged by their generation of any attempt to unite Church and State, or surpassing their powers to legislate on religious matters.

There was a convention assembled between the old and new forms of government. Considering the character of the men, the work in which they were engaged, and the results of their labors, I think them the most remarkable body of men ever assembled. Benjamin Franklin addressed that body on the subject of employing chaplains; and certainly Franklin will not be accused of fanaticism in religion, or of a wish to unite Church and State....

There certainly can be no doubt as to the practice of employing chaplains in deliberative bodies previous to the adoption of the Constitution. We are, then, prepared to see if any change was made in that respect in the new order of affairs.

The first Congress under the Constitution began on the 4th of March, 1789; but there was not a quorum for business till the 1st of April. On the 9th of that month. Oliver Ellsworth was appointed, on the part of the Senate, to confer with a committee of the House of rules, and on the appointment of chaplains. The House chose five men, - Boudinot, Bland, Tucker, Sherman, and Madison. The result of their consultation was a recommendation to appoint two chaplains of different denominations, one by the Senate and one by the House, to interchange weekly. The Senate appointed Dr. Provost on the 25th of April.

On the 1st day of May, Washington's first speech was read to the House, and the first business after that speech was the appointment of Dr. Linn as chaplain. By whom was this plan made? Three out of six of that joint committee were members of the convention that framed the Constitution. Madison, Ellsworth, and Sherman passed directly from the hall of the convention to the hall of Congress. Did they not know what was constitutional? The law of 1789 was passed in compliance with their plan, giving chaplains a salary of $500. It was re-enacted in 1816, and continues to the present time. Chaplains have been appointed from all the leading denominations, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Congregationalist, Catholic, Unitarian, and others.

I am sure that one of our petitioners might truly reply that the article was not in the body of the Constitution, but was one of the amendments recommended by Virginia. This does not weaken the argument in favor of chaplains. In the same convention of Virginia, which proposed amendments, James Madison, James Monroe, and John Marshall were members. All these men were members closely connected with the Government. Madison and Monroe were members of Congress when the First Amendment was adopted and became a part of the Constitution. Madison was a member of the convention framing the Constitution, of the convention proposing the amendment, and of Congress when adopted; and yet neither Madison nor Monroe ever uttered a word or gave a vote to indicate that the appointment of chaplains was unconstitutional. The Convention of Virginia elected on its first day a chaplain, Rev. Abner Waugh, who every morning read prayers immediately after the ringing of the bell for calling the convention. No one will suppose that convention was so inconsistent as to appoint their chaplain for the own deliberative assembly in the State of Virginia, and then recommend that this should be denied to the deliberative bodies of the nation...

At the adoption of the Constitution, we believe every State - certainly ten of the thirteen - provided as regularly for the support of the Church as for the support of the Government: one, Virginia, had the system of tithes. Down to the Revolution, every colony did sustain religion in some form. It was deemed peculiarly proper that the religion of liberty should be upheld by a free people. Had the people, during the Revolution, had a suspicion of any attempt to war against Christianity, that Revolution would have been strangled in its cradle. At the time of the adoption of the Constitution and the amendments, the universal sentiment was that Christianity should be encouraged, not any one sect. Any attempt to level and discard all religion would have been viewed with universal indignation. The object was not to substitute Judaism or Mohammedanism, or infidelity, but to prevent rivalry among sects to the exclusion of others...

It must be considered as the foundation on which the whole structure rests. Laws will not have permanence or power without the sanction of religious sentiment, - without a firm belief that there is a Power above us that will reward our virtues and punish our vices. In this age there can be no substitute for Christianity: that, in its general principles, is the great conservative element on which we must rely for the purity and permanence of free institutions. That was the religion of the founders of the republic, and they expected it to remain the religion of their descendants. There is a great and very prevalent error on this subject in the opinion that those who organized this Government did not legislate on religion.

United States Congress (May 1854), in the Thirty-Fourth Congress assembled, Nathaniel P. Banks of Massachusetts being Speaker of the House, passed a resolution in the House which declared:

Whereas, The people of these United States, from their earliest history to the present time, have been led by the hand of a kind Providence, and are indebted for the countless blessings of the past and present, and dependent for continued prosperity in the future upon Almighty God; and whereas the great vital and conservative element in our system is the belief of our people in the pure doctrines and divine truths of the gospel of Jesus Christ, it eminently becomes the representatives of a people so highly favored to acknowledge in the most public manner their reverence for God: Therefore,

1. Resolved. That the daily sessions of this body be opened with prayer.

2. Resolved. That the ministers of the gospel in this city are hereby requested to attend and alternately perform this solemn duty.

Wilde, Oscar Fingal O'Flahertie Wills (October 16, 1854-November 30, 1900), was an Irish poet whose works include: Lady Windermere's Fan, 1892; A Woman of No Importance, 1893; An Ideal Husband, 1895; and The Importance of Being Earnest, 1895. He edited the journal Woman's World. In the Ballad of Reading Gaol, 1898, Pt. V, st. 14, Oscar Wilde stated:

How else but through a broken heart
May the Lord Christ enter in?

Pope Benedict XV (November 21, 1854-January 22, 1922), whose given name was Giacomo Della Chiesa, was the Pontiff during World War I. On August 1, 1917, Pope Benedict XV, in his offer of mediation to the European Powers wrote from the Vatican:

Do not, then, turn a deaf ear to our prayer, accept the paternal invitation which we extend to you in the name of the Divine Redeemer, Prince of Peace. Bear in mind your very grave responsibility to God and man; on your decision depend the quiet and joy of numberless families, the lives of thousands of young men, the happiness, in a word, of the peoples to whom it is your imperative duty to secure this boon. May the Lord inspire you with decisions conformable to His very holy will. May Heaven grant that in winning the applause of your contemporaries you will also earn from the future generations the great titles of pacificators. As for us, closely united in prayer and penitence with all the faithful souls who yearn for peace, we implore for you the divine spirit, enlightenment, and guidance.

Bellamy, Francis (1856-1931), was a minister from Boston who wrote the Pledge of Allegiance. He was ordained in the Baptist Church, 1879, and served as the pastor of the First Baptist Church, Little Falls, New York. He was a member of the staff of The Youth's Companion, which first published his Pledge of Allegiance on September 8, 1892. At the dedication of the 1892 Chicago World's Fair, October 12, 1892, public school children first recited the Pledge of Allegiance during the National School Celebration on the 400th anniversary of Columbus' discovery of America.

The Pledge was adopted by the 79th Congress on December 28, 1945, as Public Law 287. The words "under God," taken from Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, "... that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth...", were added to the Pledge of Allegiance on June 14, 1954, by a Joint Resolution of Congress, 243 (Public Law 83-396). President Dwight Eisenhower signed the pledge into law:

I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

President Eisenhower gave his support to the Congressional Act, which added the phrase "under God" to the Pledge of Allegiance, saying:

In this way we are reaffirming the transcendence of religious faith in America's heritage and future; in this way we shall constantly strengthen those spiritual weapons which forever will be our country's most powerful resource in peace and war.

President Eisenhower then stood on the steps of the Capitol Building and recited the Pledge of Allegiance for the first time with the phrase, "one Nation under God."

Washington, Booker Taliaferro (April 5, 1856-November 14, 1915), was a Black American educator, writer and reformer. Born a slave, he taught at Malden, West Virginia, and at the Hampton Institute. He founded the Tuskegee Institute and recruited George Washington Carver as a professor. He wrote Up From Slavery, 1901; and The Future of the American Negro, 1899. He was the first Black to have his picture on a U.S. postage stamp, 1940; the first Black elected to the Hall of Fame, 1945; and the first Black to have his image on a U.S. coin, 1946.

In the spring of 1896, Booker T. Washington wrote a letter to George W. Carver, who had just received his Masters Degree from Iowa State Agricultural Institute:

Tuskegee Institute seeks to provide education - a means for survival to those who attend. Our students are poor, often starving. They travel miles of torn roads, across years of poverty. We teach them to read and write, but words cannot fill stomachs. They need to learn how to plant and harvest crops....

I cannot offer you money, position or fame. The first two you have. The last, from the place you now occupy, you will no doubt achieve.

These things I now ask you to give up. I offer you in their place - work - hard, hard work - the challenge of bringing people from degradation, poverty and waste to full manhood.

Booker T. Washington

On May 16, 1896, George W. Carver responded to Booker T. Washington:

My dear Sir,

I am just in receipt of yours of the 13th inst., and hasten to reply.

I am looking forward to a very busy, pleasant and profitable time at your college and shall be glad to cooperate with you in doing all I can through Christ who strengtheneth me to better the condition of our people.

Some months ago I read your stirring address delivered at Chicago and I said amen to all you said, furthermore you have the correct solution to the "race problem"....

Providence permitting, I will be there in Nov. God bless you and your work,
Geo. W. Carver

American Quotations.txt

Booker T. Washington declared:

I shall allow no man to belittle my soul by making me hate him.

No race can prosper till it learns that there is as much dignity in tilling a field as in writing a poem.

Regarding social work, Booker T. Washington stated:

I have always had the greatest respect for the work of The Salvation Army, especially because I have noted that it draws no color line in religion.

Shaw, George Bernard (July 26, 1856-November 2, 1950), was an acclaimed British dramatist, novelist and critic, who became popular for his satirical attacks on the conventions of his day. He wrote more than 40 plays, and in 1925 won the Nobel prize for literature. George Bernard Shaw helped found the Fabian Society, became an active socialist, and spent many years of his life promoting socialism. In an article he wrote later in life, entitled "Too True to be Good," George Bernard Shaw wrote:

The science to which I pinned my faith is bankrupt. Its counsels, which should have established the millennium, have led directly to the suicide of Europe. I believed them once. In their name I helped to destroy the faith of millions of worshipers in the temples of a thousand creeds, and now they look at me and witness the great tragedy of an atheist who has lost his faith."

George Bernard Shaw expressed:

We are told that when Jehovah created the world He saw it was good. What would He say now?

Where there is no religion, hypocrisy becomes good taste.

Rich men without convictions are more dangerous in modern society than poor women without chastity.

The worst sin towards our fellow creatures is not to hate them, but to be indifferent to them: that's the essence of inhumanity.

The first prison I ever saw had inscribed on it Cease to do evil: learn to do well; but as the inscription was on the outside, the prisoners could not read it. It should have been addressed to the self-righteous free spectator in the street, and should have run All have sinned, and fallen short of the glory of God.

Beware of the man whose God is in the skies.

If Jesus had been indicted in a modern court, He would have been examined by two doctors; found to be obsessed by a delusion; declared to be incapable of pleading; and sent to an asylum....

What God has joined together no man shall ever put asunder: God will take care of that.

In his historical drama, Saint Joan (1924), which is generally regarded as his greatest work, George Bernard Shaw had the character of the Maid declare:

Yes: I am alone on earth: I have always been alone....Do not think you can frighten me by telling me that I am alone. France is alone; and God is alone; and what is my loneliness before the loneliness of my country and my God? I see now that the loneliness of God is His strength: what would He be if He listened to your jealous little counsels? Well, my loneliness shall be my strength too: it is better to be alone with God: His friendships will not fail me, nor His counsel, nor His love. In His strength I will dare, and dare, and dare, until I die.

Wilson, (Thomas) Woodrow (December 28, 1856-February 3, 1924), was the 28th President of the United States, 1913-21; married Edith Bolling Galt, 1915, after death of first wife; Governor of New Jersey, 1911-13; president of Princeton University, 1902-10; professor at Princeton University, 1890-02; professor at Wesleyan University, 1888-90; instructor of history at Bryn Mawr College, 1885-88; married Ellen Louise Axson, 1885; graduate student at Johns Hopkins University, 1883-85; admitted to bar, 1882; graduated from University of Virginia Law School, 1882; and graduated from Princeton University, 1879.

In 1911, at a Denver rally, Governor Woodrow Wilson remarked:

A nation which does not remember what it was yesterday, does not know what it is today, nor what it is trying to do. We are trying to do a futile thing if we do not know where we came from or what we have been about...

The Bible...is the one supreme source of revelation of the meaning of life, the nature of God and spiritual nature and needs of men. It is the only guide of life which really leads the spirit in the way of peace and salvation.

America was born a Christian nation. America was born to exemplify that devotion to the elements of righteousness which are derived from the revelations of Holy Scripture.

In 1911, Woodrow Wilson stated:

The man whose faith is rooted in the Bible knows that reform cannot be stayed, that the finger of God that moves upon the face of the nations is against every man that plots the nation's downfall or the people's deceit; that these men are simply groping and staggering in their ignorance to a fearful day of judgement; and that whether one generation witnesses it or not, the glad day of revelation and of freedom will come in which men will sing by the host of the coming of the Lord in His glory, and all of those will be forgotten - those little scheming, contemptible creatures that forgot the image of God and tried to frame men according to the image of the evil one.

On Tuesday, March 4, 1913, in his First Inaugural Address, given on the steps of the Capitol in Washington, D. C., President Woodrow Wilson challenged the nation:

The Nation has been deeply stirred, stirred by a solemn passion, stirred by the knowledge of wrong, of ideals lost, of government too often debauched and made an instrument of evil. The feelings with which we face this new age of right and opportunity sweep across our heartstrings like some air out of God's own presence, where justice and mercy are reconciled and the judge and the brother are one...

This is not a day of triumph; it is a day of dedication. Here muster not the forces of party, but the forces of humanity. Men's hearts wait upon us; men's lives hang in the balance; men's hopes call upon us to day what we will do. Who shall live up to the great trust? Who dare fail to try? I summon all honest men, all patriotic, all forward-looking men to my side. God helping me, I will not fail them, if they will but council and sustain me!

On May 31, 1913, in a Proclamation for the Preservation and Protection of Fur Seals and Sea Otter, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

The Convention between the Governments of the United States, Great Britain, Japan and Russia for the preservation and protection of the fur seals and sea otter which frequent the waters of the North Pacific Ocean... Now, Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States... authorize the naval or other officers of the United States to arrest, detain, and deliver to the proper officers of such Governments, respectively, all persons and vessels subject to their jurisdiction, offending against said Convention...

Done at the city of Washington this thirty-first day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-seventh. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: William Jennings Bryan,
Secretary of State.

On July 4, 1913, in a message delivered at Gettysburg, Pennsylvania, President Woodrow Wilson declared:

Here is the nation God has builded by our hands. What shall we do with it? Who stands ready to act again and always in the spirit of this day of reunion and hope and patriotic fervor? The day of our country's life has but broadened into morning.

Do not put uniforms by. Put the harness of the present on. Lift your eyes to the great tracts of life yet to be conquered in the interest of righteous peace, of that prosperity which lies in a people's heart and outlasts all wars and errors of men.

Come, let us be comrades and soldiers yet, to serve our fellow men in quiet counsel, where the blare of trumpets is neither heard nor heeded and where the things are done which make blessed the nations of the world in peace and righteousness and love.

On October 1, 1913, in a Proclamation for the Protection of Migratory Birds, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

All wild geese, wild swans, brant, wild ducks, snipe, plover, woodcock, rail, wild pigeons, and all other migratory game and insectivorous birds which in their northern and southern migrations pass through or do not remain permanently the entire year within the borders of any State or Territory, shall hereafter be deemed to be within the custody and protection of the Government of the United States, and shall not be destroyed or taken contrary to regulations hereinafter provided therefor....

It shall be unlawful to shoot or by any device kill or seize and capture migratory birds within the protection of this law during said closed seasons....

Done at the city of Washington, this first day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-eighth.
Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: William Jennings Bryan,
Secretary of State.

On October 23, 1913, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

The season is at hand in which it has been our long respected custom as a people to turn in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His manifold mercies and blessings to us as a nation.

The year that has just passed has been marked in a peculiar degree by manifestations of His gracious and beneficent providence. We have not only had peace throughout our borders and with the nations of the world but that peace has been brightened by constantly multiplying evidences of genuine friendship, of mutual sympathy and understanding, and of the happy operation of many elevating influences both of ideal and of practice.

The nation has been prosperous not only but has proved its capacity to take calm counsel amidst the rapid movement of affairs and deal with its own life in a spirit of candor, righteousness, and comity. We have seen the practical completion of a great work at the Isthmus of Panama which not only exemplifies the nation's abundant capacity of its public servants but also promises the beginning of a new age, of new contacts, new neighborhoods, new sympathies, new bonds, and new achievements of co-operation and peace.

"Righteousness exalteth a nation" and "peace on earth, good will towards men" furnish the only foundation upon which can be built the lasting achievements of the human spirit. The year has brought us the satisfaction of work well done and fresh visions of our duty which will make the work of the future better still.

Now, Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday the twenty-seventh of November next as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease from their wonted occupations and in their several homes and places of worship render thanks to Almighty God.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twenty-third day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and thirteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-eighth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: William Jennings Bryan,
Secretary of State.

On February 3, 1914, in a Proclamation Revoking the Prohibition of Exportation of Arms or Munitions of War to Mexico, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

Now, Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, hereby declare and proclaim that, as the conditions on which the Proclamation of March 14, 1912, was based have essentially changed, and as it is desirable to place the United States with reference to the exportation of arms or munitions of war to Mexico in the same position as other Powers, the said proclamation is hereby revoked....

Done at the city of Washington this third day of February, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-eighth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: William Jennings Bryan, Secretary of State.

On April 28, 1914, in a Proclamation for Protection Against Domestic Violence in Colorado, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

Now, Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, do hereby admonish all good citizens of the United States and all persons within the territory and jurisdiction of the United States against aiding, countenancing, abetting, or taking part in such unlawful proceedings; and I do hereby warn all persons engaged in or connected with said domestic violence....

Done at the city of Washington, this twenty-eighth day of April in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and fourteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-eighth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: William Jennings Bryan,
Secretary of State.

On May 9, 1914, in a Proclamation of Mother's Day, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

Now, Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the said Joint Resolution, do hereby direct the government officials to display the United States flag on all government buildings and do invite the people of the United States to display the flag at their homes or other suitable places on the Second Sunday in May as a public expression of our love and reverence for the mothers of our country.

Done at the City of Washington this ninth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-eighth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: William Jennings Bryan,
Secretary of State.

On May 11, 1914, in an address delivered at the New York Navy Yard in Brooklyn, at the Funeral Service over the remains of seventeen Sailors and Marines who lost their lives at the taking of Vera Cruz, Mexico, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

They did not give their lives for themselves. They gave their lives for us... And what greater thing could you serve than a nation such as this we love and are proud of? Are you sorry for these lads? Does it not quicken your pulses to think of the list of them? I hope to God none of you may join the list, but if you do, you will join an immortal company...

We do not want to fight the Mexicans. We want to serve the Mexicans if we can...

May God grant to all of us that vision of patriotic service which here in solemnity and grief and pride is borne in upon our hearts and consciences.

On June 5, 1914, in addressing the graduating class of the U. S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, Maryland, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

You are champions of your fellow men, particularly of that great body one hundred million strong whom you represent in the United States. What do you think is the most lasting impression that those boys down in Vera Cruz are going to leave? They have had to use some force - I pray God it may not be necessary for them to use any more - but do you think that the way fought is going to be the more lasting impression?... The things that show the moral compulsions of the human conscience, those are the things by which we have been building up civilization, not by force. And the lasting impression that those boys are going to leave is this.

On July 4, 1914, in an address at Independence Hall, Philadelphia, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

The way to success in this great country, with its fair judgements, is to show that you are not afraid of anybody except God and His final verdict. If I did not believe that, I would not believe in democracy. If I did not believe that, I would not believe that people can govern themselves. If I did not believe that the moral judgement would be the last judgment, the final judgment, in the minds of men as well as the tribunal of God, I could not believe in popular government.

On September 8, 1914, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Prayer and Supplication:

Whereas great nations of the world have taken up arms against one another and war now draws millions of men into battle whom the counsel of statesmen has not been able to save from the terrible sacrifice;

And Whereas in this as in all things it is our privilege and duty to seek counsel and succor of Almighty God, humbling ourselves before Him, confessing our weakness and our lack of any wisdom equal to these things;

And Whereas it is the especial wish and longing of the people of the United States, in prayer and counsel and all friendliness, to serve the cause of peace;

Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do designate Sunday, the fourth day of October next, a day of prayer and supplication and do request all God-fearing persons to repair on that day to their places of worship there to unite their petitions to Almighty God that, overruling the counsel of men, setting straight the things they can not govern or alter, taking pity on the nations now in the throes of conflict, in His mercy and goodness showing a way where men can see none, He vouchsafe His children healing peace again and restore once more that concord among men and nations without which there can be neither happiness nor true friendship nor any wholesome fruit of toil or thought in the world; praying also to this end that He forgive us our sins, our ignorance of His holy will, our wilfulness and many errors, and lead us in the paths of obedience to places of vision and to thoughts and counsels that purge and make wise.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this eighth day of September in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-ninth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: William Jennings Bryan,
Secretary of State.

On October 24, 1914, in an address entitled "The Power of Christian Young Men," delivered at the Anniversary Celebration of the Young Men's Christian Association in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

I am more interested in it because it is an association of young men who are Christian. I wonder if we attach sufficient importance to Christianity as a mere instrumentality in the life of mankind... If you will think about what you ought to do for other people, your character will take care of itself. Character is a by-product, and any man who devotes himself to its cultivation in his own case will become a selfish prig.

The only way your powers can become great is by exerting them outside the circle of your own narrow, special, selfish interests. And that is the reason of Christianity. Christ came into the world to save others, not to save himself; and no man is a true Christian who does not think constantly of how he can lift his brother, how he can assist his friend, how he can enlighten mankind, how he can make virtue the rule of conduct in the circle in which he lives.

An association that had its energies put forth in every direction, but an association of Christian young men is an association meant to put its shoulders under the world and life it, so that other men may feel that they have companions in bearing the weight and heat of the day; that other men may know that there are those who care for them, who would go into places of difficulty and danger to rescue them, who regard themselves as their brother's keeper.

And, then, I am glad that it is an association. Every word of its title means an element of strength. Young men are strong. Christian young men are the strongest kind of young men, and when they associate themselves together they have the incomparable strength of organization. The Young Men's Christian Association once excited, perhaps it is not too much to say, the hostility of the organized churches of the Christian world, because the movement looked as if it were so nonsectarian, as if it were so outside the ecclesiastical field, that perhaps it was an effort to draw young men away from the churches and to substitute this organization for the great bodies of Christian people who joined themselves in the Christian denominations. But after a while it appeared that it was a great instrumentality that belonged to all the churches; that it was a common instrument for sending the light of Christianity out into the world in its most practical form, drawing young men who were strangers into places where they could have companionship that stimulated them and suggestions that kept them straight and occupations that amused them without vicious practice; and then, by surrounding themselves with an atmosphere of purity and simplicity of life, catch something of a glimpse of the great ideal which Christ lifted when He was elevated upon the cross.

I remember hearing a very wise man say once, a man grown old in the service of a great church, that he had never taught his son religion dogmatically at any time; that he and the boy's mother had agreed that if the atmosphere of that home did make a Christian of the boy, nothing that they could say would make a Christian of him. They knew that Christianity was catching, and if they did not have it, it would not be communicated. If they did have it, it would penetrate while the boy slept, almost; while he was unconscious of the sweet influences that were about him, while he reckoned nothing of instruction, but merely breathed into his lungs the wholesome air of a Christian home. This is the principle of the Young Men's Christian Association - to make a place where the atmosphere makes great ideals contagious. That is the reason that I said, though I had forgotten that I said, what is quoted on the outer page of the program - that you can test a modern community by the degree of its interest in its Young Men's Christian Association. You can test whether it knows what road it wants to travel or not. You can test whether it is deeply interested in the spiritual and essential prosperity of its rising generation. I know of no test that can be more conclusively put to a community than that.

I want to suggest to the young men of this association that it is the duty of young men not only to combine for the things that are good, but to combine in a militant spirit. There is a fine passage in one of Milton's prose writings which I am sorry to say I can not quote, but the meaning of which I can give you, and it is worth hearing. He says that he has no patience with a cloistered virtue that does not go out and seek its adversary. Ah, how tired I am of the men who are merely on the defensive, who hedge themselves in, who perhaps enlarge the hedge enough to include their little family circle and ward off all the evil influences of the world from that loved and hallowed group! How tired I am of the men whose virtue is selfish because it is merely self-protective! And how much I wish that men by the hundred thousand might volunteer to go out and seek the adversary and subdue him!

I have had the fortune to take part in affairs of a considerable variety of sorts, and I have tried to hate as few persons as possible, but there is an exquisite combination of contempt and hate that I have for a particular kind of person, and that is the moral coward. I wish we could give all our cowards a perpetual vacation. Let them go off and sit on the sidelines and see us play the game; and put them off the field if they interfere with the game. They do nothing but harm, and they do it by that most subtle and fatal thing of all, that of taking the momentum and the spirit and the forward dash out of things. A man who is virtuous and a coward has no marketable virtue about him. The virtue, I repeat, which is merely self-defensive is not serviceable even, I suspect, to himself. For how a man can swallow and not taste bad when he is a coward and thinking only of himself I can not imagine. Be militant! Be an organization that is going to do things!...

When I think of an association of Christian young men I wonder that it has not already turned the world upside down. I wonder, not that has done so much, for it has done a great deal, but that it has done so little; and I can only conjecture that it does not realize its own strength. I can only imagine that it has not yet got its pace. I wish I could believe, and I do believe, that at 70 it is just reaching its majority, and that from this time on a dream greater even than George Williams ever dreamed will be realized in the great accumulating momentum of Christian men throughout the world. For, gentlemen, this is an age in which the principles of men who utter public opinion dominate the world. It makes no difference what is done for the time being. After the struggle is over the jury will sit, and nobody can corrupt that jury....

Now, is it not very important that we who shall constitute a portion of the jury should get our best judgements to work and base them upon Christian forbearance and Christian principles, upon the idea that it is impossible by sophistication to establish that a thing that is wrong is right? And yet, while we are going to judge with the absolute standard of righteousness, we are going to judge with Christian feeling, being men of a like sort ourselves, suffering the same passions; and while we do not condemn we are going to seek to say and to live the truth. What I am hoping for is that these 70 years have just been a running start, and that now there will be a great rush of Christian principle upon the strongholds of evil and of wrong in the world. Those strongholds are not as strong as they look. Almost every vicious man is afraid of society, and if you once open the door where he is, he will run. All you have to do is to fight, not with cannon but with light....

That, in my judgment, is what the Young Men's Christian Association can do. It can point out to its members the things that are wrong. It can guide the feet of those who are going astray; and when its members have realized the power of the Christian principle, then they will not be men if they do not unite to see that the rest of the world experiences the same emancipation and reaches the same happiness of release.

I believe in the Young Men's Christian Association because I believe in the progress of moral ideas in the world....Eternal vigilance is the price, not only of liberty, but of a great many other things. It is the price of everything that is good. It is the price of one's own soul. It is the price of the souls of the people you love; and when it comes down to the final reckoning you have a standard that is immutable. What shall a man give in exchange for his own soul? Will he sell that? Will he consent to see another man sell his soul? Will he consent to see the conditions of his community such that men's souls are debauched and trodden under foot in the mire? What shall he give in exchange for his own soul, or any other man's soul? And since the world, the world of affairs, the world of society, is nothing less and nothing more than all of us put together, it is a great enterprise for the salvation of the soul in this world as well as in the next. There is a text in Scripture that has always interested me profoundly. It says godliness is profitable in this life as well as in the life that is to come; and if you do not start it in this life, it will not reach the life that is to come. Your measurements, your directions, your whole momentum, have to be established before you reach the next world. This world is intended as the place in which we shall show that we know how to grow in the stature of manliness and of righteousness.

I have come here to bid Godspeed to the great work of the Young Men's Christian Association.

On October 28, 1914, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

It has long been the honored custom of our people to turn in the fruitful autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for his many blessings and mercies to us as a nation. The year that is now drawing to a close since we last observed our day of national thanksgiving has been, while a year of discipline because of the mighty forces of war and of change which have disturbed the world, also a year of special blessing for us.

It has been vouchsafed to us to remain at peace, with honour, and some part to succour the suffering and supply the needs of those who are in want. We have been privileged by our own peace and self-control in some degree to steady the counsels and shape the hopes and purposes of a day of fear and distress. Our people have looked upon their own life as a nation with a deeper comprehension, a fuller realization of their responsibilities as well as of their blessings, and a keener sense of the moral and practical significance of what their part among the nations of the world may come to be.

The hurtful effects of foreign war in their own industrial and commercial affairs have made them feel the more fully and see the more clearly their mutual interdependence upon one another and has stirred them to a helpful cooperation such as they have seldom practiced before. They have been quickened by a great moral stimulation. Their unmistakable ardour for peace, their earnest pity and disinterested sympathy for those who are suffering, their readiness to help and to think of the needs of others, has revealed them to themselves as well as to the world.

Our crops will feed all who need food; the self-possession of our people amidst the most serious anxieties and difficulties and the steadiness and resourcefulness of our business men will serve other nations as well as our own.

The business of the country has been supplied with new instrumentalities and the commerce of the world with new channels of trade and intercourse. The Panama Canal has been opened to the commerce of the nations. The two continents of America have been bound in closer ties of friendship. New instrumentalities of acquaintance, intercourse, and mutual service. Never before have the people of the United States been so situated for their own advantage or the advantage of their neighbors or so equipped to serve themselves and mankind.

Now, Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday the twenty-sixth of November next as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease from their wonted occupations and in their several homes and places of worship render thanks to Almighty God.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twenty-eighth day of October in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-ninth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Acting Secretary of State.

On December 8, 1914, in his Second Annual Address to Congress, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

We are champions of peace and concord. And we should be very jealous of this distinction which we have sought to earn. Just now we should be particularly jealous of it because it is our dearest present hope that this character and reputation may presently, in God's providence, bring us an opportunity to counsel and obtain peace in the world and reconciliation and a healing settlement of many a matter that has cooled and interrupted the friendship of nations.

Ralston, in Indianapolis, Indiana, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

I will borrow a very interesting phrase from a distinguished gentleman of my acquaintance and beg that you will "keep your moral powder dry."...

May we not look forward to the time when we shall be called blessed among the nations, because we succored the nations of the world in their time of distress and of dismay? I for one pray God that that solemn hour may come, and I know the solidity of character and I know the exaltation of hope, I know the big principle with which the American people will respond to the call of the world for this service. I thank God that those who believe in America, who try to serve her people, are likely to be also what America herself from the first hoped and meant to be - the servant of mankind.

On May 10, 1915, before the mayor and a gathering of 4,000 naturalized American citizens in Convention Hall, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

You have just taken an oath of allegiance to the United States. Of allegiance to whom? Of allegiance to no one, unless it be God - certainly not of allegiance to those who temporarily represent this great Government....

A man does not hope for the thing that he does not believe in, and if some of us have forgotten what America believed in, you, at any rate, imported in your own hearts a renewal of the belief. That is the reason that I, for one, make you welcome. If I have in any degree forgotten what America was intended for, I will thank God if you will remind me.

On July 1, 1915, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation to commemorate the achievements of the Negro race during the fifty years of freedom:

A national exposition in commemoration of the achievements of the Negro race during the last fifty years will be held in Richmond, Virginia, July fifth to twenty-fifth, 1915. The occasion has been recognized as of national importance by Congress through an appropriation of $55,000 to aid in its promotion and consummation. This sum is being expended by the terms of the appropriation under the direction of the Governor of Virginia. The exposition is under the auspices of the Negro Historical and Industrial Association. The action of Congress in this matter indicates very happily the desire of the nation, as well as of the people of Virginia, to encourage the Negro in his efforts to solve his industrial problem. The National Negro Exposition is designed to demonstrate his progress in the last fifty years and to emphasize his opportunities. As President of the United States, I bespeak the active interest of the nation in the exposition and trust that every facility will be extended to the leaders whose earnest work has made the undertaking possible.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this first day of July in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-ninth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On October 11, 1915, before the Daughters of the American Revolution, in Memorial Continental Hall, Washington, D. C., President Woodrow Wilson stated:

I am in a hurry to have an opportunity to have a line-up and let the men who are thinking first of other countries stand on one side - Biblically, it should be on the left - and all those that are for America, first, last and all the time on the other side...

I believe that the glory of America is that she is a great spiritual conception and that in the spirit of her institutions dwells not only her distinction but her power, and that the one thing that the world cannot permanently resist is the moral force of great and triumphant convictions.

On October 20, 1915, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

It has long been the honored custom of our people to turn in the fruitful autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and mercies to us as a nation. The year that is now drawing to a close since we last observed our day of national thanksgiving has been, while a year of discipline because of the mighty forces of war and of change which have disturbed the world, also a year of special blessing for us.

Another year of peace has been vouchsafed us; another year in which not only to take thought of our duty to ourselves and to mankind but also to adjust ourselves to the many responsibilities thrust upon us by a war which has involved almost the whole of Europe. We have been able to assert our rights and the rights of mankind without breach of friendship with the great nations with whom we have had to deal; and while we have asserted rights we have been able also to perform duties and exercise privileges of succour and helpfulness which should serve to demonstrate our desire to make the offices of friendship the means of truly disinterested and unselfish service. Our ability to serve all who could avail themselves of our services in the midst of crisis has been increased, by a gracious Providence, by more and more abundant crops; our ample financial resources have enabled us to steady the markets of the world and facilitate necessary movements of commerce which the war might otherwise have rendered impossible; and our people have come more and more to a sober realization of the part they have been called upon to play in a time when all the world is shaken by unparalleled distress and disasters.

The extraordinary circumstances of such a time have done much to quicken our national consciousness and deepen and confirm our confidence in the principles of peace and freedom by which we have always sought to be guided. Out of darkness and perplexity have come firmer counsels of policy and clearer perceptions of the essential welfare of the nation. We have prospered while other people were at war, but our prosperity has been vouchsafed us, we believe, only that we might the better perform the functions which war rendered it impossible for them to perform.

Now, Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday the twenty-fifth of November next as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease from their wonted occupations and in their several homes and places of worship render thanks to Almighty God.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twentieth day of October in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fifteen and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fortieth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On November 5, 1915, in an address celebrating the fiftieth Anniversary of the Manhattan Club, at the Biltmore Hotel, New York, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

The mission of America in the world is essentially a mission of peace on earth and good will among men (Lk. 2:14)....

May I not say, while I am speaking of this, that there is another danger we should guard against? We should rebuke not only manifestations of racial feeling here in America where there should be none, but also every manifestation of religious and sectarian antagonism. It does not become America that within her borders, where every man is free to follow the dictates of his conscience and worship God as he pleases, men should raise the cry of church against church. To do that is to strike at the very spirit and heart of America.

We are a God-fearing people. We agree to differ about methods of worship, but we are united in believing in Divine Providence and in worshipping the God of Nations. We are the champions of religious right here and everywhere that it may be our privilege to give in our countenance and support....

Here is the nation God has builded by our hands. What shall we do with it? Who is there who does not stand ready at all times to act in her behalf in a spirit of devoted and disinterested patriotism? We are yet only in the youth and first consciousness of our power. The day of our country's life is still but in its fresh morning. Let us lift up our eyes to the great tracts of life yet to be conquered in the interest of righteous peace.

On December 7, 1915, in his Third Annual Address to Congress, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

We do believe in a body of free citizens ready and sufficient to take care of themselves and of the governments which they have set up to serve them. In our constitutions themselves we have commanded that "the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed," and our confidence has been that our safety in times of danger would lie in the rising of the nation to take care of itself, as the farmers of Lexington.

On January 11, 1916, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a Contribution Day for the aid of stricken Jewish people:

Whereas, I have received from the Senate of the United States a Resolution, passed January 6, 1916, reading as follows:

"Whereas in the various countries now engaged in war there are nine millions of Jews, the great majority of whom are destitute of food, shelter, and clothing; and

"Whereas millions of them have been driven from their homes without warning, deprived of an opportunity to make provision for their most elementary wants, causing starvation, disease and untold suffering; and

"Whereas the people of the United States of America have learned with sorrow of this terrible plight of millions of human beings and have most generously responded to the cry for help whenever such an appeal has reached them;

"Therefore be it Resolved, That, in view of the misery, wretchedness, and hardships which these nine millions of Jews are suffering, the President of the United States be respectfully asked to designate a day on which the citizens of this country may give expression to their sympathy by contributing to the funds now being raised for the relief of the Jews in the war zones."

And Whereas, I feel confident that the people of the United States will be moved to aid the war-stricken people of a race which has given to the United States so many worthy citizens;

Now, Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, in compliance with the suggestion of the Senate thereof, do appoint and proclaim January 27, 1916, as a day upon which the people of the United States may make such contributions as they feel disposed for the aid of the stricken Jewish people.

Contributions may be addressed to the American Red Cross, Washington, D.C., which will care for their proper distribution.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this eleventh day of January, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and sixteen, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and fortieth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On May 30, 1916, President Woodrow Wilson issued a National Proclamation of Flag Day:

It has therefore seemed to me fitting that I should call your attention to the approach of the anniversary of the day upon which the flag of the United States was adopted by the Congress as the emblem of the Union, and to suggest to you that it should this year and in years to come be given special significance as a day of renewal and reminder, a day upon which we should direct our minds with a special desire of renewal to thoughts of the ideals and principles of which we have sought to make our great Government the embodiment.

I therefore suggest and request that throughout the nation and if possible in every community the fourteenth day of June be observed as Flag Day with special patriotic exercises, at which means shall be taken to give significant expressions to our thoughtful love of America, our comprehension of the great mission of liberty and justice to which we have devoted ourselves as a people, our pride in the history and our enthusiasm for the political program of the nation, our determination to make it greater and purer with each generation, and our resolution to demonstrate to all the world its vital union in sentiment and purpose, accepting only those as true compatriots who feel as we do the compulsion of this supreme allegiance.

Let us on that day rededicate ourselves to the nation, "one and inseparable," from which every thought that is not worthy of our fathers' first vows in independence, liberty, and right shall be excluded and in which we shall stand with united hearts, for an America which no man can corrupt, no influence draw away from its ideals, no force divide against itself, - a nation signally distinguished among all the nations of mankind for its clear, individual conception alike of its duties and its privileges, its obligations and its rights.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this thirtieth day of May, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and sixteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and fortieth.

Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On November 17, 1916, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

It has long been the custom of our people to turn in the fruitful autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and mercies to us as a nation. The year that has elapsed since we last observed our day of thanksgiving has been rich in blessings to us as a people, but the whole face of the world has been darkened by war. In the midst of our peace and happiness, our thoughts dwell with painful disquiet upon the struggles and sufferings of the nations at war and of the peoples upon whom war has brought disaster without choice or possibility of escape on their part. We cannot think of our own happiness without thinking also of their pitiful distress.

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do appoint Thursday, the thirtieth of November, as a day of National Thanksgiving and Prayer, and urge and advise the people to resort to their several places of worship on that day to render thanks to Almighty God for the blessings of peace and unbroken prosperity which He has bestowed upon our beloved country in such unstinted measure. And I also urge and suggest our duty in this our day of peace and abundance to think in deep sympathy of the stricken peoples of the world upon whom the curse and terror of war has so pitilessly fallen, and to contribute out of our abundant means to the relief of their suffering. Our people could in no better way show their real attitude towards the present struggle of the nations than by contributing out of their abundance to the relief of the suffering which war has brought in its train.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this seventeenth day of November, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and sixteen and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-first. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On February 3, 1917, in a message to Congress, President Woodrow Wilson announced that diplomatic relations with Germany were severed:

We seek merely to stand true alike in thought and in action to the immemorial principles of our people, which I sought to express in my address to the Senate only two weeks ago - seek merely to vindicate our rights to liberty and justice and an unmolested life. These are the bases of peace, not war. God grant we may not be challenged to defend them by acts of willful injustice on the part of the Government of Germany.

On Monday, March 5, 1917, in his Second Inaugural Address, delivered on the Front Portico of the Capitol, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

We are being forged into a new unity amidst the fires that now blaze throughout the world. In their ardent heat we shall, in God's Providence, let us hope, be purged of faction and division, purified of the errant humors of party and of private interest, and shall stand forth in the days to come with a new dignity of national pride and spirit. Let each man see to it that the dedication is in his own heart, the high purpose of the nation in his own mind, ruler of his own will and desire.

I stand here and have taken the high and solemn oath to which you have been audience because the people of the United States have chosen me for this august delegation of power and have gracious judgment named me their leader in affairs.

I know now what the task means. I realize to the full the responsibility which it involves. I pray God I may be given the wisdom and the prudence to do my duty in the true spirit of this great people.

American Quotations.txt

On April 2, 1917, President Woodrow Wilson delivered his War Message to Congress:

To such a task we can dedicate our lives and our fortunes, everything that we are and everything that we have, with the pride of those who know that the day has come when America is privileged to spend her blood and her might for the principles that gave her birth and happiness and the peace which she has treasured. God helping her, she can do no other.

On April 16, 1917, in an address to his fellow countrymen, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

This is the time for America to correct her unpardonable fault of wastefulness and extravagance. Let every man and every woman assume the duty of careful, provident use and expenditure as a public duty, as a dictate of patriotism which no one can now expect ever to be excused or forgiven... And I hope that the clergymen will not think the theme of it an unworthy or inappropriate subject of comment and homily from their pulpits. The supreme test of the nation has come. We must all speak, act, and serve together!

On May 30, 1917, in an address before the Grand Army of the Republic at Arlington Cemetery, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

There are times when words seem empty and only actions seem great. Such a time has come, and in the providence of God, America will once more have an opportunity to show the world that she was born to serve mankind.

On August 1, 1917, Pope Benedict XV, in his offer of mediation to the European Powers involved in World War I, wrote from the Vatican:

Do not, then, turn a deaf ear to our prayer, accept the paternal invitation which we extend to you in the name of the Divine Redeemer, Prince of Peace. Bear in mind your very grave responsibility to God and man; on your decision depend the quiet and joy of numberless families, the lives of thousands of young men, the happiness, in a word, of the peoples to whom it is your imperative duty to secure this boon. May the Lord inspire you with decisions conformable to His very holy will. May Heaven grant that in winning the applause of your contemporaries you will also earn from the future generations the great titles of pacificators. As for us, closely united in prayer and penitence with all the faithful souls who yearn for peace, we implore for you the divine spirit, enlightenment, and guidance.

On September 3, 1917, in a message to the National Army, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

My affectionate confidence goes with you in every battle and every test. God keep and guide you!

On October 19, 1917, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Supplication and Prayer:

Whereas, the Congress of the United States, by a concurrent resolution adopted on the fourth day of the present month of October, in view of the entrance of our nation into the vast and awful war which now afflicts the greater part of the world, has requested me to set apart by official proclamation a day upon which our people should be called upon to offer concerted prayer to Almighty God for His divine aid in the success of our arms;

And, Whereas, it behooves a great free people, nurtured as we have been in the eternal principles of justice and of right, a nation which has sought from the earliest days of its existence to be obedient to the divine teachings which have inspired it in the exercise of its liberties, to turn always to the Supreme Master and cast themselves in faith at His feet, praying for His aid and succor in every hour of trial, to the end that the great aims to which our fathers dedicated our power as a people may not perish among men, but be always asserted and defended with fresh ardor and devotion and, through the Divine blessing, set at last upon enduring foundations for the benefit of all the free peoples of the earth:

Now, therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States, gladly responding to the wish expressed by the Congress, do appoint October twenty-eighth, being the last Sunday of the present month, as a day of supplication and prayer for all the people of the nation, earnestly exhorting all my countrymen to observe the appointed day, according to their several faiths, in solemn prayer that God's blessing may rest upon the high task which is laid upon us, to the end that the cause for which we give our lives and treasure may triumph and our efforts be blessed with high achievement.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this nineteenth day of October, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and seventeen, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-second.
Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On November 7, 1917, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

It has long been the honored custom of our people to turn in the fruitful autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and mercies to us as a nation. That custom we can follow now even in the midst of the tragedy of a world shaken by war and immeasurable disaster, in the midst of sorrow and great peril, because even amidst the darkness that has gathered about us we can see the great blessings God has bestowed upon us, blessings that are better than mere peace of mind and prosperity of enterprise.

We have been given the opportunity to serve mankind as we once served ourselves in the great day of our Declaration of Independence, by taking up arms against a tyranny that threatened to master and debase men everywhere and joining with other free peoples in demanding for all the nations of the world what we then demanded and obtained for ourselves. In this day of the revelation of our duty not only to defend our own rights as a nation but to defend also the rights of free men throughout the world, there has been vouchsafed us in full and inspiring measure the resolution and spirit of united action. We have been brought to one mind and purpose. A new vigor of common counsel and common action has been revealed in us. We should especially thank God that in such circumstances, in the midst of the greatest enterprise the spirits of men have ever entered upon, we have, if we but observe a reasonable and practicable economy, abundance with which to supply the needs of those associated with us as well as our own. A new light shines about us. The great duties of a new day awaken a new and greater national spirit in us. We shall never again be divided or wonder what stuff we are made of.

And while we render thanks for these things let us pray Almighty God that in all humbleness of spirit we may look always to Him for guidance; that we may be kept constant in the spirit and purpose of service; that by His grace our minds may be directed and our hands strengthened; and that in His good time liberty and security and peace and the comradeship of a common justice may be vouchsafed all the nations of the earth.

Wherefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-ninth day of November next as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease upon that day from their ordinary occupations and in their several homes and places of worship to render thanks to God, the great Ruler of Nations.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this 7th day of November, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and seventeen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-second. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On December 4, 1917, in an address to Congress, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

It is impossible to apply any standard of justice so long as such forces are unchecked and undefeated as the present masters of Germany. Not until that has been done can right be set up as arbiter and peacemaker among the nations. But when that has been done - as, God willing, it assuredly will be - we shall at last be free to do an unprecedented thing, and this is the time to avow our purpose to do it. We shall be free to base peace on generosity and justice, to the exclusions of all selfish claims to advantage even on the part of the victors....

A supreme moment of history has come. The eyes of the people have been opened and they see. The hand of God is laid upon the nations. He will show them favor,

I devoutly believe, only if they rise to the clear heights of His own justice and mercy.

On Sunday, January 20, 1918, in an Executive Order to the Army and Navy enjoining Sabbath observance, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

The President, commander in chief of the Army and Navy, following the reverent example of his predecessors, desires and enjoins the orderly observance of the Sabbath by the officers and men in the military and naval service of the United States. The importance for man and beast of the prescribed weekly rest, the sacred rights of Christian soldiers and sailors, a becoming deference to the best sentiment of a Christian people, and a due regard for the Divine Will demand that Sunday labor in the Army and Navy be reduced to the measure of strict necessity. Such an observance of Sunday is dictated by the best traditions of our people and by the convictions of all who look to Divine Providence for guidance and protection, and, in repeating in this order the language of President Lincoln, the President is confident that he is speaking alike to the hearts and to the consciences of those under his authority.

On March 12, 1918, in writing to the All-Russian Congress of Soviets meeting at Moscow, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

The whole heart of the people of the United States is with the people of Russia in the attempt to free themselves forever from autocratic government and become masters of their own life.

On May 11, 1918, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Humiliation, Prayer and Fasting:

Whereas the Congress of the United States, on the second day of April last, passed the following resolution:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That, it being the duty peculiarly incumbent in a time of war humbly and devoutly to acknowledge our dependence on Almighty God and to implore His aid and protection, the President of the United States be, and he is hereby, respectfully requested to recommend a day of public humiliation, prayer and fasting, to be observed by the people of the United States with religious solemnity and the offering of fervent supplications to Almighty God for the safety and welfare of our cause, His blessings on our arms, and a speedy restoration of an honorable and lasting peace to the nations of the earth;"

And Whereas it has always been the reverent habit of the people of the United States to turn in humble appeal to Almighty God for His guidance in the affairs of their common life;

Now, Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Thursday, the thirtieth day of May, a day already freighted with sacred and stimulating memories, a day of public humiliation, prayer and fasting, and do exhort my fellow-citizens of all faiths and creeds to assemble on that day in their several places of worship and there, as well as in their homes, to pray Almighty God that He may forgive our sins and shortcomings as a people and purify our hearts to see and love the truth, to accept and defend all things that are just and right, and to purpose only those righteous acts and judgements which are in conformity with His will; beseeching Him that He will give victory to our armies as they fight for freedom, wisdom to those who take counsel on our behalf in these day of dark struggle and perplexity, and steadfastness to our people to make sacrifice to the utmost in support of what is just and true, bringing us at last the peace in which men's hearts can be at rest because it is founded upon mercy, justice and good will.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this eleventh day of May, in the year of Our Lord nineteen hundred and eighteen and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-second. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On May 18, 1918, at the opening of the Second Red Cross Drive in New York City, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

We are members, by being members of the American Red Cross, of a great fraternity and fellowship which extends all over the world, and this cross which these ladies bore here today is an emblem of Christianity itself....

When you think of this, you realize how the people of the United States are being drawn together into a great intimate family whose heart is being used for the service of the soldiers not only, but for the long night of suffering and terror, in order that they and men everywhere may see the dawn of a day of righteousness and justice and peace.

On September 1, 1918, President Woodrow Wilson wrote a letter to Rabbi Stephen S. Wise in New York City, endorsing the Zionist Movement:

My Dear Rabbi Wise:

I have watched with deep and sincere interest the reconstructive work which the Weizmann commission has done in Palestine at the instance of the British Government, and I welcome an opportunity to express the satisfaction I have felt in the progress of the Zionist movement in the United States and in the allied countries since the declaration of Mr. Balfour, on behalf of the British Government, of Great Britain's approval of the establishment in Palestine of a national home for the Jewish people, and his promise that the British Government would use its best endeavors to facilitate the achievement of that object, with the understanding that nothing would be done to prejudice the civil and religious rights of non-Jewish people in Palestine or the rights and political status enjoyed by Jews in other countries.

I think that all Americans will be deeply moved by the report that even in this time of stress the Weizmann commission has been able to lay the foundation of the Hebrew University at Jerusalem, with the promise that that bears of spiritual rebirth. Cordially and sincerely yours, Woodrow Wilson.

On November 16, 1918, just 5 days after Germany signed the armistice with the Allies, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

It has long been our custom to turn in the autumn of the year in praise and thanksgiving to Almighty God for His many blessings and mercies to us as a nation. This year we have special and moving cause to be grateful and to rejoice. God has in His good pleasure given us peace. It has not come as a mere cessation of arms, a relief from the strain and tragedy of war. It has come as a great triumph of Right. Complete victory has brought us, not peace alone, but the confident promise of a new day as well, in which justice shall replace force and jealous intrigue among nations. Our gallant armies have participated in a triumph which is not marred or stained by any purpose of selfish aggression. In a righteous cause they have won immortal glory and have nobly served their nation in serving mankind. God has indeed been gracious. We have cause for such rejoicing as revives and strengthens in us all the best traditions of our national history. A new day shines about us, in which our hearts take new courage and look forward with new hope to new and greater duties.

While we render thanks for these things, let us not forget to seek the Divine guidance in the performance of those duties, and divine mercy and forgiveness for all errors of act or purpose, and pray that in all that we do we shall strengthen the ties of friendship and mutual respect upon which we must assist to build the new structure of peace and good-will among the nations.

Wherefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-eighth day of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and invite the people throughout the land to cease upon that day from their ordinary occupations and in their several homes and places of worship to render thanks to God, the Ruler of Nations.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this sixteenth day of November, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and eighteen and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On December 2, 1918, in his Sixth Annual Address to Congress, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

What we all thank God for with deepest gratitude is that our men went in force into the line of battle just at the critical moment when the whole fate of the world seemed to hang in the balance and threw their fresh strength into the ranks of freedom in time to turn the whole tide and sweep of the fateful struggle,

- turn it once for all....

And what shall we say of the women... Besides the immense practical services they have rendered the women of the country have been the moving spirits in the systematic economies by which our people have voluntarily assisted to supply the suffering peoples of the world and the armies upon every front with food and everything else that we had that might serve the common cause. The details of such a story can never be fully written, but we carry them at our hearts and thank God that we can say that we are the kinsmen of such.

On December 8, 1918, in an appeal of support for the American Red Cross just a month after the fighting in World War I had ceased, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

One year ago, twenty-two million Americans, by enrolling as members of the Red Cross at Christmas time, sent to the men who were fighting our battles overseas a stimulating message of cheer and good-will... Now, by God's grace, the Red Cross Christmas message of 1918 is to be a message of peace as well as a message of good-will.

On December 25, 1918, in an address delivered to General Pershing and the American troops still stationed on the battle-front in France, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

While it is hard far away from home, confidentially, to bid you a Merry Christmas, I can, I think, confidentially, promise you a Happy New Year, and I can from the bottom of my heart say, God bless you.

On January 7, 1919, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation announcing the death of former President Theodore Roosevelt:

It becomes my sad duty to announce officially the death of Theodore Roosevelt... In his death the United States has lost one of its most distinguished and patriotic citizens... In the War with Spain, he displayed singular initiative and energy and distinguished himself among the commanders of the army in the field. As President he awoke the Nation to the dangers of private control which lurked in our financial and industrial systems...

I hereby direct that the flags of the White House and the several Departmental Buildings be displayed at half staff for a period of thirty days, and that suitable military and naval honors under the orders of the Secretaries of War and of the Navy may be rendered on the day of the funeral.

Done this seventh day of January, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nineteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On January 25, 1919, in his remarks at the opening of the Peace Conference on the project of a League of Nations, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

We are here to see, in short, that the very foundations of this war are swept away. Those foundations were the private choice of small coteries of civil rulers and military staffs. Those foundations were the aggression of great powers upon the small. Those foundations were the holding together of empires of unwilling subjects by the duress of arms. Those foundations were the power of small bodies of men to work their will upon mankind and use them as pawns in a game. And nothing less than the emancipation of the world from these things will accomplish peace.

You can see that the representatives of the United States are, therefore, never put to the embarrassment of choosing a way of expediency, because they have laid down for them the unalterable lines of principle. And, thank God, those lines have been accepted as the lines of settlement by all the high-minded men who have had to do with the beginnings of this great business.

On May 1, 1919, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Boy Scout Week:

The Boy Scouts of America have rendered notable service to the Nation during the world war. They have done effective work in the Liberty Loan and War Savings campaigns, in discovering and reporting upon the black walnut supply, in cooperating with the Red Cross and other war work agencies, in acting as dispatch bearers for the Committee of Public Informations, and in other important fields. The Boy Scouts have not only demonstrated their worth to the Nation, but have also materially contributed to a deeper appreciation by the American people of the higher conceptions of patriotism and good citizenship.

The Boy Scout movement should not only be preserved, but strengthened. It deserves the support of all public-spirited citizens. The available means for the Boy Scout movement have thus far sufficed for the organization and training of only a small proportion of the boys of the country. There are approximately 10,000,000 boys in the United States between the ages of twelve and twenty-one. Of these only 375,000 are enrolled as members of the Boy Scouts of America.

America cannot acquit herself commensurately with her power and influence in the great period now facing her and the world unless the boys of America are given better opportunities than heretofore to prepare themselves for the responsibilities of citizenship.

Every nation depends for its future upon the proper training and development of its youth. The American boy must have the best training and discipline our great democracy can provide if America is to maintain her ideals, her standards, and her influence in the world.

The plan, therefore, for a Boy Scout week during which a universal appeal will be made to all Americans to supply the means to put the Boy Scouts of America in a position to carry forward effectively and continuously the splendid work they are doing for the youth of America should have the unreserved support of the Nation.

Therefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby recommend that the period beginning Sunday, June 8th, to Flag Day, June 14th, be observed as Boy Scout Week through the United States for the purpose of strengthening the work of the Boy Scouts of America.

I earnestly recommend that, in every community, a Citizens' Committee, under the leadership of a National Citizen's Committee, be organized to cooperate in carrying out a program for a definite recognition of the effective services rendered by the Boy Scouts of America; for a survey of the facts relating to the boyhood of each community, in order that with the cooperation of churches, schools and other organizations definitely engaged in work for boys, adequate provisions may be made for extending the Boy Scout program to a larger proportion of American boyhood.

The Boy Scout movement offers unusual opportunity for volunteer service. It needs men to act as committeemen and as leaders of groups of boys. I hope that all who can will enlist for such personal service, enroll as associate members and give all possible financial assistance to this worthy organization of American boyhood. Anything that is done to increase the effectiveness of the Boy Scouts of America will be a genuine contribution to the welfare of the Nation.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done this first day of May in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nineteen and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On May 30, 1919, in a Memorial Day Address delivered among the graves of American soldiers in Suresnes Cemetery, near Paris, France, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

It is delightful to learn from those who saw these men fight, and saw them waiting in the trenches for the summons for the fight, that they had a touch of the high spirit of religion... We all believe, I hope, that the spirits of these men are not buried with their bones. Their spirits live!

On July 10, 1919, President Woodrow Wilson addressed the Senate regarding the Treaty of Peace with Germany which was signed at Versailles, France, June 28, 1919:

It is thus that a new role and a new responsibility have come to this great nation that we honor and which we would all wish to lift to yet higher levels of service and achievement. The stage is set, the destiny disclosed. It has come about by no plan of our conceiving, but by the hand of God who led us into this way. We cannot turn back. We can only go forward, with lifted eye and freshened spirit, to follow the vision. It was of this that we dreamed at our birth. America shall in truth show the way. The light streams upon the path ahead, and nowhere else.

On September 17, 1919, President Woodrow Wilson spoke regarding the League of Nations treaty in San Francisco:

My fellow citizens, I believe in Divine Providence. If I did not I would go crazy. If I thought the direction of the disordered affairs of this world depended upon our finite intelligence I should not know how to reason my ways to sanity, and I do not believe that there is any body of men however they concert their power of their influence, that can defeat this great enterprise, which is the enterprise of Divine Mercy and Peace and Goodwill.

On November 5, 1919, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

The season of the year has again arrived when the people of the United States are accustomed to unite in giving thanks to Almighty God for the blessings which He has conferred upon our country during the twelve months that have passed. A year ago our people poured out their hearts in praise and thanksgiving that through divine aid the right was victorious and peace had come to the nations which had so courageously struggled in defense of human liberty and justice. Now that the stern task is ended and the fruits of achievement are ours, we look forward with confidence to the dawn of an era where the sacrifices of the nations will find recompense in a world at peace.

But to attain the consummation of the great work to which American people devoted their manhood and the vast resources of their country they should, as they give thanks to God, reconsecrate themselves to those principles of right which triumphed through His merciful goodness. Our gratitude can find no more perfect expression than to bulwark with loyalty and patriotism those principles for which the free peoples of the earth fought and died.

During the past year we have had much to make us grateful. In spite of the confusion in our economic life resulting from the war, we have prospered. Our harvests have been plentiful, and of our abundance we have been able to render succor to less favored nations. Our democracy remains unshaken in a world torn with political and social unrest. Our traditional ideals are still our guides in the path of progress and civilization.

These great blessings, vouchsafed to us, for which we devoutly give thanks, should arouse us to a fuller sense of our duty to ourselves and to mankind to see to it that nothing that we may do shall mar the completeness of the victory which we helped to win. No selfish purpose animated us in becoming participants in the World War, and with a like spirit of unselfishness we should strive to aid by our example and by our cooperation in realizing the enduring welfare of all peoples and in bringing into being a world ruled by friendliness and good will.

Wherefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-seventh day of November next, for observance as a day of thanksgiving and prayer by my fellow-countrymen, inviting them to cease on that day from their ordinary tasks and to unite in their homes and in their several places of worship in ascribing praise and thanksgiving to God, the Author of all blessings and the Master of our destinies.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this fifth day of November, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and nineteen, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-fourth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

On Monday, May 24, 1920, in a special message to Congress asking permission to assume the mandate for Armenia under the League of Nations, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

Testimony adduced at the hearings conducted by the sub-committee of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations has clearly established the truth of the reported massacres and other atrocities from which the Armenian people have suffered. . . . The people of the United States are deeply impressed by the deplorable conditions of insecurity, starvation and misery now prevalent in Armenia. . . .

I received and read this document with great interest and with genuine gratification, not only because it embodied my own convictions and feelings with regard to Armenia and its people, but also, and more particularly, because it seemed to me the voice of the American people expressing their genuine convictions and deep Christian sympathies and intimating the line of duty which seemed to them to lie clearly before us. . . .

In response to the invitation of the council at San Remo, I urgently advise and request that the Congress grant the Executive power to accept for the United States a mandate over Armenia. I make this suggestion in the earnest belief that it will be the wish of the people of the United States that this should be done. The sympathy with Armenia has proceeded from no single portion of our people, but has come with extraordinary spontaneity and sincerity from the whole of the great body of Christian men and women in this country, by whose free-will offerings Armenia has practically been saved at the most critical juncture of its existence. At their hearts this great and generous people have made the cause of Armenia their own. . . .

I am conscious that I am urging upon Congress a very critical choice, but I make the suggestion in the confidence that I am speaking in the spirit and in accordance with the wishes of the greatest of the Christian peoples. The sympathy for Armenia among our people has sprung from untainted consciences, pure Christian faith and an earnest desire to see Christian people everywhere succored in their time of suffering and lifted from their abject subjection and distress and enabled to stand upon their feet and take their place among the free nations of the world.

On August 4, 1920, President Woodrow Wilson addressed his fellow-countrymen at the Tercentenary of the Landing of the Pilgrims at Plymouth:

The influences which the ideals and principles of the Pilgrims with respect to civil liberty and human rights have had upon the formation and growth of our institutions and upon our development and progress as a nation merit more than a local expression of our obligation, and make fitting a nationwide observance of the day....

I recommend that the day be fittingly observed in the universities, colleges and schools of our country, to the end that salutary and patriotic lessons may be drawn from the fortitude and perseverance and the ideals of this little band of church-men and -women who established on this continent the first self-determined government based on the great principle of just law and its equal application to all, and thus planted the seeds from which has sprung the mighty nation.

On November 12, 1920, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

The season again approaches when it behooves us to turn from the distractions and preoccupations of our daily life, that we may contemplate the mercies which have been vouchsafed to us, and render heartfelt and unfeigned thanks unto God for His manifold goodness.

This is an old observance of the American people, deeply imbedded in our thought and habit. The burdens and the stresses of life have their own insistence.

We have abundant cause for thanksgiving. The lesions of the war are rapidly healing. The great army of freemen which America sent to the defense of Liberty, returning to the grateful embrace of the nation, has resumed the useful pursuits of peace, as simply and as promptly as it rushed to arms in obedience to the country's call. The equal justice of our laws has received steady vindication in the support of a law-abiding people against various and sinister attacks, which have reflected only the baser agitations of war, now happily passing.

In plenty, security and peace, our virtuous and self-reliant people face the future, its duties and its opportunities. May we have vision to discern our duties; the strength, both of hand and resolve, to discharge them; and the soundness of heart to realize that the truest opportunities are those of service.

In a spirit, then, of devotion and stewardship we should give thanks in our hearts, and dedicate ourselves to the service of God's merciful and loving purposes to His children.

Wherefore, I, Woodrow Wilson, President of the United States of America, do hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-fifth day of November next, as a day of thanksgiving and prayer, and I call upon my countrymen to cease from their ordinary tasks and avocations upon the day, giving it up to the remembrance of God and His blessings, and their dutiful and grateful acknowledgment.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this twelfth day of November, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and twenty, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-fifth. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Bainbridge Colby, Secretary of State.

Congress, President Woodrow Wilson stated:

I have not so much laid before you a series of recommendations, gentlemen, as sought to utter a confession of faith, of the faith in which I was bred and which it is my solemn purpose to stand by until by last fighting day. I believe this to be the faith of America, the faith of the future, and of all the victories which await national action in the days to come, whether in America or elsewhere.

President Woodrow Wilson stated:

The history of Liberty is a history of limitations of governmental power, not the increase of it. When we resist, therefore, the concentration of power, we are resisting the powers of death, because concentration of power is what always precedes the destruction of human liberties.

There are a good many problems before the American people today, and before me as President, but I expect to find the solution to those problems just in the proportion that I am faithful in the study of the Word of God.

A man had deprived himself of the best there is in the world who has deprived himself of this, a knowledge of the Bible. The Bible is the Word of Life...

You will find it full of real men and women not only but also of the things you have wondered about and been troubled about all your life, as men have been always; and the more you will read it the more it will become plain to you what things are worth while and what are not, what things make men happy - loyalty, right dealing, speaking the truth...and the things that are guaranteed to make men unhappy - selfishness, cowardice, greed, and everything that is low and mean.

When you have read the Bible, you will know that it is the Word of God, because you will have found it the key to your own heart, your own happiness, and your own duty.

I am sorry for the men who do not read the Bible every day. I wonder why they deprive themselves of the strength and of the pleasure.

Business underlies everything in our national life, including our spiritual life. Witness the fact that in the Lord's Prayer the first petition is for daily bread. No one can worship God or love his neighbor on an empty stomach.

In his last public address, entitled "The Road Away from Revolution," President Woodrow Wilson concluded:

The sum of the whole matter is this, that our civilization cannot survive materially unless it is redeemed spiritually. It can be saved only by becoming permeated with the spirit of Christ, and being made free and happy by the practices which spring out of that spirit. Only thus can discontent be driven out and all the shadows lifted from the road ahead.

American Quotations.txt

In 1924, knowing death was imminent, Woodrow Wilson, who was a Presbyterian, remarked to his physician, Dr. Grayson:

Doctor, the devil is a busy man. [Later that day, Dr. Grayson read to the President from 2nd Corinthians] "We are perplexed, but not in despair; persecuted, but not forsaken; struck down, but not destroyed."

[Wilson replied] Doctor, if I were not a Christian, I think I should go mad, but my faith in God holds me to the belief that He is in some way working out His own plans through human perversities and mistakes.

Baden-Powell, Sir Robert Stephenson Smyth (February 22, 1857-January 8, 1941), was a British General who founded of the Boy Scout movement. Educated at Charterhouse, London, he joined the English hussars in 1876, and served as adjutant in India, Afghanistan, and South Africa. In 1895 he commanded native troops in Ashanti, and later served in the Matabele campaign. During the South African War, his force of 1,200 men was besieged for 215 days by a large Boer army at Mafeking. In spite of famine and sickness, he succeeded in defending his position until help arrived on May 12, 1900. He was then promoted to the rank of Major General.

In order to promote good citizenship in the rising generation, he founded the Boy Scout organization in 1908, and the Girl Guides, in co-operation with his sister Agnes Baden-Powell, in 1910. His works include: Cavalry Instruction; The Matabele Campaign; Scouting for Boys; My Adventures as a Spy; Indian Memories; The Wolf Cub's Handbook; Girl Guiding; Rovering to Success; and Scouting and Youth Movements.

The Boys Scouts of America was incorporated on February 8, 1910, and was authorized by an Act of the U.S. Congress in June of 1916. The Scout Oath is as follows:

On my honor, I will do my best:
To do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the Scout Law.
To help other people at all times.
To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight.

The Scout Law is as follows:

A Scout is Trustworthy, Loyal, Helpful, Friendly, Courteous, Kind, Obedient, Cheerful, Thrifty, Brave, Clean, and Reverent.

Pope Pius XI (May 31, 1857-February 10, 1939), whose given name was Achille Ratti, held the position of Pontiff from 1922-39. He exclaimed:

Christian teaching alone, in its majestic integrity, can give full meaning and compelling motive to the demand for human rights and liberties, because it alone gives worth and dignity to human personality.

In light of prevailing trends, Pope Pius XI spoke:

Woman apparently is doing everything possible to destroy in herself those very qualifications which render her beautiful, namely, modesty, purity, and chastity. It is a blindness which can only be explained by the fascination of that vanity of which Scriptures speak with such severity.

Taft, William Howard (September 15, 1857-March 8, 1930), was the 27th President of the United States, 1909-13; Chief Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court, 1921-30; Kent Professor of Constitutional Law at Yale University, 1913-21; Joint Chairman of National War Labor Board, 1918; Secretary of War under President Theodore Roosevelt, 1904-08; appointed by President McKinley as Civil Governor of the Philippines, 1901-04; appointed by President McKinley as Commissioner of the Philippines, 1900-01; Dean of Cincinnati Law School, 1896; U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals Judge for the Sixth Judicial Circuit, 1892-1900; appointed by President Harrison as U. S. Solicitor General, 1890-92; Ohio Superior Court Judge, 1887-90; married Helen "Nellie" Herron, 1886; District Collector of Internal Revenue, 1882; Assistant Prosecutor of Hamilton County, Ohio, 1881; admitted to bar, 1880, graduated from Cincinnati Law School, 1880; and graduated from Yale University, 1878.

In 1895, William Howard Taft, as a U. S. Circuit Judge, stated:

Non-professional criticism also is by no means without its uses, even if accompanied, as it often is, by a direct attack upon the judicial fairness and motives of the occupants of the bench; for if the law is but the essence of common sense, the protest of many average men may evidence a defect in a judicial conclusion, though based on the nicest legal reasoning and profoundest learning.

In 1908, in speaking at a missionary conference, William Howard Taft stated:

No man can study the movement of modern civilization from an impartial standpoint, and not realize that Christianity and the spread of Christianity are the basis of hope of modern civilization in the growth of popular self government.

The spirit of Christianity is pure democracy. It is equality of man before God - the equality of man before the law, which is, as I understand it, the most God-like manifestation that man has been able to make.

On Thursday, March 4, 1909, in his Inaugural Address, President William Howard Taft stated:

Having thus reviewed the questions likely to recur during my administration, and having expressed in a summary way the position which I expect to take in recommendations to Congress and in my conduct as an Executive, I invoke the considerate sympathy and support of my fellow-citizens and the aid of the Almighty God in the discharge of my responsible duties.

issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving:

The season of the year has returned when, in accordance with the reverent custom established by our forefathers, the people of the United States are wont to meet in their usual places of worship on a day of thanksgiving appointed by the Civil Magistrate to return thanks to God for the great mercies and benefits which they have enjoyed.

During the past year we have been highly blessed. No great calamities of flood or tempest or epidemic of sickness have befallen us. We have lived in quietness, undisturbed by war or threats of war. Peace and plenty of bounteous crops and of great industrial production animate a cheerful and resolute people to all the renewed energies of beneficent industry and material and moral progress. It is altogether fitting that we should humbly and gratefully acknowledge the Divine Source of these blessings.

Therefore, I hereby appoint Thursday, the twenty-fifth day of November, as a day of general thanksgiving, and I call upon the people on that day, laying aside their usual vocations, to repair to their churches and unite in appropriate services of praise and thanks to Almighty God.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto put my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this fifteenth day of November, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and nine, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-fourth. William H. Taft.

By the President: P. C. Knox, Secretary of State.

On November 5, 1910, President William Howard Taft issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

This year of 1910 is drawing to a close. The records of population and harvests which are the index of progress show vigorous national growth and the health and prosperous well-being of our communities throughout this land and in our possessions beyond the seas. These blessings have not descended upon us in restricted measure, but overflow and abound. They are the blessings and bounty of God.

We continue to be at peace with the rest of the world. In all essential matters our relations with other peoples are harmonious, with an evergrowing reality of friendliness and depth of recognition of mutual dependence. It is especially to be noted that during the past year great progress has been achieved in the cause of arbitration and the peaceful settlement of international disputes.

Now, therefore, I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, in accordance with the wise custom of the civil magistrate since the first settlements in this land and with the rule established from the foundation of this Government, do appoint Thursday, November 24, 1910, as a day of National Thanksgiving and Prayer, joining the people upon that day to meet in their churches for the praise of Almighty God and to return heartfelt thanks to Him for all His goodness and loving-kindness.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this fifth day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and ten and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-fifth. William H. Taft.

By the President: Alvey A. Adee, Acting Secretary of State.

On January 11, 1911, in a response to the Secretary of State's report that: "since 1860 there has been a 351% increase in the importations and use of all forms of opium, as against a 133% increase in population," President William Howard Taft recommended Congress suppress the opium trade:

The Secretary of State... further urges the enactment of the legislation which will control the importation, manufacture, and distribution in interstate commerce of opium, morphine, cocaine, and other habit-forming drugs. I concur in the recommendations made by the Secretary of State and commend them to the favorable consideration of the Congress with a view to early legislation on the subject.

On Thursday, November 7, 1912, President William Howard Taft issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving:

A God-fearing nation, like ours, owes it to its inborn and sincere sense of moral duty to testify its devout gratitude to the All-Giver for the countless benefits it has enjoyed. For many years it has been customary at the close of the year for the national Executive to call upon his fellow countrymen to offer praise and thanks to God for the manifold blessings vouchsafed to them in the past and to unite in earnest supplication for their continuance.

The year now drawing to a close has been notably favorable to our fortunate land. At peace within and without, free from the perturbations and calamities that have afflicted other peoples, rich in harvests so abundant and in industries so productive that the overflow of our prosperity has advantaged the whole world, strong in the steadfast conservation of the heritage of self-government bequeathed to us by the wisdom of our fathers, and firm in the resolve to transmit that heritage unimpaired, but rather improved by good use, to our children and our children's children for all time to come, the people of this country have abounding cause for contented gratitude.

Wherefore I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America, in pursuance of long-established usage and in response to the wish of the American people, invite my countrymen, wheresoever they may sojourn, to join on Thursday, the 28th day of this month of November, in appropriate ascription of praise and thanks to God for the good gifts that have been our portion, and in humble prayer that His great mercies toward us may endure.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this seventh day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twelve, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and thirty-seventh. William H. Taft.

By the President: Alvey A. Adee, Acting Secretary of State.

On November 13, 1912, in a Proclamation for the opening of the Panama Canal, President William Howard Taft stated:

I, William Howard Taft, President of the United States of America... approved... to provide for the opening, maintenance, protection and operation of the Panama Canal....

Done at the city of Washington this thirteenth day of November, in the year of the Lord one thousand nine hundred and twelve and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-seventh.

On Friday, December 6, 1912, in his Annual Message to Congress, part II, President William Howard Taft stated:

We have no desire for war. We would go as far as any nation in the world to avoid war, but we are a world power, our responsibilities in the Pacific and the Atlantic, our defense of the Panama Canal, together with our enormous world trade and our missionary outposts on the frontiers of civilization, require us to recognize our position as one of the foremost in the family of nations, and to clothe ourselves with sufficient naval power to give force to our reasonable demands, and to give weight to our influence in those directions of progress that a powerful Christian nation should advocate.

Glass, Carter (January 4, 1858-May 28, 1946), was an American politician. He served as a U. S. Senator from Virginia, 1920-46; Secretary of the Treasury of the United States, 1918-20; and a U. S. Representative, 1902-18. His influence as chairman of the Committee of Banking and Currency, brought about the passage of the Federal Reserve Bank Act in 1918.

On March 27, 1937, Senator Carter Glass warned:

There has been no such mandate from the people to rape the Supreme Court or to tamper with the Constitution. The Constitution belongs to the people. It... was ratified by the people as the Supreme Charter of their Government, to be respected and maintained with the help of God.

Kelly, Howard Atwood (February 20, 1858-January 12, 1943), was an American surgeon and premier gynecologist in the early 20th century. He founded Kensington Hospital for Women in Philadelphia; was Professor of Obstetrics at the University of Pennsylvania; and was Professor of Gynecology and Obstetrics at Johns Hopkins University for over 20 years, 1889-1919. He established a sanatorium in Baltimore, Md., which was later named the Howard A. Kelly Hospital. Among his over 500 articles to medical journals, he wrote many authoritative medical books, among which was one entitled:

A Scientific Man and His Bible.

American Quotations.txt

Minnesota, State of (May 11, 1858), was the 32nd State admitted to the Union. On August 7, 1789, President George Washington signed into law an Act of Congress which prohibited slavery from entering the territory, entitled "An Ordinance for the Government of the Territory of the United States, North-West of the River Ohio," Article VI. Congress enabled the establishment of the government of Minnesota, provided it followed the general tenets of the Northwest Ordinance of 1787.

The Northwest Ordinance stated:

SECTION 13. And, for extending the fundamental principles of civil and religious liberty, which form the basis whereon these republics, their laws and constitutions are erected: to fix and establish those principles as the basis of all laws, constitutions and governments, which forever hereafter shall be formed in the said territory: to provide also for the establishment of states, and permanent government therein, and for their admission to a share in the federal councils in an equal footing with the original states, at as early period as may be consistent with the general interest:

SECTION 14. It is hereby ordained and declared by the authority aforesaid, That the following articles shall be considered as articles of compact, between the original states and the people and states of the said territory, and forever remain unalienable, unless by common consent, to wit:

ARTICLE I. No person, demeaning himself in a peaceable and orderly manner, shall ever be molested on account of his mode of worship or religious sentiments in the said territory. . . .

ARTICLE III. Religion, morality, and knowledge being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged.

The Constitution of the State of Minnesota, adopted 1857, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of the State of Minnesota, grateful to God for our civil and religious liberty, and desiring to perpetuate its blessings. . . establish this Constitution.

Bill of Rights, Article I, Section 16. The right of every man to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience shall never be infringed.

Roosevelt, Theodore (October 27, 1858-January 6, 1919), was the 26th President of the United States, 1901-09, the youngest man to hold the office; Vice-President under William McKinley, 1900, assuming the Presidency after McKinley's assassination; began construction of the Panama Canal, 1906; established the U. S. Forest Service, 1906, and called a national conservation conference, 1908; awarded the Nobel Peace Prize for his arbitration in the Russo-Japanese War, 1905; Governor of New York, 1898-1900; Lieutenant Colonel in the First U. S. Volunteer Cavalry Regiment, known as the "Rough Riders," becoming the hero of the Battle of San Juan Hill, Cuba, July 1, 1898, during the Spanish-American War; Assistant Secretary of the Navy, 1897-98; president of New York Board of Police Commissioners, 1895-97; U.S. Civil Service Commissioner, 1889-95; married Edith Kermit Carow, 1886; ranched cattle at the Elkhorn Ranch in the Dakota Territory, 1884-86, following the tragic death of both his mother and first wife on February 14, 1884; member of the New York State Assembly, 1881-84; married Alice Hathaway Lee, 1880; and graduated from Harvard, 1880.

On Saturday, September 14, 1901, President Theodore Roosevelt issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Mourning and Prayer:

A terrible bereavement has befallen our people. The President of the United States has been struck down; a crime not only against the Chief Magistrate, but against every law-abiding and liberty-loving citizen.

President McKinley crowned a life of largest love for his fellow men, of earnest endeavor for their welfare, by a death of Christian fortitude; and both the way in which he lived his life and the way in which, in the supreme hour of trial, he met death will remain forever a precious heritage of our people.

It is meet that we as a nation express our abiding love and reverence for his life, our deep sorrow for his untimely death.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, do appoint Thursday next, September 19, the day in which the body of the dead President will be laid in its last earthly resting place, as a day of mourning and prayer throughout the United States. I earnestly recommend all the people to assemble on that day in their respective places of divine worship, there to bow down in submission to the will of Almighty God, and to pay out of full hearts the homage of love and reverence to the memory of the great and good President, whose death has so sorely smitten the nation.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, the fourteenth day of September, A. D. 1901, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-sixth.

Theodore Roosevelt.
By the President: John Hay, Secretary of State.

On November 2, 1901, President Theodore Roosevelt issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving:

The season in which when, according to the time-hallowed custom of our people, the President appoints a day as the especial occasion for praise and thanksgiving to God.

This Thanksgiving finds the people still bowed with sorrow for the death of a great and good President. We mourn President McKinley because we so loved and honored him; and the manner of his death should awaken in the breasts of our people a keen anxiety for the country, and at the same time a resolute purpose not to be driven by any calamity from the path of strong, orderly, popular liberty which as a nation we have thus far safely trod.

Yet in spite of this great disaster, it is nevertheless true that no people on earth have such abundant cause for thanksgiving as we have. The past year in particular has been one of peace and plenty. We have prospered in things intellectual and spiritual. Let us remember that, as much has been given us, much will be expected from us; and that true homage comes from the heart as well as from the lips and shows itself in deeds. We can best prove our thankfulness to the Almighty by the way in which on this earth and at this time each of us does his duty to his fellow men.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do hereby designate as a day of general thanksgiving Thursday, the 28th of this present November, and do recommend that throughout the land the people cease from their wonted occupations, and at their several homes and places of worship reverently thank the Giver of All Good for the countless blessings of our national life.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington this second day of November, A.D. 1901, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-sixth.
Theodore Roosevelt.

By the President: John Hay, Secretary of State.

On December 3, 1901, in his First Annual Message to Congress, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

On the sixth of September, President McKinley was shot by an anarchist while attending the Pan-American Exposition at Buffalo, and died in that city on the fourteenth of that month. . . . And this was the man at whom the assassin struck! That there might be nothing lacking to complete the Judas-like infamy of his act, he took advantage of an occasion when the President was meeting the people generally. . . . The shock, the grief of the country, are bitter in the minds of all who saw the dark days, while the President yet hovered between life and death. At last the light was stilled in the kindly eyes and the breath went from the lips that even in mortal agony uttered no words save of forgiveness to his murderer, of love for his friends, and of unfaltering trust in the will of the Most High. . . .

If the hand of the Lord is heavy upon any country, if flood or drought comes, human wisdom is powerless to avert the calamity. Moreover, no law can guard us against the consequences of our own folly. . . .

Each man must work for himself, and unless he so works no outside help can avail him; but each man must remember also that he is indeed his brother's keeper. . . .

We need every honest and efficient immigrant fitted to become an American citizen, every immigrant who comes here to stay, who brings here a strong body, a stout heart, a good head, and a resolute purpose, to do his duty well in every way and to bring up his children as law-abiding and God-fearing members of the community. . . .

In the midst of our affliction we reverently thank the Almighty that we are at peace with the nations of mankind; and we firmly intend that our policy shall be such as to continue unbroken these international relations of mutual respect and good will.

On July 4, 1902, in a Proclamation of Amnesty to the inhabitants of the Philippines who were involved in an insurrection, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

Now, therefore, be it known that I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the power and authority vested by the Constitution, do hereby proclaim and declare, without reservation or condition, except as hereinafter provided, a full and complete pardon and amnesty to all persons in the Philippine archipelago who have participated in the insurrections aforesaid. . . .

Every person who shall seek to avail himself of this proclamation shall take and subscribe the following oath before any authority in the Philippine archipelago authorized to administer oaths, namely: "I solemnly swear (or affirm) that I recognize and accept the supreme authority of the United States of America in the Philippine Islands and will maintain true faith and allegiance thereto; that I impose upon myself this obligation voluntarily without mental reservation or purpose of evasion, so help me God."

On September 22, 1902, at a Banquet of Spanish War Veterans, Detroit, Michigan, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

I preach the gospel of hope to you men of the West who in thought and life embody this gospel of hope. . . . No great destiny ever came to a people who feared the future, who feared failure more than they hoped for success. Stout of heart, we see across the dangers the great future that lies beyond, and we rejoice as a giant refreshed, as a strong man girt for the race; and we go down into the arena where the nations strive for mastery, our hearts lifted with the faith that to us and to our children and our children's children it shall be given to make this Republic the mightiest among the peoples of mankind.

On October 29, 1902, President Theodore Roosevelt issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving:

According to the yearly custom of our people, it falls upon the President at this season to appoint a day of festival and thanksgiving to God.

Over a century and a quarter has passed since this country took its place among the nations of the earth, and during that time we have had on the whole more to be thankful for than has fallen to the lot of any people. Generation after generation has grown to manhood and passed away. Each has had to bear its peculiar burdens, each to face its special crises, and each has known years of grim trial, when the country was menaced by malice domestic or foreign levy, when the hand of the Lord was heavy upon it in drouth or flood or pestilence, when in bodily distress and anguish of soul it paid the penalty of folly and a froward heart. Nevertheless, decade by decade, we have struggled onward and upward; we now abundantly enjoy material well-being, and under the favor of the Most High we are striving earnestly to achieve moral and spiritual uplifting. The year that has just closed has been one of peace and of overflowing plenty. Rarely has any people enjoyed greater prosperity than we are now enjoying. For this we render heartfelt and solemn thanks to the Giver of Good; and we seek to praise Him not by words only but by deeds, by the way in which we do our duty to ourselves and to our fellow men.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do hereby designate as a day of general thanksgiving Thursday, the twenty-seventh of the coming November, and do recommend that throughout the land the people cease from their ordinary occupations, and in their several homes and places of worship render thanks unto Almighty God for the manifold blessings of the past year.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this 29th day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and two and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-seventh. Theodore Roosevelt.

By the President: John Hay, Secretary of State.

On December 2, 1902, in his Second Annual Message to Congress, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

Ours is not a creed of the weakling and the coward; ours is the gospel of hope and of triumphant endeavor.

On March 3, 1903, President Theodore Roosevelt responded to the Senate concerning the dismissal of Captain Edward L. Bailey from the U. S. Army:

In September, 1893, [Captain Bailey] was tried and convicted of conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman in borrowing money from a fellow-officer and not repaying it, although repeatedly promising to do so; in entering a private house in uniform, without permission, in the absence of the owner, beckoning to the owner's wife with his hand; refusing to leave the house when requested so to do by her; and in going to a public saloon in Boise City, Idaho, and chasing a prostitute about the saloon, and going to a corner of the saloon, holding a conversation with her while in uniform of a commissioned officer.

It appears that pending his trial upon these charges, he being under arrest, he was authorized by his commanding officer to visit Boise City for four hours, exclusive of meal time, beginning at 11:30 a. m., for the purpose of attending to personal business; that in disregard of his arrest he went to Boise City in the night of April 15-16, and there visited a saloon and drank with citizens at the bar between 11:30 p. m. and 1 a. m., and also visited a house of prostitution and behaved in a boisterous and disorderly manner in company with the same prostitute whom he was charged with chasing about the saloon, being at the time in the uniform of a commissioned officer.

Upon these acts additional charges were made of conduct to prejudice of good order and military discipline and conduct unbecoming an officer and a gentleman, and he was convicted upon these charges also. He was sentenced to be dismissed the service, and the sentence was approved and confirmed by the President.

On November 12, 1903, the Minister of the Republic of Panama addressed President Theodore Roosevelt:

Mr. President: In according to the minister plenipotentiary of the Republic of Panama the honor of presenting to you his letters of credence you admit into the family of nations the weakest and the last born of the republics of the New World. It owes its existence to the outburst of the indignant grief which stirred the hearts of the citizens of the Isthmus on beholding the despotic actions which sought to forbid their country from fulfilling the destinies vouchsafed to it by Providence. In consecrating its right to exist, Mr. President, you put an end to what appeared to be the interminable controversy as to the rival waterways.

On October 24, 1903, President Theodore Roosevelt issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Praise and Thanksgiving:

The season is at hand when according to the custom of our people it falls upon the President to appoint a day of praise and thanksgiving to God.

During the last year the Lord has dealt bountifully with us, giving us peace at home and abroad and the chance for our citizens to work for their welfare unhindered by war, famine or plague. It behooves us not only to rejoice greatly because of what has been given us, but to accept it with a solemn sense of responsibility, realizing that under Heaven it rests with us ourselves to show that we are worthy to use aright what has thus been entrusted to our care. In no other place and at no other time has the experiment of government of the people, by the people, for the people, been tried on so vast a scale as here in our own country in the opening years of the 20th Century. Failure would not only be a dreadful thing for us, but a dreadful thing for all mankind, because it would mean loss of hope for all who believe in the power and the righteousness of liberty. Therefore, in thanking God for the mercies extended to us in the past, we beseech Him that He may not withhold them in the future, and that our hearts may be roused to war steadfastly for good and against all the forces of evil, public and private. We pray for strength, and light, so that in the coming years we may with cleanliness, fearlessness, and wisdom, do our allotted work on the earth in such a manner as to show that we are not altogether unworthy of the blessings we have received.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this 24th day of October, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and three and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-eighth. Theodore Roosevelt.

By the President: John Hay, Secretary of State.

On September 24, 1904, in his International Peace Movement address given at the Reception of the Interparliamentary Union, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

I again greet you and bid you welcome in the name of the American people, and wish you God-speed in your efforts for the common good of mankind.

On Tuesday, November 1, 1904, President Theodore Roosevelt issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving:

It has pleased Almighty God to bring the American people in safety and honor through another year, and, in accordance with the long unbroken custom handed down to us by our forefathers, the time has come when a special day shall be set apart in which to thank Him who holds all nations in the hollow of His hand for the mercies thus vouchsafed to us. During the century and a quarter of our national life we as a people have been blessed beyond all others, and for this we owe humble and heartfelt thanks to the Author of all blessings. The year that has closed has been one of peace within our own borders as well as between us and all other nations. The harvests have been abundant, and those who work, whether with hand or brain, are prospering greatly. Reward has waited upon honest effort. We have been enabled to do our duty to ourselves and to others. Never has there been a time when religious and charitable effort has been more evident. Much has been given to us and much will be expected from us. We speak of what has been done by this nation in no spirit of boastfulness or vainglory, but with full and reverent realization that our strength is as nothing unless we are helped from above.

Hitherto we have been given the heart and the strength to do the tasks allotted to us as they severally arose. We are thankful for all that has been done for us in the past, and we pray that in the future we may be strengthened in the unending struggle to do our duty fearlessly and honestly, with charity and goodwill, with respect for ourselves and with love toward our fellow-men. In this great republic the effort to combine national strength with personal freedom is being tried on a scale more gigantic than ever before in the world's history. Our success will mean much not only for ourselves, but for the future of all mankind; and every man or woman in our land should feel the grave responsibility resting upon him or her, for in the last analysis this success must depend upon the high average of our individual citizenship, upon the way in which each of us does his duty by himself and his neighbor.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do hereby appoint and set apart Thursday, the twenty-fourth of this November, to be observed as a day of festival and thanksgiving by all the people of the United States at home or abroad, and do recommend that on that day they cease from their ordinary occupations and gather in their several places of worship or in their homes, devoutly to give thanks unto Almighty God for the benefits he has conferred upon us as individuals and as a nation, and to beseech Him that in the future His Divine favor may be continued to us.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this 1st day of November, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and four and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and twenty-ninth. Theodore Roosevelt.

By the President: John Hay, Secretary of State.

On Tuesday, December 6, 1904, in his Fourth Annual Message to Congress, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

The slum exacts a heavy total of death from those who dwell therein; and this is the case not merely in the great crowded slums of Washington. In Washington people can not afford to ignore the harm that this causes. No Christian and civilized community can afford to show a happy-go-lucky lack of concern for the youth of to-day; for, if so, the community will have to pay a terrible penalty of financial burden and social degradation in the to-morrow. There should be severe child-labor and factory-inspection laws. It is very desirable that married women should not work in factories.

The prime duty of the man is to work, to be the breadwinner; the prime duty of the woman is to be the mother, the housewife. All questions of tariff and finance sink into utter insignificance when compared with the tremendous, the vital importance of trying to shape conditions so that these two duties of the man and of the woman can be fulfilled under reasonably favorable circumstances....

It is equally true that among the men of whom we are most proud as Americans no distinction whatever can be drawn between those who themselves or whose parents came over in sailing ships or steamer from across the water and those whose ancestors' stepped ashore into the wooded wilderness at Plymouth or at the mouth of the Hudson, the Delaware, or the James nearly three centuries ago. No fellow-citizen of ours is entitled to any peculiar regard because of the way in which he worships his Maker....

There is no enemy of free government more dangerous and none so insidious as the corruption of the electorate. No one defends or excuses corruption, and it would seem to follow that none would oppose vigorous measures to eradicate it. I recommend the enactment of a law directed against bribery and corruption in Federal elections.... and provisions for the publication not only of the expenditures for nomination and elections of all candidates but also of all contributions received and expenditures made by political committees....

The steady aim of this Nation, as of all enlightened nations, should be to strive to bring ever nearer the day when there shall prevail throughout the world the peace of justice. There are kinds of peace which are highly undesirable, which are in the long run as destructive as any war. Tyrants and oppressors have many times made a wilderness and called it peace. Many times peoples who were slothful or timid or shortsighted, who had been enervated by ease or by luxury, or misled by false teachings, have shrunk in unmanly fashion on doing duty that was stern and that needed self-sacrifice, and have sought to hide from their own minds their shortcomings, their ignoble motives, by calling them love of peace. The peace of tyrannous terror, the peace of craven weakness, the peace of injustice, all these should be shunned as we shun unrighteous war....

One of our great poets has well and finely said that freedom is not a gift that tarries long in the hands of cowards. Neither does it tarry long in the hands of those too slothful, too dishonest, or too unintelligent to exercise it. The eternal vigilance which is the price of liberty must be exercised, sometimes to guard against outside foes; although of course far more often to guard against our own selfish or thoughtless shortcomings....

Yet it is not to be expected that a people like ours, which in spite of certain very obvious shortcomings, nevertheless as a whole shows by its consistent practice its belief in the principles of civil and religious liberty.... It is inevitable that such a nation should desire eagerly to give expression to its horror on an occasion like that of the massacre of the Jews in Kishenev, or when it witnesses such systematic and long-extended cruelty and oppression as the cruelty and oppression of which the Armenians have been the victims, and which have won for them the indignant pity of the civilized world....

It has proved very difficult to secure from Russia the right for our Jewish fellow-citizens to receive passports and travel through Russian territory. Such conduct is not only unjust and irritating toward us, but it is difficult to see its wisdom from Russia's standpoint. No conceivable good is accomplished by it. If an American Jew or an American Christian misbehaves himself in Russia he can at once be driven out; but the ordinary American Jew, like the ordinary American Christian, would behave just about as he behaves here....

In the Philippine Island there has been during the past year a continuation of the steady progress.... Above all they should remember that their prime needs are moral and industrial, not political.... If they are safeguarded against oppression, and if their real wants, material and spiritual, are studied intelligently and in a spirit of friendly sympathy, much more good will be done.

On January 30, 1905, in a message to Congress, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

The institution of marriage is, of course, at the very foundation of our social organization, and all influences that affect that institution are of vital concern to the people of the whole country. There is a widespread conviction that the divorce laws are dangerously lax and indifferently administered in some of the States, resulting in the diminishing regard for the sanctity of the marriage relation. The hope is entertained that co-operation amongst the several States can be secured to the end that there may be enacted upon the subject of marriage and divorce uniform laws, containing all possible safeguards for the security of the family.

On Saturday, March 4, 1905, in his Inaugural Address, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

My fellow-citizens, no people on earth have more cause to be thankful than ours, and this is said reverently, in no spirit of boastfulness in our own strength, but with gratitude to the Giver of Good who has blessed us with the conditions which have enabled us to achieve so large a measure of well-being and happiness....

Under a free government a mighty people can thrive best, alike as regards the things of the body and the things of the soul. Much has been given us, and much will rightfully be expected from us. We have duties to others and duties to ourselves; and we can shirk neither....

We wish peace, but we wish the peace of justice, the peace of righteousness.... If we fail, the cause of free self-government throughout the world will rock to its foundations, and therefore our responsibility is heavy, to ourselves, to the world as it is today, and to the generations yet unborn....

We know that no people needs such high traits of character as that people which seeks to govern its affairs aright through the freely expressed will of the freemen who compose it. But we have faith that we shall not prove false to the memories of the men of the mighty past. They did their work, they left us the splendid heritage we now enjoy. We in our turn have an assured confidence that we shall be able to leave this heritage unwasted and enlarged to our children and our children's children.

On November 2, 1905, President Theodore Roosevelt issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

When nearly three centuries ago the first settlers came to the country which has now become this great Republic, they fronted not only hardships and privation, but terrible risk to their lives. In those grim years the custom grew of setting apart one day in each year for a special service of thanksgiving to the Almighty for preserving the people through the changing seasons. The custom has now become national and hallowed by immemorial usage. We live in easier and more plentiful times than our forefathers, the men who with rugged strength faced the rugged days; and yet the dangers to national life are quite as great now as at any previous time in our history. It is eminently fitting that once a year our people should set apart a day for praise and thanksgiving to the Giver of Good, and, at the same time that they express their thankfulness for the abundant mercies received, should manfully acknowledge their shortcomings and pledge themselves solemnly and in good faith to strive to overcome them. During the past year we have been blessed with bountiful crops. Our business prosperity has been great. No other people has ever stood on as high a level of material well-being as ours now stands. We are not threatened by foes from without. The foes from whom we should pray to be delivered are our own passions, appetites, and follies; and against these there is always need that we should war.

Therefore, I, now set apart Thursday, the thirtieth day of this November, as a day of thanksgiving for the past and of prayer for the future, and on that day I ask that throughout the land the people gather in their homes and places of worship, and in rendering thanks unto the Most High for the manifold blessings of the past year, consecrate themselves to a life of cleanliness, honor and wisdom, so that this nation may do its allotted work on the earth in a manner worthy of those who founded it and of those who preserved it.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this 2nd day of November in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and five and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirtieth. Theodore Roosevelt.

By the President: Elihu Root, Secretary of State.

On Tuesday, December 5, 1905, in his Fifth Annual Message to Congress, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

Against the wrath of the Lord the wisdom of man cannot avail; in time of flood or drought human ingenuity can but partially repair the disaster....

The Department of Justice has for the last four years devoted more attention to the enforcement of the anti-trust legislation than to anything else. Much has been accomplished, particularly marked has been the moral effect of the prosecutions....

Business success, whether for the individual or for the Nation, is a good thing only so far as it is accompanied by and develops a high standard of conduct - honor, integrity, civic courage....

There is need of full knowledge on which to base action looking toward State and municipal legislation for the protection of working women. The introduction of women into industry is working change and disturbance in the domestic and social life of the Nation. The decrease in marriage, and especially in the birth rate, has been coincident with it. We must face the accomplished facts, and the adjustment of factory conditions must be made, but surely it can be made with less friction and less harmful effects on family life than is now the case. The whole matter in reality forms one of the greatest sociological phenomena of our time; it is a social question of the first importance, of far greater importance than any merely political or economic question can be....

Unless we continue to keep a quick and lively sense of the great fundamental truth that our concern is with the individual worth of the individual man, this Government cannot permanently hold the place which it has achieved among the nations.... It is the man's moral quality, his attitude toward the great questions which concern all humanity, his cleanliness of life, his power to do his duty toward himself and towards others, which really count....

The noblest of all forms of government is self-government; but it is also the most difficult. We who possess this priceless boon, and who desire to hand it on to our children and our children's children, should ever bear in mind the thought so finely expressed by Burke: "Men are qualified for civil liberty in exact proportion to their disposition to put moral chains upon their own appetites; in proportion as they are disposed to listen to the counsels of the wise and good in preference to the flattery of knaves. Society cannot exist unless a controlling power upon will and appetite be placed somewhere, and the less of it there be within the more there must be without. It is ordained in the eternal constitution of things that men of intemperate minds cannot be free. Their passions forge their fetters."...

Our aim is righteousness. Peace is normally the hand-maiden of righteousness; but when peace and righteousness conflict then a great and upright people can never for a moment hesitate to follow the path which leads toward righteousness, even though that path also leads to war. There are people who advocate peace at any price; there are others who, following a false analogy, think that because it is no longer necessary in civilized countries for individuals to protect their rights with a strong hand, it is therefore unnecessary for nations to be ready to defend their rights....

At the present there could be no greater calamity than for the free peoples, the enlightened, independent, and peace-loving peoples, to disarm.... Only that nation is equipped for peace that knows how to fight, and that will not shrink from fighting if ever the conditions become such that war is demanded in the name of the highest morality....

The Golden Rule should be, and as the world grows in morality it will be, the guiding rule of conduct among nations as among individuals....

There seems to be no statute of the United States which provides for the punishment of a United States Attorney or other officer of the Government who corruptly agrees to wrongfully do or wrongfully refrain from doing any act when the consideration for such corrupt agreement is other than one possessing money value. This ought to be remedied by appropriate legislation....

It is unwise to depart from the old American tradition and to discriminate for or against any man who desires to come here and become a citizen, save on the ground of that man's fitness for citizenship. It is our right and duty to consider his moral and social quality.... If the man who seeks to come here is from the moral and social standpoint of such a character as to bid fair to add value to the community he should be heartily welcomed. We cannot afford to pay heed to whether he is of one creed or another, of one nation, or another. We cannot afford to consider whether he is Catholic or Protestant, Jew or Gentile; whether he is Englishman or Irishman, Frenchman or German....

The income of the Philippine Government has necessarily been reduced by reason of the business and agricultural depression in the islands.... Negotiations and hearings for the settlement of the amount due to the Roman Catholic Church for rent and occupation of churches and rectories by the army of the United States are in progress.

On April 14, 1906, in an address given at the laying of the Cornerstone of the office building of the House of Representatives, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

In Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" you may recall the description of the man with the muck-rake, the man who could look no way but downward, with the muck-rake in his hand, who was offered a celestial crown for his muck-rake, but who would neither look up nor regard the crown he was offered, but continued to rake to himself the filth of the floor.

On December 3, 1906, in his Sixth Annual Message to Congress, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

A great many white men are lynched, but the crime is peculiarly frequent in respect to black men. The greatest existing cause of lynching is the perpetration, especially by black men, of the hideous crime of rape - the most abominable in all the category of crimes, even worse than murder. Mobs frequently avenge the commission of this crime by themselves torturing to death the man committing it; thus avenging in bestial fashion a bestial deed, and reducing themselves to a level with the criminal.

Lawlessness grows by what it feeds upon; and when mobs begin to lynch for rape they speedily extend the sphere of their operations and lynch for many other kinds of crimes, so that two-thirds of the lynchings are not for rape at all; while a considerable proportion of the individuals lynched are innocent of all crime. Governor Candler, of Georgia, stated on one occasion some years ago: "I can say of a verity that I have, within the last month, saved the lives of half a dozen innocent negroes who were pursued by the mob, and brought them to trial in a court of law in which they were acquitted." As Bishop Galloway, of Mississippi, has finely said: "When the rule of a mob obtains, that which distinguishes a high civilization is surrendered. The mob lynches a negro charged with rape will in a little while lynch a white man suspected of crime. Every Christian patriot in America needs to lift up his voice in loud and eternal protest against the mob spirit that is threatening the integrity of this Republic."...

Moreover, where any crime committed by a member of one race against another race is avenged in such a fashion that it seems as if not the individual criminal, but the whole race, is attacked, the result is to exasperate to the highest degree race feeling. There is but one safe rule in dealing with black men as with white men; it is the same rule that must be applied in dealing with rich men and poor men; that is, to treat each man, whatever his color, his creed, or his social position, with even-handed justice on his real worth as a man.

White people owe it quite as much to themselves as to the colored race to treat well the colored man who shows by his life that he deserves such treatment; for it is surely the highest wisdom to encourage in the colored race all those individuals who are honest, industrious, law-abiding, and who therefore make good and safe neighbors and citizens. Reward or punish the individual on his merits as an individual. Evil will surely come in the end to both races if we substitute for this just rule the habit of treating all the members of the race, good and bad, alike....

Moreover, in my judgement, the crime of rape should always be punished with death, as is the case with murder; assault with intent to commit rape should be made a capital crime....

The members of the white race on the other hand should understand that every lynching represents by just so much a loosening of the bands of civilization; that the spirit of lynching inevitably throws into prominence in the community all the foul and evil creatures who dwell therein. No man can take part in the torture of a human being without having his own moral nature permanently lowered. Every lynching means just so much moral deterioration in all the children who have any knowledge of it, and therefore just so much additional trouble for the next generation of Americans....

The white man, if he is wise, will decline to allow the negroes in a mass to grow to manhood and womanhood without education. Unquestionably education such as is obtained in our public schools does not do everything towards making a man a good citizen; but it does much. The lowest and most brutal criminals, those for instance who commit the crime of rape, are in the great majority men who have had either no education or very little; just as they are almost invariably men who own no property; for the man who puts money by out of his earnings, like the man who acquires education, is usually lifted above mere brutal criminality. Of course the best type of education for the colored man, taken as a whole, is such education as is conferred in schools like Hampton and Tuskegee; where the boys and girls, the young men and young women, are trained industrially as well as in the ordinary public school branches. The graduates of these schools turn out well in the great majority of cases, and hardly any of them become criminals.... Every graduate of these schools - and for the matter of that every other colored man or woman - who leads a life so useful and honorable as to win the good will and respect of those whites whose neighbor he or she is, thereby helps the whole colored race as it can be helped in no other way....

It is exactly as true of the farmer, as it is of the business man and the wageworker, that the ultimate success of the Nation of which he forms a part must be founded not alone on material prosperity but upon high moral, mental, and physical development....

I am well aware of how difficult it is to pass a constitutional amendment. Nevertheless in my judgement the whole question of marriage and divorce should be relegated to the authority of the National Congress.... There is nothing so vitally essential to the welfare of the nation, nothing around which the nation should so bend itself to throw every safeguard, as the home life of the average citizen.... When home ties are loosened; when men and women cease to regard a worthy family life, with all its duties fully performed, and all its responsibilities lived up to, as the life best worth living; then evil days for the commonwealth are at hand....

Surely it should need no demonstration to show that wilful sterility is, from the standpoint of the nation, from the standpoint of the human race, the one sin for which the penalty is national death, race death; a sin for which there is no atonement; a sin which is the more dreadful exactly in proportion as the men and women guilty thereof are in other respects, in character, and bodily and mental powers, those whom for the sake of the state it would be well to see the fathers and mothers of many healthy children, well brought up in homes made happy by their presence. No man, no woman, can shirk the primary duties of life, whether for love of ease and pleasure, or for any other cause, and retain his or her self-respect....

So far our action in the Philippines has been abundantly justified.... In these islands we are steadily introducing both liberty and order, to a greater degree than their people have ever before known. We have secured justice. We have provided an efficient police force, and have put down ladronism. Only in the islands of Leyte and Samar is the authority of our Government resisted and this by wild mountain tribes under the superstitious inspiration of fakirs and pseudo-religious leaders....

Not only must we treat all nations fairly, but we must treat with justice and good will all immigrants who come here under the law. Whether they are Catholic or Protestant, Jew or Gentile; whether they come from England or Germany....

It would be both foolish and an evil thing for a great and free nation to deprive itself of the power to protect its own rights and even in exceptional cases to stand up for the rights of others. Nothing would more promote iniquity, nothing would further defer the reign upon earth of peace and righteousness, than for the free and enlightened peoples which, tho with much stumbling and many shortcomings, nevertheless strive toward justice, deliberately to render themselves powerless while leaving every despotism and barbarism armed and able to work their wicked will. The chance for the settlement of disputes peacefully, by arbitration, now depends mainly upon the possession by the nations that mean to do right of sufficient armed strength to make their purpose effective.

On December 3, 1907, in his Seventh Annual Message to Congress, President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

There are, of course, foolish people who denounce any care of the Army or Navy as "militarism," but I do not think that these people are numerous. This country has to contend now, and has had to contend in the past, with many evils, and there is ample scope for all who would work for reform. But there is not one evil that now exists, or that ever has existed in this country, which is, or ever has been, owing in the smallest part to militarism. Declamation against militarism has no more serious place in an earnest and intelligent movement for righteousness in this country than declamation against the worship of Baal or Astaroth. It is a declamation against a non-existent evil, one which never has existed in this country, and which has not the slightest chance of appearing here.

On January 31, 1908, President Theodore Roosevelt wrote from the White House:

The attacks by these great corporations on the Administration's actions have been given a wide circulation throughout the country, in the newspapers and otherwise, by those writers and speakers who, consciously or unconsciously, act as the representatives of predatory wealth - of the wealth accumulated on a giant scale by all forms of iniquity, ranging from the oppression of wageworkers to unfair and unwholesome methods of crushing out competition, and to defrauding the public by stock jobbing and the manipulation of securities.

Certain wealthy men of this stamp, whose conduct should be abhorrent to every man of ordinary decent conscience, and who commit the hideous wrong of teaching our young men that phenomenal business success must ordinarily be based on dishonesty, have during the last few months made it apparent that they have banded together to work for a reaction.

Their endeavor is to overthrow and discredit all who honestly administer the law, to prevent any additional legislation which would check and restrain them, and to secure if possible a freedom from all restraint which will permit every unscrupulous wrongdoer to do what he wishes unchecked provided he has enough money. The only way to counteract the movement in which these men are engaged is to make clear to the public just what they have done in the past and just what they are seeking to accomplish in the present....

We attack only the corrupt men of wealth, who find in the purchased politician the most efficient defender of corruption. Our main quarrel is not with these agents and representatives of the interests. They derive their chief power from the great sinister offenders who stand behind them. They are but puppets who move as the strings are pulled. It is not the puppets, but the strong cunning men and the mighty forces working for evil behind and through the puppets, with whom we have to deal. We seek to control law-defying wealth; in the first place to prevent its doing dire evil to the Republic, and in the next place to avoid the vindictive and dreadful radicalism which, if left uncontrolled, it is certain in the end to arouse. Sweeping attacks upon all property, upon all men of means, without regard to whether they do well or ill, would sound the death-knell of the Republic; and such attacks become inevitable if decent citizens permit those rich men whose lives are corrupt and evil to domineer in swollen pride, unchecked and unhindered, over the destinies of this country. We act in no vindictive spirit, and we are no respecters of persons....

There are ample material rewards for those who serve with fidelity the mammon of unrighteousness; but they are dearly paid for by the people who permit their representatives, whether in public life, in press, or in the colleges where their young men are taught, to preach and to practice that there is one law for the rich and another for the poor.

The amount of money the representatives of certain great moneyed interests are willing to spend can be gauged by their recent publication broadcast throughout the papers of this country, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, of high advertisements attacking with envenomed bitterness the Administration's policy of warring against successful dishonesty, and by their circulation of pamphlets and books prepared with the same object; while they likewise push the circulation of the writings and speeches of men who, whether because they are misled, or because, seeing the light, they are willing to sin against the light, serve these masters of great wealth to the cost of the plain people.

The books and pamphlets, the controlled newspapers, the speeches by public or private men to which I refer, are usually and especially in the interest of the Standard Oil Trust and certain notorious railroad combinations, but they also defend other individuals and corporations of great wealth that have been guilty of wrongdoing. It is only rarely that the men responsible for the wrongdoings themselves speak or write. Normally they hire others to do their bidding, or find others who will do it without hire. From the railroad-rate law to the pure-food law, every measure for honesty in business that has been passed during the last six years has been opposed by these men on its passage and in its administration with every resource that bitter and unscrupulous craft could suggest and the command of almost unlimited money secure.... The man making this assault is usually either a prominent lawyer or an editor who takes his policy from the financiers and his arguments from their attorneys....

There has been in the past grave wrong done innocent stockholders by overcapitalization, stock-watering, stock jobbing, stock-manipulation.... A repetition of the successful effort by the Standard Oil people to crush out every competitor, to overawe the common carriers, and to establish a monopoly which treats the public with a contempt.... Corrupt business and corrupt politics act and react with ever increasing debasement, one on the other.... The rebate taker, the franchise trafficker, the manipulator of securities, the purveyor and protector of vice, the blackmailing ward boss, the ballot-box stuffer, the demagogue, the mob leader, the hired bully, and mankiller - all work at the same web of corruption.... It is the kind of business which has tended to make the very name "high finance" a term of scandal.... It is due to the speculative folly and flagrant dishonesty of a few men of great wealth, who seek to shield themselves from the effects of their own wrongdoing by ascribing it results to the actions of those who have sought to put a stop to the wrongdoings....

On behalf of all our people, on behalf no less of the honest man of means than of the honest man who earns each day's livelihood by that day's sweat of his brow, it is necessary to insist upon honesty in business and politics alike, in all walks of life, in big things and in little things; upon just and fair dealing as between man and man. Those who demand this are striving for the right in the spirit of Abraham Lincoln when he said:

"Fondly do we hope, fervently do we pray, that this mighty scourge may speedily pass away. Yet, if God wills that it continue until all the wealth piled by the bondsmen's two hundred and fifty years of unrequited toil shall be sunk, and until every drop drawn with the lash shall be paid by another drawn with the sword, as was said three thousand years ago, so still it must be said, 'The judgements of the Lord are true and righteous altogether.' With malice toward none; with charity for all; with firmness in the right, as God gives us to see the right, let us strive on to finish the work we are in."

In the work we of this generation are in, there is, thanks be to the Almighty, no danger on bloodshed and no use for the sword; but there is grave need of those stern qualities shown alike by the men of the North and the men of the South in the dark days when each valiantly battled for the light as it was given each to see the light. Their spirit should be our spirit, as we strive to bring nearer the day when greed and trickery and cunning shall be trampled under foot by those who fight for the righteousness that exalteth a nation.

On October 31, 1908, President Theodore Roosevelt issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving and Prayer:

Once again the season is at hand when, according to the ancient custom of our people, it becomes the duty of the President to appoint a day of prayer and of thanksgiving to God.

Year by year this Nation grows in strength and worldly power. During the century and a quarter that has elapsed since our entry into the circle of independent peoples we have grown and prospered in material things to a degree never known before, and not now know in any other country. The thirteen colonies which straggled along the seacoast of the Atlantic and were hemmed-in but a few miles west of tidewater by the Indian haunted wilderness, have been transformed into the mightiest republic which the world has ever seen. Its domains stretch across the continent from one to the other of the two greatest oceans, and it exercises dominion alike in the arctic and tropic realms. The growth in wealth and population has surpassed even the growth in territory. Nowhere else in the world is the average of individual comfort and material well-being as high as in our fortunate land.

For the very reason that in material well-being we have thus abounded, we owe it to the Almighty to show equal progress in moral and spiritual things. With a nation, as with the individuals who make up a nation, material well-being is an indispensable foundation. But the foundation avails nothing by itself. That life is wasted, and worse than wasted, which is spent piling, heap upon heap, those things which minister merely to the pleasure of the body and to the power that rests only on wealth. Upon material well-being as a foundation must be raised the structure of the lofty life of the spirit, if this Nation is properly to fulfil its great mission and to accomplish all that we so ardently hope and desire. The things of the body are good; the things of the intellect better; the best of all are the things of the soul; for, in the nation as in the individual, in the long run it is character that counts. Let us, therefore, as a people set our faces resolutely against evil, and with broad charity, with kindness and good-will toward all men, but with unflinching determination to smite down wrong, strive with all the strength that is given us for righteousness in public and private life.

Now, therefore, I, Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States, do set apart Thursday, the 26th day of November, next, as a day of general thanksgiving and prayer, and on that day I recommend that the people shall cease from their daily work, and, in their homes or in their churches, meet devoutly to thank the Almighty for the many and great blessings they have received in the past, and to pray that they may be given the strength so to order their lives as to deserve a continuation of these blessings in the future.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed. Done at the City of Washington this thirty-first day of October in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and eight, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and thirty-third. Theodore Roosevelt.

By the President: Alvey A. Adee, Acting Secretary of State.

In 1909, President Theodore Roosevelt, who was a member of the Dutch Reformed Church, stated:

After a week on perplexing problems... it does so rest my soul to come into the house of The Lord and to sing and mean it, "Holy, Holy, Holy, Lord God Almighty"... (my) great joy and glory that, in occupying an exalted position in the nation, I am enabled, to preach the practical moralities of The Bible to my fellow-countrymen and to hold up Christ as the hope and Savior of the world.

In 1909, with grave intuition, President Roosevelt gave this ominous warning:

Progress has brought us both unbounded opportunities and unbridled difficulties. Thus, the measure of our civilization will not be that we have done much, but what we have done with that much. I believe that the next half century will determine if we will advance the cause of Christian civilization or revert to the horrors of brutal paganism. The thought of modern industry in the hands of Christian charity is a dream worth dreaming. The thought of industry in the hands of paganism is a nightmare beyond imagining. The choice between the two is upon us.

In 1910, President Theodore Roosevelt gave his message on The New Nationalism:

The material progress and prosperity of a nation are desirable chiefly so far as they lead to the moral and material welfare of all citizens.

Just in proportion as the average man and woman are honest, capable of sound judgement and high ideals, active in public affairs - but, first of all, sound in their home life, and the father and mother of healthy children whom they bring up well - just so far, and no further, we may count our civilization a success.

We must have - I believe we have already - a genuine and permanent moral awakening, without which no wisdom of legislation or administration really means anything.

On June 17, 1912, in a speech at the Progressive Party Convention in Chicago, Theodore Roosevelt said:

Just beyond man's narrow daily vision stand the immortals. "And Jehovah opened the eyes of the young man, and he saw; and behold, the mountain was full of horses and chariots about Elisha." At the front of this culture's way ride the strong guards of our own past, their authority immortalized by faithfulness. In the hour of decision we see them; their grave eyes watch us, the keepers of our standards, the builders of our civilization. They came from God to do his bidding and returned. The future we cannot see; nor what the next imperious task; nor who its strong executant. But for this generation, in a time charged with disintegrating forces, the challenge is clear: to uphold our legacy with faith, valor, and truth...

Now to you men who in your turn have come together to spend and be spent in the endless crusade against wrong, to you who gird yourselves for this great fight in the never-ending warfare for the good of mankind, I say in closing, "We stand at Armageddon and we battle for the Lord."

On November 15, 1913, in a letter to Sir Edward Grey, Theodore Roosevelt declared:

There is absolutely nothing to be said for government by a plutocracy, for government by men very powerful in certain lines and gifted with "the money touch," but with ideals which in their essence are merely those of so many glorified pawnbrokers.

In 1916, Theodore Roosevelt wrote Fear God and Take Your Own Part as the situation in Europe was getting serious:

Fear God, in the true sense of the word, means love God, respect God, honor God; and all this can be done by loving our neighbor treating him justly and mercifully, and in all ways endeavoring to protect him from injustice and cruelty.

In 1917, as the nation was contemplating entering World War I, Theodore Roosevelt urged:

The world is at this moment passing through one of those terrible periods of convulsion when the souls of men and of nations are tried as by fire.

Woe to the man or to the nation that at such a time stands as once Laodicea stood; as the people of ancient Meroz stood, when they dared not come to the help of the Lord against the mighty.

In such a crisis the moral weakening is the enemy of right, the enemy of life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness.

On October 1917, in the Ladies Home Journal, Theodore Roosevelt stated:

In this actual world, a churchless community, a community where men have abandoned and scoffed at, or ignored their religious needs, is a community on the rapid down-grade.

President Theodore Roosevelt stated:

The true Christian is the true citizen, lofty of purpose, resolute in endeavor, ready for a hero's deeds, but never looking down on his task because it is cast in the day of small things; scornful of baseness, awake to his own duties as well as to his rights, following the higher law with reverence, and in this world doing all that in his power lies, so that when death comes he may feel that mankind is in some degree better because he lived.

A thorough knowledge of the Bible is worth more than a college education.

Almost every man who has by his life work added to the sum of human achievements of which the race is proud, almost every such man has based his life work largely upon the teachings of the Bible.

We have faith that we shall not prove false to the memories of the men of the mighty past. They did their work. They left us the splendid heritage we now enjoy.

We in our turn have an assured confidence that we shall be able to leave this heritage unwasted and enlarged to our children's children.

To do so we must show, not merely in great crisis, but in the everyday affairs of life, the qualities of practical intelligence, of courage, of hardiness, and endurance, and above all the power of devotion to a lofty ideal, which made great the men who founded this Republic in the days of Washington, which made great the men who preserved this Republic in the days of Abraham Lincoln.

The churchgoer may not hear a good sermon at church, but unless he is very unfortunate, he will hear a sermon by a good man...and, besides, even if he does not hear a good sermon, the probabilities are that he will listen to and take part in reading some beautiful passages from the Bible...

Moreover, he will probably take part in singing some good hymns. He will meet and nod to or speak to good quiet neighbors.

Church attendance and church work of some kind mean both the cultivation of the habit of feeling some responsibility for others and the sense of braced moral strength which prevents the relaxation of one's fiber.

American Quotations.txt

Every thinking man, when he thinks, realizes that the teachings of the Bible are so interwoven and entwined with our whole civic and social life that it would be literally impossible for us to figure ourselves what that life would be if these standards were removed. We would lose almost all the standards by which we now judge both public and private morals; all the standards towards which we, with more or less resolution, strive to raise ourselves.

If ever there lived a President who, during his term of service, needed all the consolation and strength that he could draw from the Unseen Power above him, it was President Lincoln - sad, patient, mighty Lincoln, who worked and suffered for the people and, when he had lived for them at good end, gave up his life.

If there ever was a man who practically applied what was taught in our churches, it was Abraham Lincoln.

In the pioneer days of the West we found it an un failing rule that after a community has existed for a certain length of time either a church was built or else the community began to go downhill.

In those old communities in the Eastern States which have gone backward, it is noticeable that the retrogression has been both marked by and accentuated by a rapid decline in church membership and work; the two facts being so interrelated that each stands to the other partly as a cause and partly as an effect.

There are those who believe that a new modernity demands a new morality. What they fail to consider is the harsh reality that there is no such thing as a new morality.

There is only one morality. All else is immorality. There is only true Christian ethics over against which stands the whole of paganism. If we are to fulfill our great destiny as a people, then we must return to the old morality, the sole morality....

All these blatant sham reformers, in the name of a new morality, preach the old vice of self-indulgence which rotted out first the moral fiber and then even the external greatness of Greece and Rome.

On January 7, 1919, President Woodrow Wilson issued a Proclamation announcing the death of former President Theodore Roosevelt:

It becomes my sad duty to announce officially the death of Theodore Roosevelt.... In his death the United States has lost one of its most distinguished and patriotic citizens.... In the War with Spain, he displayed singular initiative and energy and distinguished himself among the commanders of the army in the field. As President he awoke the Nation to the dangers of private control which lurked in our financial and industrial systems....

I hereby direct that the flags of the White House and the several Departmental Buildings be displayed at half staff for a period of thirty days, and that suitable military and naval honors under the orders of the Secretaries of War and of the Navy may be rendered on the day of the funeral.

American Quotations.txt

Done this seventh day of January, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and nineteen, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-third. Woodrow Wilson.

By the President: Robert Lansing, Secretary of State.

Ellis, (Henry) Havelock (February 2, 1859-July 8, 1939), was an English author and psychologist. In his work, The Dance of Life, 1923, he wrote:

The Promised Land always lies on the other side of a wilderness.

Oregon, State of (February 14, 1859), was the 33rd State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Oregon, adopted 1857, stated:

Bill of Rights, Article I, Section 2. All men shall be secure in the Natural right, to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their consciences.

Bates, Katherine Lee (August 12, 1859-March 28, 1929), was an American poet and educator. She was professor of English literature at Wellesley College, 1891-1925. In 1892, after seeing the inspiring view from atop Pike's Peak in Colorado, she penned the patriotic song America the Beautiful. This song became so popular that in 1920 it almost became the U.S. National Anthem:

O Beautiful for Spacious Skies,
For Amber Waves of Grain,
For Purple Mountain Majesties
Above the Fruited Plain!

America! America!
God Shed His Grace on Thee
And Crowned Thy Good with Brotherhood
From Sea to Shining Sea!

O Beautiful for Pilgrims Feet,
Whose Stern Impassioned Stress
A Thoroughfare for Freedom Beat
Across the Wilderness!

America! America!
God Mend Thy Every Flaw,
Confirm Thy Soul in Self-Control
Thy Liberty in Law!

O Beautiful for Heros Proved
In Liberating Strife,
Who More Than Self Their Country Loved,
And Mercy More Than Life!

America! America!
May God Thy Gold Refine

American Quotations.txt

Till All Success Be Nobleness
And Every Gain Divine!

O Beautiful for Patriots Dream
That Sees Beyond the Years
Thine Alabaster Cities Gleam Undimmed by Human Tears!

America! America!
God Shed His Grace On Thee
And Crown Thy Good With Brotherhood
From Sea to Shining Sea!

Bryan, William Jennings (March 19, 1860-July 26, 1925), was the Democratic candidate for President in 1896, 1900, 1908, was a U.S. Representative 1891-95, and served as Secretary of State under President Woodrow Wilson. He was the editor of the Omaha World Herald, and founded The Commoner journal. He was celebrated for having successfully participated in the prosecution during the John Scopes evolution trial in Tennessee. Williams Jennings Bryan gave over 600 public speeches during his Presidential campaigns, one of his favorites of which was "The Prince of Peace":

I am interested in the science of government, but I am more interested in religion...I enjoy making a political speech...but I would rather speak on religion than on politics. I commenced speaking on the stump when I was only twenty, but I commenced speaking in the church six years earlier - and I shall be in the church even after I am out of politics.

Stuart, George Hay (from 1861-65), served as the president of the United States Christian Commission, which was formed in New York, November 14, 1861, as an outgrowth of the YMCA (Young Men's Christian Association). Through the efforts of women from various religious denominations, this organization raised over $2.5 million in private donations, primarily from churches, during the Civil War. This was used to provide comforts, supplies, hospital stores and clothing to the armies and navies of the federal government, being widely distributed to men in camps, hospitals and ships.

As an influential philanthropist, George Hay Stuart was responsible for the organization distributing over 30 million gospel tracts and New Testaments to the soldiers. One of the workers was D. L. Moody, who later became a world renowned minister.

George Hay Stuart stated:

I have prayed for this union; and I have labored for it, simply because I believed that it would bring glory to my blessed Lord and Master, Jesus Christ....

I have labored and prayed for it, because it would bring brethren together, now unhappily divided, to see eye to eye, that the nations that have so long bowed down to idols might learn of Jesus and Him crucified... Since these twenty-four hours have passed away eighty-six thousand four hundred immortal souls have gone to the judgment seat of Christ....

I never hear the funeral bell toll without asking myself the question, "What have I done to point that departed soul to the Lamb of God that died to save a perishing world?"

Brethren, buckle on your armor for a great conflict; buckle it on for giving the glorious Gospel of the Son of God to the millions of the earth who are perishing for lack of knowledge.

Kansas, State of (January 29, 1861), was the 34th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Kansas, adopted 1859, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of Kansas, grateful to Almighty God for our civil and religious privileges... establish this Constitution.

Bill of Rights, Section 7. The right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience shall never be infringed.

Article I, Section VII. Religion, morality, and knowledge, however, being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the legislature to make suitable provision... for the encouragement of schools and the means of instruction.

Whitehead, Alfred North (February 15, 1861-December 30, 1947), was a British philosopher and mathematician. He was appointed to teach at Trinity College, Cambridge, 1910; University College, London, 1911; professor of applied mathematics at the Imperial College of Science and Technology, 1914; and professor of philosophy at Harvard University, 1924. His works include: Principia Mathematica 1910-13; Principles of Natural Knowledge 1919; and The Concept of Nature. In Science and the Modern World, 1925, chapter 12, Alfred North Whitehead wrote:

The religious vision, and its history of persistent expansion, is our one ground for optimism. Apart from it, human life is a flash of occasional enjoyments lighting up a mass of pain and misery, a bagatelle of transient experience.

Carman, William Bliss (April 15, 1861-June 8, 1929), was a preeminent lyric poet of Canada. A distant relative of Ralph Waldo Emerson, he became well-known as a magazine writer. He was the editor of the New York Independent, editor of the Oxford Book of American Verse, 1927; and contributed verse to the Harvard Monthly. His first volume, Low Tide on Grand Pre, published in 1893, followed by the books of verse: Songs of Vagabondia, 1894-6, 1901; A Winter Holiday; Pipes of Pan; and Ballads of Lost Haven.

In his work, Vestigia, William Bliss Carman wrote:

I took a day to search for God,
And found Him not. But as I trod
By rocky ledge, through woods untamed,
Just where one scarlet lily flamed,
I saw His footprint in the sod.

Benson, Arthur Christopher (1862-1925), was an English author and educator, whose works include: The Upton Letters; From a College Window; and Walter Pater. In 1902, he wrote Land of Hope and Glory:
Page 828

Land of hope and glory, mother of the free,
How shall we extol thee, who are born of thee?
Wider still and wider shall thy bounds be set;
God, who made thee mighty, make thee mightier yet.

Sunday, William Ashley "Billy" (November 19, 1862-November 6, 1935), was an American evangelist, noted for flamboyance and dramatic style. He was a famed professional baseball player, 1883-91, before his conversion. After working with the Y.M.C.A. from 1891-95, he became a nationally renowned evangelist, 1896-1935. Billy Sunday declared:

Going to church doesn't make you a Christian any more than going to a garage makes you an automobile.

United States Congress (March 3, 1863), passed a resolution in the U.S. Senate calling upon the President to proclaim a National Day of Prayer and Humiliation:

Resolved, That devoutly recognizing the supreme authority and just government of Almighty God in all the affairs of men and nations, and sincerely believing that no people, however great in numbers and resources, or however strong in the justness of their cause, can prosper without His favor, and at the same time deploring the national offenses which have provoked His righteous judgment, yet encouraged in this day of trouble by the assurance of His Word, to seek Him for succor according to His appointed way, through Jesus Christ, the Senate of the United States does hereby request the President of the United States, by his proclamation, to designate and set apart a day for national prayer and humiliation.

On March 30, 1863, President Abraham Lincoln issued a historic Proclamation Appointing a National Day of Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer:

Whereas, the Senate of the United States devoutly recognizing the Supreme Authority and just Government of Almighty God in all the affairs of men and of nations, has, by a resolution, requested the President to designate and set apart a day for national prayer and humiliation:

And whereas, it is the duty of nations as well as of men to own their dependence upon the overruling power of God, to confess their sins and transgressions in humble sorrow yet with assured hope that genuine repentance will lead to mercy and pardon, and to recognize the sublime truth, announced in the Holy Scriptures and proven by all history: that those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord:

And, inasmuch as we know that, by His divine law, nations like individuals are subjected to punishments and chastisement in this world, may we not justly fear that the awful calamity of civil war, which now desolates the land may be but a punishment inflicted upon us for our presumptuous sins to the needful end of our national reformation as a whole people?

We have been the recipients of the choicest bounties of Heaven. We have been preserved these many years in peace and prosperity. We have grown in numbers, wealth and power as no other nation has ever grown.

But we have forgotten God. We have forgotten the gracious Hand which preserved us in peace, and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us; and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own.

Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us!

It behooves us then to humble ourselves before the offended Power, to confess our national sins and to pray for clemency and forgiveness.

Now, therefore, in compliance with the request and fully concurring in the view of the Senate, I do, by this my proclamation, designate and set apart Thursday, the 30th day of April, 1863, as a day of national humiliation, fasting and prayer.

And I do hereby request all the people to abstain on that day from their ordinary secular pursuits, and to unite, at their several places of public worship and their respective homes, in keeping the day holy to the Lord and devoted to the humble discharge of the religious duties proper to that solemn occasion.

All this being done, in sincerity and truth, let us then rest humbly in the hope authorized by the Divine teachings, that the united cry of the nation will be heard on high and answered with blessing no less than the pardon of our national sins and the restoration of our now divided and suffering country to its former happy condition of unity and peace.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.
By the President: Abraham Lincoln.

West Virginia, State of (June 20, 1863), was the 35th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of West Virginia, adopted 1872, stated:

Preamble. Since through Divine Providence we enjoy the blessings of civil, political and religious liberty, we, the people of West Virginia, in and through the provisions of this Constitution, reaffirm our faith in and constant reliance upon God.

United States Congress (October 3, 1863), passed an Act of Congress designating an annual National Day of Thanksgiving and Praise, proclaimed by President Abraham Lincoln:

The year that is drawing to its close has been filled with the blessings of fruitful fields and healthful skies. To these bounties, which are so constantly enjoyed that we are prone to forget the source from which they come, others have been added which are of so extraordinary a nature that they can not fail to penetrate and soften even the heart which is habitually insensible to the ever-watchful Providence of Almighty God.

In the midst of a civil war of unequalled magnitude and severity, which has sometimes seemed to foreign states to invite and to provoke their aggression, peace has been preserved with all nations, order has been maintained, the laws have been respected and obeyed, and harmony has prevailed everywhere, except in the theater of military conflict, while that theater has been greatly contracted by the advancing armies and navies of the Union.

Needful diversions of wealth and of strength from the fields of peaceful industry to the national defense have not arrested the plow, the shuttle, or the ship; the ax has enlarged the borders of our settlements, and the mines, as well of iron and coal as of the precious metals, have yielded even more abundantly than heretofore. Population has steadily increased notwithstanding the waste that has been made in the camp of the siege, and the battlefield, and the country, rejoicing in the consciousness of augmented strength and vigor, is permitted to expect continuance of years with large increase of freedom.

No human counsel hath devised, nor hath any mortal hand worked out these great things. They are the gracious gifts of the most high God, who, while dealing with us in anger for our sins, hath nevertheless remembered mercy.

It has seemed to me fit and proper that they should be solemnly, reverently, and gratefully acknowledged, as with one heart and one voice, by the whole American people.

I do, therefore, invite my fellow citizens in every part of the United States, and those who are sojourning in foreign lands, to set apart and observe the last Thursday of November next as a day of Thanksgiving and Praise to our beneficent Father who dwelleth in the heavens. And I recommend to them that while offering up the ascriptions justly due to Him for such singular deliverances and blessings they do also, with humble penitence for our national perverseness and disobedience, commend to His tender care all those who have become widows, orphans, mourners, or sufferers in the lamentable civil strife in which we are unavoidably engaged, and fervently implore the interposition of the Almighty hand to heal the wounds of the nation and to restore it, as soon as may be consistent with the divine purposes, to the full enjoyment of peace, harmony, tranquillity, and union.

In testimony whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the city of Washington, this 3rd day of October, A. D. 1863, and of the Independence of the United States the eighty-eighth. Abraham Lincoln.

By the President: William H. Seward, Secretary of State.

Bok, Edward William (October 9, 1863-January 9, 1930), was a Dutch-born American journalist. He was the editor of 'The Ladies'

Home Journal, 1889-1919, and won the Pulitzer Prize for his autobiography, The Americanization of Edward Bok, 1921. In the September 1894 issue of The Ladies' Home Journal, Edward Bok wrote:

There are myriads of people on this earth who believe in the divinity of Christ; people of the finest minds and the greatest learning. It is not a mark of intelligence to question divine things. The divinity of Christ is a question of the heart. No one who studies the Life of Christ can fail to believe that in Him the world had a Being unlike any other man, and His own teachings, His own words, His own life are the best proofs of his Divinity.

Proclamation of Amnesty (December 8, 1863), was issued by President Abraham Lincoln, and again on May 29, 1865 by President Andrew Johnson, to pardon and restore the rights of citizenship to those who participated in the Confederate rebellion. This plan for Southern Reconstruction included a statement to be sworn to by those receiving pardon for activities during the Civil War:

I, _____, do solemnly swear, in presence of Almighty God, that I will henceforth faithfully support, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States and the Union of the States thereunder, and that I will in like manner abide by and faithfully support all laws and proclamations which have been made during the late rebellion with reference to the emancipation of slaves. So help me God.

Santayana, George (December 16, 1863-September 26, 1952), was an American philosopher, poet and essayist. He taught philosophy at Harvard University for 23 years. His works include: The Sense of Beauty, 1896; The Life of Reason, 1905-06; Character and Opinion in the United States, 1920; The Realm of Truth, 1920-40; The Last Puritan, 1935; Persons and Places, 1945; and The Idea of Christ in the Gospels, 1946. George Santayana taught:

Those who cannot remember the past are condemned to repeat it.

In his Dialogues in Limbo, 1926, George Santayana wrote:

Religion in its humility restores man to his only dignity, the courage to live by grace.

In The Genteel Tradition at Bay, 1931, George Santayana wrote:

There is nothing impossible in the existence of the supernatural: its existence seems to me decidedly probable.

Carver, George Washington (c. 1865-January 5, 1943), was an African American chemist of international fame in the field of agriculture. He introduced hundreds of uses for the peanut, soybean, pecan and sweet potato, thereby creating a market for these products. This not only revolutionized the economy of the South, but these crops replenished the soil, which had been depleted through years of cotton growth. By the early 1940's, George's agricultural contributions had resulted in peanut farming covering over 5 million acres, with over $500,000 in peanut industry production.

George was born a slave just prior to the end of the Civil War, possibly in 1865, but there are no records. Within a few weeks, his father, who belonged to the next farm over, was killed in a log hauling accident. Shortly after the War, while still an infant, George, with his mother and sister, were kidnapped by bushwhackers. Moses Carver sent friends to track down the thieves and trade his best horse to retrieve them. The thieves took the horse and only left George, who was sick with the whooping cough. George never saw his mother or sister again. Meanwhile, illness claimed the lives of his two other sisters, and they were buried in the family burial plot.

George Carver and his older brother Jim were raised in Diamond Grove, Missouri, by Uncle Moses and Aunt Sue Carver, an elderly white couple who never had children. Being of poor health as a child, George spent much time around the house helping with chores and learning laundry, cooking, cleaning, mending, etc. His recreation was to spend time in the woods near the house.

Around the age of ten, George said goodbye to the Carvers and walked the eight miles to Neosho, Missouri, to attend school. By chance, he was taken in by Uncle Andy and Aunt Mariah Watkins, a childless black couple who treated him as their own. George paid his own tuition and helped with the finances by working jobs around town, such as cooking, weeding, grooming horses, chopping wood, sewing, mending and doing laundry. Aunt Mariah gave George a Bible which he cherished dearly.

After learning all he could from Schoolmaster Foster, George decided to hitch a ride with a family traveling to Fort Scott, Kansas, where he boarded in a lean-to behind the stagecoach depot. There he worked as a cook and attended school, but fled suddenly after witnessing a lynching.

Carver continued working his way through school in Oleta, Kansas, then at Paola Normal School, finishing High School in Minneapolis, Kansas. There he received the sad news that his only brother, Jim, had died of small pox.

George attended a business college in Kansas City, where he learned shorthand and typing, and worked as a stenographer for the Union Telegraph Office. He applied and was accepted at Highland College in Highland, Kansas, but was refused entrance because of his race.

Discouraged, he headed to Ness County in Western Kansas where he tried his hand at homesteading. The county folks there quickly accepted George, admiring this gentle black man who played accordion at their dances, joined their literary societies and impressed them with his paintings. George's memories and correspondence with the people there remained precious to him throughout his life.

George then worked as the head cook at a large hotel in Winterset, Iowa. While attending church, he met John and Helen Milholland, who encouraged him to continue his education, pursuing art and music at Simpson College in Indianola, Iowa. He supported himself by opening a laundry service for the other students. One of his paintings, The Yucca, received an Honorable Mention at the 1893 Chicago World's Fair.

His art teacher, Miss Etta M. Budd, noticed how intricately he painted plants and encouraged him to study agriculture. He transferred to Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts. Student living quarters became crowded and before Carver's race could be made an issue, the head of the Agricultural Department, Professor James Wilson, let Carver board in his office.

George W. Carver received his bachelors degree in 1894, masters degree in 1896, and accepted a prestigious faculty position.

Two of Carver's professors, Henry C. Wallace and James Wilson, served as U.S. Secretaries of Agriculture, and one of his students, Henry A. Wallace, became U.S. Secretary of Agriculture and U.S. Vice President under Franklin D. Roosevelt.

In the spring of 1896, George W. Carver received a letter from Booker T. Washington, president of the Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. Booker T. Washington wrote:

Tuskegee Institute seeks to provide education - a means for survival to those who attend. Our students are poor, often starving. They travel miles of torn roads, across years of poverty. We teach them to read and write, but words cannot fill stomachs. They need to learn how to plant and harvest crops....

I cannot offer you money, position or fame. The first two you have. The last, from the place you now occupy, you will no doubt achieve.

These things I now ask you to give up. I offer you in their place - work - hard, hard work - the challenge of bringing people from degradation, poverty and waste to full manhood.

Booker T. Washington

On May 16, 1896, George W. Carver responded to Booker T. Washington:

My dear Sir,

I am just in receipt of yours of the 13th inst., and hasten to reply.

I am looking forward to a very busy, pleasant and profitable time at your college and shall be glad to cooperate with you in doing all I can through Christ who strengtheneth me to better the condition of our people.

Some months ago I read your stirring address delivered at Chicago and I said amen to all you said, furthermore you have the correct solution to the "race problem"....

Providence permitting, I will be there in Nov.

God bless you and your work,
Geo. W. Carver

In the fall of 1896, George W. Carver surprised the staff at Iowa State College by announcing his plans to give up his promising career and join the Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. The staff showed their appreciation by purchasing him a going away present, a microscope, which he used extensively throughout his career.

George assembled an Agricultural Department at Tuskegee, and would go out among the farmers to teach them good farming techniques such as crop rotation, fertilization and erosion prevention. He noticed that the soil was depleted due to years of repeated cotton growth and produced very poorly. Not too long after this, an insect called the boll weevil swept through the South destroying cotton crops and leaving farmers devastated.

George showed the farmers the benefits of planting legumes, such as peanuts, which replenish the soil with nitrogen. The farmers heeded his advice but soon had more peanuts than the market wanted, as peanuts were primarily used as horse feed.

American Quotations.txt

George went into his laboratory, determined to find more uses for the peanut so that there would be a bigger market for the southern farmers. He discovered over three hundred uses for the peanut, over one hundred eighteen for the sweet potato, over sixty for the pecan, as well as dozens more for the soybean, okra, cowpeas, wild plums, etc., including:

*cosmetics, face powder, lotion, shaving cream, cold cream, rubbing oil, talcum powder;

*salad oil, vinegar, synthetic tapioca and egg yolk, flour, instant coffee, sugar, chili sauce, buttermilk, cheese, mayonnaise, meal, meat tenderizer, milk flakes, worcestershire sauce;

*leather stains from mahogany to blue, paints, shoe polish, metal polish, printer's ink, non-toxic pigments and colors from which crayons were eventually created;

*adhesives, axle grease, bleach, creosote, fuel, briquettes, synthetic rubber, highway paving material, fertilizers.

*synthetic marble, wood filler, insulating board, linoleum, paper, rope, cordage, mats and carpet.

Carver was recognized by both black and white leaders, and in 1918 he was appointed to the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Joel Springarn, a white publisher and former chairman of the board of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, awarded Carver the Springarn Medal for Distinguished Service to Science. Carver received an honorary doctorate from Simpson College in 1928, and was made a member of the Royal Society of London, England.

Henry Ford became personal friends with Dr. Carver, being fascinated with his method of deriving rubber from milkweed. Mr. Ford visited him twice at Tuskegee Institute and tried many times to persuade Dr. Carver to join him in business. Carver declined, being committed to helping his people in the South. Mr. Ford built a replica of Dr. Carver's birthplace at his Dearborn Village, and built a school for children named George Washington Carver School.

George Washington Carver was visited at Tuskegee Institute by Vice-President Calvin Coolidge in 1923, and by President Franklin D. Roosevelt. He became a confidant and advisor to leaders and scientists from all over the world, ranging from Mahatma Gandhi to Thomas Edison. Edison offered him a $100,000-a-year position at Menlo Park, but Carver turned it down. Even Josef Stalin invited him to come Russia.

Dr. George W. Carver made medical contributions, including using a combination of oil derived from peanuts, called Penol, together with physical therapy to restore the use of atrophied limbs of Polio and infantile paralysis victims.

George Washington Carver died on January 5, 1943. In July of that year, President Franklin D. Roosevelt dedicated Carver's birthplace in Diamond, Missouri, as a National Monument. This was the first National Monument to someone other than a United States President. Congress designated the date of his death as George Washington Carver Day.

The U.S. Postal Service issued a stamp displaying his picture on January 5, 1948, and the U.S. Mint struck a fifty-cent coin with the images of George Washington Carver and Booker T. Washington.

In June 15, 1966, a nuclear submarine, 37th Fleet Ballistic Missile, was dedicated the U.S.S. George Washington Carver, with the motto "Strength through Knowledge."

In 1890, while a student at Simpson College, George W. Carver ended his letter to John and Helen Milholland:

American Quotations.txt

Nearly 12, please excuse me and write sooner than you did before. My best respects to all. I remain your humble servant of God. I am learning to trust and realize the blessed results from trusting in Him every day. I am glad to hear of your advancement spiritually and financially. I regard them also as especial blessings from God.

Sincerely yours,
Geo. W. Carver

On April 8, 1890, in a letter to John and Helen Milholland, George W. Carver wrote:

I am taking better care of myself than I have. I realize that God has a great work for me to do and consequently I must be very careful on my health. You will doubtless be surprised to learn that I am taking both vocal and instrumental music (piano) this term. I don't have to pay any direct money for any music, but pay it in paintings....

I am glad the outlook for the upbuilding of the kingdom of Christ is so good. We are having a great revival here. 40 seeking last night and 25 arose for prayers at the close of the service...

Shall be glad to hear from you soon.
Geo. W. Carver

On August 6, 1891, in his first letter to John and Helen Milholland after enrolling at Iowa State College in Ames, Iowa, George W. Carver wrote:

I as yet do not like it as well here as I do at Simpson because the helpful means for a Christian growth is not so good; but the Lord helping me I will do the best I can....

I am glad to hear that the work for Christ is progressing. Oh how I wish the people would awake up from their lethargy and come out soul and body for Christ.

I am so anxious to get out and be doing something. I can hardly wait for the time to come. The more my ideas develop, the more beautiful and grand seems the plan I have laid out to pursue, or rather the one God has destined for me.

It is really all I see in a successful life. And let us hope that in the mysterious ways of the Lord, he will bring about these things we all so much hope for. I wish it was so that we could assist each other in the work as there is such a sameness in it, and I seen by one of the late southern papers that one of their strongest men advocate a broader system of education, and lays down a plan very much like the one I have but not as broad.

And the more I study and pray over it, the more I am convinced it is the right course to pursue....

Let us pray that the Lord will completely guide us in all things, and that we may gladly be led by Him....

My hope is still keeping without becoming stale either.

George

On October 15, 1894, George W. Carver wrote to John and Helen Milholland from Iowa State College:

American Quotations.txt

My dear friends,

I am glad to know that you are all well and that the Lord is blessing you so unsparingly. Beg pardon for finishing with a pencil but my pen has run dry and I have no ink with which to fill it. The Lord is wonderfully blessing me and has for these many years. I cannot begin to tell you all I presume you know. I had some paintings at the Cedar Rapids Art exhibit, was there myself and had some work selected and sent to The World's Fair, was also sent to Lake Geneva twice to the Y. M. C. A as a representative from our college.

And the many good things the Lord has entrusted to my care are too numerous to mention here.

The last but not least, I have been elected Assistant Station botanist. I intend to take a post graduate course here, which will take two years. One year of residence work and one nonresidence work. I hope to do my nonresidence work next year and in the meantime take a course at the Chicago academy of arts and Moody Institute. I am saving all the pennies I can for the purpose and am praying a great deal. I believe more and more in prayer all the time...

Geo. W. Carver

In the spring of 1896, George W. Carver received a letter from Booker T. Washington, president of the Tuskegee Institute in Alabama. Booker T. Washington wrote:

Tuskegee Institute seeks to provide education - a means for survival to those who attend. Our students are poor, often starving. They travel miles of torn roads, across years of poverty. We teach them to read and write, but words cannot fill stomachs. They need to learn how to plant and harvest crops...

I cannot offer you money, position or fame. The first two you have. The last, from the place you now occupy, you will no doubt achieve.

These things I now ask you to give up. I offer you in their place - work - hard, hard work - the challenge of bringing people from degradation, poverty and waste to full manhood.

Booker T. Washington

On May 16, 1896, George W. Carver responded to Booker T. Washington:

My dear Sir,

I am just in receipt of yours of the 13th inst., and hasten to reply.

I am looking forward to a very busy, pleasant and profitable time at your college and shall be glad to cooperate with you in doing all I can through Christ who strengtheneth me to better the condition of our people.

Some months ago I read your stirring address delivered at Chicago and I said amen to all you said, furthermore you have the correct solution to the "race problem"....

Providence permitting, I will be there in Nov. God bless you and your work,
Geo. W. Carver

In 1897, two of his former professors at the Iowa State College of Agriculture in Ames, Iowa, asked him to pen a brief sketch on his life. George Washington Carver replied:

As nearly as I can trace my history I was about 2 weeks old when the war closed. My parents were both slaves. Father was killed shortly after my birth while hauling wood to town on an ox wagon.

I had 3 sisters and one brother. Two sisters and my brother I know to be dead only as history tells me. Yet I do not doubt it as they are buried in the family burying ground.

My sister, mother and myself were kidnapped, and sold in Arkansas and there are now so many conflicting reports concerning them I dare not say if they are dead or alive. Mr. Carver the gentlemen who owned my mother sent a man for us, but only I was brought back, nearly dead with whooping cough with the report that mother & sister was dead, although some say they saw them afterwards going north with the soldiers.

My home was near Neosho Newton Co. Missouri where I remained until I was about 9 years old. My body was very feeble and it was a constant warfare between life and death to see who would gain the mastery----

From a child I had an inordinate desire for knowledge, and especially music, painting, flowers, and the sciences, Algebra being one of my favorite studies.

Day after day I spent in the woods alone in order to collect my floral beauties and put them in my little garden I had hidden in brush not far from the house, as it was considered foolishness in that neighborhood to waste time on flowers.

And many are the tears I have shed because I would break the roots or flowers off some of my pets while removing them from the ground, and strange to say all sorts of vegetation succeeded to thrive under my touch until I was styled the plant doctor, and plants from all over the county would be brought to me for treatment. At this time I had never heard of botany and could scarcely read.

Rocks had an equal fascination for me and many are the basketful that I have been compelled to remove from the outside chimney corner of that old log house, with the injunction to throw them down hill. I obeyed but picked up the choicest ones and hid them in another place, and somehow that same chimney corner would, in a few days or weeks be running over again to suffer the same fate. I have some of the specimens in my collection now and consider them the choicest of the lot. Mr. and Mrs. Carver were very kind to me and I thank them so much for my home training. They encouraged me to secure knowledge helping me all they could, but this was quite limited. As we lived in the country no colored schools were available so I was permitted to go 8 miles to a school at town (Neosho). This simply sharpened my appetite for more knowledge. I managed to secure all my meager wardrobe from my home and when they heard from me I was cooking for a wealthy family in Ft Scott Kans. for my board, cloths and school privileges.

Of course they were indignant and sent for me to come home at once, to die, as the family doctor had told them I would never live to see 21 years of age. I trusted God and pressed on (I had been a Christian since about 8 years old.) Sunshine and shadow were profusely intermingled, such as naturally befall a defenseless orphan by those who wish to prey upon them.

My health began improving and I remained here for two years. From here to Oleta Kans. to school. From there to Paola Normal School, from there to Minneapolis Kans. where I remained in school about 7 years finishing the high school, and in addition some Latin and Greek. From here to Kans. City entered a business college of short hand and typewriting. I was here to have a position in the Union telegraph Office as stenographer & typewriter, but the thirst for knowledge gained the mastery and I sought to enter Highland College at Highland Kans., but was refused on account of my color.

I went from here to Western part of Kans. where I saw the subject of my famous Yucca & cactus painting that went to the Worlds Fair. I drifted from here to Winterset Iowa, began as head cook in a large hotel. Many thanks here for the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Dr. Milholland, who insisted upon me going to an Art School, and choose Simpson College for me.

The opening of school found me at Simpson attempting to run a laundry for my support and batching to economize. For quite one month I lived on prayer and beef suet and corn meal. Modesty prevented me telling my condition to strangers.

The news soon spread that I did laundry work and really needed it, so from that time on favors not only rained but poured upon me. I cannot speak too highly of the faculty, students and in fact the town generally. They all seemed to take pride in seeing if he or she might not do more for me than some one else.

But I wish to especially mention the names of Miss Etta M. Budd (my art teacher, Mrs. W.A. Liston & family, and Rev. A.D. Field & family. Aside from their substantial help at Simpson, were the means of my attendance at Ames. Please fix this to suit)

I think you know my career at Ames and will fix it better than I. I will simply mention a few things.

I received the prize offered for the best herbarium in cryptogamy. I would like to have said more about you Mrs. Liston and Miss Budd but feared you would not put it in about yourself, and I did not want one without all.

I received a letter from Mrs. Liston and she gave me an idea that it was not to be a book or anything of the kind this is only a fragmentary list. I knit, crochet, and made all my hose mittens etc. while I was in school.

If this is not sufficient please let me know, and if it ever comes out in print I would like to see it.

God bless you all.

Geo. W. Carver

On September 2, 1901, George W. Carver wrote again to John and Helen Milholland:

I think of you often and shall never forget what you were to my life, how much real help and inspiration you gave me. You, of course, will never know how much you done for a poor colored boy who was drifting here and there as a ship without a rudder. You helped to start me aright and what the Lord has in his kindness and wisdom permitted me to accomplish is due in a very great measure to your real genuine Christian spirits. How I wish the world was full of such people. What a different world it would be....

May God continue to bless and keep you.
Yours very gratefully,
Geo. W. Carver

On November 28, 1902, George W. Carver wrote to the President of Tuskegee Institute, Booker T. Washington, regarding an unfortunate incident that resulted from the appearance of a white photographer, Miss Frances B. Johnston, who was traveling the south with a black teacher, Nelson E. Henry, to gather information on black schools:

Dear Mr. Washington,

I have just returned from a trip to Ramer, Alabama, where Mr. Henry is located, and I feel that you ought to know the exact condition there as it is the most distressing of any that I have ever seen in any place. In fact, I had the most frightful experience of my life there and for one day and night it was a very serious question indeed as to whether I would return to Tuskegee alive or not as the people were thoroughly bent upon bloodshed.

In all probability they have broken up the school. Mr. Henry was obliged to leave Ramer between the suns and the other teacher became so frightened that she left also.

The occasion of the disturbance was Miss Johnston, who went down on the same train that carried me down. The white people evidently knew that she was coming. The train was late in getting there but a number of people had gathered at the station to see what would happen.

I took Miss Johnston's valise and put it in the buggy for her. Mr. Henry drove her to his house and put out her valise and started to the hotel, then he was met by parties and after a few words was shot at three times.

Of course, he ran and got out of the way and Miss Johnston came to the house where I was. I got out at once and succeeded in getting her to the next station where she took the train the next morning.

The next day everything was in a state of turbulence and a mob had been formed to locate Mr. Henry and deal with him. They did not pay a great deal of attention to me as I kept out of the way as much as possible, but it was one of the worst situations that I have ever been in.

As things are now, the school is broken up and there seems to be no way of settling the difficulty. They say that what they want is to get hold of Mr. Henry and beat him nearly to death. I spoke to the people on Wednesday and they were-of course-very much disturbed.

I quieted them down as much as I could-which was very little. I had to walk nearly all night Tuesday night to keep out of their reach. Wednesday night I stayed four miles from the place and took the train six miles from Ramer next morning.

On Wednesday the place was patrolled by a white man walking up and down in front of the school house armed with a shot gun. I went down on Wednesday morning to see just what the situation was and I saw twelve horses saddled and tied to the fence of one of the chief promoters.

He saw me coming down the railroad and at once mounted his horse and came down to meet me. I stopped aside to examine some plants - just to see what he would do - and he came up and eyed me closely and spoke rather politely. He evidently thought I was Mr. Henry.

One of the gentlemen went down town that night to see what was being done and found that a mob was being made up for the night to take Mr. Henry. I succeeded in getting word to Mr. Henry to flee for his life, which he did. He is now in Montgomery.

Mr. Henry gone, they then telephoned over to the next station to see if Miss Johnston took the train the next morning. They wanted to know who took her to the train, and everything in detail.

A telegram was handed to a gentleman, which was evidently a fake - at least appeared so. It was purported to have come for Mr. Henry to induce him to come to the station. It was simply to find out where he was. I have never seen people so enraged.

Mr. Henry was doing a great work there and it grieves me to know that he must give it up. Miss Johnston was thoroughly grieved. I might say that she is the pluckiest woman I ever saw. She was not afraid for herself but shed bitter tears for Mr. Henry and for the school which is in all probability broken up.

They were preparing to have a splendid exhibition. In fact, the material was there and promised to be one of the best exhibitions that I have had the privilege of attending. The exhibits were large and fine and the people seemed very much encouraged.

Now as to the outcome, it is impossible to say. It stands just as I have related it to you. Mrs. Washington and I have talked the matter over here and we think it wise to say just as little as possible about it here. The people seem to be intensely bitter against any one who comes from Tuskegee.

Trusting you are quite well and that you had a pleasant Thanksgiving, I beg to remain,
Yours most sincerely,
G. W. Carver

On May 28, 1907, George W. Carver wrote to Booker T. Washington regarding a Bible class he had begun at Tuskegee:

For your information only.

Mr. B. T. Washington,

About three months ago 6 or 7 persons met in my office one evening and organized a Bible class, and asked me to teach it. I consented to start them off.

Their idea was to put in the 20 or 25 minutes on Sunday evenings which intervene between supper and chapel service.

We began at the first of the Bible and attempted to explain the Creation story in the light of natural and revealed religion and geological truths. Maps, charts plants and geological specimens were used to illustrate the work.

We have had an average attendance of 80 and often as high as 114.

Thought these facts would help you in speaking of the religious life of the school. Very truly,
G. W. Carver

On December 23, 1914, George W. Carver wrote to John and Helen Milholland, reporting on a car accident he was in and commented on World War that was raging in Europe:

My dear friends,

I am glad to know that all are well, and am especially thankful that the good Lord has spared me to write to you. This summer I came near losing my life, and I am yet unable to see how I could pass through such an ordeal and yet live. A large auto truck turned with several of us in it. One man was badly mashed up so much that he is yet after 7 months unable to walk. I was pinned down under the truck, badly bruised and cut up but no bones broken.

Every time I pick up a paper, I think of what General Sherman said war was. Words fail to describe the horror and suffering.

It is making it very hard here for us. Not much money is coming in and how we will get along God only knows.

I have just learned that 25 girls are nearly barefooted and have not sufficient clothes to keep them decent or warm. Many boys are almost as bad, so we are going to do what we can for them...

Sincerely your friend,
Geo. W. Carver

In the summer of 1920, the Young Men's Christian Association of Blue Ridge, North Carolina, invited Professor Carver to speak at their summer school for the southern states. Dr. Willis D. Weatherford, President of Blue Ridge, introduced him as the speaker. With his high voice surprising the audience, Professor Carver exclaimed humorously:

I always look forward to introductions as opportunities to learn something about myself....

He continued:

Years ago I went into my laboratory and said, "Dear Mr. Creator, please tell me what the universe was made for?"

The Great Creator answered, "You want to know too much for that little mind of yours. Ask for something more your size, little man."

Then I asked, "Please, Mr. Creator, tell me what man was made for."

Again the Great Creator replied, "You are still asking too much. Cut down on the extent and improve the intent."

So then I asked, "Please, Mr. Creator, will you tell me why the peanut was made?"

"That's better, but even then it's infinite. What do you want to know about the peanut?"

"Mr. Creator, can I make milk out of the peanut?"

"What kind of milk do you want? Good Jersey milk or just plain boarding house milk?"

"Good Jersey milk."

And then the Great Creator taught me to take the peanut apart and put it together again. And out of the process have come forth all these products!

Among the numerous products displayed was a bottle of good Jersey milk. (Three-and-a-half ounces of peanuts produced one pint of rich milk or one quart of boardinghouse blue john!)

In January 21, 1921, at the request of the United Peanut Growers Association, George Washington Carver addressed the U. S. House Ways and Means Committee in Washington, D. C., regarding a proposed tariff on imported peanuts. George expounded the many potential uses of the peanut to improve the economy of the South. Initially given only ten minutes to speak, the committee became so enthralled that the Chairman said, "Go ahead Brother. Your time is unlimited."

George Washington Carver spoke for one hour and forty-five minutes. In his explanation of the many foods products derived from the peanut, Carver stated:

If you go to the first chapter of Genesis, we can interpret very clearly, I think, what God intended when he said "Behold, I have given you ever herb that bears seed. To you it shall be meat." This is what He means about it. It shall be meat. There is everything there to strengthen and nourish and keep the body alive and healthy.

At the end of his address, the Chairman of the Committee asked:

"Dr. Carver, how did you learn all of these things?"

Carver answered:

"From an old book"

"What book?" asked the Chairman.

Carver replied, "The Bible."

The Chairman inquired, "Does the Bible tell about peanuts?"

"No, Sir" Dr. Carver replied, "But it tells about the God who made the peanut. I asked Him to show me what to do with the peanut, and He did."

On June 11, 1921, George W. Carver wrote to his old professor from Iowa State College, Dr. Louis H. Pammel, who had visited him at Tuskegee:

Everyone wanted to hear you speak. I really wanted you to see the suit of clothes, hat, gloves, underwear, you helped fool me down town and bought for me, preparatory to going to Cedar Rapids to the Art exhibit with some of my pictures....

Of course my microscope is just as good as new. I was glad to see that God had dealt so kindly with you, by giving you increased bodily vigor, great mental attainments, etc.

When you were going out of your way to help a poor insignificant black boy, you were giving many "cups of cold water" in His name. The memory of yourself, Mrs. Pammel and the children are more dear to me than words can express. They served as lamps unto my feet and lights along my pathway...

American Quotations.txt
Sincerely and gratefully yours,
G. W. Carver

On January 9, 1922, George W. Carver wrote a thank you note to one of his students who had given him a Christmas present:

Mr. L. Robinson,
I wish to express through you to each member of the Senior class my deep appreciation for the fountain pen you so kindly and thoughtfully gave me Christmas. This gift, like all the others, is characterized by simplicity and thoughtfulness, which I hope each member will make the slogan of their lives.

As your father, it is needless for me to keep saying, I hope, except for emphasis, that each one of my children will rise to the full height of your possibilities, which means the possession of these eight cardinal virtues which constitutes a lady or gentleman.

- 1st. Be clean both inside and outside.
- 2nd. Who neither looks up to the rich or down on the poor.
- 3rd. Who loses, if needs be, without squealing.
- 4th. Who wins without bragging.
- 5th. Who is always considerate of women, children and old people.
- 6th. Who is too brave to lie.
- 7th. Who is too generous to cheat.
- 8th. Who takes his share of the world and lets other people have theirs.

May God help you to carry out these eight cardinal virtues and peace and prosperity be yours through life.

Lovingly yours,
G. W. Carver

In 1922, Mrs. Helen Milholland asked George W. Carver to write an outline of his life, which he entitled A Brief Sketch of My Life:

I was born in Diamond Grove, Mo., about the close of the great Civil War, in a little one-roomed log shanty, on the home of Mr. Moses Carver, a German by birth and the owner of my mother, my father being the property of Mr. Grant, who owned the adjoining plantation. I am told that my father was killed while hauling wood with an oxen team. In some way he fell from the load, under the wagon, both wheels passing over him.

At the close of the war the Ku Klux Klan was at its height in that section of Missouri. My mother was stolen with myself, a wee babe in her arms. My brother James was grabbed and spirited away to the woods by Mr. Carver. He tried to get me, but could not. They carried my mother and myself down into Arkansas, and sold my mother. At that time I was nearly dead with the whooping cough that I had caught on the way. I was so very frail and sick that they thought of course that I would die within a few days. Mr. Carver immediately sent a very fine race horse and some money to purchase us back. The man (Bently by name) returned with the money and myself, having given the horse for me. The horse was valued at $300. Every effort was made to find my mother, but to no avail.

In the meantime my only two sisters died and were buried. My bother James and I grew up together, sharing each other's sorrows on the splendid farm owned by Mr. Carver. When just a mere tot in short dresses my very soul thirsted for an education. I literally lived in the woods. I wanted to know every strange stone, flower, insect, bird, or beast. No one could tell me.

My only book was an old Webster's Elementary Spelling Book. I would seek the answer here without satisfaction. I almost knew that book by heart. At the age of 19 years my brother left the old home for Fayetteville, Arkansas. Shortly after, at the age of 10 years, I left for Neosho, a little town just 8 miles from our farm, where I could go to school. Mr. and Mrs. Carver were perfectly willing for us to go where we could be educated the same as white children. I remained here about two years, got an opportunity to go to Fort Scott, Kansas with a family. They drove through the country.

Every year I went to school, supporting myself by cooking and doing all kinds of house work in private families. At the age of nineteen years I went back to see my brother and Mr. and Mrs. Carver. I had not improved much in stature, as I rode on a half-fare ticket. The conductor thought I was rather small to be traveling alone. I spent the summer here, and returned to Minneapolis, Kansas, where I finished my high school work.

The sad news reached me here that James, my only brother, had died with small pox. Being conscious as never before that I was left alone, I trusted God and pushed ahead. In working for others I had learned the minutia of laundering. I had opened a laundry for myself; got all I could do.

After finishing high school here I made application to enter a certain College in Iowa. I was admitted, went but when the President saw I was colored he would not receive me. I had spent nearly all of my money, and had to open a laundry here. I was liberally patroned by the students. I remained here until spring and went to Winterset, Iowa, as first cook in a large hotel.

One evening I went to a white church, and set in the rear of the house. The next day a handsome man called for me at the hotel and said his wife wanted to see me. When I reached the splendid residence I was astonished to recognize her as the prima dona in the choir. I was most astonished when she told me that my fine voice had attracted her. I had to sing quite a number of pieces for her and agreed to come to her house at least once a week; and from that time till now Mr. and Mrs. Milholland have been my warmest and most helpful friends.

I cooked at this hotel for some time, then opened a laundry for myself. I ran this laundry for one year. This same Mr. and Mrs. Milholland encouraged me to go to college. It was her custom to have me come at the day and rehearse to her the doings of the day. She would invariably laugh after such a recital and say, "Whoever heard of any one person doing half so many things."

She encouraged me to sing and paint, for which arts I had passionate fondness. In one years time I had saved sufficient money to take me to Simpson College, at Indianola, Iowa where I took art, music and college work. I opened a laundry here for my support. After all my matriculation fees had been paid I had 10 c worth of corn meal, and the 5 c I spent for beef suet. I lived on these two things one whole week--it took that long for the people to learn that I wanted clothes to wash. After that week I had many friends and plenty of work.

I would never allow anyone to give me money, no difference how badly I needed it. I wanted literally to earn my living. I remained here for three years; then entered the Iowa State College, at Ames, Iowa, where I pursued my Agricultural work, taking two degrees, Bachelor and Master.

After finishing my Bachelor's degree I was elected a member of the faculty, and given charge of the greenhouse, bacteriological laboratory, and the laboratory work in systematic botany.

Mr. Washington said he needed a man of my training. I accepted and came to Tuskegee nearly 27 years ago, and have been here ever since.

On May 5, 1922, George W. Carver wrote to Professor Louis H. Pammel :

My dear Dr. Pammel,

In response to your queries of recent date, I beg to reply as follows:

1st. Born at Diamond Grove, Mo., just as freedom was declared, in a little one roomed log shanty on my master, Moses Carver's farm.

2nd. My education was picked up here and there. Mr. and Mrs. Carver taught me to read, spell and write just a little. I went to Neosho, Mo., public school for about nine months, then to Fort Scott town school, for about the same length of time. From there, I went to Olathe, Kans., where I attended the town public school for about two years.

Leaving there, I went to Minneapolis, Kansas, where I nearly finished my high school work. From here, I went to Indianola, Iowa, to Simpson College, where I took the College work and specialized in art and music.

From here I went to Ames, Iowa, to take a course in Agriculture, persuaded to do so by my art teacher, Miss Etta M. Budd, to whom I am greatly indebted for whatever measure of success that has come to me.

Miss Budd helped me in whatever way she could; often going far out of her way to encourage and see that I had such things as I needed. During my six years in College, her interest in me never waned.

3rd. I do not now recall the exact date.

4th. I did odd jobs of all kinds for a number of the professors such as cutting wood, making gardens, working in the fields, helping clean house, taking care of the green house and the chemical, botanical and bacteriological laboratories.

5th. Came to Tuskegee Institute, and took charge of the Agricultural Department here; kept it about fifteen years, then was given charge of the Agricultural Research work. I have kept this work in connection with the Experiment Station ever since.

6th. I have no words to adequately express my impressions of dear old I. S. C. All I am and all I hope to be, I own in a very large measure to this blessed institution.

7th. "Beardshear", was one of the biggest and best hearted men I have ever known and it was so pleasant and uplifting to come in contact with him.

"Wilson", the name Hon. James Wilson is sacred to me. He was one of the finest teachers that it has ever been my privilege to listen to. He taught a Sunday School class in which every student would have enrolled, if they had been allowed.

The class grew so large that he conceived a very unique plan to divide it, so he graduated some twenty or twenty-five of us who had been with him the longest... I happened to be one of the ones graduated. We all left him sad and reluctantly. We gave him to understand, in no uncertain terms, that we did not like it at all and out of our love for him, we went, but in less than two months we were all back again.

Our displeasure grieved him very much and he said to me, many times that he would never try to divide his class again, no matter how large it got.

Being a colored boy, and the crowded condition of the school, made it rather embarrassing for some, and it made the question of a room rather puzzling. Prof. Wilson said, as soon as he heard it, "Send him to me, I have a room," and he gave me his office and was very happy in doing so.

"Budd" was the father of Miss Etta M. Budd, heretofore mentioned, and my professor of Horticulture and a man much on the order of Prof. Wilson; kind, considerate, loving and loveable; a great teacher, and he made of his students his personal friends. Everybody loved Prof. Budd....

Miss Roberts was a teacher of rare ability. Her chief delight seemed to be that of helping the backward student. And many, many are the men and women today who rise up and call her blessed, for the help she gave them in more ways than one. I take especial delight in registering as one of that number....

Prof. H. Wallace is now Hon. Secretary of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. The heights to which he has risen testifies more strongly than any words of mine can. No one missed Prof. Wallace's class, if they could help it. He was a born teacher, a man too big in heart, mind and soul to be little in any particular. He, like all of my teachers, will never know how much he enthused and inspired me, as a student.

On September 3, 1922, George W. Carver wrote to Mrs. Helen Milholland:

My dear Mrs. Milholland,

How glad I was to get your card... I wonder if you have seen the little book entitled Handicapped Winners written by Miss Sara Estelle Haskin, Educational Secy. of the Board of Missions, Woman's work, M.E. South. It is written for their Schools, with the hope that it will bring about a better feeling for the negro. It was published by their publishing house... It has the "Peanut Wizard" in it. Your name appears in it also...

God is blessing me more and more every day it seems.

American Quotations.txt

I hardly think you would know me now I am quite gray, but pretty active yet.
Sincerely and gratefully yours,
Geo. W. Carver

On September 17, 1922, George W. Carver wrote again to Mrs. Helen Milholland, complimenting the draft of a biography she was publishing on him:

My dear Mrs. Milholland,
How glad I was to get your good letter it seems so refreshing to hear from you....
No the book does not even approach yours and I believe God in some way will provide a way for yours to come out, I am anxious for you to see this little book because it is to be put into their schools, for the information of the white boys and girls down here who seem to know so little about many types of colored people....

Sincerely yours,
Geo. W. Carver

George W. Carver developed a lifelong friendship with James T. Hardwick from the Virginia Polytechnic Institute. James' brother, Harry Hardwick, had become the head football coach of the U.S. Naval Academy. In a conversation with James T. Hardwick, 1923, George Washington Carver stated:

In my work I meet many young people who are seeking truth. God has given me some knowledge. When they let me, I try to pass it on to my boys.

A close friend of George Carver from Iowa State College was Professor Henry C. Wallace, who later became President Warren G. Harding's Secretary of Agriculture. His son, Henry A. Wallace, later studied under Carver at Iowa State, going on numerous nature hikes. Henry A. Wallace succeeded his father as U.S. Secretary of Agriculture and later served as Vice-President under Franklin D. Roosevelt. He described Carver as the "kindest, most patient teacher I ever knew."

On January 6, 1924, George W. Carver wrote to his former Professor, U.S. Secretary of Agriculture Henry C. Wallace:

I had been thinking of you more than usual here of late and "How God" had called you to perform the great service to humanity that you are now rendering.

I pray that He may continue to give you the guiding light that has attended your administration up to date in such a pronounced way.

Of course I never can repay you for being so kind, and indulgent to a poor little wayward black boy when in school. I wish that God in some way would show you how I appreciate it, and reward you accordingly....

Geo. W. Carver

On May 21, 1924, George W. Carver wrote to Mr. James T. Hardwick:

My very dear friend, Mr. Hardwick,
My friend, God has indeed been good to me and is yet opening up wonders and allowing me to peep in as it were. I do love the things God has created, both animate and inanimate. As He speaks aloud through both, God willing, at Blue Ridge we will let Him talk to some of us.

You do me too much credit. I am not so good. I am just trying through Christ, to be a better man each day. Your spirit helps me so much. It is what my very soul has thirsted for all these years, a spirit that God likewise was developing to perform a great service to humanity, such as he is developing in you....

My "horoscope" tells me that God is yet going to do some thing for you that will astonish you....

Sincerely yours,
Geo. W. Carver

On July 10, 1924, George W. Carver wrote to Mr. James T. Hardwick of Virginia:

Fri. morning. Dear Friend, I feel your loving spirit more than ever this morning. Thank God I feel the growth of the spirit within you.

My Beloved Friend, Mr. Hardwick:

What a joy always comes to me when I recognized your handwriting in the mail. I always say "bless his heart" meaning a letter from my beloved friend who is more dear to me than any words can express.

I love you and shall continue to do so for the Christ that is in you, both expressed and unexpressed. I love you also because Christ loves you and longs for you to come into the fullness of his glory.

Your words, my friend, are too strong. There is no danger of your being a hypocrite. You are struggling. You have not lost sight of self yet, but Thank God, you will.

As soon as you begin to read the great and loving God out of all forms of existence He has created, both animate and inanimate, then you will be able to converse with Him, anywhere, everywhere, and at all times. Oh, what a fullness of joy will come to you. My dear friend, get the significance. God is speaking. "Look unto the hills from whence cometh thy help. Yes, go to the mountains if God so wills it."

Get ready to come down here for a week or so, should God ask you to do so.

Somehow God seems to say to me that this may be so.

For months this vision from times to time comes to me. I think God wants you to begin reading Nature of your own accord first, then when you come here you will learn to interpret it with great rapidity. It may not be here. I may be thrown with you somewhere. Whatever the method is you must learn. Let us pray for guidance.

I have had eight letters from the boys already. Have heard from everyone in the cottage where I stayed. Two of them are coming down soon, they say.

Two have sent their pictures and others are coming. You and those other boys are all wrong. It is not me. I love you because I love Christ in you and whenever you reveal it I cannot help but love it. I loved those boys because Christ was there. As for you, my friend, you belong to me. You are mine. God gave you to me last year. I picked you out of the audience. If I remember correctly while speaking, those great spiritual windows (the eyes) of yours seemed to say, this is the person whom I have chosen to be a great help to you. You need him and maybe you can be of a little service to him.

From that very time until now I have loved you so dearly.

God cannot use you as He wishes until you come into the fullness of his Glory.

Don't get alarmed, friend, when doubts creep in. That is Old Satan. Pray, pray, pray. Neither be cast down or afraid if perchance you seem to wander from the path. This is sure to come to you if you trust too much in self.

Yes, my friend, you are going to grow. Your letters are always such a comfort to me. Do not get away somewhere and fail to write me regularly. You are now a part of my life and I long for your letters. Well, we both prayed that God would bless the message He sent me to deliver. He really seemed to bless it. At some of the personal interviews the boys wept. I have held my head and wept many times when I read so many of the letters they have written to me.

I fall, my friend, so far short of yours and their rating. God has already told you to go to the Mountains and commune with Him. Why not carry it out without He gives you a new message.

Oh, my friend, I am praying that God will come in and rid you entirely of self so you can go out after souls right, or rather have souls to seek the Christ in you. This is my prayer for you always.

Geo. W. Carver

George Washington Carver named his Laboratory God's Little Workshop, and credited Divine inspiration for giving him the ideas of how to perform his experiments. Though he never took any scientific textbooks into his laboratory, he was diligent to study as many scientific books as possible.

On November 19, 1924, having accepted the invitation of the Women's Board of Domestic Missions to speak in New York City's Marble Collegiate Church, Dr. Carver declared before the 500 people assembled:

God is going to reveal to us things He never revealed before if we put our hands in His. No books ever go into my laboratory. The thing I am to do and the way of doing it are revealed to me. I never have to grope for methods. The method is revealed to me the moment I am inspired to create something new. Without God to draw aside the curtain I would be helpless.

He would lock the door behind him when he went into his laboratory, as he confided:

Only alone can I draw close enough to God to discover His secrets.

On November 24, 1924, George W. Carver wrote the editor of the New York Times, correcting an editorial they ran entitled "Men of Science Never Talk that Way," in which they attempted to discredit Carver, his race and Tuskegee Institute:

My dear Sir,
I have read with much interest your editorial pertaining to myself in the issue of November 20th.

I regret exceedingly that such a gross misunderstanding should arise as to what was meant by "Divine inspiration." Inspiration is never at variance with information; in fact, the more information one has, the greater will be the inspiration.

Paul, the great Scholar, says, Second Timothy 2: 15, "Study to show thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

Again he says in Galatians 1: 12, "For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ."

Many, many other equally strong passages could be cited, but these two are sufficient to form a base around which to cluster my remarks. In the first verse, I have followed and am yet following the first word of study.

I am a graduate of the Iowa State College of Agriculture and Mechanical Arts, located at Ames, Iowa, taking two degrees in Scientific Agriculture. Did considerable work in Simpson College, Indiana, along the lines of Art, Literature and Music.

In Chemistry, the following persons have been inspiration and guide for study: Justin Von Liebig, Dr. Leroy J. Blinn, Dr. Ira Ramsen, Drs. L. L. De Moninck, E. Dietz, Robert Mallet, William G. Valentin, J. Meritt Matthews, Edwin E. Slosson, M. Luckiesh, Harrison B. Howe, Charles Whiting Baker, Helen Abbott, Michael, Mad. Currie, Geo. J. Brush, Charles F. Chandler, G. Dragendorff, Frederick Hoffman, Josef Benson, Arthur C. Wright, M. W. O'Brine, Lucien Geschwind, Stillman, Wiley, Dana, Richards & Woodman, Harry Snyder, Coleman and Addyman, Meade Ostwald, Warrington, Winslow, and a number of others, all of which are in my own library with but a few exceptions. In Botany, Loudon, Wood, Coulter, Stevens, Knight, Bailey, De Candolle, Pammel, Bessey, Chapman, Gray, Goodale, Youkmans, Myers, Britton and Brown, Small, and others. These books are also in my library. Dietaries, Henry, Richards, Mrs. Potter Palmer, Miles, Wing, Fletcher Berry, Kellogg, Nilson, and others.

In addition to the above, I receive the leading scientific publications. I thoroughly understand that there are scientists to whom the world is merely the result of chemical forces or material electrons. I do not belong to this class. I fully agree with the Rt. Rev. Irving Peake Johnson, D. D., bishop of Colorado in a little pamphlet entitled "Religion and the Supernatural." It is published and distributed by the Trinity Parish of your own city. I defy any one who has an open mind to read this leaflet through and then deny there is such a thing as Divine inspiration.

In evolving new creations, I am wondering of what value a book would be to the creator if he is not a master of analytical work, both qualitative and quantitative. I can see readily his need for the book from which to get his analytical methods. The master analyst needs no book; he is at liberty to take apart and put together substances, compatible or noncompatible to suit his own particular taste or fancy.

While in your beautiful city, I was struck with the large number of Taros and Yautias displayed in many of your markets; they are edible roots imported to this country largely from Trinidad, Puerto Rico, China, Dutch Guiana and Peru. Just as soon as I saw these luscious roots, I marveled at the wonderful possibilities for their expansion. Dozens of things came to me while standing there looking at them. I would follow the same or similar lines I have pursued in developing products from the white potato. I know of no one who has ever worked with these roots in this way. I know of no book from which I can get this information, yet I will have no trouble in doing it.

If this is not inspiration and information from a source greater than myself, or greater than any one has wrought up to the present time, kindly tell me what it is.

"And ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." John 8:32.

Science is simply the truth about anything.

Yours very truly,
Geo. W. Carver

On January 15, 1925, George W. Carver wrote to the Rev. Lyman Ward, who was the founder of an industrial school in Camp Hill, Alabama:

My dear Bro. Ward,

Many, many thanks for your letter of Jan. 4th. How it lifted up my very soul, and made me to feel that after all God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform. I did indeed feel very badly for a while, not that the cynical criticism was directed at me, but rather at the religion of Jesus Christ. Dear Bro. I know that my Redeemer liveth.

I believe through the providence of the Almighty it was a good thing. Since the criticism was made I have had dozens of books, papers, periodicals, magazines, personal letters from individuals in all walks of life. Copies of letters to the editor of the Times are bearing me out in my assertion.

One of the prettiest little books comes from Ex. Govt. Osborne of Mich. His thesis on Divine Concord and so many, many dear letters like yours.

I cannot think of filling 1/5 of the applications that are coming in for talks.

You may be interested to know that the greater part of my work now is among white colleges. I leave this week for N.C. where I will speak at the state univ. state college and two or three other colleges.

Pray for me please that every thing said and done will be to His glory.

I am not interested in science or any thing else that leaves God out of it.

Most sincerely your,
Geo. W. Carver

On March 24, 1925, George W. Carver wrote to Robert Johnson, an employee of Chesley Enterprises of Ontario:

My dear Brother Johnson,

How very interesting your letter is. I quite agree with you if God did not prompt your letters, you could not write those that really touch the heart as those of yours do.

Of course I can not write such soul-stirring letters as yours, but I will do the best I can. I am so glad you like my motto. I try to live in that way and the Lord has, and is yet, blessing me so abundantly. Nothing could be more beautiful than your motto Others. Living for others is really the Christ life after all. Oh, the satisfaction, happiness and joy one gets out of it.

I am so interested in the way you manage your saving account. God does indeed arrange it so that it never is quite depleted, unless there is some great emergency, then some soon comes in.

Brother Johnson, I expect to stick to the path, I have no notion of wavering, regardless of how some may sneer. I know that my redeemer lives. Thank God I love humanity; complexion doesn't interest me one single bit. I am not rich in this world's goods, but thank God, like yourself, I have enough to live comfortably.

I have the assurance that God will take care of me. He blesses me with the ability to earn a living, and gives me wisdom and understanding enough to lay a little by from time to time for the proverbial "rainy day."

No, I am not for sale. God has given me what He has in trust to make of it a contribution to the world far greater than money can for myself. Yes my friend, I think I understood you. My letter to you probably was not as clear as it should have been.

I believe that science (truth) if it will take what you have had revealed to you. Search and continue to search. I am sure they will find a world of truth in it.

Less than 150 miles from where I live is one of the unexplained wonders of the country in what is known a "Blue Spring." The pool is about fifty feet in diameter, nearly round. One way you look at it, the water is as blue as indigo. Another way it is as clear as crystal, and you can see down, down, down. In the center is a spot fully four feet in diameter that boils up just as if a huge fire was under it; the water is not hot, not even warmer than other rivers or branch water; in fact, it is a little cooler than the average water. Hundreds of people far and near have examined it.

Large sums of money have been offered to any one who would dive down and find out where the water comes from. Some have tried it so they say, and have gone down a hundred feet or more and had to stop because the water threw them back with its force. No one knows where the water comes from. No difference how much it rains or how dry it gets, this little pool of boiling water is not affected in the least.

Your scripture references, I believe, can well be applied to this case. What I meant was that on the ocean waters journey back to fresh water again, it loses its salt some where, and I believe, in fact, it looks feasible to me that this salt water might travel some distance from the ocean before depositing its salt. If the vein was tapped after the salt had been deposited, a salt mine of dry salt would be the result, if before it gave up its salt, a salt well would be the result.

It seems to me that you have opened a most interesting and valuable line of investigation
Most sincerely yours.
Geo. W. Carver

On March 24, 1925, George W. Carver wrote to Rev. Kunzman of Seattle:

My dear Rev. Kunzman,
Thank you for your good letter....
Now as to your question. I regret that I cannot be of much service to you as I have not devoted much time to such investigations in proportion to the almost life time researches of some.
I am interested of course, intensely interested. My life time study of nature in it's many phases leads me to believe more strongly than ever in the Biblical account of man's creation as found in Gen. 1:27 "And God created man in his own image, in the image of God created He him; male and female created he them."
Of course sciences through all of the ages have been searching for the so called "missing link" which enables us to interpret man from his very beginning, up to his present high state of civilization.
I am fearful lest our finite researches will be wholly unable to grasp the infinite details of creation, and therefore we lose the great truth of the creation of man.
Yours very truly,
Geo. W. Carver

On March 1, 1927, George W. Carver wrote to Jack Boyd, a YMCA official in Denver, Colorado:

My beloved Friend, Mr. Boyd,
How good of you to write me, and such a wonderful letter it is....
One of the most beautiful, hopeful, and encouraging things of growing interest, is that there is springing up here and there groups of college bred young men and women, who are willing to know us by permitting themselves to get acquainted with us.
The two little snaps are so beautiful, naturally, God has been so lavish in the display of His handiwork. It is indeed so much more impressive however, when you feel that God met with that fine body of students.
My dear friend, I am so glad that God is using you in such an effective way.
My beloved friend, I do not feel capable of writing a single word of counsel to those dear young people, more than to say that my heart goes out to every one of them, regardless of the fact that I have never seen them and may never do so.
I want them to find Jesus, and make Him a daily, hourly, and momentarily part of themselves.
O how I want them to get the fullest measure of happiness and success out of life. I want them to see the Great Creator in the smallest and apparently the most insignificant things about them.
How I long for each one to walk and talk with the Great Creator through the things he has created.
How I thank God every day that I can walk and talk with Him. Just last week I was reminded of His omnipotence, majesty and power through a little specimen of mineral sent me for analysis, from Bakersfield, California. I have dissolved it, purified it, made conditions favorable for the formation of crystals, when lo before my very eyes, a beautiful bunch of sea green crystals have formed and alongside of them a bunch of snow white ones.

Marvel of marvels, how I wish I had you in God's little work-shop for a while, how your soul would be thrilled and lifted up.

My beloved friend, keep your hand in that of the Master, walk daily by His side, so that you may lead others into the realms of true happiness, where a religion of hate, (which poisons both body and soul) will be unknown, having in its place the "Golden Rule" way, which is the "Jesus Way" of life, will reign supreme. Then, we can walk and talk with Jesus momentarily, because we will be attuned to His will and wishes, thus making the Creation story of the world non-debatable as to its reality.

God, my beloved friend is infinite the highest embodiment of love. We are finite, surrounded and often filled with hate.

We can only understand the infinite as we lose the finite and take on the infinite.

My dear friend, my friendship to you cannot possibly mean what yours does to me. I talk to God through you, you help me to see God through another angle....

Most sincerely yours,
G.W. Carver

On December 13, 1927, George W. Carver wrote to the Hon. Leon McCord, circuit court judge of the Fifteenth Judicial District, Montgomery, Alabama:

My esteemed friend Judge McCord,
Yours received yesterday evening.

There are times when ones powers of expression fail to convey the meaning of the heart. I find myself at this moment utterly far adrift upon the high seas without either compass or rudder, as far as the satisfactory power of expression is concerned.

I read and reread your wonderful letter over several times. I reveled in its sublimity of thought and rare literary gift of expression to which the Great Creator has bequeathed to but few men.

There are two things which puzzle me greatly. First, that a person as busy as you must needs be would take the time to write such a letter. Second, and the most puzzling of all is that you are talking about me, a subject so unworthy of such sublimity of thought and expression.

As I sat in my little "den" reading and pondering over it, nature came to my relief when I was attracted by a strangely mellow light falling upon the paper. I looked up and out of the window toward the setting sun, which was just disappearing behind the horizon leaving a halo of never to be forgotten glory and beauty behind it. It seems as if I have never been conscious of such beauty and sublimity. The variety, brilliancy of color and arrangement were awe inspiring.

As I sat there unconscious of everything except the scene before me, behold, before my very eyes it changed from the marvelous rainbow colors to the soft, ethereal "Rembrandtian" browns and the midnight blues of Maxfield Parrish. But the most marvelous of all was the pristine light which came from behind those strangely beautiful clouds; the light was like unto bright silver dazzling in its brightness, and weird in the manner of its diffusion.

As I came to myself I said aloud, O God, I thank Thee for such a direct manifestation of Thy goodness, majesty and power.

I thought of how typical this scene which had just passed into never to be forgotten history was of my good friend judge Leon McCord, whom I have known for more than a quarter of a century, a person occupying a most responsible and trying position, a position which makes most men cold, severe, unsympathetic, and sometimes cruel, but with my friend, the Judge, many, many thousands will rise up and call him blessed because you have been and are yet ever on the alert to help humanity.

Your "Big Brothers' Bible Class" is one of the strongest testimonials of the above statement.

In this fast approaching season of special reminders of "Peace on earth good will to men", may He who has kept, guided and prospered you during all of these years bring to you and yours additional joys and successes.

Yours with much love and admiration,
G. W. Carver

In 1928, during one of Jim Hardwick's visits to the Tuskegee Institute, Dr. George W. Carver shared with him some observations:

As a very small boy exploring the almost virgin woods of the old Carver place, I had the impression someone had just been there ahead of me. Things were so orderly, so clean, so harmoniously beautiful. A few years later in this same woods I was to understand the meaning of this boyish impression. Because I was practically overwhelmed with the sense of some Great Presence. Not only had someone been there. Someone was there....

Years later when I read in the Scriptures, "In Him we live and move and have our being," I knew what the writer meant. Never since have I been without this consciousness of the Creator speaking to me....

The out of doors has been to me more and more a great cathedral in which God could be continuously spoken to and heard from....

Man, who needed a purpose, a mission, to keep him alive, had one. He could be... God's co-worker....

My attitude toward life was also my attitude toward science. Jesus said one must be born again, must become as a little child. He must let no laziness, no fear, no stubbornness keep him from his duty.

If he were born again he would see life from such a plane he would have the energy not to be impeded in his duty by these various sidetrackers and inhibitions. My work, my life, must be in the spirit of a little child seeking only to know the truth and follow it.

My purpose alone must be God's purpose - to increase the welfare and happiness of His people.

Nature will not permit a vacuum. It will be filled with something.

Human need is really a great spiritual vacuum which God seeks to fill....

With one hand in the hand of a fellow man in need and the other in the hand of Christ, He could get across the vacuum and I became an agent. Then the passage, "I can do all things through Christ which strengtheneth me," came to have real meaning.

As I worked on projects which fulfilled a real human need forces were working through me which amazed me. I would often go to sleep with an apparently insoluble problem. When I woke the answer was there.

Why, then, should we who believe in Christ be so surprised at what God can do with a willing man in a laboratory? Some things must be baffling to the critic who has never been born again.

By nature I am a conserver. I have found nature to be a conserver. Nothing is wasted or permanently lost in nature. Things change their form, but they do not cease to exist.

After I leave this world I do not believe I am through. God would be a bigger fool than even a man if he did not conserve what seems to be the most important thing he has yet done in the universe. This kind of reasoning may aid the young.

When you get your grip on the last rung of the ladder and look over the wall as I am now doing you don't need their proofs. You see. You know you will not die.

On January 25, 1929, George W. Carver wrote to Mrs. Eva Goodwin in Neosho, Missouri, referring to her family as "homefolks." She was the daughter of one of Carver's boyhood playmates, Thomas Williams, who was a great-nephew of Moses Carver. He stated:

My dear Mrs. Goodwin,

It is impossible for you to know how your letter made me feel, if you had only been a hundred mile or so away I would have started immediately to see you.

I have sat and looked long and hard at your Father's picture. While he has changed quite as much as I have, I can still discern that handsome kindly face, which made him to me ideal.

Of course you are happy to do the things for him, how I love this picture, one of my dearest boyhood playmates.

If I go to Oklahoma, the way I went before I will pass through Neosho, and it may be that I can arrange to stop over a day, or between trains at least. And see your dear Father and the rest. I am too beginning to feel the weight of years and cannot do much traveling now.

How I would love to get with your Father and talk over old times at home, indeed you really are my home folks.

Thank you for the clipping referring to the death of dear Mr. Carver, (Uncle Mose) I treasure it very much.

How delightful to have you speak of your Father in that way. I believe every word of it, his face shows it.

Yes I can remember you as a little girl, used to hold you on my lap. I certainly would appreciate any pictures of the old homeplace. I am sure it has changed very much.

I thank the good people for their words of approval, why should I not be able to do pretty well, I certainly had good home training by my "home folks".

My heart indeed goes out to my dear "Home Folks", Love and the best of wishes to your good neighbors.

I am sincerely yours,
G. W. Carver

On February 24, 1930, George W. Carver wrote to Hubert W. Pelt of the Phelps Stokes Fund, in which he included a brief essay entitled "How to Search for Truth":

I believe the Great Creator of the universe had young people in mind when the following beautiful passages were written:

In the 12th chapter of Job and the 7th & 8th verses, we are urged thus: But ask now the beasts and they shall teach thee; and the fowls of the air, and they shall tell thee.

Or speak to the earth, and it shall teach thee; and the fishes of the sea shall declare unto thee.

In St. John the 8th chapter and 32nd verse, we have this remarkable statement:

And ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free. Were I permitted to paraphrase it, I would put it thus: And you shall know science and science shall set you free, because science is truth.

There is nothing more assuring, more inspiring, or more literally true than the above passages from Holy Writ.

We get closer to God as we get more intimately and understandingly acquainted with the things he has created. I know of nothing more inspiring than that of making discoveries for ones self.

The study of nature is not only entertaining, but instructive and the only true method that leads up to the development of a creative mind and a clear understanding of the great natural principles which surround every branch of business in which we may engage. Aside from this it encourages investigation, stimulates and develops originality in a way that helps the student to find himself more quickly and accurately than any plan yet worked out.

The singing birds, the buzzing bees, the opening flower, and the budding trees, along with other forms of animate and inanimate matter, all have their marvelous creation story to tell each searcher for truth....

We doubt if there is a normal boy or girl in all Christendom endowed with the five senses who have not watched with increased interest and profit, the various forms, movements and the gorgeous paintings of the butterfly, many do not know, but will study with increased enthusiasm the striking analogy its life bears to the human soul.

Even the ancient Greeks with their imperfect knowledge of insects recognized this truth, when they gave the same Greek name psyche to the Soul, or the spirit of life, and alike to the butterfly.

They sculptured over the effigy of their dead the figure of a butterfly floating away as it were in his breath. Poets to this day follow the simile.

More and more as we come closer and closer in touch with nature and its teachings are we able to see the Divine and are therefore fitted to interpret correctly the various languages spoken by all forms of nature about us.

From the frail little mushroom, which seems to spring up in a night and perish ere the morning sun sinks to rest in the western horizon, to the giant red woods of the Pacific slope that have stood the storms for centuries and vie with the snow-capped peaks of the loftiest mountains, in their magnificence and grandeur.

First, to me, my dear young friends, nature in its varied forms are the little windows through which God permits me to commune with Him, and to see much of His glory, majesty, and power by simply lifting the curtain and looking in.

Second, I love to think of nature as unlimited broadcasting stations, through which God speaks to us every day, every hour and every moment of our lives, if we will only tune in and remain so.

Third, I am more and more convinced, as I search for truth that no ardent student of nature, can "Behold the lilies of the field"; or "Look unto the hills", or study even the microscopic wonders of a stagnant pool of water, and honestly declare himself to be an Infidel.

To those who already love nature, I need only to say, pursue its truths with a new zest, and give to the world the value of the answers to the many questions you have asked the greatest of all teachers-Mother Nature.

To those who have as yet not learned the secret of true happiness, which is the joy of coming into the closest relationship with the Maker and Preserver of all things: begin now to study the little things in your own door yard, going from the known to the nearest related unknown for indeed each new truth brings one nearer to God.

With love and best wishes,
G. W. Carver

On July 24, 1931, George W. Carver wrote to Miss Isabelle Coleman of Greensboro, North Carolina:

My dear Miss Coleman,

Thank you very much for your splendid letter. I thoroughly believe you can get a much better subject to go in your book than myself. After thinking it over again, searching around, if you still feel that I ought to go in there, you have my permission.

The facts in "Upward Climb" are correct, as the writer came here and got the story.

As to being a Christian, please write to Mr. Hardwick, Y. M. C. A., 706, Standard Building, Atlanta, Georgia. The dear boy made a ten days tour with me through Virginia, North Carolina, and Tennessee, where I lectured to a number of colleges and universities. We came together in prayer often to get our spiritual strength renewed. Whenever we come into a great project, we meet and ask God's guidance. Mr. Hardwick will tell you things that I could not. We both believe in Divine guidance. Prov. 3:6; Phil. 4:13; Psalms 119:18; these are our slogan passages.

I was just a mere boy when converted, hardly ten years old. There isn't much of a story to it. God just came into my heart one afternoon while I was alone in the "loft" of our big barn while I was shelling corn to carry to the mill to be ground into meal.

A dear little white boy, one of our neighbors, about my age, came by one Saturday morning and in talking and playing he told me he was going to Sunday school tomorrow morning. I was eager to know what a Sunday school was. He said they sang hymns and prayed. I asked him what prayer was and what they said. I do not remember what he said; only remember that as soon as he left I climbed up into the "loft", knelt down by the barrel of corn and prayed as best I could. I do not remember what I said. I only recall that I felt so good that I prayed several times before I quit.

My brother and myself were the only colored children in the neighborhood and of course, we could not go to a church or Sunday school, or school of any kind.

That was my simple conversion, and I have tried to keep the faith.

Games were very simple in my boyhood days in the country. Baseball, running, jumping, swimming, and checkers constituted the principle ones. I played all of them.

My favorite song was "Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone and all the world go free, etc."

If I had leisure time from roaming the woods and fields, I put it in knitting, crocheting, and other forms of fancy work.

I am sending you, under separate cover, some literature which may be of service.

Very sincerely yours,
G. W. Carver

On March 1, 1932, George W. Carver wrote to Mr. Zissler:

My esteemed friend, Mr. Zissler,

Before beginning the various routine duties of the day, I feel that I can start the day off in no better way than to pray that all is going well with you, and wish you could share with me the supreme expression of The Great Creator as He speaks to me so vividly through my beautiful Amaryllis (allies) that are opening daily in my windows in the little den I call my room.

Ten of these great flowers are open now, one that measures 10 inches in diameter, some of them are striped, spotted and otherwise penciled as exquisitely as orchids.

These are my own breeding and shows what man (in the generic) can do when he allows God to speak through him.

May God ever bless and keep you.
So sincerely yours,
G. W. Carver

On July 1, 1932, George W. Carver wrote to James T. Hardwick:

American Quotations.txt

My Beloved Spiritual Boy, Mr. Hardwick,
I must tell you about an experience I had today, which shows so clearly that God moves in a mysterious way His wonders to perform.

Before we left for Miss. while dear Howard was here the first time, I made some collections of fungi some distance away. Occasionally my mind would urge me to go back there again. The urge became so strong this morning that I went. I found the place grown up with weeds and briars.

I began pulling the dead limbs out but the wasps had built a nest in it and soon ran me away without stinging me. I stood afar off quite perplexed, started home, proceeded a little ways and spied another pile of brush. I went to it and found it to be one of the richest finds that I had yet made.

God closed the first door that I might see one open with greater opportunities. This is often so when we are sorely disappointed in some of our fondest dreams.

You have seemed to be with me all day today. May God ever be with my great spiritual boy, my pioneer boy, my oldest boy, in fact God's pioneer boy.

With so much love and admiration,
G. W. Carver

In the 1930's, before Jonas Salk developed a successful vaccine, the feared disease of polio killed thousands and left others with atrophied muscles and useless limbs. Prof. George W.
Carver developed a massage therapy using peanut oil, to help the victims of polio and infantile paralysis regain the use of their limbs. The Associated Press carried an article on this in December of 1933. Though physicians later gave more credit to his innovative use of massage technique rather than the peanut oil, Prof. Carver had many documented recoveries.

On December 16, 1934, George W. Carver wrote to the mother of James T. Hardwick:

My esteemed friend Mrs. Hardwick,
Thank you so much for your beautiful card with its Greetings.

I have not written to you in a long time, but my thoughts and prayers have been for you daily.

Our patients have usurped almost all of my spare time. God continues to speak through the oils in a truly marvelous way.

I have patients who come to me on crutches, who are now walking 6 miles without tiring, without either crutch or cane. (one man).

My last patient today was one of the sweetest little 5 year old boys, who 3 months ago they had to carry in my room, being paralyzed from the waist down.
When I had finished the massage today, much to our astonishment he dressed himself and stood up and walked across the floor without any support.

He is a handsome little fellow and so happy that he is improving, (and I too).

I said Our patients, because I feel that your prayers help to make it possible.

Since last Dec. 31st I have received 200 letters, plus the people who come every day and almost every night for treatment. It is truly marvelous what God is doing.

Continue to pray for me please that I may be a more fit medium through which He can Speak....

I am so gratefully yours,
G.W. Carver

On March 15, 1935, George W. Carver wrote to the Rev. Thomas O. Parish of Topeka, Kansas:

My great Spiritual friend,

Your letter came as a great spiritual message to let me know that God was speaking to me through you.

Truly God is speaking through these peanut oils that I am working with. Marvelous, some come to me on crutches, canes etc., and in time go away walking. One father brought his dear little afflicted boy 200 miles to me this morning. (Infantile paralysis).

How I do thank you for your prayers. A Ga. pastor of a large church over in Ga. has just informed me that the whole congregation prayed for me last night.

God moves in a mysterious way and is performing wonders. Keep praying for me please.

May God ever bless, keep, guide and prosper you.

Gratefully yours.

G.W. Carver

On March 22, 1935, George W. Carver wrote to the mother of James T. Hardwick:

My esteemed friend, Mrs. Hardwick,

My but it seems so good to hear from you. A person as busy as you must needs be does not have much time for writing. How wonderful that you could actually come to Tuskegee, I cannot yet describe my feelings for such a great treat.

I have not been able to make any long trips this fall or winter. I miss being with dear "Jimmie", so much, the precious boy is a real part of my life, but I can understand, why I hear from him so little now, he is on the road.

I hope I can get to the Retreat for one day at last, but I am not sure my strength will hold out. God is surely showing some of His Glory, majesty and power with some of my patients, they are improving so fast that one is forced to know that the day of miracles are not yet over....

Mrs. Hardwick, I neglected to say the these patients I am working on are our patients, God is answering the prayers of those who are praying for me....

Very sincerely yours,

G.W. Carver

On September 30, 1935, George W. Carver wrote to the Rev. Thomas O. Parrish of Topeka, Kansas:

My esteemed friend, Rev. Parrish,

Your splendid letter has been here for a long time. I have been trying to find a few moments that I could call mine in which to answer.

I have now before me 3,000 or more letters from suffering humanity, besides the people who come to see me every day and every night. I often have to refuse to see any one until I can get a little rest.

Your letters to me are great spiritual message. I appreciate your prayers much more than I have words to express.

Ask your congregation to please remember me in their silent prayers that God may continue to manifest through me more of His glory, majesty, and power. I need to become a better medium through which He can speak.

I trust your congregation will learn early the true secret of success, happiness, and power, as embodied in the four passages in the order named:

1. Sec. Cor. 3:5&6
2. Sec. Tim. 2:15
3. Prov. 3:6
4. Phil. 4:13

I am

Most sincerely and gratefully yours,
G.W. Carver

On March 17, 1937, George W. Carver wrote to the editor of the Roanoke, Alabama, Leader, Mr. Stevenson, whose son he had treated for paralysis:

My esteemed friend, Mr. Stevenson,

Thank you so very much for your splendid letter...

I attempted to give a little demonstration on the Creation Story as set forth in the Bible and geology. In other words, I attempted to show that there was no conflict between science and religion. I had a great many illustrations from my geological collection, showing many fossils which told their own story. I had quite a large audience, and they seemed to get a little out of it. It was something so distinctly new to them that they probably overrated its value....

Very sincerely and gratefully yours,
G.W. Carver

On January 28, 1938, George W. Carver wrote to Harry O. Abbott, who served as his traveling secretary:

I have just received a remarkable letter from Dr. Glen Clark of St. Paul, Minn., wanting me to come as his guest to St. Paul on April 5 or 6, all expenses paid, plus $100 honorarium, with definite provisions made by the president of the L. and N.R.R. for drawing room and every other comfort that can be provided.

He said that they would have absolutely no trouble in filling an auditorium which holds 2100 people. The occasion is the meeting of a very spiritual group that is arranging a series of lectures on bringing Christ into our lives during the week before Easter....

Yours very sincerely,
G.W. Carver

On August 24, 1940, George W. Carver wrote to a Tuskegee minister, Rev. Haygood:

My esteemed friend, Rev. Haygood,

Thank you very much for your fine letter....

You are quite right with reference to your interpretation about what I mean when I say to young people that I hope they will be bigger than the pulpit. That is really what I mean-that I want them to be bigger than the pulpit and get them to study the great Creator through the things he has created, as I feel that He talks to us through these things that he has created. I know, in my own case, that I get so much consolation a so much information in this way, and indeed the most significant sermons that it has ever been my privilege to learn has been embodied in just that.

I thank you, also, for your sermon at the Greenwood Baptist Church, and if we do not take Christ seriously in our every day life, all is a failure because it is an every day affair. If we can just understand that the Golden Rule way of living is the only correct method, and the only Christ like method, this will settle all of our difficulties that bother us....

Very sincerely and gratefully yours,
G. W. Carver

On September 7, 1940, George W. Carver wrote to Mr. and Mrs. Woods, who had given him some dahlias:

My dear Mr. Woods,

This is just to extend to you and Mrs. Woods greetings and to let you know as best I can how much I appreciate the exquisite Dahlias that you brought me.

I remember as a boy a little expression that has lingered with me all through life. It said, "that flowers were the sweetest things that God ever made and forgot to put a soul into it." It was one of the things that impressed me so very much that I always remembered, but as I grow older and study plant life, I am convinced that God didn't forget to do anything that was worthwhile. When we think of the origin of the Dahlia, how it started from a little flower not much larger than a ten cent piece, single only, I appreciate the fact that the great Creator who made man in the likeness of his image to be co-partner with him in creating some of the most beautiful and useful things in the world, and it developed his mind, I can really see why he did not put the soul into the flower. He put it into us, and we expressed it in the development of just such beautiful flowers as you have sent me, and I know that you both are stronger and better from growing these beautiful messengers from the Creator and the fact that you wanted to share them with me is a thought so beautiful that I have no language to express it.

They will last for days and the memory of them, and the spirit which prompted the growing, and the bringing of them to me will always remain.

I am

Sincerely and gratefully yours,
George W. Carver, Director

On December 16, 1941, George W. Carver wrote to the Rev. Carl A. Blackman of Kansas City, Missouri:

My dear Rev. Blackman,

In answer to your rather difficult request I beg to say as follows: My prayers seem to be more of an attitude than anything else. I indulge in very little lip service, but ask the Great Creator silently daily, and often many times per day to permit me to speak to Him through the three great Kingdoms of the world, which He has created, viz. -the animal, mineral and vegetable Kingdoms; their relations to each other, to us, our relations to them and the Great God who made all of us. I ask Him daily and often momently to give me wisdom, understanding and bodily strength to do His will, hence I am asking and receiving all the time.

Very sincerely yours,
G. W. Carver

In 1939, George Washington Carver was awarded the Roosevelt Medal, with the declaration:

To a scientist humbly seeking the guidance of God and a liberator to men of the white race as well as the black.

George Washington Carver remarked:

The secret of my success? It is simple. It is found in the Bible, "In all thy ways acknowledge Him and He shall direct thy paths."

Nevada, State of (October 31, 1864), was the 36th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Nevada, adopted 1864, stated:

Preamble. We the people of the State of Nevada, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom... establish this Constitution.

United States Congress (March 3, 1865), approved the instruction of Salmon Portland Chase, Secretary of the Treasury, to the U. S. mint to prepare a "device" to inscribe U. S. coins with the motto:

In God We Trust.

In 1955, the Congress of the United States passed a bill, signed by President Eisenhower, providing that all U. S. currency should bear the words "In God We Trust."

Yeats, William Butler (June 13, 1865-January 28, 1939), was an Irish author, theatrical producer and politician. His works include: The Countess Cathleen, 1892; Cathleen ni Houlihan, 1902; The Tower; The Winding Stair; A Vision; and The Oxford Book of Modern Verse, 1936. He was a senator in the Irish Parliament (Dail Eireann), 1922-28. In 1923, he received the Nobel Prize for literature. He wrote in The Wind Among the Reeds, 1899, Into the Twilight:

And God stands winding His lonely horn,
And time and the world are ever in flight.

In The Tower, 1928, Two Songs from a Play, II, st. I, Yeats wrote:

Odor of blood when Christ was slain
Made all Platonic tolerance vain

American Quotations.txt
And vain all Doric discipline.

In The Winding Stair and Other Poems, 1933, For Anne Gregory, st. 3, Yeats wrote:

Only God, my dear,
Could love you for yourself alone
And not your yellow hair.

Harding, Warren Gamaliel (November 2, 1865-August 2, 1923), was the 29th President of the United States, 1921-23, the sixth president to die in office; first president to speak on radio, 1920, at the Minnesota State Fair; U.S. Senator, 1915-21; Lieutenant Governor of Ohio, 1904-06; Ohio State Senator, 1900-04; married Florence De Wolfe Kling, 1891; editor of the Marion Star, Ohio, 1884-1920; and attended Ohio Central College, 1879-82.

On Friday, March 4, 1921, in his Inaugural Address, President Warren G. Harding expressed:

Standing in this presence, mindful of the solemnity of this occasion, feeling the emotions which no one may know until he senses the great weight of responsibility for himself, I must utter my belief in the Divine Inspiration of the founding fathers. Surely there must have been God's intent in the making of this new-world Republic. . . .

We have seen civil, human, and religious liberty verified and glorified. In the beginning the Old World scoffed at our experiment; today our foundations of political and social stand unshaken. . . . Let us express renewed and strengthened devotion, in grateful reverence for the immortal beginning, and utter our confidence in the supreme fulfillment. . . .

America is ready to encourage, eager to initiate, anxious to participate in any seemly program likely to lessen the probability of war, and promote that brotherhood of mankind which must be God's highest conception of human relationship. . . .

My most reverent prayer for America is for industrial peace, with its rewards, widely and generally distributed, amid the inspirations of equal opportunity. . . .

We want an America of homes, illumined with hope and happiness, where mothers, freed from the necessity for long hours of toil beyond their own doors, may preside as befits the hearthstone of American citizenship. We want the cradle of American childhood rocked under conditions so wholesome and so hopeful that no blight may touch it. . . .

I would rejoice to acclaim the era of the Golden Rule. . . .

One cannot stand in this presence and be unmindful of the tremendous responsibility. The world upheaval has added heavily to our tasks. But with the realization comes the surge of high resolve, and there is reassurance in belief in the God-given destiny of our Republic.

If I felt that there is to be sole responsibility in the Executive for the America of tomorrow I should shrink from the burden. But here are a hundred millions, with common concern and shared responsibility, answerable to God and country. The Republic summons them to their duty, and I invite co-operation.

I accept my part with single-mindedness of purpose and humility of spirit, and implore the favor and guidance of God in His Heaven. With these I am unafraid, and confidently face the future.

I have taken the solemn oath of office on that passage of Holy Writ wherein it is asked: "What doth the Lord require of thee but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God." This I plight to God and country.

On April 12, 1921, in a special address to Congress, President Warren G. Harding stated:

Certainly no government is more desirous than our own to reflect the human attitude, the purpose of making better citizens - physically, intellectually, spiritually.

On May 3, 1921, President Warren G. Harding issued a Proclamation of a National Memorial Day:

Whereas this nation has been conceived in prayer and devotion by men and women who were moved under God to found a nation where principles of right should form the lasting cornerstone; and

Whereas there principles purchased at the price of great sacrifice have been fostered by a worthy posterity; and

Whereas a great war has lately laid its costly demands upon our land:

Now, therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Monday, the thirtieth day of May, a day already freighted with sacred and stimulating memories, a day of public memorial. I invite my fellow citizens to pay homage on this day to a noble dead who sleep in homeland, beneath the sea or on foreign field that we who survive might enjoy the blessings of peace and happiness, and to the end that liberty and justice, without which no nation can exist, shall live forever.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the District of Columbia this third day of May, in the year of Our Lord nineteen hundred and twenty-one and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-fifth. Warren G. Harding.

By the President: Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State.

On September 30, 1921, President Warren G. Harding issued a Proclamation of a National Armistice Day:

Whereas, the Congress of the United States, by a concurrent resolution adopted on the fourth day of March last, authorized the Secretary of War to cause to be brought to the United States the body of an American, who was a member of the American Expeditionary Forces in Europe, who lost his life during the World War and whose identity has not been established, for burial in the Memorial Amphitheatre of the National Cemetery at Arlington, Virginia; and Whereas, the remains of this unknown American to be brought to the United States, in pursuance of the said concurrent resolution, will be buried in the said Memorial Amphitheatre at Arlington on the eleventh day of November next; and

Whereas, these remains will be representative of all unidentified American dead who in the World War gave their lives in their country's cause; and

Whereas, it is desired that grateful recognition of their loyal devotion to country and of their sacrifice should be appropriately shown with due solemnity by their God-fearing and patriotic fellow countrymen:

Now, therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, do hereby call upon all devout and patriotic citizens of the United States to pause from their accustomed occupations and labors on Friday the eleventh day of November next from twelve o'clock noon to two minutes past the hour for a period of silent prayer of thanks to the Giver of All Good for these valuable and valorous lives and of supplication for His Divine mercy and for His blessings upon our beloved country.

Furthermore, I hereby direct that the National Flag be displayed at half staff upon all the public buildings of the United States and all stations of the Army, Navy and Marine Corps throughout the world, as well as upon all American embassies, legations and consulates, from sunrise until sunset, on November the eleventh, 1921.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done in the City of Washington this thirtieth day of September in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-sixth. Warren G.
Harding.

By the President: Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State.

On October 31, 1921, President Warren G. Harding issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving, Devotion and Prayer:

That season has come when, alike in pursuance of a devout people's time-honored custom and in grateful recognition of favoring national fortunes, it is proper that the President should summon the nation to a day of devotion, of thanksgiving for blessings bestowed, and of prayer for guidance in modes of life that may deserve continuance of Divine favor.

Foremost among our blessings is the return of peace, and the approach to normal ways again. The year has brought us again into relations of amity with all nations, after a long period of struggle and turbulence. In thankfulness therefore, we may well unite in the hope that Providence will vouchsafe approval to the things we have done, the aims which have guided us, the aspirations which have inspired us.
We shall be prospered as we shall deserve prosperity, seeking not alone for the material things but for those of spirit as well; earnestly trying to help others;

asking, before all else, the privilege of service. As we render thanks anew for the exaltation which came to us, we may fittingly petition that moderation and wisdom shall be granted to rest upon all who are in authority, in the tasks they must discharge. Their hands will be steadied, their purposes strengthened, in answer to our prayers.

Ours has been a favored nation in the bounty which God has bestowed upon it. The great trial of humanity, though indeed we bore our part as well as we were able, left us comparatively little scarred. It is for us to recognize that we have been thus favored, and when we gather at our altars to offer up thanks, we will do well to pledge, in humility and all sincerity, our purpose to prove deserving. We have been raised up and preserved in national power and consequence as part of a plan whose wisdom we can not question. Thus believing, we can do no less than hold our nation the willing instrument of the Providence which has so wonderfully favored us. Opportunity for very great service awaits us if we shall prove equal to it. Let our prayers be raised for direction in the right paths. Under God, our responsibility is great; to our own first, to all men thereafter; to all mankind in God's own justice.

Now, therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, hereby designate Thursday, the twenty-fourth day of November, to be observed by the people as a day of Thanksgiving, devotion and prayer; urging that at their hearthsides and their altars they will give thanks for all that has been rendered unto them, and will pray for a continuance of Divine fortune which has been showered so generously upon this nation.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this thirty-first day of October in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-sixth. Warren G. Harding.

By the President: Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State.

On November 4, 1921, President Warren G. Harding issued a Proclamation declaring Armistice Day a legal public holiday:

Now, therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, in pursuance of the said Joint Resolution of Congress, do hereby declare November 11, 1921, a holiday, as a mark of respect to the memory of those who gave their lives in the late World War, as typified by the unknown and unidentified American soldier who is to be buried in Arlington National Cemetery on that day; and do hereby recommend to the Governors of the several States that proclamations be issued by them calling upon the people of their respective States to pause in their usual pursuits as a mark of respect on this solemn occasion.

And, in order that the solemnity of the occasion may be further emphasized, I do hereby furthermore recommend that all public and church bells throughout the United States be tolled at intervals between 11:45 o'clock a.m. and 12 o'clock noon of the said day, and that from 12 o'clock noon to two minutes past that hour, Washington time, all devout and patriotic citizens of the United States indulge in a period of silent thanks to God for these valuable valorous lives and of supplication for His Divine mercy and for His blessings upon our beloved country.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this fourth day of November in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-one and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-sixth. Warren G. Harding.

By the President: Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State.

On November 8, 1921, in an Executive Order regarding the manner of dating proclamations, commissions, and similar Executive documents, President Warren G. Harding stated:

Hereafter the recital immediately preceding the President's signature in proclamations, commissions, and other formal documents of like nature shall be in the following form:

"Done at the City of Washington this.....day of.....in the year of Our Lord....., and of the Independence of the United States of America the....."

This order is issued to establish uniformity in the several Departments in the language used in these documents, and to restore the form which prevailed from the time the Government was established in this city, except for a brief period, when they were dated from the District of Columbia instead of the City of Washington.

On Friday, November 11, 1921, at the burial of an Unknown American Soldier in Arlington Cemetery, President Warren G. Harding addressed the Secretary of War and the citizens assembled:

We are met today to pay the impersonal tribute. The name of him whose body lies before us took flight with his imperishable soul. We know not whence he came, but only that his death marks him with the everlasting glory of an American dying for his country....

In the death gloom of gas, the bursting of shells and rain of bullets, men face more intimately the great God over all, their souls are aflame, and consciousness expands and hearts are searched. With the din of battle, the glow of conflict, and the supreme trial of courage, come involuntarily the hurried appraisal of life and the contemplation of death's great mystery. On the threshold of eternity, many a soldier, I can well believe, wondered how his ebbing blood would color the stream of human life, flowing on after his sacrifice....

There was the rain of ruin from aircraft, the thunder of artillery, followed by the unspeakable devastation wrought by bursting shells; there were mortars belching their bombs of desolation; machine guns concentrating their leaden storms; there was the infantry, advancing, firing, and falling - like men with souls sacrificing for the decision. The flying missiles were revealed by illuminating tracers, so that we could note their flight and appraise their deadliness. The air was streaked with tiny flames marking the flight of massed destruction....

There have been a thousand defenses justly and patriotically made; a thousand offenses which reason and righteousness ought to have stayed. Let us beseech all men to join us in seeking the rule under which reason and righteousness shall prevail....

I can sense the prayers of our people, of all peoples, that this Armistice Day shall mark the beginning of a new and lasting era of peace on earth, good will among men. Let me join in that prayer.

Our Father who art in heaven, hallowed be Thy name. Thy kingdom come, Thy will be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Give us this day our daily bread, and forgive us our trespasses as we forgive those who trespass against us. And lead us not into temptation, but deliver us from evil, for Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory, forever. Amen.

On November 12, 1921, in an address opening the Conference in the Continental Memorial Hall in Washington, D. C., President Warren G. Harding stated:

Here in the United States we are but freshly turned from the burial of an unknown American soldier, when a nation sorrowed while paying him tribute. Whether it was spoken or not, a hundred millions of our people were summarizing the inexcusable causes, the incalculable cost, the unspeakable sacrifices, and the unutterable sorrows, and there was the ever impelling question: How can humanity justify or God forgive? Human hate demands no such toll; ambition and greed must be denied it.

If misunderstandings must take the blame, then let us banish it, and let understanding rule and make good will regnant everywhere. All of us demand liberty and justice. There can not be one without the other, and they must be held the unquestioned possession of all peoples. Inherent rights are of God, and the tragedies of the world originate in their attempted denial.

On November 29, 1921, President Warren G. Harding issued a Proclamation of a National American Education week:

Whereas, the experience of the war revealed vast elements of population that are illiterate, physically unfit, or unfamiliar with American ideals and traditions; and our future strength and security are much dependent on their education and commitment to American ideals;

Therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States, do urge the Governors of the various States and Territories to set apart December 4th to 10th, inclusive, 1921, as American Education Week, during which Citizens in every state are urged to give special and thoughtful attention to the needs and aims of the public schools.... The subject of public education has always been very close to the American heart, and to the fact that it has been made a chief responsibility of local governmental units, we largely owe the wide diffusion of educational facilities. It is believed that a widespread and earnest effort at observance of Education Week would do much to emphasize this feeling of immediate responsibility. Therefore it is suggested that the pulpit, press, schools, and public gatherings be enlisted in behalf of this special effort.

American Quotations.txt

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twenty-ninth day of November, in the year of Our Lord, one thousand nine hundred twenty-one, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-sixth. Warren G. Harding.

By the President: Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State.

On December 6, 1921, in his First Annual Address to Congress, President Warren G. Harding stated:

Homemaking is one of the greater benefits which government can bestow. Measures are pending embodying this sound policy to which we may well adhere. It is easily possible to make available permanent homes which will provide, in turn, for prosperous American families, without injurious competition with established activities, or imposition on wealth already acquired.

While we are thinking of promoting the fortunes of our own people I am sure there is room in the sympathetic thought of America for fellow human beings who are suffering and dying of starvation in Russia. A severe drought in the valley of the Volga has plunged 15,000,000 people into grievous famine....

It seems to me we should be indifferent to our own heart promptings, and out of accord with the spirit which acclaim the Christmastide, if we do not give out of our national abundance to lighten this burden of woe upon a people blameless and helpless in famine's peril.

On December 23, 1921, President Warren G. Harding directed the White House to issue the statement expressing his support of the American delegation at the Conference drawing up the Four-Power Treaty:

He has full confidence now and is more than gratified over their efforts, because they are working out the greatest contribution to peace and good-will which has ever marked the Christmas time in all the Christian era.

On February 6, 1922, in the closing address at the Conference which discussed Pacific and Far East questions with the British Empire, France, Japan, China, Italy, Belgium, The Netherlands, Portugal and the United States, President Warren G. Harding stated:

Those of us who live another decade are more likely to witness a growth of public opinion, strengthened by the new experience, which will make nations more concerned with living to the fulfillment of God's high intent than with agencies of warfare and destruction.

American Quotations.txt

On May 30, 1922, at the dedication of the Lincoln Memorial in Washington, D.C., President Warren G. Harding stated:

In every moment of peril, in every hour of discouragement, whenever the clouds gather, there is the image of Lincoln to rivet our hopes and to renew our faith... Here was the great purpose, here the towering hope, here the supreme faith. He treasured the inheritance handed down by the founding fathers, the ark of the covenant wrought through their heroic sacrifices, and builded in their inspired genius....

His faith was inspiring, his resolution commanding, his sympathy reassuring, his simplicity enlisting, his patience unflinching. He was Faith, Patience and Courage, with his head above the clouds, unmoved by the storms which raged about his feet... He knew he had freed a race of bondmen and had given to the world the costly proof of the perpetuity of the American union....

Lincoln came almost as humbly as The Child of Bethlehem. His parents were unlettered, his home was devoid of every element of culture and refinement. He was no infant prodigy, no luxury facilitated or privilege hastened his development, but he had a God-given intellect, a love for work, a willingness to labor and a purpose to succeed....

His work was so colossal, in the face of such discouragement, that none will dispute that he was incomparably the greatest of our presidents... Amid it all there was a gentleness, a kindness, a sympathetic sorrow, which suggest a divine intent to blend mercy with power in supreme attainment.

On November 2, 1922, President Warren G. Harding issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving, Supplication and Devotion:

In the beginnings of our country the custom was established by the devout fathers of observing annually a day of Thanksgiving for the bounties and protection which Divine Providence had extended throughout the year. It has come to be perhaps the most characteristic of our national observances, and as the season approaches for its annual recurrence, it is fitting formally to direct attention to this ancient institution of our people and to call upon them again to unite in its appropriate celebration.

The year which now approaches its end has been marked, in the experience of our nation, by a complexity of trials and of triumphs, of difficulties and of achievements, which we must regard as our inevitable portion in such an epoch as that through which all mankind is moving. As we survey the experience of the passing twelve-month we shall find that our estate presents very much to justify a nationwide and most sincere testimony of gratitude for the bounty which has been bestowed upon us. Though we have lived in the shadow of the hard consequences of great conflict, our country has been at peace and has been able to contribute toward the maintenance and perpetuation of peace in the world. We have seen the race of mankind make gratifying progress on the way to permanent peace, toward order and restored confidence in its high destiny. For Divine guidance which has enabled us, in growing fraternity with other peoples, to attain so much of progress; for the bounteous yield which has come to us from the resources of our soil and our industry, we owe our tribute of gratitude and with it our acknowledgement of the duty and obligation to our own people and to the unfortunate, the suffering, the distracted of other lands.

Let us in all humility acknowledge how great is our debt to the Providence which has generously dealt with us, and give devout assurance of unselfish purpose to play a helpful and ennobling part in human advancement. It is much to be desired that in rendering homage for the blessings which have come to us, we should earnestly testify our continued and increasing aim to make our own great fortune a means of helping and serving, as best we can, the cause of all humanity.

Now, therefore, I, Warren G. Harding, President of the United States of America, do designate Thursday, the thirtieth day of November, as a day of Thanksgiving, supplication and devotion. I recommend that the people gather at their family altars and in their houses of worship to render thanks to God for the bounties they have enjoyed and to petition that these may be continued in the year before us.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States of be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this second day of November, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-two, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and forty-seventh. Warren G. Harding.

By the President: Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State.

On November 20, 1922, President Warren G. Harding issued a Proclamation of an American Education Week:

"Without a vision the people perish" (Pr. 29: 18). Without education, there can be little vision. Of education it may be said that "It is twice blest; it blesseth him that gives and him that takes." It will be greatly worth the effort if, as an incident to the observance of Education Week, we can impress this thought upon the young manhood and womanhood of the nation and redirect their interest and patriotic zeal to the idea of making a proper contribution to educational work. . . . The strength and security of the nation will always rest in the intelligent body of its people. . . .

Civic organizations and religious bodies may render special service by their cooperation; and particularly it is recommended that parents enlist themselves in behalf of closer understanding between school and home. . . .

In Consideration and Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twentieth day of November, in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and twenty-two, and of the Independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-seventh. Warren

G. Harding.

By the President: Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State.

On May 17, 1923, at the unveiling of the statue of Alexander Hamilton, President Warren G. Harding stated:

It was from Hamilton's lips that came the finest utterance ever made concerning human liberty: "The sacred rights of mankind are written as with a sunbeam, by the hand of Divinity itself, never to be erased or obscured by mortal power."

On May 30, 1923, in his Memorial Day Address at Arlington National Cemetery, President Warren G. Harding stated:

I believe it a God-given duty to give of our influence to establish the ways of peace throughout the world....

In all the wars of all time the conscienceless profiteer has put the black blot of greed upon the righteous sacrifice and highly purposed conflict.... God grant that no conflict will come again, but if it does it shall be without profit to the noncombatant participants except as they share in the triumphs of the nation.

On June 5, 1923, in Washington, D. C., President Warren G. Harding stated:

I wish somehow we could have fraternity among nations, as it is taught in America among men.... the ideals of brotherhood recited in the Golden Rule, and the righteous fellow-relationship which every man knows his God approves.

On Thursday, June 21, 1923, in his address on the International Court of Justice, delivered in St. Louis, Missouri, President Warren G. Harding stated:

In his never-to-be-forgotten Farewell Address, in which the first president compressed the gospel of our mutual interest at home and our proper relations abroad, he said:

"Observe good faith and justice toward all nations. Cultivate peace and harmony with all. Religion and morality enjoin this conduct. And can it be that good policy does not equally enjoin it?"...

This solemn admonition was addressed by George Washington to his fellow-countrymen one hundred and twenty-seven years ago. That it has been heeded scrupulously we are proud to assume the world believes. That we have, indeed, observed good faith and have exalted justice above all other agencies of civilization, barring only Christianity, surely none can deny with truth....

Very recently a striking message was flashed through the air from Rome to Washington. "Tell America," said the vigorous Prime Minister, "that I like her, like her because she is strong, simple, and direct. I wish Italy to be the same and shall try to make her so." God speed him! And God grant that America shall never forfeit the high honor borne by that sentiment tribute....

I shall call upon your patriotism. I shall beseech your humanity. I shall invoke your Christianity. I shall reach to the very depths of your love for your fellow man of whatever race or creed throughout the world. I shall speak, as I speak now, with all the earnestness and power of the sincerity that is in me and in perfect faith that God will keep clear and receptive your understanding. I could not do otherwise. My soul yearns for peace. My heart is anguished by the sufferings of war. My spirit is eager to serve....

If, in our search for everlasting peace, we but let lead, and follow humbly but dauntlessly, the "Kindly Light" of divine inspiration to all human brotherhood, gleaming like a star in the heavens, from the most beautiful hymn ever written, God will not let us fail.

On June 22, 1923, in an address given in Kansas City, Missouri, President Warren G. Harding stated:

In the infinite bounty of the Creator the measureless riches of the West were bestowed, but they are availed little until the whistle of the steam locomotive proclaimed its westward march....

It was extremely uncertain whether the wisdom of a dozen Solomons, sitting as railroad presidents and chairmen of boards, and as financial backers of these great properties, would be equal to the task of organizing a group of systems which would represent fair treatment of all the interests involved, including those of the public.

On Monday, June 25, 1923, in an address delivered in Denver, Colorado, President Warren G. Harding stated:

There is another phase of law-observance to which reference is impelling. I am thinking of the law of the Golden Rule, a statute from the Man of Nazareth, who brought new peace and new hope to mankind, and proclaimed service to men the highest tribute to God.

Service is both the inspiration and the accomplishment of quite everything worthwhile which impels us onward and upward. With service which the Nazarene would approve are associated all our ideals and our finer aspirations....

We may rejoice in the flood tides of material good fortune, we may becomingly boast the measureless resources of the republic through God's bounty in creation and man's genius in development, but we aren't living the becoming life unless we are seeking to advance humankind as we achieve for ourselves. I would like the ages of envy and hate, and conquest and pillage, and armed greed and mad ambitions to be followed by understanding and peace, by the rule of law where force had reigned... the observance of the Golden Rule as the law of human righteousness.

On June 29, 1923, in an address delivered in Helena, Montana, President Warren G. Harding stated:

Whether we account it wise or otherwise, we must recognize that the tendency is to take the modern mother more and more away from the control, the training, the intellectual guidance and spiritual direction of her children... Frankly, I am one of those old-fashioned people who would be glad if the way could be found to maintain the traditional relations of father, mother, children, and home.

We must hope, and we must make it possible, that mothers will not assume, when their babes of yesterday become the school boys and school girls of to-day, that the responsibility of the mother is ended, and that the teacher, the school authorities, the college, the state, will henceforth assume it. Rather, we must recognize that no other influence can possibly be substituted for that of motherhood; and we must make it possible for the mothers to cooperate with these social institutions of the new order, to give the children so far as possible the privileges of a home atmosphere which will supplement the advantages of mere education and training. It must be made possible for the mothers to familiarize themselves with the problems of the people, the school superintendents, the college authorities, the health and sanitation officials. In short, the mothers must be placed in such position that despite their obligations outside the home they shall not have to surrender their domestic responsibility....

Those mothers who have the advantage of the best material and intellectual opportunities will, if they make the most of these advantages, help greatly to improve the conditions of children that come from families and homes less fortunately situated. They will be able to help in lifting up the poorer, the less fortunate children, to a higher level. The mother who tirelessly seeks rightly to train her own children, to instill into them that indefinable essence which we know as good breeding, will be performing this service not alone for her own children, but in only less measure for the children who come from homes less blessed with the finer things of life....

The teacher, and the authorities back of her, must be equally ready to cooperate with the home and the mother. In the home must still be performed the duty of instilling into the child those fundamental concepts of religion and of faith which are essential to rightly shaping the character of citizens, and therefore of the nation. It would be an irreparable mistake if in surrendering to society a larger responsibility for the child's intellectual and physical well being, we should forget the necessity for proper religious training. That duty must be performed in the home; it will always be peculiarly the duty of the mother.

Mankind never has stood more in need than it does now of the consolations and reassurances which derive from a firm religious faith. We are living in a time of many uncertainties, of weakened faith in the efficiency of institutions, of industrial systems, of economic hypotheses, of dictum and dogma in whatever sphere. Yet we all know that there are certain fundamental truths of life and duty and destiny which will stand eternal....

There must be no mistake whereby we shall confuse the things which are of eternity with those which are of time. We must not let our engrossment with the things of matter and of mind distract us from a proper concern for those which are of the spirit and the soul....

Twenty centuries of the Christian era and its great story of human progress, and the countless centuries before the light of Christianity flamed.... is the best the world has revealed, and I preach the gospel of holding fast to that which has proven good, ever trying in good conscience to make it better, and consider and treat as an enemy every man who chooses our land as a haven in which to assail the very institutions which shelter him.... In the recognized test which our civilization is now undergoing America's supreme task is one of preservation. I call upon America to protect and preserve.

On Tuesday, July 3, 1923, just one month before his death, President Warren G. Harding delivered a speech in Meacham, Oregon, in remembrance of the Oregon Trail and the courageous missionaries to the Oregon and Washington territories. He unveiled a monument at Immigration Springs, and gave special recognition to the medical missionary Dr. Marcus Whitman, who, along with his wife, journeyed in 1836 to the Oregon territory. Dr. Marcus Whitman was also honored by the U.S. government with a statue in the U.S. Capitol Hall of Statuary for his key role in populating Oregon, which was vital in winning the boundary dispute with Great Britain, thereby bringing the territory under U.S. jurisdiction. President Warren G. Harding stated:

Of the many rooms in the White Houses, which possess the peculiar charm of association with epochal happenings, the one most fascinating to me is that which formerly comprised the Cabinet Room and the President's Study. Through its high windows one's gaze is drawn irresistibly to the towering granite shaft whose very grandeur, exceeded by no other moment in the world, admirably symbolizes the matchless character of George Washington. The beautifully carved mahogany bedposts are those upon which fell the eyes of Andrew Jackson when opened from the troubled slumber which even to this day occasionally falls to lot of an over-weary President. Sunk into the marble mantel piece is a bronze tablet recording the circumstance that it was in this room that Abraham Lincoln signed the great emancipation proclamation, which struck the shackles of slavery from millions of human beings.

Yet another episode of hardly less importance in the building of our mighty nation took place within these walls. Before my mind's eye as I stood in that heroic chamber a few days ago appeared the vivid picture. I beheld seated at his desk, immaculately attired, the embodiment of dignity and courtliness, John Tyler, tenth President of the United States. Facing him, from a chair constructed for a massive frame, his powerful spirit gleaming through his cavernous eyes, was the lion-visaged Daniel Webster, Secretary of State.

The door opened and there appeared before the amazed statesmen a strange and astonishing figure. It was that of a man of medium height and sturdy build, deep chested, broad shouldered, yet lithe in movement and soft in step. He was clad in a coarse fur coat, buckskin breeches, fur leggings, and boot moccasins, looking much worse for the wear. But it was the countenance of the visitor, as he stood for an instant in the doorway, that riveted the perception of the two Chiefs of State.

It was that of a religious enthusiast, tenaciously earnest yet revealing no suggestion of fanaticism, bronzed from exposure to pitiless elements and seamed with deep lines of physical suffering, a rare combination of determination and gentleness - obviously a man of God, but no less a man among men.

Such was Marcus Whitman, the missionary hero of the vast, unsettled, unexplored Oregon country, who had come out of the West to plead that the state should acquire for civilization the empire that the churches were gaining for Christianity.

Many of the exploits of America's resolute sons are recounted in prose and verse. How often in our youth, and even in later years, have we been thrilled by the story of how "on through the night rode Paul Revere, through every Middlesex village and farm" to call the Minute Men to embattle at Lexington and fire "the shot heard 'round the world!" How many times we have shuddered at the impending fate of the Shenandoah Valley with "Sheridan twenty miles away!" I loved the martial notes of those stirring verses as a boy. I still love them.

But, when I stood in that historic room in the White House and my imagination depicted the simple scene, I could not but feel that the magnificence of Marcus Whitman's glorious deed has yet to find adequate recognition in any form. Here was a man who, with a single companion, in the dead of winter [1842], struggled through pathless drifts and blinding storms, four thousand miles, with the sole aim to serve his country and his God. Eighty years and eight months ago he was pushing grimly and painfully through this very pass on his way from Walla Walla to Fort Hall, thence, abandoning the established northern route as impassable, off to the South through unknown, untrodden lands, past the Great Salt Lake, to Santa Fe, then hurriedly on to St. Louis and finally, after a few days, again on the home-stretch to his destination, taking as many months as it now takes days to go from Walla Walla to Washington.

It was more than a desperate and perilous trip that Marcus Whitman undertook. It was a race against time. Public opinion was rapidly crystallizing into a judgment that the Oregon country was not worth claiming, much less worth fighting for; that, even though it could be acquired against the insistence of Great Britain, it would prove to be a liability rather than an asset.

It is with sheer amazement that we now read the declarations of leading men of that period. So good an American, so sturdy a frontiersman, so willing a fighter, as General Jackson, shook his head ominously in fear lest the national domain should get too far outspread, and warned the country that its safety "lay in a compact government." Senator McDuffie, of South Carolina, declared he "would not give a pinch of snuff for the whole territory," and expressed the wish that the Rocky Mountains were "an impassable barrier." Senator Dayton, of New Jersey, said that, with very limited exceptions, "the whole country was as irreclaimable and barren a waste as the Sahara desert," and that malaria had carried away most of its native population. Even so far-seeing and staunch an advocate of western interests as Thomas Benton protested that the ridge of the Rockies should be made our western boundary, and avowed that "on the highest peak the statue of the fabled god, Terminus, should be erected, never to be thrown down."

Webster, although not definitely antagonistic, was uninterested and lukewarm. Years before he had pronounced Oregon "a barren, worthless country, fit only for wild beasts and wild men," and he was not one who changed opinions readily. But neither was Whitman one easily dismayed. Encouraged by the manifest friendliness of President Tyler, he portrayed with vivid eloquence the salubrity of the climate, the fertility of the soil, the magnitude of the forests, the evidences of ore in the mountains, and the splendor of the wide valleys drained by the great rivers. And he did not hesitate to speak plainly, as one who knew, even like the prophet Daniel.

"Mr. Secretary," he declared, "you would better give all New England for the cod and mackerel fisheries of Newfoundland than to barter away Oregon."

Then turning to the President, he added quietly but beseechingly:

"All I ask is that you will not barter away Oregon or allow English interference until I can lead a band of stalwart American settlers across the plains. For this I shall try to do!"

The manly appeal was irresistible. He sought only for the privilege of proving his faith. The just and considerate Tyler could not refuse.

"Doctor Whitman," he rejoined sympathetically, "your long ride and frozen limbs testify to your courage and your patriotism. Your credentials establish your character. Your request is granted!"

Whitman's strategy was true statesmanship. Substantial occupation would make good the claim of the United States, and that was what he had initiated during his few days in St. Louis. A few months later [1843] he had completed an organization of eager souls, and led the first movement by wagon train across plains and mountains along this unblazed trail.

What a sight that caravan must have appeared to the roaming savages! And what an experience for the intrepid pioneers!

More than two hundred wagons, bearing well-nigh a thousand emigrants, made up the party. They traveled by substantially the same route that Whitman had taken when he first went out to Oregon; from a rendezvous near what is now Kansas City they moved due northwest across northeast Kansas and southeast Nebraska to the Platte River; followed the Platte to the middle of what is now Wyoming, thence crossing the mountains by way of the Sweetwater Valley and the South Platte; and from Fort Hall, following the well-known route, roughly paralleling the Snake River, into Oregon. The difficulties of the trip, involving beside the two hundred wagons, the care of women and children, and of considerable herds of live stock, were such that its successful accomplishment seems almost miraculous.

But stern determination triumphed and the result was conclusive. Americans had settled the country. The country belonged to them because they had taken it; and in the end the boundary settlement was made on the line of the forty-ninth parallel, your great Northwest was saved, and a veritable Empire was merged in the young Republic.

Never in the history of the world has there been a finer example of civilization following Christianity. The missionaries led under the banner of the cross, and the settlers moved close behind under the star-spangled symbol of the nation.

Among all the records of the evangelizing efforts as the forerunner of human advancement, there is none so impressive as this of the early Oregon mission and its marvelous consequences.

To the men and women of that early day whose first thought was to carry the gospel to the Indians - to the Lees, the Spauldings, the Grays, the Walkers, the Leslies, to Fathers DeSmet and Blanchet and DeMars, and to all the others of that glorious company who found that in serving God they were also serving their country and their fellowmen - to them we pay today our tribute; to them we owe a debt of gratitude, which we can never pay, save partially through recognition such as you and I have accorded today....

I thank you from my heart for permitting me to participate in doing homage to those brave souls. I rejoice particularly in the opportunity afforded me of voicing my appreciation both as President of the United States and as one who honestly tries to be a Christian soldier, of the signal service of the martyred Whiteman.

On July 31, 1923, in a speech that he was unable to deliver due to his fatal illness, but which was released for publication in San Francisco, President Warren G. Harding stated:

We were never technically at war with Turkey, and had no part in the Greek-Angora conflict, which threatened to set the Near East aflame. But the rights of our nationals and other nationals long recognized by accepted civilization were involved in the settlement, and we had our representatives at Lausanne, not only to protect those rights, but serve humanitarian interests and promote the cause of peace.... We did not fail to voice American sentiment of behalf of Christian minorities, and we did assist in reaching a settlement calculated to assure their future protection.

President Warren Gamaliel Harding, who was a Baptist, stated:

I have always believed in the inspiration of the Holy Scriptures, whereby they have become the expression to man of the Word and Will of God.

Kipling, (Joseph) Rudyard (December 30, 1865-January 18, 1936), was a British novelist. He was born in Bombay, educated in England, and in 1882 returned to India as a journalist. In 1889 Kipling arrived back in England, where his popularity as a writer grew tremendously. In 1907, he received the Nobel Prize for literature. His works include: Wee Willie Winkie and Other Children's Stories, 1888; Barrack Room Ballads, 1892-93; The Jungle Book, 1894; Kim, 1901.

American Quotations.txt
In Gunga Din, 1892, Rudyard Kipling penned:

Though I've belted you and flayed you,
By the livin' Gawd that made you,
You're a better man than I am, Gunga Din.

Kipling wrote his noblest poem, Recessional - Jubilee Hymn for Queen Victoria's Reign, in 1899, in honor of Queen Victoria's diamond jubilee. In it he admonished:

Be careful lest thou forget the Lord thy God... and say in thine heart, my power and the might of mine hand hath gotten me this wealth. But thou shalt remember the Lord thy God; for it is He that giveth thee power to get wealth, that He may establish His covenant which He swear unto thy fathers, as it is this day - Deuteronomy 8:11, 17, 18.

God of our fathers, known of old -
Lord of our far-flung battle-line - Beneath whose awful hand we hold Dominion over pal and pine -
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget - lest we forget!

The tumult and the shouting dies;
The captains and the kings depart;
Still stands thine ancient Sacrifice,
An humble and a contrite heart.
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget - lest we forget!

Far called, our navies melt away -
On dune and headland sinks the fire -
Lo, all our pomp of yesterday
Is one with Nineveh and Tyre!
Judge of the Nations, spare us yet,
Lest we forget - lest we forget!

If, drunk with sight of power, we loose
Wild tongues that have not Thee in awe -
Such boasting as the Gentiles use,
Or lesser breeds without the Law -
Lord God of Hosts, be with us yet,
Lest we forget - lest we forget!

For heathen heart that puts her trust
In reeking tube and iron shard -
All valiant dust that builds on dust
And guarding calls not Thee to guard -
For frantic boast and foolish word,
Thy mercy on thy people, Lord!
Amen.

In his Ballad of East and West, 1889, Rudyard Kipling penned:

Oh, East is East, and West is West,
And never the twain shall meet,
Till earth and sky stand presently
At God's great judgement seat.

In The Glory of the Garden, 1911, Rudyard Kipling wrote:
Page 882

American Quotations.txt

Oh, Adam was a gardener, and God who made him sees That half a proper gardener's work is done upon his knees.

Wells, Herbert George "H. G." (September 21, 1866-August 13, 1946), was one of the best-known British literary figures. He was a novelist, historian, sociologist, and scientific writer. His works include: The Time Machine, 1895; The Invisible Man; 1897; The War of the Worlds, 1898; The First Men in the Moon, 1901; Kipps, 1905; Tono-Bungay, 1909; The History of Mr. Polly, 1910; Mr. Britling Sees It Through; The Island of Dr. Moreau; Love and Mr. Lewisham; Experiment in Autobiography; The Discovery of the Future, 1901; The War that will end War, 1914; The Shape of Things to Come, 1933; and The Science of Life, 1929.

In 1920, H. G. Wells, himself a skeptic, wrote of the U. S. Constitution in The Outlines of History:

Its spirit is indubitably Christian.

In August of 1941, H. G. Wells wrote in his work, The Pocket History of the World:

Ideas of human solidarity, thanks to Christianity, were far more widely diffused in the newer European world, political power was not so concentrated, and the man of energy anxious to get rich turned his mind, therefore, very willingly from the ideas of the slave and of gang labour to the idea of mechanical power and the machine.

In his studies on education, H. G. Wells noted:

Education is the preparation of the individual for the community, and his religious training is the core of that preparation.

North American Review (1867), reported:

The American government and the Constitution is the most precious possession which the world holds, or which the future can inherit. This is true - true because the American system is the political expression of Christian ideas.

Nebraska, State of (March 1, 1867), was the 37th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Nebraska, adopted June 12, 1875, stated:

Preamble. We, the people, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom... establish this Constitution.

Article I, Section IV. Religion, morality, and knowledge, however, being essential to good government, it shall be the duty of the legislature to pass suitable laws... to encourage schools and the means of instruction.

Bill of Rights, Article I, Section 4. All persons have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own consciences.

Wright, Frank Lloyd (June 8, 1867-April 9, 1959), was an American architect, known for his bold originality of design. Famous edifices designed by him are: the Imperial Hotel, Tokyo, Japan (1916); the Millard House, Pasadena, California (1923); Oak Park Unity Temple, outside Chicago, Illinois (1904); and Taliesin, his private residence, Spring Green, Wisconsin (1911). He founded and directed "The Taliesin Fellowship," an experimental school of the arts, and published the magazine Taliesin. His works include: In the Cause of Architecture (1909-1923); An Inscription of Japanese Prints (1912); Experimenting with Human Lives (1923); Modern Architecture (1931); An Autobiography - Frank Lloyd Wright (1932; 1943); When Democracy Builds (1946); and Genius and the Mobocracy (1941).

On November 27, 1955, in a lecture in Boston, Massachusetts, as reported in The New York Times Magazine, Frank Lloyd Wright stated:

Civilization: Art and religion are the soul of our civilization. Go to them, for there love exists.

On June 3, 1956, in an address entitled "The Architect Preaches a Sermon," Church of the Divine Paternity, New York, Frank Lloyd Wright stated:

The common man is a man who believes in only what he sees and he sees only what he can put his hand on. . . . He is on speaking terms with progress, and progress must be in spite of him, although for him.

Baldwin, Stanley (August 3, 1867-December 14, 1947), the 1st Earl Baldwin of Bewdley, was British Prime Minister, 1923-24, 1924-29, 1935-37; and Chancellor of the Exchequer, 1922-23. He stated:

The Holy Bible is not only great but high explosive literature. It works in strange ways and no living man can tell or know how that book in its journeyings through the world has started an individual soul 10,000 different places into a new life, a new belief, a new conception and a new faith.

Scott, Robert Falcon (June 6, 1868-March 29, 1912), was an English explorer. He led an expedition to the Antarctic, and on January 18, 1912, reached the South Pole. Caught in a snowstorm on their return trip, both he and the four other men in his expedition died. He kept a journal up to the day of his death; his final entry on Thursday, March 29, 1912, stated:

For God's sake look after our people.

American Medical Association (1871), recorded in the transactions of the American Medical Association, Philadelphia, Volume XXII, page 248:

God...at the moment of conception, creates a living soul.

American Quotations.txt

Johnson, James Weldon (June 17, 1871-June 26, 1938), was a popular Black American poet. He was best known for writing a series of verse entitled, God's Trombones, and editing the Book of Negro Spirituals. His autobiography, Along This Way, won the 1925 Springarn Medal for literature. James Weldon Johnson was a U. S. Consul in Venezuela and Nicaragua; a professor at Fisk University, 1930-38; and served as the secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

In God's Trombones, 1927, Johnson wrote The Creation:

And God stepped out on space,
And He looked around and said,
"I'm lonely -
I'll make me a world."....

And God smiled again,
And the rainbow appeared,
And curled itself around his shoulder....

With his head in his hands,
God thought and thought,
Till he thought: I'll make me a man!

Hand, (Billings) Learned (January 27, 1872-August 18, 1961), was an American jurist who served on the New York District Court, 1909-24, and the U. S. Circuit Court of Appeals, 2nd District, 1924-51. He wrote The Spirit of Liberty, 1952, and The Bill of Rights, 1958. So well respected were his decisions, that they were even referenced in U. S. Supreme Court cases. Judge Learned Hand explained:

The use of history is to tell us what we are; for at our birth we are nearly empty vessels and we become what our traditions pour into us.

We must needs be sounding boards for past themes, else we should have to repeat, each in his own experience, the successes and the failures of our forebears.

What we take to be our own choices are in fact imposed upon us from without, pressed into us by the stamps of our own inheritance.

In 1944, Judge Learned Hand spoke on the subject "The Spirit of Liberty" at an "I Am an American Day" program in New York's Central Park:

What then is the spirit of liberty? I cannot define it; I can only tell you my own faith.

The spirit of liberty is the spirit which is not too sure that it is right;

The spirit of liberty is the spirit which seeks to understand the minds of other men and women;

The spirit of liberty is the spirit which weighs their interest alongside its own without bias;

The spirit of liberty remembers that not even a sparrow falls to earth unheeded;

The spirit of liberty is the spirit of Him who, nearly two thousand years ago, taught mankind the lesson it has never learned, but has never quite forgotten - that there may be a kingdom where the least shall be heard and considered side by side with the greatest.

Coolidge, (John) Calvin (July 4, 1872-January 5, 1933), was the 30th President of the United States, 1923-29, during the era known as the "Roaring Twenties"; Vice-President under Warren G. Harding, 1920-23, assuming the Presidency upon Harding's death; Governor of Massachusetts, 1918-20, gaining popularity by refusing to allow the police to join unions and go on strike, which would jeopardize public security; Lieutenant Governor of Massachusetts, 1915-18, Massachusetts State Senator, 1911-15; Mayor of Northampton, Massachusetts, 1910-11; Massachusetts State Representative, 1906-08; married Grace Anne Goodhue, 1905; Northampton City Solicitor, 1899-1901; Northampton City Councilman, 1899; admitted to bar, 1897; and graduated from Amherst College, 1895.

In 1914, as he delivered his first address as the president of the Massachusetts State Senate, Calvin Coolidge expressed:

Man has a spiritual nature. Touch it, and it must respond as the magnet responds to the pole. To that, not to selfishness, let the laws of the Commonwealth appeal, recognize the immortal worth and dignity of man....

On Memorial Day, May 31, 1923, Calvin Coolidge, then Vice-President under President Harding, spoke on the motives of the Puritan forefathers in his message entitled "The Destiny of America":

If there be a destiny, it is of no avail to us unless we work with it. The ways of Providence will be of no advantage to us unless we proceed in the same direction. If we perceive a destiny in America, if we believe that Providence has been our guide, our own success, our own salvation requires that we should act and serve in harmony and obedience.

Throughout all the centuries this land remained unknown to civilization. Just at a time when Christianity was at last firmly established, when there was a general advance in learning, when there was a great spiritual awakening, America began to be revealed to the European world....

Settlers came here from mixed motives, some for pillage and adventure, some for trade and refuge, but those who have set their imperishable mark upon our institutions came from far higher motives.

Generally defined, they were seeking a broader freedom. They were intent upon establishing a Christian commonwealth in accordance to the principle of self-government.

They were an inspired body of men. It has been said that God sifted the nations that He might send choice grain into the wilderness. They had a genius for organized society on the foundations of piety, righteousness, liberty, and obedience of the law. They brought with them the accumulated wisdom and experience of the ages... Who can fail to see in it the hand of destiny? Who can doubt that it has been guided by a Divine Providence?...

There can be no peace with the forces of evil. Peace comes only through the establishment of the supremacy of the forces of good. That way lies only through sacrifice. It was that the people of our country might live in a knowledge of the truth that these, our countrymen, are dead. "Greater love hath no man than this, that a man lay down his life for his friends."

On August 3, 1923, while visiting his birthplace and family's farm in Vermont, Vice-President Calvin Coolidge received the news that President Warren G. Harding had died. He was immediately sworn in as President by the justice of the peace in that township, who happened to be his father, John Coolidge. Calvin Coolidge was the sixth Vice-President to become the Chief Executive at the death of a President.

On August 3, 1923, from Plymouth, Vermont, Vice-President Calvin Coolidge issued the statement:

Reports have reached me, which I fear to be correct, that President Harding is gone.... It will be my purpose to carry out the policies which he has begun.... I have faith that God will direct the destinies of our nation....

It is my intention to remain here until I can secure the correct form for the oath of office, which will be administered to me by my father, who is a notary public.

On Saturday, August 4, 1923, from the White House, President Calvin Coolidge issued a Proclamation of a National Day of Mourning and Prayer:

In the inscrutable wisdom of Divine Providence, Warren Gamaliel Harding, twenty-ninth President of the United States, has been taken from us. The nation has lost a wise and enlightened statesman....

Now, therefore, I, Calvin Coolidge, President of the United States, do appoint Friday next, August tenth, the day on which the body of the dead President will be laid to its last earthly resting place, as a day of mourning and prayer throughout the United States. I earnestly recommend the people to assemble on that day in their respective places of divine worship, there to bow down in submission to the will of Almighty God, and to pay out of full hearts the homage of love and reverence to the memory of the great and good President, whose death has so sorely smitten the nation.

In witness whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the seal of the United States to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington, the fourth day of August, in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and twenty-three, and of the independence of the United States the one hundred and forty-eight.
Calvin Coolidge.

By the President: Charles E. Hughes, Secretary of State.

In September of 1923, President Calvin Coolidge wrote to the Right Reverend James E. Freeman, the Bishop of Washington, regarding the workings of the church and the importance of religion in American life:

This work is to be commended because it represents the foundation of all progress, all government and all civilization. That foundation is religion. Our country is not lacking in material resources and though we need more education, it cannot be said to be lacking in intelligence.

But certainly it has need of a greater practical application of the truths of religion. It is only in that direction that there is hope of the solution of our economic and social problems.

Whatever inspires and strengthens the religious belief and religious activity of the people, whatever ministers to their spiritual life is of supreme importance.

Without it all other efforts will fail. With it, there lies the only hope of success. The strength of our country is the strength of its religious convictions.

In 1923, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

The foundations of our society and our government rest so much on the teachings of the Bible that it would be difficult to support them if faith in these teachings would cease to be practically universal in our country.

On Sunday, May 25, 1924, at the Confederate Memorial, Arlington National Cemetery, Virginia, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

If I am correctly informed by history, it is fitting that the Sabbath should be your Memorial Day. This follows from the belief that, except for the forces of Oliver Cromwell, no army was ever more thoroughly religious than that which followed General Lee. Moreover, these ceremonies necessarily are expressive of a hope and a belief that rise above the things of this life. It was Lincoln who pointed out that both sides prayed to the same God. When that is the case, it is only a matter of time when each will seek a common end. We can now see clearly what that end is. It is the maintenance of our American ideals, beneath a common flag, under the blessings of Almighty God....

We know that Providence would have it so. We see and we obey. A mightier force than ever followed Grant or Lee has leveled both their hosts, raised up an united Nation, and made us partakers of a new glory.

On June 6, 1924, at Howard University, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

It has come to be a legend, and I believe with more foundations of fact than most legends, that Howard University was the outgrowth of the inspiration of a prayer meeting.... Here has been established a great university, a sort of educational laboratory for the production of intellectual and spiritual leadership....

The accomplishments of the colored people in the United States, in the brief historic period since they were brought here from the restrictions of their native continent, can not but make us realize that there is something essential in our civilization which gives it a special power. I think we shall be able to agree that this particular element is the Christian religion, whose influence always and everywhere has been a force for the illumination and advancement of the peoples who have come under its sway....

In such a view of the history of the Negro race in America, we may find the evidences that the black man's probation on this continent was a necessary part in a great plan by which the race was to be saved to the world for a service which we are now able to vision.... This race is to be preserved for a great and useful work. If some of its members have suffered, if some have been denied, if some have been sacrificed, we are able at last to realize that their sacrifices were borne in a great cause. They gave vicariously, that a vast greater number might be preserved and benefitted through them. The salvation of a race, the destiny of a continent, were bought at the price of these sacrifices.... It is a great destiny, to which we may now look forward with confidence that it will be fully realized....

We can not go out from this place and occasion without refreshment of faith and renewal of confidence that in every exigency our Negro fellow citizens will render the best and fullest measures of service whereof they are capable.

On July 4, 1924, at the Convention of the National Education Association, Washington, D. C., President Calvin Coolidge stated:

Our country has not ceased to glory in its strength, but has come to the realization that it must have something more than numbers and wealth, something more than a fleet and an army, to satisfy the longing of the soul. It knows that to power must be added wisdom, and to greatness must be added morality. It is no longer so solicitous to catalogue the power which it possess, as to direct those great forces for the spiritual advancement of the American people at home and the discharge of the obligations to humanity abroad. America is turning from the things that are seen to the things that are unseen.... which we must recognize as the guiding hand of Providence....

Unless our material resources are supported by moral and spiritual resources, there is not foundation for progress. A trained intelligence can do much, but there is no substitute for morality, character, and religious convictions. Unless these abide, American citizenship will be found unequal to its task.

On July 25, 1924, in telephone message transmitted to a farewell meeting in New York for a group of Boy Scouts who were to set sail the next day to attend an international gathering in Copenhagen, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

The three fundamentals of scout-hood:
The first is a reverence for nature....
The second is a reverence for law....

The third is a reverence for God. It is hard to see how a great man can be an atheist. Without the sustaining influence of faith in a divine power we could have little faith in ourselves. We need to feel that behind us is intelligence and love. Doubters do not achieve; skeptics do not contribute; cynics do not create. Faith is the great motive power, and no man realizes his full possibilities unless he has the deep conviction that life is eternally important, and that his work, well done, is part of an unending plan.

On September 1, 1924, to a group of Labor Leaders, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

I want to raise the economic condition and increase the moral and spiritual well-being of our country.

On September 6, 1924, at the dedication of a monument to Lafayette in Baltimore, Maryland, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

The people who largely contributed to the early settlement of America came to escape the impositions of despotic kings. Many of the early inhabitants were separatists from the established church. They fled under the threat of the English King, that he would make them conform or harry them out of the land. Their descendants fought the Revolutionary war in order that they might escape the impositions of a despotic parliament.

On Sunday, September 21, 1924, in an address to the Holy Name Society, Washington, D. C., President Calvin Coolidge stated:

More than six centuries ago, when in spite of much learning and much piety there was much ignorance, much wickedness and much warfare, when there seemed to be too little light in the world, when the condition of the common people appeared to be sunk in hopelessness, when most of life was rude, harsh and cruel, when the speech of men was too often profane and vulgar, until the earth rang with the tumult of those who took the name of the Lord in vain, the foundation of this day was laid in the formation of the Holy Name Society.

It had an inspired purpose. It sought to rededicate the minds of the people to a true conception of the sacredness of the name of the Supreme Being. It was an effort to save all reference to the Deity from curses and blasphemy, and to restore the lips of men to reverence and praise....

This is the beginning of a proper conception of ourselves, of our relationship to each other, and our relationship to our Creator. Human nature cannot develop very far without it. The mind does not unfold, the creative faculty does not mature, the spirit does not expand, save under the influence of reverence. It is the chief motive of an obedience. It is only by a correct attitude of mind begun early in youth and carried through maturity that these desired results are likely to be secured. It is along the path of reverence and obedience that the race has reached the goal of freedom, of self-government, of a higher morality, and a more abundant spiritual life....

He who gives license to his tongue only discloses the contents of his own mind. By the excess of his words he proclaims his lack of discipline.... The worst evil that could be inflicted upon the youth of the land would be to leave them without restraint and completely at the mercy of their own uncontrolled inclinations. Under such conditions education would be impossible, and all orderly development intellectually or morally would be hopeless. I do not need to picture the result. We know too well what weakness and depravity follow when the ordinary processes of discipline are neglected. . . .

The very first paragraph of the Declaration of Independence asserted that they proposed "to assume, among the powers of the earth, the separate and equal station to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitle them." And as they closed that noble document in which they submitted their claims to the opinions of mankind they again revealed what they believed to be the ultimate source of authority by stating that they were also "appealing to the Supreme Judge of the World for the rectitude of" . . . their "intentions."

When finally our Constitution was adopted, it contained specific provision that the President and members of the Congress and of state legislatures, and all executive and judicial officials, should be qualified for the discharge of their office by oath or affirmation. By the statute law of the United States, and I doubt not by all States, such oaths are administered by a solemn appeal to God for help in the keeping of their covenants. I scarcely need to refer to the fact that the Houses of Congress, and so as I know the state legislatures, open their daily sessions with prayer. The foundations of our independence and our Government rests upon basic religious convictions. Back of the authority of our laws is the authority of the Supreme Judge of the World, to whom we still appeal for their final justification. . . .

All liberty is individual liberty. . . . The principle of equality is recognized. It follows inevitably from belief in the brotherhood of man through the fatherhood of God. When once the right of the individual to liberty and equality is admitted, there is no escape from the conclusion that he alone is entitled to the rewards of his own industry. . . .

America is not going to abandon its principles or desert its ideals. The foundation on which they are built will remain firm. I believe that the principle which your organization represents is their main support. It seems to me perfectly plain that the authority of law, the right to equality, liberty and property, under American institutions, have for their foundation reverence for God. If we could imagine that to be swept away, these institutions of our American government could not long survive. But that reverence will not fail. It will abide. . . .

By maintaining a society to promote reverence for the Holy Name you are performing both a pious and a patriotic service. . . .

The institutions of our country stand justified both in reason and in experience. I am aware that they will continue to be assailed. But I know they will continue to stand. We may perish, but they will endure. They are founded on the Rock of Ages.

On September 25, 1924, on the anniversary of the first Continental Congress in Philadelphia, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

American Quotations.txt

It was no ordinary gathering. Among them were Jay and Livingston, Galloway and Mifflin, Biddle and Chase, Harrison, Lee, Randolph, the Rutledges, the Adamses, and finally, George Washington. They were men of faith. They believed in their cause. They trusted the people. They doubted not that a Higher Power would support them in their effort for right and freedom. . . .

After 150 years they still rank as a most remarkable gathering of men. Their deliberations and actions are worthy of the most careful study by the American people. If we could better understand what they said and did to establish our free institutions, we should be less likely to be misled by the misrepresentations and distorted arguments of the hour, and be far better equipped to maintain them. . . .

If we wish to maintain what they established, we shall do well to leave the people in the ownership of their property, in control of their Government, and under the protection of their courts. By a resolute determination to resist all these encroachments we can best show our reverence and appreciation for the men and the work of the first Continental Congress.

On October 4, 1924, at the dedication of the monument to the First Division of the American Expeditionary Forces, Washington, D. C., President Calvin Coolidge stated:

They did not regard it as a national or personal opportunity for gain or fame or glory, but as a call to sacrifice for the support of humane principles and spiritual ideals. . . .

If anyone doubts the depth and sincerity of the attachment of the American people to their institutions and Government, if anyone doubts the sacrifices which they have been willing to make in behalf of those institutions and for what they believe to be the welfare of other nations, let them gaze upon this monument and other like memorials that have been reared in every quarter of our broad land. Let them look upon the representative gatherings of our veterans, and let them remember that America has dedicated itself to the service of God and man.

On October 15, 1924, at the unveiling to the Equestrian Statue of Bishop Francis Asbury, Washington, D. C., President Calvin Coolidge stated:

As we review their accomplishments they constantly admonish us not only that "all things work together for good to them that love God," but that in the direction of the affairs of our country there has been an influence that had a broader vision, greater wisdom and a wider purpose, than that of mortal man, which we can only ascribe to a Divine Providence. . . .

To one of them, Francis Asbury, the first American Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and his associates, made a tremendous contribution. Our government rests upon religion. It is from that source that we derive our reverence for truth and justice, for equality and liberty, and for the rights of mankind. Unless the people believe in these principles they cannot believe in our government. There are only two main theories of government in the world. One rests on righteousness, the other rests on force. One appeals to reason, the other appeals to the sword. One is exemplified in a republic, the other is represented by a despotism. The history of government on this earth has been almost entirely a history of the rule of force held in the hands of a few. Under our Constitution America committed itself to the practical application of the rule of reason, with the power in the hands of the people....

It is of a great deal of significance that the generation which fought the American Revolution had seen a very extensive religious revival. They had heard the preaching of Jonathan Edwards. They had seen the great revival meetings that were inspired also by the preaching of Whitefield. The religious experiences of those days made a profound impression upon the great body of the people. They made new thoughts and created new interests. They freed the public mind, through a deeper knowledge and more serious contemplation of the truth. By calling the people to righteousness they were a direct preparation for self-government. It was for a continuation of this work that Francis Asbury was raised up.

The religious movement which he represented was distinctly a movement to reach the great body of the people. Just as our Declaration of Independence asserts that all men are created free, so it seems to me the founders of this movement were inspired by the thought that all men were worthy to hear the Word, worthy to be sought out and brought to salvation. It was this motive that took their preachers among the poor and neglected, even to criminals in the jails. As our ideal has been to bring all men to freedom, so their ideal was to bring all men to salvation....

Just as the time was approaching when our country was about to begin the work of establishing a government which was to represent the rule of the people, where not a few but the many were to control public affairs, where the vote of the humblest was to count for as much as the most exalted, Francis Asbury came to America to preach religion....

He was the son of a father who earned his livelihood by manual labor, of a mother who bore a reputation for piety. By constant effort they provided the ordinary comforts of life and an opportunity for intellectual and religious instruction. It was thus that he came out of a home of the people. Very early, at the age of seventeen, he began his preaching. In 1771, when he was twenty-six years old, responding to a call for volunteers, he was sent by Wesley to America. Landing in Philadelphia, he began that ministry which in the next forty-five years was to take him virtually all through the colonies and their western confines and into Canada, from Maine on the north, almost to the Gulf of Mexico on the south.

He came to America five years after the formation of the first Methodist Society in the city of New York, which had been contemporaneous with his own joining of the British Conference as an itinerant preacher and a gospel missionary. At that time it is reported that there were 316 members of his denomination in this country. The prodigious character of his labors is revealed when we remember that he traveled some 6,000 miles each year, or in all about 270,000 miles, preaching about 15,500 sermons and ordaining more than 4,000 clergymen, besides presiding at no less than 224 Annual Conferences. The highest salary that he received was $80 each year for this kind of service, which meant exposure to summer heat and winter cold, traveling alone through the frontier forests, sharing the rough fare of the pioneer's cabin, until his worn-out frame was laid at last to rest. But he left behind him as one evidence of his labors 695 preachers and 214,235 members of his denomination. The vitality of the cause which he served is further revealed by recalling that the 316 with which he began has now grown to more than 800,000.

His problem during the Revolutionary War was that of continuing to perform his duties without undertaking to interfere in civil or military affairs. He had taken for the text of his first sermon in America these very significant words: "For I determined not to know anything among you save Jesus Christ and Him crucified." When several of his associates left for England in 1775, he decided to stay. "I can by no means agree to leave such a field for gathering souls to Christ as we have in America," he writes, "therefore I am determined by the grace of God not to leave them, let the consequence be what it may."...

He had no lack of loyalty to the early form of American government. When the inauguration of Washington took place April 30, 1789, the Conference being in session, Bishop Asbury moved the presentation of a congratulatory address to the new President. His suggestion was adopted, and the Bishop being one of those designated for the purpose, presenting the address in person, read it to Washington.

How well he fitted into the scheme of things, this circuit rider who spent his life making stronger the foundation on which our government rests and seeking to implant in the hearts of all men, however poor and unworthy they may have seemed, an increased ability to discharge the high duties of their citizenship. His outposts marched with the pioneers, his missionaries visited the hovels of the poor so that all men might be brought to a knowledge of the truth.

A great lesson has been taught us by this holy life. It was because of what Bishop Asbury and his associates preached and what other religious organizations, through their ministry, preached, that our country has developed so much freedom and contributed so much to the civilization of the world....

The government of a country never gets ahead of the religion of a country. There is no way by which we can substitute the authority of law for the virtue of man... Real reforms which society in these days is seeking will come as a result of our religious convictions, or they will not come at all. Peace, justice, humanity, charity - these cannot be legislated into being. They are the result of a Divine Grace....

How many homes he must have hallowed! What a multitude of frontier mothers must have brought their children to him to receive his blessings! It is more than probable that Nancy Hanks, the mother of Lincoln, had heard him in her youth. Adams and Jefferson must have known him, and Jackson must have seen in him a flaming spirit as unconquerable as his own. How many temples of worship dot our landscape; how many institutions of learning, some of them rejoicing in the name Wesleyan, all trace the inspiration of their existence to the sacrifice and service of this lone circuit rider. He is entitled to rank as one of the builders of our nation.

On the foundation of a religious civilization which he sought to build, our country has enjoyed greater blessing of liberty and prosperity than was ever before the lot of man. These cannot continue if we neglect the work which he did. We cannot depend on the government to do the work of religion. I do not see how anyone could recount the story of this early Bishop without feeling a renewed faith in our own country.

On Thursday morning, October 16, 1924, to a delegation of foreign-born citizens at the White House, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

I suppose that if Methuselah were at this time an American in his period of middle life, and should drop in on our little party, he would regard us all as upstarts....

It is my own belief that in this land of freedom new arrivals should especially keep up their devotion to religion. Disregarding the need of the individual for a religious life, I feel that there is a more urgent necessity, based on the requirements of good citizenship and the maintenance of our institutions, for devotion to religion in America than anywhere else in the world. One of the greatest dangers that beset those coming to this country, especially those of the younger generation, is that they will fall away from the religion of their fathers, and never become active to any other faith.

On October 26, 1924, in an address delivered via telephone from the White House to the Federation of Jewish Philanthropic Societies of New York City, assembled at the Hotel Pennsylvania, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

Your Federation for the Support of Jewish Philanthropic Societies in New York is the central financial agency, I am told, for no less than ninety-one various philanthropies, which receive annual support aggregating $7,000,000. Among them are hospitals, orphanages, a great relief society, a loaning organization, a home for Aged and Infirm. The Young Men's Hebrew Association and the Young Women's Hebrew Association do social and educational work of the greatest value. Especial attention is devoted indeed to educational effort for which technical schools are maintained. That is, of course, precisely what we should expect from a great Jewish organization; for the Jews are always among the first to appreciate and to utilize educational opportunities....

The Jewish people have always and everywhere been particularly devoted to the ideal of taking care of their own. This Federation is one of the monuments to their independence and self-reliance. They have sought to protect and preserve that wonderful inheritance of tradition, culture, literature and religion, which has placed the world under so many obligations to them....

I want you to know that I feel you are making good citizens, that you are strengthening the Government, that you are demonstrating the supremacy of the spiritual life and helping establish the Kingdom of God on earth.

On November 3, 1924, in a Radio Address from the White House to the Nation, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

I therefore urge upon all the voters of our country, without reference to party, that they assemble tomorrow at their respective voting places in the exercise of the high office of American citizenship, that they approach the ballot box in the spirit that they would approach a sacrament, and there, disregarding all appeals to passion and prejudice, dedicating themselves truly and wholly to the welfare of their country, they make their choice of public officers solely in the light of their own conscience.

When an election is so held, when a choice is so made, it results in the real rule of the people, it warrants and sustains the belief that the voice of the people is the voice of God.

In 1924, after the death of his son, Calvin Coolidge, Jr., President Calvin Coolidge wrote an inscription to a friend who had also lost a son:

To my friend, in recollection of his son, and my son, who, by the grace of God, have the privilege of being boys throughout eternity.

On January 17, 1925, to the American Society of Newspaper Editors, Washington, D. C., President Calvin Coolidge stated:

The relationship between governments and the press has always been recognized as a matter of large importance. Wherever despotism abounds, the sources of public information are the first to be brought under its control....

An absolutism could never rest upon anything save a perverted and distorted view of human relationships and upon false standards set up and maintained by force. It has always found it necessary to attempt to dominate the entire field of education and instruction. It has thrived on ignorance. While it has sought to train the minds of a few, it has been largely with the purpose of attempting to give them a superior facility for misleading the many.

Men have been educated under absolutism, not that they might bear witness to the truth, but that they might be the more ingenious advocates and defenders of false standards and hollow pretenses. This has always been the method of privilege, the method of class and caste, the method of master and slave....

It is all the more necessary under a system of free government that the people should be enlightened, that they should be correctly informed, than it is under an absolute government that they should be ignorant....

The press, which had before been made an instrument for concealing or perverting the facts, must be made an instrument for their true representation....The public press under an autocracy is necessarily a true agency of propaganda....

Propaganda seeks to present a part of the facts, to distort their relations, and to force conclusions which could not be drawn from a complete and candid survey of all the facts. It has been observed that propaganda seeks to close the mind....

The great difficulty in combating unfair propaganda, or even in recognizing it, arises from the fact that at the present time we confront so many new and technical problems that it is an enormous task to keep ourselves accurately informed concerning them.

In this respect, you gentlemen of the press face the same perplexities that are encountered by legislators and government administrators. Whoever deals with current public questions is compelled to rely greatly upon the information and judgements of experts and specialists.

Unfortunately, not all experts are to be trusted as entirely disinterested. Not all specialists are completely without guile. In our increasing dependence on specialized authority, we tend to become easier victims for the propagandists, and need to cultivate sedulously the habit of the open mind.

No doubt every generation feels that its problems are the most intricate and baffling that have ever been presented for solution. But with all recognition of the disposition to exaggerate in this respect, I think we can fairly say that our times in all their social and economic aspects are more complex than any past period. We need to keep our minds free from prejudice and bias. Of education, and of real information we cannot get too much. But of propaganda, which is tainted or perverted information, we cannot have too little....

Editorial policy and news policy must not be influenced by business consideration; business policies must not be affected by editorial programs....Some people feel concerned about the commercialism of the press. They note that great newspapers are great business enterprises earning large profits and controlled by men of wealth...that in such control the press may tend to support the private interests of those who own the papers, rather than the general interest of the whole people....

Newspapers are controlled by men of wealth....Our journalism, merely because it is prosperous, is likely to betray us....There always have been, and probably always will be some who will feel that their own temporary interests may be furthered by betraying the interest of others....Self-interest will always place sufficient emphasis on the business side of newspapers.

On Wednesday, March 4, 1925, in his Inaugural Address, President Calvin Coolidge proclaimed:

If we wish to continue to be distinctly American, we must continue to make that term comprehensive enough to embrace the legitimate desires of a civilized and enlightened people determined in all their relations to pursue a conscientious and religious life....

We cannot barter away our independence or our sovereignty.... Unless the desire for peace be cherished there, unless this fundamental and only natural source of brotherly love be cultivated to its highest degree, all artificial efforts will be in vain.

Peace will come when there is realization that only under a reign of law, based on righteousness and supported by the religious conviction of the brotherhood of man, can there be any hope of a complete and satisfying life. Parchment will fail, the sword will fail, it is only the spiritual nature of man that can be triumphant....

All owners of property are charged with a service. These rights and duties have been revealed, through the conscience of society, to have a Divine sanction....

Under a despotism the law may be imposed upon the subject. He has no voice in its making, no influence in its administration, it does not represent him....

Here stands our country, an example of tranquillity at home, a patron of tranquillity abroad. Here stands its Government, aware of its might but obedient to its conscience. Here it will continue to stand, seeking peace and prosperity, solicitous for the welfare of the wage earner, promoting enterprise, developing waterways and natural resources. Attentive to the intuitive counsel of womanhood, encouraging education, desiring the advancement of religion, supporting the cause of justice and honor among the nations.

America seeks no empires built on blood and force. No ambition, no temptation, lures her to thought of foreign dominions. The legions which she sends forth are armed, not with the sword, but with the Cross. The higher state to which she seeks the allegiance of all mankind is not of human, but Divine origin. She cherishes no purpose save to merit the favor of Almighty God.

On Sunday, May 3, 1925, at the laying to the cornerstone of the Jewish Community Center, Washington, D. C., President Calvin Coolidge stated:

We have gathered this afternoon to lay with appropriate ceremony and solemnity the cornerstone of a temple. The splendid structure which is to rise here will be the home of the Jewish Community Center of Washington....

About this institution will be organized, and from it will be radiated, the influences of those civic works in which the genius of the Jewish people has always found such eloquent expression....

This year 1925 is a year of national anniversaries, States, cities, and towns throughout all the older parts of the country will be celebrating their varied parts in the historic events which a century and a half ago marked the beginning of the American Revolution.... It will remind us, as a nation, of how a common spiritual inspiration was potent to bring and mold and weld together into a national unity, the many and scattered colonial communities that had been planted along the Atlantic seaboard....

There were well-nigh as many divergencies of religious faith as there were of origin, politics and geography... From its beginning, the new continent had seemed destined to be the home of religious tolerance. Those who claimed the right of individual choice for themselves finally had to grant it to others. Beyond that - and this was one of the factors which I think weighed heaviest on the side of unity - the Bible was the one work of literature that was common to all of them.

The Scriptures were read and studied everywhere. There are many testimonies that their teachings became the most important intellectual and spiritual force for unification. I remember to have read somewhere, I think in the writings of the historian Lecky, the observation the "Hebraic mortar cemented the foundations of American democracy." Lecky had in mind this very influence of the Bible in drawing together the feelings and sympathies of the widely scattered communities. All the way from New Hampshire to Georgia, they found a common ground of faith and reliance in the Scriptural writings.

In those days books were few, and even those of a secular character were largely the product of a scholarship which used the Scriptures as the model and standard of social interpretation. It was to this, of course, that Lecky referred. He gauged correctly a force too often underestimated and his observation was profoundly wise. It suggested, in a way which none of us can fail to understand, the debt which the young American nation owed to the sacred writing that the Hebrew people gave to the world.

This biblical influence was strikingly impressive in all the New England colonies, and only less so in the others. In the Connecticut Code of 1650, the Mosaic model is adopted. The magistrates were authorized to administer justice "according to the laws here established, and, for want of them, according to the word of God." In the New Haven Code of 1655, there were 79 topical statutes for the Government, half of which contained references to the Old Testament.

The founders of the New Haven, John Davenport and Theophilus Eaton, were expert Hebrew scholars. The extent to which they leaned upon the moral and administrative system, laid down by the Hebrew lawgivers, was responsible for their conviction that the Hebrew language and literature ought to be made as familiar as possible to all the people. So it was that John Davenport arranged that in the first public school in New Haven the Hebrew language should be taught. The preachers of those days, saturated in the religion and literature of the Hebrew prophets, were leaders, teachers, moral mentors and even political philosophers for their flocks.

A people raised under such leadership, given to much study and contemplation of the Scriptures, inevitably became more familiar with the great figures of Hebrew history, with Joshua, Samuel, Moses, Joseph, David, Solomon, Gideon, Elisha - than they were with the stories of their own ancestors as recorded in the pages of profane history.

The sturdy old divines of those days found the Bible a chief source of illumination for their arguments in support of the patriot cause. They knew the Book. They were profoundly familiar with it, and eminently capable in the exposition of all its justifications for rebellion. To them, the record of the exodus from Egypt was indeed an inspired precedent. They knew what arguments from holy writ would most powerfully influence their people. It required no great stretch of logical processes to demonstrate that the children of Israel, making bricks without straw in Egypt, had their modern counterpart in the people of the colonies, enduring the imposition of taxation without representation!

And the Jews themselves, of whom a considerable number were already scattered throughout the colonies, were true to the teachings of their own prophets. The Jewish faith is predominantly the faith of liberty. From the beginning to the conflict between the colonies and the mother country, they were overwhelmingly on the side of the rising revolution. You will recognize them when I read the names of some among the merchants who unhesitatingly signed the non-importation resolution of 1765: Isaac Moses, Benjamin Levy, Samson Levy, David Franks, Joseph Jacobs, Hayman Levy, Jr., Mathias Bush, Michael Gratz, Bernard Gratz, Isaac Franks, Moses Mordecai, Benjamin Jacobs, Samuel Lyon and Manuel Mordecai Noah.

Not only did the colonial Jews join early and enthusiastically in the non-intercourse program, but when the time came for raising and sustaining an army, they were ready to serve wherever they could be most useful. There is a romance in the story of Haym Solomon, Polish Jew financier of the Revolution. Born in Poland, he was made prisoner by the British forces in New York, and when he escaped set up in business in Philadelphia. He negotiated for Robert Morris all the loans raised in France and Holland, pledged his personal faith and fortune for enormous amounts, and personally advanced large sums to such men as James Madison, Thomas Jefferson, Baron Steuben, General St. Clair, and many other patriot leaders who testified that without his aid they could not have carried on in the cause.

A considerable number of Jews became officers in the continental forces. The records show at least four Jews who served as Lieutenant Colonels, three and Majors and certainly six, probably more, as Captains. Major Benjamin Nones has been referred to as the Jewish Lafayette. He came from France in 1777, enlisted in the continentals as a volunteer private, served on the staffs of both Washington and Lafayette, and later was attached to the command of Baron De Kalb, in which were a number of Jews. When De Kalb was fatally wounded in the thickest of the fighting at the Battle of Camden, the three officers who were at hand to bear him from the field were Major Nones, Captain De La Motta, and Captain Jacob De Leon, all of the Jews.

It is interesting to know that at the time of the Revolution there was a larger Jewish element in the southern colonies than would have been found there at most later periods; and these Jews of the Carolinas and Georgia were ardent supporters of the Revolution. One corps of infantry raised in Charleston, South Carolina, was composed preponderantly of Jews, and they gave a splendid account of themselves in the fighting in that section.

It is easy to understand why a people with the historic background of the Jew should thus overwhelmingly and unhesitatingly have allied themselves with the cause of freedom. From earliest colonial times, America has been a new land of promise to this long-persecuted race.

The Jewish community of the United States is not only the second most numerous in the world, but in respect of its old world origins it is probably the most cosmopolitan. . . . The 14,000 Jews who live in this Capital City have passed, under the favoring auspices of American institutions, beyond the need for any other benevolence. They are planting here a home for community service. . . . Here will be the seat of organized influence for the preservation and dissemination of all that is best and most useful, of all that is leading and enlightening, in the culture and philosophy of this "peculiar people" who have so greatly given to the advancement of humanity.

Our country has done much for the Jews who have come here to accept its citizenship and assume their share of its responsibilities in the world. . . . Every inheritance of the Jewish people, every teaching of their secular history and religious experience, draws them powerfully to the side of charity, liberty and progress. . . . This capacity for adaptation in detail, without sacrifice of essentials, has been one of the special lessons which the marvelous history of the Jewish people has taught. . . .

In advancing years, as those who come and go shall gaze upon this civic and social landmark, may it be a constant reminder of the inspiring service that has been rendered to civilization by men and women of the Jewish faith. May they recall the long array of those who have been eminent in statecraft, in science, in literature, in art, in the professions, in business, in finance, in philanthropy and in the spiritual life of the world. May they pause long enough to contemplate that the patriots who laid the foundation of this Republic drew their faith from the Bible. May they give due credit to the people among whom the Holy Scriptures came into being. And as they ponder the assertion that "Hebraic mortar cemented the foundations of American democracy," they cannot escape the conclusion that if American democracy is to remain the greatest hope of humanity, it must continue abundantly in the faith of the Bible.

On May 30, 1925, at the Memorial Day Ceremony, Arlington National Cemetery, Washington, D. C., President Calvin Coolidge stated:

The leaders of the Nation have been supported by a deep devotion to the essentials of freedom. At the bottom of the national character has been a strain of religious earnestness and moral determination which has never failed to give color and quality to our institutions.

On June 3, 1925, before the graduating class of the U. S. Naval Academy, Annapolis, Maryland, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

American Quotations.txt

Not long ago I heard a Navy chaplain refer to the sage advice of the Apostle to put first things first.... If we are to heed the admonition to put first things first, a very little deliberation would reveal to us that one of the main essentials which lies at the very beginning of civilization is that of security.

It is only when people can feel that their lives and the property which their industry has produced today will continue to be safe on the morrow that there can be that stability of value and that economic progress on which human development has always rested....

Independence of the mind and of the body, the works of charity and humanity, a broader culture, all mark a material and spiritual advance which follows in the progress of this development....

Unless we lay our course in accordance with this principle, the great power for good in the world with which we have been intrusted by a Divine Providence will be turned to a power for evil.

On June 8, 1925, before the Norwegian Centennial Celebration, at the Minnesota State Fair Grounds, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

The generations of the earth treasure the rude hut that sheltered the infancy of Abraham Lincoln, seek out the birthplace of Shakespeare, and give the uninviting soil of Palestine the title of the Holy Land, all because certain obscure happenings in those places produced those who left a broad mark upon the future course of humanity....

If one were seeking proof of a basic brotherhood among all races of men, if one were to challenge the riddle of Babel in support of aspirations for a unity capable of assuring peace to the nations, in such an inquiry I suppose no better testimony could be taken than the experience of this country. Out of the confusion of tongues, the conflict of traditions, the variations of historical setting, the vast differences in talents and tastes there has been evolved a spiritual union accompanied by a range of capacity and genius which marks this Nation for a preeminent destiny....

America proved its truly national unity. It demonstrated conclusively that there is a spiritual quality shared by all races and conditions of men which is their universal heritage and common nature....

The voyage of the little sloop Restaurationen, which in 1825 brought the first organized party of Norwegian immigrants to this country.... created a sensation among those inured to the sea. It was claimed that she was the smallest vessel that had ever made the trans-Atlantic crossing. The New York authorities threatened to deny her the privileges of the port on the ground that she carried too many passengers and too much cargo. She was ultimately released, apparently through the influence of the Society of Friends. Most of her passengers seemed to have been members of a Norwegian religious community intimately related to the Quakers, and it appears that one of their reasons for coming to this country was that they had not enjoyed entire liberty of religious opinion at home....

Almost without money or supplies, the little company of immigrants were taken in charge by the New York Quakers who raised funds to send them to Kendall, Orleans County, New York....

Man seems to have been from his beginnings the most migratory of animals. His earlier movements appear to have had their chief motive in adventure and the desire to find the regions where existence was most comfortable.... Some very early migrations were doubtless due to climate or other physical conditions. Later on political, social, religious, and economic reasons caused the movements.... The children of Israel migrated into Egypt to escape from famine. They left Egypt to escape from bondage and to recover their religious liberty....

When I consider the marvelous results it has accomplished I can not but believe that it was inspired by a Higher Power. Here is something vital, firm, and abiding, which I can only describe as a great reality.... Our America with all that it represents of hope in the world is now and will be what you make it. Its institutions of religious liberty, of education and economic opportunity, of constitutional rights, of the integrity of the law, are the most precious possessions of the human race.... They come from the consecration of the father, the love of the mother, and the devotion of the children. They are the product of that honest, earnest, and tireless effort that goes into the rearing of the family altar and the making of the home of our country.

On July 3, 1925, at the celebration of the 150th anniversary of George Washington taking command of the Continental Army, Cambridge, Massachusetts, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

No occasion could be conceived more worthy, more truly and comprehensively American, than that which is chosen to commemorate this divinely appointed captain. The contemplation of his life and work will forever strengthen our faith in our county and in our country's God....

We shall hardly find one who in his own day achieved so much as Washington and left his work so firmly established that posterity, generation after generation, can only increase its tributes to his ability, his wisdom, his patriotism, and his rounded perfection in the character of a Christian citizen....

We have come here because this day a century and half ago, in this place, Washington formally assumed command of the armies of the Colonies. His feet trod this soil. Here was his headquarters. Here was his place of worship....

One in his position of leadership, authority, and independent fortune, living as a Virginia gentleman, might easily enough have felt that the troubles of the Massachusetts Bay Colony had small concern for him. High Churchman, conformist in most things, enjoying excellent repute in England and with English officials in America, his influence might logically enough have been thrown to the royalists.

Yet, as early as the spring of 1769, he wrote declaring, "Our lordly masters in Great Britain will be satisfied with nothing less than the deprivation of American freedom..." And, inquiring what could be done to avert such a calamity, he added, "That no man should scruple or hesitate a moment to use arms in defense of so valuable a blessing is clearly my opinion. Yet, arms, I would beg to add, should be the last resource."

On October 6, 1925, at the American Legion Convention, Omaha, Nebraska, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

If our country secured any benefit, if it met with any gain, it must have been in moral and spiritual values. It must be not because it made its fortune but because it found its soul. Others may disagree with me, but in spite of some incidental and trifling difficulties it is my firm opinion that America has come out of the war with a stronger determination to live by the rule of righteousness and pursue the course of truth and justice....

It is not easy to conceive of anything that would be more unfortunate in a community based on the ideals of which Americans boast than any considerable development of intolerance as regards religion. To a great extent this country owes its beginnings to the determination of our hardy ancestors to maintain complete freedom in religion. Instead of a state church we have decreed that every citizen shall be free to follow the dictates of his own conscience as to his religious beliefs and affiliations....

We shall have to look beyond the outward manifestations of race and creed. Divine Providence has not bestowed upon any race a monopoly of patriotism and character....

We can not place our main reliance upon material forces. We must reaffirm and reinforce our ancient faith in truth and justice, in charitableness and tolerance. We must make our supreme commitment to the everlasting spiritual forces of life. We must mobilize the conscience of mankind.

Your gatherings are a living testimony of a determination to support these principles. It would be impossible to come into this presence, which is a symbol of more than 300 years of our advancing civilization, which represents to such a degree the hope of our consecrated living and the prayers of our hallowed dead, without a firmer conviction of the deep and abiding purpose of our country to live in accordance with this vision....

We shall also be made aware of the still small voice arising from the fireside of every devoted home in the land seeking the things which are eternal. To such a country, to such a cause, the American Legion has dedicated itself.

On October 28, 1925, at the dedication of a monument to General Jose de San Martin given by Argentina to the United States, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

To the United States it has been a matter of pride and gratification that their ancestors were providentially chosen to initiate the movement for independence in the New World....

The discovery of America to the world was providentially fixed in a time of spiritual and intellectual awakening. It was an epoch of new lights and new aspirations, of mighty clashes between the traditions of the old and the spirit of the new time. The New World proved a fruitful field for testing out of new ideas of man's relations both to his Creator and to his fellow man....

You can not expect that these new institutions will have adequate opportunity for development unless they grow in the light of human independence and spiritual liberty....

As some distinguished military critics have described Washington's campaign of Trenton and Princeton as a military exploit of unparalleled brilliancy, so in the annals of the southern wars of independence others describe San Martin's passage of the Andes with his little patriot army as a more notable achievement than the crossings of the Alps by either Hannibal or Napoleon.

On November 19, 1925, before the Chamber of Commerce of the State of New York, New York City, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

When government comes unduly under the influence of business, the tendency is to develop an administration which closes the door of opportunity; becomes narrow and selfish in its outlook, and results in an oligarchy. When government enters the field of business with its great resources, it has a tendency to extravagance and inefficiency, but, having the power to crush all competitors, likewise closes the door of opportunity and results in monopoly....

America has disbanded her huge armies and reduced her powerful fleet, but in attempting to deal justly through sharing of our financial resources we have done more for peace than we could have done with all our military power.

On December 7, 1925, at the annual convention of the American Farm Bureau Federation, Chicago, Illinois, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

It is our farm life that is particularly representative of this standard of American citizenship.... It affects not only the material prosperity but reaches beyond that into the moral and spiritual life of America....

In the old days there were some professional men and there were the clergy who exercised in a high degree an inspired leadership not only in the religious and educational, but to a marked extent in the political, life of their day. But the people were of the farm....

Wherever there is a farm, there is the greatest opportunity for a true home. It was the loyalty and perseverance bred of the home life of the American farmer that supported Washington through seven years of conflict and provided the necessary self-restraint to translate his victory into the abiding institutions of freedom. It is the spirit of those homes that our country must forever cherish....

Always in theory, and usually in practice, all land belonged to the Crown. It was the custom for the ruler to bestow upon his retainers not only landed estates, but to provide in addition the serfs who were attached to the soil, in order that they might supply the necessary labor for its productivity. The workers in the field were held in servitude, while their masters usually lived many miles from the land, sometimes in their castles, sometimes in towns and cities. This was the established condition all over the Old World....

But America never fully came under this blighting influence. It was a different type of individual that formed the great bulk of our early settlers. They gained their livelihood by cultivating the soil, but there was no large and overmastering city or industrial population. The expansion of our country down to almost as late as 1880 was an agricultural expansion. A large majority of our inhabitants were engaged in that occupation. They not only tilled the soil, but they owned it....

It is this life that the Nation is so solicitous to maintain and improve.... It has been the life of freedom and independence, of religious convictions and abiding character.

On April 19, 1926, before the Daughters of the American Revolution, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

By their abiding faith they inspired and encouraged the men; by their sacrifice they performed their part in the struggle out of which came our country. We read of the flaming plea of Hanna Arnett, which she made on a dreary day in December, 1776, when Lord Cornwallis, victorious at Fort Lee, held a strategic position in New Jersey. A group of Revolutionists, weary and discouraged, were discussing the advisability of giving up the struggle. Casting aside the proprieties which forbade a woman to interfere in the counsels of men, Hannah Arnett proclaimed her faith. In eloquent words, which at once shamed and stung to action, she convinced her husband and his companions that righteousness must win.

Who has not heard of Molly Pitcher, whose heroic services at the Battle of Monmouth helped the sorely tried army of George Washington! We have been told of the unselfish devotion of the women who gave their own warm garments to fashion clothing for the suffering Continental Army during that bitter winter at Valley Forge. The burdens of the war were not all borne by the men....

Our success and prosperity have brought with them their own perils. It can not be denied that in the splendor and glamour of our life the moral sense is sometimes blinded.... Since 1880 there has been a marked increase in the tendency to remain away from the polls on the part of those entitled to vote.... Election day in the olden times was generally considered more or less sacred - one to be devoted to the discharge of the obligations of citizenship.

In the intervening years customs and habits have changed. Opportunities for recreation have increased. Our entire mode of life has been recast through invention, the great growth of our cities, and for other reasons. Undoubtedly, this has been responsible in no small measure for the widespread disregard on the part of so many on our citizens of the privilege and duty of voting....

If the people fail to vote, a government will be developed which is not their government.... The whole system of American Government rests on the ballot box. Unless citizens perform their duties there, such a system of government is doomed to failure.

On May 1, 1926, before the National Council of the Boy Scouts of America, Washington, D. C., President Calvin Coolidge stated:

Development and character are not passive accomplishments. They can only be secured by action.... One of the greatest efforts in that direction is represented by the Boy Scout movement. It was founded in the United States in 1910. In September of that year the organization was given a great impetus by the visit of the man whom we are delighted to honor this evening, Sir Robert Baden-Powell. This distinguished British general is now known all over the world as the originator of this idea.

The first annual meeting was held in the East Room of the White House in February, 1911, when President Taft made an address, and each of his successors has been pleased to serve as the honorary president of the association. It has been dignified by a Federal charter granted by the Congress to the Boy Scouts of America in 1916, and thereby ranks in the popular mind with the only two other organizations which have been similarly honored, the Red Cross and the American Legion....

If every boy in the United States between the ages of twelve and seventeen could be placed under the wholesome influences of the scout program and should live up to the scout oath and rules, we would hear fewer pessimistic words as to the future of our Nation.

The boy on becoming a scout binds himself on his honor to do his best, as the oath reads:

"1. To do my duty to God and my country, and to obey the scout law.

"2. To help other people at all times.

"3. To keep myself physically strong, mentally awake, and morally straight."

The twelve articles in these scout laws are not prohibitions, but obligations; affirmative rules of conduct. Members must promise to be trustworthy, loyal, helpful, friendly, courteous, kind, obedient, cheerful, thrifty, brave, clean, and reverent. How comprehensive this list! What a formula for developing moral and spiritual character!... It would be a perfect world if everyone exemplified these virtues in daily life.

Acting under these principles, remarkable progress has been made. Since 1910, 3,000,000 boys in the United States have been scouts - one out of every seven eligible. Who can estimate the physical, mental, and spiritual force that would have been added to our national life during this period if the other six also had been scouts?...

Such service is service to God and to country.... Because the principles of this movement are affirmative, I believe they are sound. The boy may not be merely passive in his allegiance to righteousness. He must be an active force in his home, his church and his community... Its fundamental object is to use modern environment in character building and training for citizenship.

Character is what a person is; it represents the aggregate of distinctive mental and moral qualities belonging to an individual or a race. Good character means a mental and moral fiber of high order, one which may be woven into the fabric of the community and State, going to make a great nation - great in the broadest meaning of that word.

The organization of the scouts is particularly suitable for a representative democracy such as ours, where our institutions rest on the theory of self-government and public functions are exercised through delegated authority. The boys are taught to practice the basic virtues and principles of right living and to act for themselves in according such virtues and principles. They learn self-direction and self-control.

The organization is not intended to take the place of the home or religion, but to supplement and cooperate with those important factors, in our national life. We hear much talk of the decline in the influence of religion, of the loosening of the home ties, of the lack of discipline - all tending to break down reverence and respect for the laws of God and man.

Such thought as I have been able to give to the subject and such observations as have come within my experience have convinced me that there is no substitute for the influences of the home and of religion. These take hold of the innermost nature of the individual and play a very dominant part in the formation of personality and character. This most necessary and most valuable service has to be performed by the parents, or it is not performed at all. It is the root of the family life. Nothing else can ever take its place. These duties can be performed by foster parents with partial success, but any attempt on the part of the Government to function in these directions breaks down almost entirely. The Boy Scout movement can never be a success as a substitute but only as an ally of strict parental control and family life under religious influences. Parents can not shift their responsibility. If they fail to exercise proper control, nobody else can do it for them.

The last item in the scout "duodecalogue" is impressive. It declares that a scout shall be reverent. "He is reverent toward God," the paragraph reads. "He is faithful in his religious duties, and respects the convictions of others in matters of custom and religion." In the past I have declared my conviction that our Government rests upon religion; that religion is the source from which we derive our reverence for truth and justice, for equality and liberty, and for the rights of mankind. So wisely and liberally is the Boy Scout movement designed that the various religious denominations have found it a most helpful agency in arousing and maintaining interest in the work of their various societies. This has helped to emphasize in the minds of youth the importance of teaching our boys to respect the religious opinions and social customs of others....

There is a very real value in implanting this idea in our boys. When they take up the burdens of manhood they may be led to return to the simple life for periods of physical, mental, and spiritual refreshment and reinvigoration....

We know too well what fortune overtakes those who attempt to live in opposition to these standards. They become at once rightfully and truly branded as outlaws. However much they may boast of their freedom from all restraints and their disregard of all conventionalities of society, they are immediately the recognized foes of their brethren. Their short existence is lived under greater and greater restrictions, in terror of the law, in flight from arrest, or in imprisonment. Instead of gaining freedom, they become slaves of their own evil doing, realizing the scriptural assertion that they who sin are the servants of sin and that the wages of sin is death.

The Boy Scout movement has been instituted in order that the youth, instead of falling under the domination of habits and actions that lead only to destruction, may come under the discipline of a training that leads to eternal life.

On May 15, 1926, at the College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Virginia, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

In March, 1773, the Virginia Assembly unanimously voted to establish a system of intercolonial committees of correspondence. As great an authority as John Fiske calls this "the most decided step toward revolution that had yet been taken by the Americans." This original suggestion appears to have come from the eminent divine Jonathan Mayhew, who suggested to James Otis that the communion of churches furnished an excellent example for a communion of Colonies....

On the 6th of May, 1776, that there assembled at Williamsburg a convention which was to become historic. It was presided over by Edmund Pendleton, who had opposed the stamp act resolutions of Patrick Henry, but eleven years and wanton cruelty of the royal governor had made a great change in the public opinion of the Colony, and he had become a loyal supporter of independence.

He now joined with Patrick Henry and Meriwether Smith in drafting resolutions to be proposed by Thomas Nelson, which refer to our country as "America," and after setting out the grievances that it had endured and "appealing to the Searcher of Hearts for the sincerity of former declarations" and a discussion in which Mason and Madison, to be known to future fame, took part, on the 15th of May, 1776, it was "Resolved unanimously, that the delegates appointed to represent this Colony in General Congress be instructed to propose to that respectable body to declare the United Colonies free and independent States....

But there is another element of recent development. Direct primaries and direct elections bring to bear upon the political fortunes of public officials the greatly disproportionate influence of organized minorities. Artificial propaganda, paid agitators, selfish interests, all impinge upon members of legislative bodies to force them to represent special elements rather than the great body of their constituency. When they are successful minority rule is established, and the result is an extravagance on the part of the Government which is ruinous to the people and a multiplicity of regulations and restrictions for the conduct of all kinds of necessary business, which becomes little less than oppressive....

No method of procedure has ever been devised by which liberty could be divorced from local self-government. No plan of centralization has ever been adopted which did not result in bureaucracy, tyranny, inflexibility, reaction, and decline. Of all forms of government, those administered by bureaus are about the least satisfactory to an enlightened and progressive people. Being irresponsible they become autocratic, and being autocratic they resist all development.

Unless bureaucracy is constantly resisted it breaks down representative government and overwhelms democracy. It is the one element in our institutions that sets up the pretense of having authority over everybody and being responsible to nobody.

While we ought to glory in the Union and remember that it is the source from which the States derive their chief title to fame, we must also recognize that the national administration is not and can not be adjusted to the needs of local government. It is too far away to be informed of local needs, too inaccessible to be responsive to local conditions. The States should not be induced by coercion or by favor to surrender the management of their own affairs.

The Federal Government ought to resist the tendency to be loaded up with duties which the States should perform. It does not follow that because something ought to be done the National Government ought to do it.... I want to see the policy adopted by the States of discharging their public functions so faithfully that instead of an extension on the part of the Federal Government there can be a contraction....

The principles of government have the same need to be fortified, reinforced, and supported that characterize the principles of religion. After enumerating many of the spiritual ideals, the Scriptures enjoin us to "think on these things." If we are to maintain the ideals of government, it is likewise necessary that we "think on these things."

On May 29, 1926, at the dedication of the statue of John Ericsson, Washington, D. C., President Calvin Coolidge stated:

We assemble here today to do reverence to the memory of a great son of Sweden... John Ericsson... We honor him most of all because we can truly say he was a great American....

Sweden is a country where existence has not been easy. Lying up under the Arctic Circle, its climate is tinged with frost, its land rugged, its soil yields grudgingly to the husbandman, so that down through the centuries its people have been inured to hardship....

At an early period they were converted to the Christian faith and their natural independence made them early responsive to the Protestant Reformation, in which their most famous king, Gustavus Adolphus, "The Lion of the North," was one of the most militant figures in the movement for a greater religious freedom. It was under this great leader that plans were first matured to establish a colony in this country for purpose of trade and in order that the native, as was set out in the charter, might be "made more civilized and taught morality and the Christian religion...besides the further propagation of the Holy Gospel."

While it was under a new charter that a Swedish colony finally reached the Delaware in 1638, they never lost sight of their original purpose, but among other requests kept calling on the mother country for ministers, Bibles, and Psalm books. Forty-one clergymen came to America prior to 1779. One of the historians of this early settlement asserts that these colonists laid the basis for a religious structure, built the first flour mills, the first ships, the first brickyards, and made the first roads, while they introduced horticulture and scientific forestry into this Delaware region....The building of nearly 2,000 churches and nearly as many schools stands to their credit....

Always as soon as they have provided shelter for themselves they have turned to build places of religious worship and founded institutions of higher learning with the original purpose of training clergymen and teachers....

Though few in number during the period of our Revolutionary War, they supported the Colonial cause and it has been said that King Gustavus III, writing to a friend, declared "If I were not King I would proceed to America and offer my sword of behalf of the brave Colonies."....

Such is the background and greatness of the Swedish people in the country of their origin and in America that gave to the world John Ericsson. They have been characterized by that courage which is the foundation of industry and thrift, that endurance which is the foundation of military achievement, that devotion to the home which is the foundation of patriotism, and that reverence for religion which is the foundation of moral power....

Born in the Province of Vermland in 1803, at the age of seventeen he entered the army. But the urge for a wider opportunity for his talents possessed him, and at twenty three he went to England. He entered an engineering firm and always preferred to be considered an engineer rather than an inventor. The developments of power interested him, and within a year his fertile mind had begun improvements of far-reaching extent upon boilers and engines.

With that boundless energy which was to characterize him through life he soon designed the fire engine and developed the screw propeller for marine use. It was this new invention which brought him to America in 1839. His hopes to interest the Federal Government in this method of navigation were not immediately realized, but he began constructing propeller boats on the Great Lakes and started a fleet on the canal between Baltimore and Philadelphia, which caused the railroad to cut its fare in two, and where the boat service stills keeps the name of the Ericsson Line.

He was soon building a small steam-boat, called the Princeton, which was the first man-of-war, equipped with a screw propeller and with machinery below the water line out of reach of shot. In 1876 he described this vessel as "the foundation of the present steam marine of the whole world. She revolutionized naval vessels." President Tyler and his Cabinet made a trial trip down the Potomac on this boat....

This great mechanical genius wrote to President Lincoln offering to "construct a vessel for the destruction of the hostile fleet in Norfolk and for scouring southern rivers and inlets of all craft protected by southern batteries." He further declared: "Attachment to the Union alone impels me to offer my services at this frightful crisis - my life if need be - in the great cause which Providence has caused you to defend."...

The Confederate ironclad Virginia, reconstructed from the Merrimac, began a work of destruction among 16 Federal vessels, carrying 298 guns.... When the ironclad Merrimac went out on the morning of March 9 to complete its work of destruction it was at once surprised and challenged by this new and extraordinary naval innovation. Speaking before the Naval Institute in 1876, Admiral Luce said that the Monitor "exhibited in a singular manner the old Norse element in the American Navy." He pointed out that it was Ericsson "who built her," Dahlgren "who armed her," and Worden "who fought her." And well might he add: "How the ancient Skalds would have struck their wild harps in hearing such names in heroic verse. How they would have written them in immortal tunes.

After a battle lasting four hours in which the Monitor suffered no material damage, except from one shell which hit the observation opening in the pilot house, temporarily blinding Lieutenant Worden, the commanding officer, the Merrimac, later reported to have been badly crippled, withdrew, never to venture out again to meet her conqueror.... The London Times stated that the day before this momentous battle England had 149 first-class warships. The day after she had but two, and they were iron-plated only armships. Naval warfare had been revolutionized....

[Ericsson] had a particular horror of slavery. In 1862 he wrote to a United States Senator: "Nothing could induce me to accept any remuneration from the United States for the Monitor once presented by me as my contribution to the glorious Union cause, the triumph of which freed 4,000,000 bondsmen."

On May 31, 1926, Memorial Day, at Arlington Cemetery, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

While this day was legally established many years ago as an occasion to be devoted to the memory of our country's dead, it can not but each year refresh the sentiment of respect and honor in which our country holds their living comrades....

We all subscribe to the principle of religious liberty and toleration and equal rights.... Yet in times of stress and public agitation we have too great a tendency to disregard this policy and indulge in race hatred, religious intolerance, and disregard of equal rights....

Our condition today is not merely that of one people under one flag, but of a thoroughly united people who have seen bitterness and enmity which once threatened to sever them pass away, and a spirit of kindness and good will reign over them all....

While many other nations and many localities within our country are struggling with a burden of increased debts and rising taxes, which makes them seek for new sources from which by further taxation they can secure new revenues, we have made large progress toward paying off our national debt, have greatly reduced our national taxes, and been able to relieve the people by abandoning altogether many sources of national revenue.

On July 5, 1926, at a celebration of the 150th anniversary of the Declaration of Independence, Philadelphia, President Calvin Coolidge stated:

At the end of 150 years the four corners of the earth unite in coming to Philadelphia as to a holy shrine in grateful acknowledgement of a service so great, which a few inspired men here rendered to humanity, that it is still the preeminent support of free government throughout the world...It is little wonder that people at home and abroad consider Independence Hall as hallowed ground and revere the Liberty Bell as a sacred relic. That pile of bricks and mortar, that mass of metal, might appear to the uninstructed as only the outgrown meeting place and the shattered bell of a former time, useless now because of more modern conveniences, but to those who know they have become consecrated by the use which men have made them. They have long been identified with a great cause. They are the framework of a spiritual event. The world looks upon them, because of their associations of one hundred and fifty years ago, as it looks upon the Holy Land because of what took place there nineteen hundred years ago. Through use for a righteous purpose they have become sanctified....

The Declaration of Independence represented the movement of a people. It was not, of course, a movement from the top. Revolutions do not come from that direction....The American Revolution represented the informed and mature convictions of a great mass of independent, liberty-loving, God-fearing people who knew their rights, and possessed the courage to dare to maintain them....

Adopted after long discussion and as the result of the duly authorized expression of the preponderance of public opinion, it did not partake of dark intrigue or hidden conspiracy....Three very definite propositions were set out in its preamble regarding the nature of mankind and therefore of government. These were the doctrine that all men are created equal, that they are endowed with certain inalienable rights, and that therefore the source of just powers of government must be derived from the consent of the governed....

The principles of our declaration had been under discussion in the Colonies for nearly two generations....In the assertion of the Rev. Thomas Hooker of Connecticut as early as 1638, when he said in a sermon before the General Court that:

"The foundation of authority is laid in the free consent of the people.

"The choice of public magistrates belongs unto the people by God's own allowance."

This doctrine found wide acceptance among the nonconformist clergy who later made up the Congregational Church. The great apostle of this movement was the Rev. John Wise, of Massachusetts. He was one of the leaders of the revolt against the royal governor Andros in 1687, for which he suffered imprisonment.... His works were reprinted in 1772 and have been declared to have been nothing less than a textbook of liberty for our Revolutionary father....

That these ideas were prevalent in Virginia is further revealed by the Declaration of Rights, which was prepared by George Mason and presented to the general assembly on May 27, 1776. This document asserted popular sovereignty and inherent natural rights, but confined the doctrine of equality to the assertion that "All men are created equally free and independent."

It can scarcely be imagined that Jefferson was unacquainted with what had been done in his own Commonwealth of Virginia when he took up the task of drafting the Declaration of Independence. But these thoughts can very largely be traced back to what John Wise was writing in 1710. He said, "Every man must be acknowledged equal to every man." Again, "The end of all good government is to cultivate humanity and promote the happiness of all and the good of every man in all his rights, his life, liberty, estate, honor, and so forth..."

And again, "For as they have a power every man in his natural state, so upon combination they can and do bequeath this power to others and settle it according as their united discretion shall determine." And still again, "Democracy is Christ's government in church and state." Here was the doctrine of equality, popular sovereignty, and the substance of the theory of inalienable rights clearly asserted by Wise at the opening of the eighteenth century, just as we have the principle of the consent of the governed stated by Hooker as early as 1638.

When we take all these circumstances into consideration, it is but natural that the first paragraph of the Declaration of Independence should open with a reference to Nature's God and should close in the final paragraphs with an appeal to the Supreme Judge of the world and an assertion of a firm reliance on Divine Providence. Coming from these sources, having as it did this background, it is no wonder that Samuel Adams could say, "The people seem to recognize this revolution as though it were a decree promulgated from heaven."

No one can examine this record and escape the conclusion that in the great outline of its principles the Declaration was the result of the religious teachings of the preceding period. The profound philosophy which Jonathan Edwards applied to theology, the popular preaching of George Whitefield, had aroused the thought and stirred the people of the Colonies in preparation for this great event....

When we come to a contemplation of the immediate conception of the principles of human relationship which went into the Declaration of Independence we are not required to extend our search beyond our own shores. They are found in the texts, the sermons, and the writings of the early colonial clergy who were earnestly undertaking to instruct their congregations in the great mystery of how to live. They preached equality because they believed in the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man. They justified freedom by the text that we are all created in the divine image, all partakers of the divine spirit....

Placing every man on a plane where he acknowledged no superiors, where no one possessed any right to rule over him, he must inevitably choose his own rulers through a system of self-government. This was their theory of democracy. In those days such doctrines would scarcely have been permitted to flourish and spread in any other country. This was the purpose which the fathers cherished. In order that they might have freedom to express these thoughts and opportunity to put them into action, whole congregations with their pastors had migrated to the colonies. These great truths were in the air that our people breathed....

In its main feature the Declaration of Independence is a great spiritual document. It is a declaration not of material but of spiritual conceptions. Equality, liberty, popular sovereignty, the rights of man - these are the elements which we can see and touch. They are ideals. They have their source and their roots in the religious convictions. They belong to the unseen world. Unless the faith of the American in these religious convictions is to endure, the principles of our Declaration will perish. We can not continue to enjoy the result if we neglect and abandon the cause....

If all men are created equal, that is final. If they are endowed with inalienable rights, that is final. If governments derive their just powers from the consent of the governed, that is final. No advance, no progress can be made beyond these propositions. If anyone wishes to deny their truth or their soundness, the only direction in which he can proceed historically is not forward, but backward toward the time when there was no equality, no rights of the individual, no rule of the people....

The rights of the individual are held sacred and protected by constitutional guaranties, which even the Government itself is bound not to violate. If there is any one thing among us that is established beyond question, it is self-government - the right of the people to rule. If there is any failure in respect to any of these principles, it is because there is a failure on the part of individuals to observe them. We hold that the duly authorized expression of the will of the people has a divine sanction. But even in that we come back to the theory of John Wise that "Democracy is Christ's government..." The ultimate sanction of law rests on the righteous authority of the Almighty....

Ours is a government of the people. It represents their will. Its officers sometimes go astray, but that is not a reason for criticizing the principles of our institutions. The real heart of the American Government depends upon the heart of the people. It is from that source that we must look for all genuine reform. It is to that cause that we must ascribe all our results....

It was in the contemplation of these truths that the fathers made their declaration and adopted their Constitution. It was to establish a free government, which must not be permitted to degenerate into the unrestrained authority of a mere majority or the unbridled weight of a mere influential few. They undertook to balance these interests against each other and provide the three separate independent branches, the executive, the legislative, and the judicial departments of the Government, with check against each other....

Before we can understand their conclusions we must go back and review the course which they followed. We must think the thoughts which they thought. Their intellectual life centered around the meeting-house. They were intent upon religious worship. While there were always among them men of deep learning, and later those who had comparatively large possessions, the mind of the people was not so much engrossed in how much they knew, or how much they had, as in how they were going to live.

While scantily provided with other literature, there was a wide acquaintance with the Scriptures. Over a period as great that which measures the existence of our independence they were subject to this discipline not only in their religious life and educational training, but also in their political thought. They were a people who came under the influence of a great spiritual development and acquired a great moral power....

We live in an age of science and of abounding accumulation of material things. These did not create the Declaration. Our Declaration created them. The things of the spirit come first. Unless we cling to that, all our material prosperity, overwhelming though it may appear, will turn to a barren sceptre in our grasp.

If we are to maintain the great heritage which has been bequeathed to us, we must be like-minded as the fathers who created it. We must not sink into a pagan materialism. We must cultivate the reverence which they had for the things that are holy. We must follow the spiritual and moral leadership which they showed. We must keep replenished, that they may glow with a more compelling flame, the altar fires before which they worshipped.

In December of 1928, President Calvin Coolidge gave his last Annual Message to the Congress of the United States:

Our country has been provided with the resources with which it can enlarge its intellectual, moral, and spiritual life. The issue is in the hands of the people. Our faith in man and God is the justification for the belief in our continuing success.

President Calvin Coolidge, who was a member of the Congregationalist Church, expressed:

[It is my] conviction that our Government rests on religion; that religion is the source from which we derive our reverence for truth and justice, for equality and liberty, and for the rights of mankind.
Page 916

If the bonds of our religious convictions become loosened the guaranties which have been erected for the protection of life and liberty and all the vast body of rights that lies between, are gone.

America was born in a revival of religion.

Bennard, George (1873-1958), wrote the hymn The Old Rugged Cross, 1913, which included:

I will cling to the old rugged cross,
And exchange it some day for a crown.

Smith, Alfred Emanuel (December 30, 1873-October 4, 1944), was the four-term Governor of New York, 1919-21, 1923-29; and the Democratic Presidential candidate in 1928. He had also served as an Assemblyman in the New York State Legislature, 1903; Sheriff of New York City, 1915-17; and leader of the American Liberty League, 1939-44. Alfred E. Smith, a Catholic, came under attack during his campaign for the Presidency. He responded in May of 1927:

I am unable to understand how anything I was taught to believe as a Catholic could possibly be in conflict with what is good citizenship. The essence of my faith is built upon the Commandments of God. The law of the land is built on the Commandments of God. There can be no conflict between them....

What is this conflict about which you talk? It may exist in some lands which do not guarantee religious freedom. But in the wildest dreams of your imagination you cannot conjure up a possible conflict between religious principle and political duty in the United States, except on the unthinkable hypothesis that some laws were to be passed which violated the common morality of all God-fearing men.

And if you can conjure up such a conflict, how would a Protestant solve it? Obviously by the dictates of his conscience. That is exactly what a Catholic would do. There is no ecclesiastical tribunal which would have the slightest claim upon the obedience of Catholic communicants in the resolution of such a conflict.

Rockefeller, John Davison, Jr. (January 29, 1874-May 11, 1960), was the son of industrialist and philanthropist John D. Rockefeller. He was an assistant to his father in managing the Rockefeller enterprises, 1897; and upon his father's retirement, assumed the general superintendency, 1911. He later concerned himself mainly with the Rockefeller philanthropies, being the chairman of the Board of Directors of the Rockefeller Foundation; a director of the General Education Board, and president of the Rockefeller Institute for Medical Research. He built Rockefeller Center in mid-Manhattan, New York City, 1935; and donated the land bordering the East River between 41st and 47th to the United Nations for its headquarters.

As reported in the news, January 12, 1955, John D. Rockefeller, Jr. announced the largest single grant for the purposes of religious training in a two-sentence letter to the Sealantic Fund, Inc.:

Gentlemen: I am giving your corporation as of this date securities having a present market value of approximately twenty million dollars. The purpose of the gift is to strengthen and develop Protestant theological education in this country.

Frost, Robert (March 24, 1874-January 29, 1963), was an American poet and teacher. He had been a farmer in New Hampshire; taught at Amherst College; was poet in residence at the University of Michigan; and professor of poetry at Harvard University, 1936. He won the Pulitzer prize for poetry, 1924, 1931, 1937, and 1943; was named consultant in poetry for the Library of Congress; and received the Congressional Gold Medal in 1960. His works include: A Boy's Will, 1913; North of Boston, 1914; Mountain Interval, 1916; West-Running Brook, 1928; A Way Out, 1929; From Snow to Snow, 1936; A Witness Tree, 1942; Masque of Reason, 1945; Steeple Bush, 1947; Complete Poems, 1949; and The Road Not Taken, 1951.

In a comment broadcast on WQED, Pittsburgh, quoted in Collier's, April 27, 1956, Robert Frost stated:

Ultimately, this is what you go before God for:
You've had bad luck and good luck and all you really want in the end is mercy.

In "The Road Not Taken" (1951), Robert Frost wrote:

Two roads diverged in a yellow wood
And sorry I could not travel both
And be one traveler, long I stood
And looked down one as far as I could
To where it bent in the undergrowth;

Then took the other, as just as fair
And having perhaps the better claim,
Because it was grassy and wanted wear;
Though as for that the passing there
Had worn them really about the same.

And both that morning equally lay
In leaves no step had trodden black.
Oh, I kept the first for another day!
Yet knowing how way leads on to way,
I doubted if I should ever come back.

I shall be telling this with a sigh
Somewhere ages and ages hence:
Two roads diverged in a wood, and I -
I took the one less traveled by,
And that has made all the difference.

In the poem, "Stopping by Woods on a Snowy Evening," Robert Frost wrote:

Whose woods these are I think I know
His house is in the village though;
He will not see me stopping here
To watch his woods fill up with snow.

American Quotations.txt

My little horse must think it queer
To stop without a farmhouse near Between the woods and frozen lake
The darkest evening of the year.

He give his harness bell a shake
To ask if there is some mistake,
The only other sound's the sweep
Of easy wind and downy flake.

The woods are lovely, dark and deep.
But I have promises to keep,
And miles to go before I sleep,
And miles to go before I sleep.

Chesterton, Gilbert Keith (May 29, 1874-June 14, 1936), was a modern British poets and novelists. His fondness of paradox is seen in his great works: Heretics; Orthodoxy; Outline of Sanity; All Is Grist; and All I Survey. In English Men of Letters, Chesterton wrote very enlightening sketches about both Browning and Dickens. In What's Wrong with the World, 1910, Gilbert Keith Chesterton wrote:

The Christian ideal has not been tried and found wanting; it has been found difficult and left untried.

Hoover, Herbert Clark (August 10, 1874-October 20, 1964), was the 31st President of the United States, 1929-33; Secretary of Commerce under both Warren G. Harding and Calvin Coolidge, 1921-28; served on the council of the American Relief Administration, 1919-21; U. S. Food Administrator during World War I, 1917-19; Commissioner for Belgian Relief, 1915-19; Chairman of the American Relief Committee in London, 1914-15; married Lou Henry, 1899; successful mining engineer, 1895-1914; graduated from Stanford University, 1895.

On Monday, March 4, 1929, in his Inaugural Address, President Herbert Clark Hoover entreated:

This occasion is not alone the administration of the most sacred oath which can be assumed by an American citizen. It is a dedication and consecration under God to the highest office in service of our people. I assume this trust in the humility of knowledge that only through the guidance of Almighty Providence can I hope to discharge its ever-increasing burdens....

Superficial observers seem to find no destiny for our abounding increase in population, in wealth and power.... They fail to realize that because of our abounding prosperity our youth are pressing more and more into our institutions of learning; that our people are seeking a larger vision through art, literature, science, and travel; that they are moving toward stronger moral and spiritual life....

Ours is a progressive people, but with a determination that progress must be based upon the foundation of experience. Ill-considered remedies for our faults brings only penalties after them. But if we hold the faith of the men in our mighty past who created these ideals, we shall leave them heightened and strengthened for our children...

In the presence of my countrymen, mindful of the solemnity of this occasion, knowing what the task means and the responsibility which it involves, I beg your tolerance, your aid, and your cooperation. I ask the help of Almighty God in this service to my country to which you have called me.

In an address at Valley Forge, May 30, 1931, President Hoover stated:

If those few thousand men endured that long winter of privation and suffering, humiliated by the despair of their countrymen, and deprived of support save their own indomitable will, yet held their countrymen to the faith, and by that holding held fast the freedom of America, what right have we to be of little faith?

On Monday, April 27, 1931, in speaking before the Gridiron Club, President Herbert Hoover stated:

If, by the grace of God, we have passed the worst of this storm, the future months will be easy. If we shall be called upon to endure more of this period, we must gird ourselves for even greater effort...

If we can maintain this courage and resolution we shall have written this new chapter in national life in terms to which our whole idealism has aspired. May God grant to us the spirit and strength to carry through to the end.

On Sunday, October 18, 1931, in an address which began a nation-wide drive to aid the private relief agencies during the Great Depression, President Herbert Hoover expressed:

Time and time again the American people have demonstrated a spiritual quality, a capacity for unity of action, of generosity, a certainty of results in time of emergency that have made them great in the annals of the history of all nations. This is the time and this is the occasion when we must arouse that idealism, that spirit...

This civilization and this great complex, which we call American life, is builded and can alone survive upon the translation into individual action of that fundamental philosophy announced by the Savior nineteen centuries ago.

Part of our national suffering today is from failure to observe these primary yet inexorable laws of human relationship. Modern society can not survive with the defense of Cain, "Am I my brother's keeper?"

On Thursday, September 15, 1932, President Herbert Hoover addressed the leaders of the "national drive" committee for voluntary relief agencies at the White House:

Our tasks are definite... that we maintain the spiritual impulses in our people for generous giving and generous service - in the spirit that each is his brother's keeper...

Many a family today is carrying a neighbor family over the trough of this depression not alone with material aid but with that encouragement which maintains courage and faith.

On October 4, 1932, in a campaign speech at Des Moines, Iowa, President Herbert Hoover stated:

We won this battle to protect our people at home. We held the Gibraltar of world stability. The world today has a chance. It is growing in strength. Let that man who complains that things could not be worse thank God for this victory.

On October 31, 1932, in an address at Madison Square Garden in New York, President Herbert Hoover warned of the collectivist color of the New Deal:

To enter upon a series of deep changes, to embark upon this inchoate new deal which has been propounded in this campaign would be to undermine and destroy our American system....

No man who has not occupied my position in Washington can fully realize the constant battle which must be carried on against incompetence, corruption, tyranny of government expanded into business activities....

Free speech does not live many hours after free industry and free commerce die.

In The Challenge of Liberty, 1934, Herbert Clark Hoover declared:

While I can make no claim for having introduced the term, "rugged individualism," I should be proud to have invented it. It has been used by American leaders for over a half-century in eulogy of those God-fearing men and women of honesty whose stamina and character and fearless assertion of rights led them to make their own way in life.

On September 17, 1935, in San Diego, California, Herbert Hoover expressed:

Our Constitution is not alone the working plan of a great Federation of States under representative government. There is embedded in it also the vital principles of the American system of liberty. That system is based upon certain inalienable freedoms and protections which in no event the government may infringe and which we call the Bill of Rights.

It does not require a lawyer to interpret those provisions. They are as clear as the Ten Commandments. Among others the freedom of worship, freedom of speech and of the press, the right of peaceable assembly, equality before the law....

In them lies a spiritual right of men. Behind them is the conception which is the highest development of the Christian faith - the conception of individual freedom with brotherhood.

Herbert Hoover, in 1943, issued a joint statement along with Mrs. Calvin Coolidge, Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt, Mrs. William H. Taft, Mrs. Benjamin Harrison, Mrs. Grover Cleveland, Alfred Smith, Alfred Landon, James M. Cox, and John W. Davis:

Menaced by collectivist trends, we must seek revival of our strength in the spiritual foundations which are the bedrock of our republic. Democracy is the outgrowth of the religious conviction of the sacredness of every human life. On the religious side, its highest embodiment is The Bible; on the political side, the Constitution.

After his term in office, Herbert Clark Hoover sought a reorganization of the United Nations, excluding Communist countries. The speech, delivered to the American Newspaper Publishers Association, was broadcast across the nation on April 27, 1950:

What the world needs today is a definite, spiritual mobilization of the nations who believe in God against this tide of Red agnosticism. It needs a moral mobilization against the hideous ideas of the police state and human slavery....

I suggest that the United Nations should be reorganized without the Communist nations in it. If that is impractical, then a definite New United Front should be organized of those peoples who disavow communism, who stand for morals and religion, and who love freedom....

It is a proposal based solely upon moral, spiritual and defense foundations. It is a proposal to redeem the concept of the United Nations to the high purpose for which it was created. It is a proposal for moral and spiritual cooperation of God-fearing free nations.

And in rejecting an atheistic other world, I am confident that the Almighty God will be with us.

Herbert Hoover spoke at a reception in honor of his eightieth birthday in West Branch, Iowa on August 10, 1954. In voicing concern over Socialism, he warned:

I have witnessed the legacy of war in doubting minds, brutality, crime and debased morals. Moreover, I have witnessed on the ground in 20 nations the workings of the philosophy of that anti-Christ, Karl Marx.

After these long years and from all these experiences, there rises constantly in my mind the forces which make for progress and those which may corrode away the safeguards of freedom in America. I want to say something about these forces but I shall endeavor to do so, not in the tones of Jeremiah but in the spirit of Saint Paul....

Our Founding Fathers did not invent the priceless boon of individual freedom and respect for the dignity of men. That great gift to mankind sprang from the Creator and not from governments.

The Founding Fathers, with superb genius, welded together the safeguards of these freedoms.... Today the Socialist virus and poison gas generated by Karl Marx and Friedreich Engels have spread into every nation on the earth.

Their dogma is absolute materialism which defies truth and religious faith. Their poisons are of many sorts. The preservation of the safeguards of liberty makes it imperative that we give heed to their every variety....

A nation is strong or weak, it thrives or perishes upon what it believes to be true. If our youth is rightly instructed in the faith of our fathers; in the traditions of our country; in the dignity of each individual man, then our power will be stronger than any weapon of destruction that man can devise.

And now as to this whole gamut of Socialist infections, I say to you...God has blessed us with another wonderful word--heritage. The great documents of that heritage are not from Karl Marx. They are from the Bible, the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States. Within them alone can the safeguards of freedom survive....

These new frontiers give us other blessings. Not only do they expand our living but also they open new opportunities and new areas of adventure and enterprise. They open new vistas of beauty. They unfold the wonders of the atom and the heavens. Daily they prove the reality of an all-wise Supreme Giver of Law.

Herbert Clark Hoover explained:

The principle thing we can do, if we really want to make the world over again, is to try the use of the word "old" again. It was the "old" things that made this country the great nation it is.

There is the old virtue of religious faith. There are the old virtues of integrity and truth. There is the old virtue of incorruptible service and honor in public service.

Freedom is an open window through which pours the sunlight of the human spirit and of human dignity. With the preservation of these moral and spiritual qualities and with God's grace will come further greatness for our country.

Herbert Clark Hoover, who was a member of the Society of Friends, or Quakers, stated:

The whole inspiration of our civilization springs from the teachings of Christ and the lessons of the prophets. To read the Bible for these fundamentals is a necessity of American life.

Churchill, Sir Winston Leonard Spencer (November 30, 1874-January 24, 1965), was the British statesman who led Great Britain through World War II. The son of Lord Randolph Churchill, he was a direct descendant of the 1st Duke of Marlborough. He served as a correspondent in the Boer War and joined Parliament in 1900. After holding several positions, he rejoined the army in World War I and served in France. After the war he became Chancellor of the Exchequer, First Lord of the Admiralty and finally the Prime Minister. Sir Winston Churchill, in addition to being a remarkable orator, was an acclaimed author, receiving the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1953.

In October 1938, during a debate on the Munich agreement, Winston Churchill declared in the House of Commons:

There can never be friendship between the British democracy and the Nazi power, that power which spurns Christian ethics, which cheers its onward course by a barbarous paganism.
Page 923

As Europe was in shock after being quickly dominated by the Nazi regime, Great Britain chose Winston S. Churchill, on May 6th, 1940, as the new Prime Minister and Minister of Defense.

On May 13, 1940, Prime Minister Winston Churchill, in his first speech to the British Parliament, stated:

On Friday evening last I received from His Majesty the mission to form a new administration. It was the evident will of Parliament and the nation that this should be conceived on the broadest possible basis and that it should include all parties.

I have already completed the most important part of this task.

A war cabinet has been formed of five members, representing, with the Labour, Opposition, and Liberals, the unity of the nation. It was necessary that this should be done in one single day on account of the extreme urgency and rigor of events. Other key positions were filled yesterday. I am submitting a further list to the king tonight. I hope to complete the appointment of principal ministers during tomorrow.

The appointment of other ministers usually takes a little longer. I trust when Parliament meets again this part of my task will be completed and that the administration will be complete in all respects. I considered it in the public interest to suggest to the Speaker that the House should be summoned today.

At the end of today's proceedings, the adjournment of the House will be proposed until May 21 with provision for earlier meeting if need be. Business for that will be notified to MPs at the earliest opportunity.

I now invite the House by a resolution to record its approval of the steps taken and declare its confidence in the new government.

The resolution:

"That this House welcomes the formation of a government representing the united and inflexible resolve of the nation to prosecute the war with Germany to a victorious conclusion."

To form an administration of this scale and complexity is a serious undertaking in itself. But we are in the preliminary phase of one of the greatest battles in history. We are in action at many other points-in Norway and in Holland-and we have to be prepared in the Mediterranean. The air battle is continuing, and many preparations have to be made here at home.

In this crisis I think I may be pardoned if I do not address the House at any length today, and I hope that any of my friends and colleagues or former colleagues who are affected by the political reconstruction will make all allowances for any lack of ceremony with which it has been necessary to act.

I say to the House as I said to ministers who have joined this government, I have nothing to offer but blood, toil, tears, and sweat. We have before us an ordeal of the most grievous kind. We have before us many, many months of struggle and suffering.

You ask, what is our policy? I say it is to wage war by land, sea, and air. War with all our might and with all the strength God has given us, and to wage war against a monstrous tyranny never surpassed in the dark and lamentable catalogue of human crime. That is our policy.

You ask, what is our aim? I can answer in one word. It is victory. Victory at all costs - Victory in spite of all terrors - Victory, however long and hard the road may be, for without victory there is no survival.

Let that be realized. No survival for the British Empire, no survival for all that the British Empire has stood for, no survival for the urge, the impulse of the ages, that mankind shall move forward toward his goal.

I take up my task in buoyancy and hope. I feel sure that our cause will not be suffered to fail among men.

I feel entitled at this juncture, at this time, to claim the aid of all and to say, "Come then, let us go forward together with our united strength."

On June 4, 1940, upon the Retreat from Flanders, Winston Churchill delivered an address to the House of Commons, entitled "We Shall Defend Our Island Whatever the Cost":

"We shall not flag nor fail. We shall go on to the end. We shall fight in France and on the seas and oceans; we shall fight with growing confidence and growing strength in the air. We shall defend our island whatever the cost may be; we shall fight on beaches, landing grounds, in fields, in streets and on the hills.

We shall never surrender and even if, which I do not for the moment believe, this island or a large part of it were subjugated and starving, then our empire beyond the seas, armed and guarded by the British Fleet, will carry on the struggle until in God's good time the New World with all its power and might, sets forth to the liberation and rescue of the Old."

On June 18, 1940, in an address to the House of Commons entitled "Their Finest Hour" Winston Churchill stated:

I spoke the other day of the colossal military disaster which occurred when the French High Command failed to withdraw the Northern Armies from Belgium at the moment when they knew that the French front was decisively broken at Sedan and on the Meuse. This delay entailed the loss of fifteen or sixteen French divisions and threw out of action for the critical period the whole of the British Expeditionary Force. Our Army and 120,000 French troops were indeed rescued by the British Navy from Dunkirk but only with the loss of their cannon, vehicles and modern equipment.

This loss inevitably took some weeks to repair, and in the first two of those weeks the battle in France has been lost. When we consider the heroic resistance made by the French Army against heavy odds in this battle, the enormous losses inflicted upon the enemy and the evident exhaustion of the enemy, it may well be thought that these twenty-five divisions of the best-trained and best equipped troops might have turned the scale.

However, General Weygand had to fight without them. Only three British divisions or their equivalent were able to stand in the line with their French comrades. They had suffered severely, but they had fought well. We sent every man we could to France as fast as we could re-equip and transport their formations.

I am not reciting these facts for the purpose of recrimination. That I judge to be utterly futile and even harmful. We cannot afford it. I recite them in order to explain why it was we did not have, as we could have had, between twelve and fourteen British divisions fighting in the line in this great battle instead of only three. Now I put all this aside. I put it on the shelf, from which the historians, when they have time, will select their documents to tell their stories. We have to think of the future and not of the past. This also applies in a small way to our own affairs at home.

There are many who would hold an inquest in the House of Commons on the conduct of the Governments-and of Parliaments, for they are in it, too-during the years which led up to this catastrophe. They seek to indict those who were responsible for the guidance of our affairs. This also would be a foolish and pernicious process. There are too many in it. Let each man search his conscience and search his speeches. I frequently search mine.

Of this I am quite sure, that if we open a quarrel between the past and the present, we shall find that we have lost the future. Therefore, I cannot accept the drawing of any distinctions between Members of the present Government. It was formed at a moment of crisis in order to unite all the parties and all sections of opinion. It has received the almost unanimous support of both Houses of Parliament. Its Members are going to stand together, and, subject to the authority of the House of Commons, we are going to govern the country and fight the war. It is absolutely necessary at a time like this that every Minister who tries each day to do his duty shall be respected; and their subordinates must know that their chiefs are not threatened men, men who are here today and gone tomorrow, but that their directions must be punctually and faithfully obeyed.

Without this concentrated power we cannot face what lies before us. I should not think it would be very advantageous for the House to prolong this Debate this afternoon under conditions of public stress. Many facts are not clear that will be clear in a short time. We are to have a Secret Session on Thursday, and I should think that would be a better opportunity for the many earnest expressions of opinion which Members will desire to make and for the House to discuss vital matters without having everything read the next morning by our dangerous foes.

The disastrous military events which have happened during the past fortnight have not come to me with any sense of surprise. Indeed, I indicated a fortnight ago as clearly as I could to the House that the worst possibilities were open; and I made it perfectly clear then that whatever happened in France would make no difference the resolve of Britain and the British Empire to fight on, 'if necessary for years, if necessary alone.'

During the last few days we have successfully brought off the great majority of the troops we had on the lines of communication in France; and seven-eighths of the troops we have sent to France since the beginning of the war-that is to say, about 350,000 out of 400,000 men-are safely back in this country. Others are still fighting with the French, and fighting with considerable success in their local encounters against the enemy. We have also brought back a great mass of stores, rifles and munitions of all kinds which had been accumulated in France during the last nine months.

We have, therefore, in this island today a very large and powerful military force. This force comprises all our best-trained and our finest troops, including scores of thousands of those who have already measured their quality against the Germans and found themselves at no disadvantage. We have under arms at the present time in this island over a million and a quarter men. Behind these we have the Local Defense Volunteers, numbering half a million, only a portion of whom, however, are yet armed with rifles or other firearms. We have incorporated into our Defense Forces every man for whom we have a weapon.

We expect very large additions to our weapons in the near future, and in preparation for this we intend forthwith to call up, drill and train further large numbers. Those who are not called up, or else are employed upon the vast business of munitions production in all its branches-and their ramifications are innumerable-will serve their country best by remaining at their ordinary work until they receive their summons. We have also over here Dominions armies. The Canadians had actually landed in France, but have now been safely withdrawn, much disappointed, but in perfect order, with all their artillery and equipment. And these very high-class forces from the Dominions will now take part in the defense of the Mother Country.

Lest the account which I have given of these large forces should raise the question: Why did they not take part in the great battle in France? I must make it clear that, apart from the divisions training and organizing at home, only twelve divisions were equipped to fight upon a scale which justified their being sent abroad. And this was fully up to the number which the French had been led to expect would be available in France at the ninth month of the war. The rest of our forces at home have fighting value for home defense which will, of course, steadily increase every week that passes.

Thus, the invasion of Great Britain would at this time require the transportation across the sea of hostile armies on a very large scale, and after they been so transported they would have to be continually maintained with all the masses of munitions and supplies which are required for continuous battle-as continuous battle it will surely be.

Here is where we come to the Navy - and after all, we have a Navy. Some people seem to forget that we have a Navy. We must remind them. For the last thirty years I have been concerned in discussions about the possibilities of overseas invasion, and I took the responsibility on behalf of the Admiralty, at the beginning of the last war, of allowing all regular troops to be sent out of the country. That was a very serious step to take, because our Territorials had only just been called up and were quite untrained. Therefore, this island was for several months practically denuded of fighting troops.

The Admiralty had confidence at that time in their ability to prevent a mass invasion even though at that time the Germans had a magnificent battle fleet the proportion of ten to sixteen, even though they were capable of fighting a general engagement every day and any day, whereas now they have only a couple of heavy ships worth speaking of - the Scharnhorst and the Gneisenau. We are also told that the Italian Navy is to come out and gain sea superiority in these waters. If they seriously intend it, I shall only say that we shall be delighted to offer Signor Mussolini a free and safeguarded passage through the Straits of Gibraltar in order that he may play the part to which he aspires. There is a general curiosity in the British Fleet to find out whether the Italians are up to the level they were at in the last war or whether they have fallen off at all.

Therefore, it seems to me that as far as seaborne invasion on a great scale is concerned, we are far more capable of meeting it today than we were at many periods in the last war and during the early months of this war, before our other troops were trained, and while the BEF [British Expeditionary Force] had proceeded abroad. Now, the Navy have never pretended to be able to prevent raids by bodies of 5,000 or 10,000 men flung suddenly across and thrown ashore at several points on the coast some dark night or foggy morning.

The efficacy of sea-power, especially under modern conditions, depends upon the invading force being of large size. It has to be of large size, in view of our military strength, to be of any use. If it is of large size, then the Navy have something they can find and meet and, as it were, bite on. Now we must remember that even five divisions, however lightly equipped, would require 200 to 250 ships, and with modern air reconnaissance and photography it would not be easy to collect such an armada, marshal it and conduct it across the sea without any powerful naval forces to escort it; and there would be very great possibilities, to put it mildly, that this armada would be intercepted long before it reached the coast, and all the men drowned in the sea or, at the worst, blown to pieces with their equipment while they were trying to land.

We also have a great system of minefields, recently strongly reinforced, through which we alone know the channels. If the enemy tries to sweep passages through these minefields, it will be the task of the Navy to destroy the minesweepers and any other forces employed to protect them. There should be no difficulty in this, owing to our great superiority at sea.

Those are the regular, well-tested, well-proved arguments on which we have relied during many years in peace and war. But the question is whether there are any new methods by which those solid assurances can be circumvented. Odd as it may seem, some attention has been given to this by the Admiralty, whose prime duty and responsibility it is to destroy any large seaborne expedition before it reaches, or at the moment when it reaches these shores. It would not be a good thing for me to go into details of this. It might suggest ideas to other people which they have not thought of, and they would not be likely to give us any of their ideas in exchange.

All I will say is that untiring vigilance and mind-searching must be devoted to the subject, because the enemy is crafty and cunning and full of novel treacheries and stratagems. The House may be assured that the utmost ingenuity is being displayed and imagination is being evoked from large numbers of competent officers, well trained in tactics and thoroughly up to date, to measure and counter work novel possibilities. Untiring vigilance and untiring searching of the mind is being, and must be, devoted to the subject, because, remember, the enemy is crafty and there is no dirty trick he will not do.

Some people will ask why, then, was it that the British Navy was not able to prevent the movement of a large army from Germany into Norway across the Skaggerak? But the conditions in the Channel and in the North Sea are in no way like those which prevail in the Skaggerak. In the Skaggerak, because of the distance, we could give no air support to our surface ships, and consequently, lying as we did close to the enemy's main air power, we were compelled to use only our submarines.

We could not enforce the decisive blockade or interruption which is possible from surface vessels. Our submarines took a heavy toll but could not, by themselves, prevent the invasion of Norway. In the Channel and in the North Sea, on the other hand, our superior naval surface forces, aided by our submarines, will operate with close and effective air assistance.

This brings me, naturally, to the great question of invasion from the air, and of the impending struggle between the British and German Air Forces. It seems quite clear that no invasion on a scale beyond the capacity of our land forces to crush speedily is likely to take place from the air until our Air Force has been definitely overpowered. In the meantime, there may be raids by parachute troops and attempted descents of airborne soldiers. We should be able to give those gentry a warm reception, both in the air and on the ground, if they reach it in any condition to continue the dispute.

But the great question is: Can we break Hitler's air weapon? Now, of course, it is a very great pity that we have not got an Air Force at least equal to that of the most powerful enemy within striking distance of these shores. But we have a very powerful Air Force which has proved itself far superior in quality, both in men and in many types of machine, to what we have met so far in the numerous and fierce air battles which have been fought with the Germans. In France, where we were at a considerable disadvantage and lost many machines on the ground when they were standing round the aerodromes we were accustomed to inflict in the air losses of as much as two to two-and-a-half to one.

In the fighting over Dunkirk, which was a sort of no-man's land, we undoubtedly beat the German Air Force, and gained the mastery of the local air, inflicting here a loss of three or four to one day after day. Anyone who looks at the photographs which were published a week or so ago of the re-embarkation, showing the masses of troops assembled on the beach and forming an ideal target for hours at a time, must realize that this re-embarkation would not have been possible unless the enemy had resigned all hope of recovering air superiority at that time and at that place.

In the defense of this island the advantages to the defenders will be much greater than they were in the fighting around Dunkirk. We hope to improve on the rate of three or four to one which was realized at Dunkirk; and in addition all our injured machines and their crews which get down safe-and, surprisingly, a very great many injured machines and men do get down safely in modern air fighting-all of these will fall, in an attack upon these islands, on friendly soil and live to fight another day; whereas all the injured enemy machines and their complements will be total losses as far as the war is concerned.

During the great battle in France, we gave very powerful and continuous aid to the French Army, both by fighters and bombers; but in spite of every kind of pressure we never would allow the entire metropolitan fighter strength of the Air Force to be consumed. This decision was painful, but it was also right, because the fortunes of the battle in France could not have been decisively affected even if we had thrown in our entire fighter force. That battle was lost by the unfortunate strategical opening, by the extraordinary and unforeseen power of the armoured columns and by the great preponderance of the German Army in numbers.

Our fighter Air Force might easily have been exhausted as a mere accident in that great struggle, and then we should have found ourselves at the present time in a very serious plight. But as it is, I am happy to inform the House that our fighter strength is stronger at the present time relatively to the Germans, who have suffered terrible losses, than it has ever been; and consequently we believe ourselves possessed of the capacity to continue the war in the air under better conditions than we have ever experienced before. I look forward confidently to the exploits of our fighter pilots-these splendid men, this brilliant youth-who will have the glory of saving their native land, their island home, and all they love, from the most deadly of all attacks.

There remains, of course, the danger of bombing attacks, which will certainly be made very soon upon us by the bomber forces of the enemy. It is true that the German bomber force is superior in numbers to ours; but we have a very large bomber force also, which we shall use to strike at military targets in Germany without intermission. I do not at all underrate the severity of the ordeal which lies before us; but I believe our countrymen will show themselves capable of standing up to it, like the brave men of Barcelona, and will be able to stand up to it, and carry on in spite of it, at least as well as any other people in the world.

Much will depend upon this; every man and every woman will have the chance to show the finest qualities of their race, and render the highest service to their cause. For all of us, at this time, whatever our sphere, our station, our occupation or our duties, it will be a help to remember the famous lines: "He nothing common did or mean, Upon that memorable scene."

I have thought it right upon this occasion to give the House and the country some indication of the solid, practical grounds upon which we base our inflexible resolve to continue the war. There are a good many people who say, 'Never mind. Win or lose, sink or swim, better die than submit to tyranny - and such a tyranny.'

And I do not dissociate myself from them. But I can assure them that our professional advisers of the three Services unitedly advise that we should carry on the war, and that there are good and reasonable hopes of final victory. We have fully informed and consulted all the self-governing Dominions, these great communities far beyond the oceans who have been built up on our laws and on our civilization, and who are absolutely free to choose their course, but are absolutely devoted to the ancient Motherland, and who feel themselves inspired by the same emotions which lead me to stake our all upon duty and honour.

We have fully consulted them, and I have received from their Prime Ministers, Mr Mackenzie King of Canada, Mr Menzies of Australia, Mr Fraser of New Zealand, and General Smuts of South Africa [these were the self-governing dominions of the British Empire]- that wonderful man, with his immense profound mind, and his eye watching from a distance the whole panorama of European affairs - I have received from all these eminent men, who all have Governments behind them elected on wide franchises, who are all there because they represent the will of their people, messages couched in the most moving terms in which they endorse our decision to fight on, and declare themselves ready to share our fortunes and to persevere to the end. That is what we are going to do.

We may now ask ourselves: In what way has our position worsened since the beginning of the war? It has worsened by the fact that the Germans have conquered a large part of the coastline of Western Europe, and many small countries have been overrun by them. This aggravates the possibilities of air attack and adds to our naval preoccupations. It in no way diminishes, but on the contrary definitely increases, the power of our long distance blockade. Similarly, the entrance of Italy into the war increases the power of our long-distance blockade.

We have stopped the worst leak by that. We do not know whether military resistance will come to an end in France or not, but should it do so, then of course, the Germans will be able to concentrate their forces, both military and industrial, upon us. But for the reasons I have given to the House these will not be found so easy to apply. If invasion has become more imminent, as no doubt it has, we, being relieved from the task of maintaining a large army in France, have far larger and more efficient forces to meet it.

If Hitler can bring under his despotic control the industries of the countries he has conquered, this will add greatly to his already vast armament output. On the other hand, this will not happen immediately, and we are now assured of immense, continuous and increasing support in supplies and munitions of all kinds from the United States; and especially of airplanes and pilots from the Dominions and across the oceans, coming from regions which are beyond the reach of enemy bombers.

I do not see how any of these factors can operate to our detriment on balance before the winter comes; and the winter will impose a strain upon the Nazi regime, with almost all Europe writhing and starving under its cruel heel, which, for all their ruthlessness, will run them very hard. We must not forget that from the moment when we declared war on the 3 September it was always possible for Germany to turn all her air force upon this country, together with any other devices of invasion she might conceive, and that France could have done little or nothing to prevent her doing so.

We have, therefore, lived under this danger, in principle and in a slightly modified form, during all these months. In the meanwhile, however, we have enormously improved our methods of defense, and we have learned, what we had no right to assume at the beginning, namely, that the individual aircraft and the individual British pilot have a sure and definite superiority. Therefore, in casting up this dread balance sheet and contemplating our dangers with a disillusioned eye, I see great reason for intense vigilance and exertion but none whatever for panic or despair.

During the first four years of the last war the Allies experienced nothing but disaster and disappointment. That was our constant fear: one blow after another, terrible losses, frightful dangers. Everything miscarried. And yet at the end of those four years the morale of the Allies was higher than that of the Germans, who had moved from one aggressive triumph to another, and who stood everywhere triumphant invaders of the lands into which they had broken.

During that war we repeatedly asked ourselves the question: How are we going to win? And no one was able ever to answer it with much precision, until at the end, quite suddenly, quite unexpectedly, our terrible foe collapsed before us, and we were so glutted with victory that in our folly we threw it away.

We do not yet know what will happen in France or whether the French resistance will be prolonged, both in France and in the French Empire overseas. The French Government will be throwing away great opportunities and casting adrift their future if they do not continue the war in accordance with their Treaty obligations, from which we have not felt able to release them. The House will have read the historic declaration in which, at the desire of many Frenchmen - and of our own hearts - we have proclaimed our willingness at the darkest hour in French history to conclude a union of common citizenship in this struggle.

However matters may go in France or with the French Government, or other French Governments, we in this island and in the British Empire will never lose our sense of comradeship with the French people. If we are now called upon to endure what they have been suffering, we shall emulate their courage, and if final victory rewards our toils they shall share the gains, aye, and freedom shall be restored to all. We abate nothing of our just demands; not one jot or tittle do we recede. Czechs, Poles, Norwegians, Dutch, Belgians have joined their causes to our own. All these shall be restored.

What General Weygand called the Battle of France is over. I expect that the Battle of Britain is about to begin. Upon this battle depends the survival of Christian civilization. Upon it depends our own British life, and the long continuity of our institutions and our Empire. The whole fury and might of the enemy must very soon be turned on us. Hitler knows that he will have to break us in this island or lose the war.

If we can stand up to him, all Europe may be free and the life of the world may move forward into broad, sunlit uplands. But if we fail, then the whole world, including the United States, including all that we have known and cared for, will sink into the abyss of a new Dark Age made more sinister, and perhaps more protracted, by the lights of perverted science. Let us therefore brace ourselves to our duties and so bear ourselves that, if the British Empire and its Commonwealth last for a thousand years, men will still say, "This was their finest hour."

On July 14, 1940, in an address broadcast by the BBC, Winston Churchill stated:

And now it has come to us to stand alone in the breach, and face the worst that the tyrant's might and enmity can do. Bearing ourselves humbly before God, but conscious that we serve an unfolding purpose, we are ready to defend our native land against the invasion by which it is threatened.

We are fighting by ourselves alone; but we are not fighting for ourselves alone. Here in this strong City of Refuge which enshrines the title-deeds of human progress and is of deep consequence to Christian civilization; here, girt about by the seas and oceans where the Navy reigns, shielded from above by the prowess and devotion of our airmen, we await undismayed the impending assault. Perhaps it will come tonight. Perhaps it will come next week. Perhaps it will never come.

We must show ourselves equally capable of meeting a sudden, violent shock, or, what is perhaps a harder test, a prolonged vigil. But be the ordeal sharp or long, or both, we shall seek no terms, we shall ask no parley. Should the invader come, there will be no placid lying down of the people in submission. We shall defend every village, every town and every city. The vast mass of London itself, fought street by street, could easily devour an entire hostile army, and we would rather see London laid in ruins and ashes than that it should be tamely and abjectly enslaved.

On June 16, 1941, in a radio broadcast to America, on receiving the honorary degree of Doctor of Laws from the University of Rochester, New York, Sir Winston Churchill replied:

American Quotations.txt

The destiny of mankind is not decided by material computation. When great causes are on the move in the world...we learn that we are spirits, not animals, and that something is going on in space and time, and beyond space and time.

Prime Minister Winston Churchill, recorded the Mid-Atlantic Conference with President Franklin D. Roosevelt on August 10, 1941:

On Sunday morning, August 10, Mr. Roosevelt came aboard H. M. S. Prince of Wales and, with his Staff officers and several hundred representatives of all ranks of the United States Navy and Marines, attended Divine Service on the quarterdeck.

This service was felt by us all to be a deeply moving expression of the unity of faith of our two peoples, and none who took part in it will forget the spectacle presented that sunlit morning on the crowded quarterdeck - the symbolism of the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes draped side by side on the pulpit; the American and British chaplains sharing in the reading of the prayers; the highest naval, military, and air officers of Britain and the United States grouped in one body behind the President and me; the close-packed ranks of British and American sailors, completely intermingled, sharing the same books and joining fervently together in the prayers and hymns familiar to both.

I chose the hymns myself - "For Those in Peril on the Sea" and "Onward Christian Soldiers." We ended with "Oh God, Our Help in Ages Past," which Macaulay reminds us the Ironsides had chanted as they bore John Hampden's body to the grave.

It was a great hour to live. Nearly half of those who sang were soon to die.

On October 29, 1941, in an address at Harrow School, Churchill admonished:

Never give in, never give in, never, never, never, never - in nothing, great or small, large or petty - never give in except to convictions of honor and good sense....

Do not let us speak of darker days; let us speak rather of sterner days. These are not dark days: these are great days - the greatest days our country has ever lived; and we must all thank God that we have been allowed, each of us according to our stations, to play a part in making these days memorable in the history of our race.

On December 30, 1941, in a speech to the Canadian Senate and House of Commons in Ottawa, Sir Winston Churchill declared:

We have to win that world for our children.... We have to win it by our sacrifices. We have not won it yet. The crisis is upon us.... In this strange, terrible world war there is a place for everyone, man and woman, old and young, hale and halt; service in a thousand forms is open.... The mine, the factory, the dockyard, the salt sea waves, the fields to till, the home, the hospital, the chair of the scientist, the pulpit of the preacher - from the highest to the humblest tasks, all are equal honor; all have their part to play.

On March 5, 1946, at Westminster College in Fulton, Missouri, Winston S. Churchill was awarded an honorary degree. The President of Westminster College, Dr. McCluer, spoke first and then introduced President Harry S Truman. Truman introduced Churchill, who delivered his address entitled: "Sineus of Peace."

This speech may be regarded as the most important Churchill delivered as Leader of the Opposition (1945-1951). In it he introduced the phrase "Iron Curtain" to describe the Cold War developing between the Western powers and the area controlled by the Soviet Union.

Winston Churchill, at times departing from his prepared text, stated:

I am glad to come to Westminster College this afternoon, and am complimented that you should give me a degree. The name "Westminster" is somehow familiar to me. I seem to have heard of it before. Indeed, it was at Westminster that I received a very large part of my education in politics, dialectic, rhetoric, and one or two other things. In fact we have both been educated at the same, or similar, or, at any rate, kindred establishments.

It is also an honor, perhaps almost unique, for a private visitor to be introduced to an academic audience by the President of the United States. Amid his heavy burdens, duties, and responsibilities - unsought but not recoiled from - the President has traveled a thousand miles to dignify and magnify our meeting here to-day and to give me an opportunity of addressing this kindred nation, as well as my own countrymen across the ocean, and perhaps some other countries too.

The President has told you that it is his wish, as I am sure it is yours, that I should have full liberty to give my true and faithful counsel in these anxious and baffling times. I shall certainly avail myself of this freedom, and feel the more right to do so because any private ambitions I may have cherished in my younger days have been satisfied beyond my wildest dreams. Let me, however, make it clear that I have no official mission or status of any kind, and that I speak only for myself. There is nothing here but what you see.

I can therefore allow my mind, with the experience of a lifetime, to play over the problems which beset us on the morrow of our absolute victory in arms, and to try to make sure with what strength I have that what has been gained with so much sacrifice and suffering shall be preserved for the future glory and safety of mankind.

The United States stands at this time at the pinnacle of world power. It is a solemn moment for the American Democracy. For with primacy in power is also joined an awe-inspiring accountability to the future. If you look around you, you must feel not only the sense of duty done but also you must feel anxiety lest you fall below the level of achievement. Opportunity is here now, clear and shining for both our countries. To reject it or ignore it or fritter it away will bring upon us all the long reproaches of the after-time. It is necessary that constancy of mind, persistency of purpose, and the grand simplicity of decision shall guide and rule the conduct of the English-speaking peoples in peace as they did in war. We must, and I believe we shall, prove ourselves equal to this severe requirement.

When American military men approach some serious situation they are wont to write at the head of their directive the words "over-all strategic concept." There is wisdom in this, as it leads to clarity of thought. What then is the over-all strategic concept which we should inscribe today?

It is nothing less than the safety and welfare, the freedom and progress, of all the homes and families of all the men and women in all the lands. And here I speak particularly of the myriad cottage or apartment homes where the wage-earner strives amid the accidents and difficulties of life to guard his wife and children from privation and bring the family up in the fear of the Lord, or upon ethical conceptions which often play their potent part.

To give security to these countless homes, they must be shielded from the two giant marauders, war and tyranny. We all know the frightful disturbances in which the ordinary family is plunged when the curse of war swoops down upon the bread-winner and those for whom he works and contrives. The awful ruin of Europe, with all its vanished glories, and of large parts of Asia glares us in the eyes. When the designs of wicked men or the aggressive urge of mighty States dissolve over large areas the frame of civilized society, humble folk are confronted with difficulties with which they cannot cope. For them all is distorted, all is broken, even ground to pulp.

When I stand here this quiet afternoon I shudder to visualize what is actually happening to millions now and what is going to happen in this period when famine stalks the earth. None can compute what has been called "the unestimated sum of human pain." Our supreme task and duty is to guard the homes of the common people from the horrors and miseries of another war. We are all agreed on that.

Our American military colleagues, after having proclaimed their "over-all strategic concept" and computed available resources, always proceed to the next step-namely, the method. Here again there is widespread agreement. A world organization has already been erected for the prime purpose of preventing war, UNO, the successor of the League of Nations, with the decisive addition of the United States and all that means, is already at work. We must make sure that its work is fruitful, that it is a reality and not a sham, that it is a force for action, and not merely a frothing of words, that it is a true temple of peace in which the shields of many nations can some day be hung up, and not merely a cockpit in a Tower of Babel.

Before we cast away the solid assurances of national armaments for self-preservation we must be certain that our temple is built, not upon shifting sands or quagmires, but upon the rock. Anyone can see with his eyes open that our path will be difficult and also long, but if we persevere together as we did in the two world wars - though not, alas, in the interval between them - I cannot doubt that we shall achieve our common purpose in the end.

I have, however, a definite and practical proposal to make for action. Courts and magistrates may be set up but they cannot function without sheriffs and constables. The United Nations Organization must immediately begin to be equipped with an international armed force. In such a matter we can only go step by step, but we must begin now.

I propose that each of the Powers and States should be invited to delegate a certain number of air squadrons to the service of the world organization. These squadrons would be trained and prepared in their own countries, but would move around in rotation from one country to another. They would wear the uniform of their own countries but with different badges. They would not be required to act against their own nation, but in other respects they would be directed by the world organization. This might be started on a modest scale and would grow as confidence grew. I wished to see this done after the first world war, and I devoutly trust it may be done forthwith.

It would nevertheless be wrong and imprudent to entrust the secret knowledge or experience of the atomic bomb, which the United States, Great Britain, and Canada now share, to the world organization, while it is still in its infancy. It would be criminal madness to cast it adrift in this still agitated and un-united world. No one in any country has slept less well in their beds because this knowledge and the method and the raw materials to apply it, are at present largely retained in American hands.

I do not believe we should all have slept so soundly had the positions been reversed and if some Communist or neo-Fascist State monopolized for the time being these dread agencies. The fear of them alone might easily have been used to enforce totalitarian systems upon the free democratic world, with consequences appalling to human imagination.

God has willed that this shall not be and we have at least a breathing space to set our house in order before this peril has to be encountered: and even then, if no effort is spared, we should still possess so formidable a superiority as to impose effective deterrents upon its employment, or threat of employment, by others. Ultimately, when the essential brotherhood of man is truly embodied and expressed in a world organization with all the necessary practical safeguards to make it effective, these powers would naturally be confided to that world organization.

Now I come to the second danger of these two marauders which threatens the cottage, the home, and the ordinary people - namely, tyranny. We cannot be blind to the fact that the liberties enjoyed by individual citizens throughout the British Empire are not valid in a considerable number of countries, some of which are very powerful. In these States control is enforced upon the common people by various kinds of all-embracing police governments.

The power of the State is exercised without restraint, either by dictators or by compact oligarchies operating through a privileged party and a political police. It is not our duty at this time when difficulties are so numerous to interfere forcibly in the internal affairs of countries which we have not conquered in war.

But we must never cease to proclaim in fearless tones the great principles of freedom and the rights of man which are the joint inheritance of the English-speaking world and which through Magna Carta, the Bill of Rights, the Habeas Corpus, trial by jury, and the English common law find their most famous expression in the American Declaration of Independence.

All this means that the people of any country have the right, and should have the power by constitutional action, by free unfettered elections, with secret ballot, to choose or change the character or form of government under which they dwell; that freedom of speech and thought should reign; that courts of justice, independent of the executive, unbiased by any party, should administer laws which have received the broad assent of large majorities or are consecrated by time and custom.

Here are the title deeds of freedom which should lie in every cottage home. Here is the message of the British and American peoples to mankind. Let us preach what we practice - let us practice - what we preach.

I have now stated the two great dangers which menace the homes of the people: War and Tyranny. I have not yet spoken of poverty and privation which are in many cases the prevailing anxiety. But if the dangers of war and tyranny are removed, there is no doubt that science and co-operation can bring in the next few years to the world, certainly in the next few decades newly taught in the sharpening school of war, an expansion of material well-being beyond anything that has yet occurred in human experience.

Now, at this sad and breathless moment, we are plunged in the hunger and distress which are the aftermath of our stupendous struggle; but this will pass and may pass quickly, and there is no reason except human folly or sub-human crime which should deny to all the nations the inauguration and enjoyment of an age of plenty.

I have often used words which I learned fifty years ago from a great Irish-American orator, a friend of mine, Mr. Bourke Cockran. "There is enough for all. The earth is a generous mother; she will provide in plentiful abundance food for all her children if they will but cultivate her soil in justice and in peace." So far I feel that we are in full agreement.

Now, while still pursuing the method of realizing our overall strategic concept, I come to the crux of what I have traveled here to say. Neither the sure prevention of war, nor the continuous rise of world organization will be gained without what I have called the fraternal association of the English-speaking peoples. This means a special relationship between the British Commonwealth and Empire and the United States.

This is no time for generalities, and I will venture to be precise. Fraternal association requires not only the growing friendship and mutual understanding between our two vast but kindred systems of society, but the continuance of the intimate relationship between our military advisers, leading to common study of potential dangers, the similarity of weapons and manuals of instructions, and to the interchange of officers and cadets at technical colleges.

It should carry with it the continuance of the present facilities for mutual security by the joint use of all Naval and Air Force bases in the possession of either country all over the world. This would perhaps double the mobility of the American Navy and Air Force. It would greatly expand that of the British Empire Forces and it might well lead, if and as the world calms down, to important financial savings. Already we use together a large number of islands; more may well be entrusted to our joint care in the near future.

The United States has already a Permanent Defense Agreement with the Dominion of Canada, which is so devotedly attached to the British Commonwealth and Empire. This Agreement is more effective than many of those which have often been made under formal alliances. This principle should be extended to all British Commonwealths with full reciprocity. Thus, whatever happens, and thus only, shall we be secure ourselves and able to work together for the high and simple causes that are dear to us and bode no ill to any. Eventually there may come - I feel eventually there will come - the principle of common citizenship, but that we may be content to leave to destiny, whose outstretched arm many of us can already clearly see.

There is however an important question we must ask ourselves. Would a special relationship between the United States and the British Commonwealth be inconsistent with our over-riding loyalties to the World Organization? I reply that, on the contrary, it is probably the only means by which that organization will achieve its full stature and strength. There are already the special United States relations with Canada which I have just mentioned, and there are the special relations between the United States and the South American Republics. We British have our twenty years Treaty of Collaboration and Mutual Assistance with Soviet Russia.

I agree with Mr. Bevin, the Foreign Secretary of Great Britain, that it might well be a fifty years Treaty so far as we are concerned. We aim at nothing but mutual assistance and collaboration. The British have an alliance with Portugal unbroken since 1384, and which produced fruitful results at critical moments in the late war.

None of these clash with the general interest of a world agreement, or a world organization; on the contrary they help it. "In my father's house are many mansions." Special associations between members of the United Nations which have no aggressive point against any other country, which harbor no design incompatible with the Charter of the United Nations, far from being harmful, are beneficial and, as I believe, indispensable.

I spoke earlier of the Temple of Peace. Workmen from all countries must build that temple. If two of the workmen know each other particularly well and are old friends, if their families are inter-mingled, and if they have "faith in each other's purpose, hope in each other's future and charity towards each other's shortcomings" - to quote some good words I read here the other day - why cannot they work together at the common task as friends and partners?

Why cannot they share their tools and thus increase each other's working powers? Indeed they must do so or else the temple may not be built, or, being built, it may collapse, and we shall all be proved again unteachable and have to go and try to learn again for a third time in a school of war, incomparably more rigorous than that from which we have just been released. The dark ages may return, the Stone Age may return on the gleaming wings of science, and what might now shower immeasurable material blessings upon mankind, may even bring about its total destruction.

Beware, I say; time may be short. Do not let us take the course of allowing events to drift along until it is too late. If there is to be a fraternal association of the kind I have described, with all the extra strength and security which both our countries can derive from it, let us make sure that that great fact is known to the world, and that it plays its part in steadying and stabilizing the foundations of peace. There is the path of wisdom. Prevention is better than cure.

A shadow has fallen upon the scenes so lately lighted by the Allied victory. Nobody knows what Soviet Russia and its Communist international organization intends to do in the immediate future, or what are the limits, if any, to their expansive and proselytizing tendencies. I have a strong admiration and regard for the valiant Russian people and for my wartime comrade, Marshal Stalin. There is deep sympathy and goodwill in Britain - and I doubt not here also - towards the peoples of all the Russias and a resolve to persevere through many differences and rebuffs in establishing lasting friendships.

We understand the Russian need to be secure on her western frontiers by the removal of all possibility of German aggression. We welcome Russia to her rightful place among the leading nations of the world. We welcome her flag upon the seas. Above all, we welcome constant, frequent and growing contacts between the Russian people and our own people on both sides of the Atlantic. It is my duty however, for I am sure you would wish me to state the facts as I see them to you, to place before you certain facts about the present position in Europe.

From Stettin in the Baltic to Trieste in the Adriatic, an iron curtain has descended across the Continent. Behind that line lie all the capitals of the ancient states of Central and Eastern Europe. Warsaw, Berlin, Prague, Vienna, Budapest, Belgrade, Bucharest and Sofia, all these famous cities and the populations around them lie in what I must call the Soviet sphere, and all are subject in one form or another, not only to Soviet influence but to a very high and, in many cases, increasing measure of control from Moscow.

Athens alone - Greece with its immortal glories - is free to decide its future at an election under British, American and French observation. The Russian-dominated Polish Government has been encouraged to make enormous and wrongful inroads upon Germany, and mass expulsions of millions of Germans on a scale grievous and undreamed-of are now taking place. The Communist parties, which were very small in all these Eastern States of Europe, have been raised to pre-eminence and power far beyond their numbers and are seeking everywhere to obtain totalitarian control.

Police governments are prevailing in nearly every case, and so far, except in Czechoslovakia, there is no true democracy. Turkey and Persia are both profoundly alarmed and disturbed at the claims which are being made upon them and at the pressure being exerted by the Moscow Government. An attempt is being made by the Russians in Berlin to build up a quasi-Communist party in their zone of Occupied Germany by showing special favors to groups of left-wing German leaders.

At the end of the fighting last June, the American and British Armies withdrew westwards, in accordance with an earlier agreement, to a depth at some points of 150 miles upon a front of nearly four hundred miles, in order to allow our Russian allies to occupy this vast expanse of territory which the Western Democracies had conquered.

If now the Soviet Government tries, by separate action, to build up a pro-Communist Germany in their areas, this will cause new serious difficulties in the British and American zones, and will give the defeated Germans the power of putting themselves up to auction between the Soviets and the Western Democracies. Whatever conclusions may be drawn from these facts - and facts they are - this is certainly not the Liberated Europe we fought to build up. Nor is it one which contains the essentials of permanent peace.

The safety of the world requires a new unity in Europe, from which no nation should be permanently outcast. It is from the quarrels of the strong parent races in Europe that the world wars we have witnessed, or which occurred in former times, have sprung. Twice in our own lifetime we have seen the United States, against their wishes and their traditions, against arguments, the force of which it is impossible not to comprehend, drawn by irresistible forces, into these wars in time to secure the victory of the good cause, but only after frightful slaughter and devastation had occurred.

Twice the United States has had to send several millions of its young men across the Atlantic to find the war; but now war can find any nation, wherever it may dwell between dusk and dawn. Surely we should work with conscious purpose for a grand pacification of Europe, within the structure of the United Nations and in accordance with its Charter. That I feel is an open cause of policy of very great importance.

In front of the iron curtain which lies across Europe are other causes for anxiety. In Italy the Communist Party is seriously hampered by having to support the Communist-trained Marshal Tito's claims to former Italian territory at the head of the Adriatic. Nevertheless the future of Italy hangs in the balance. Again one cannot imagine a regenerated Europe without a strong France. All my public life I have worked for a strong France and I never lost faith in her destiny, even in the darkest hours.

I will not lose faith now. However, in a great number of countries, far from the Russian frontiers and throughout the world, Communist fifth columns are established and work in complete unity and absolute obedience to the directions they receive from the Communist center.

Except in the British Commonwealth and in the United States where Communism is in its infancy, the Communist parties or fifth columns constitute a growing challenge and peril to Christian civilization. These are somber facts for anyone to have to recite on the morrow of a victory gained by so much splendid comradeship in arms and in the cause of freedom and democracy; but we should be most unwise not to face them squarely while time remains.

The outlook is also anxious in the Far East and especially in Manchuria.

The Agreement which was made at Yalta, to which I was a party, was extremely favorable to Soviet Russia, but it was made at a time when no one could say that the German war might not extend all through the summer and autumn of 1945 and when the Japanese war was expected to last for a further 18 months from the end of the German war. In this country you are all so well-informed about the Far East, and such devoted friends of China, that I do not need to expatiate on the situation there.

I have felt bound to portray the shadow which, alike in the west and in the east, falls upon the world. I was a high minister at the time of the Versailles Treaty and a close friend of Mr. Lloyd-George, who was the head of the British delegation at Versailles. I did not myself agree with many things that were done, but I have a very strong impression in my mind of that situation, and I find it painful to contrast it with that which prevails now.

In those days there were high hopes and unbounded confidence that the wars were over, and that the League of Nations would become all-powerful. I do not see or feel that same confidence or even the same hopes in the haggard world at the present time.

On the other hand I repulse the idea that a new war is inevitable; still more that it is imminent. It is because I am sure that our fortunes are still in our own hands and that we hold the power to save the future, that I feel the duty to speak out now that I have the occasion and the opportunity to do so. I do not believe that Soviet Russia desires war. What they desire is the fruits of war and the indefinite expansion of their power and doctrines.

But what we have to consider here to-day while time remains, is the permanent prevention of war and the establishment of conditions of freedom and democracy as rapidly as possible in all countries. Our difficulties and dangers will not be removed by closing our eyes to them. They will not be removed by mere waiting to see what happens; nor will they be removed by a policy of appeasement. What is needed is a settlement, and the longer this is delayed, the more difficult it will be and the greater our dangers will become.

From what I have seen of our Russian friends and Allies during the war, I am convinced that there is nothing they admire so much as strength, and there is nothing for which they have less respect than for weakness, especially military weakness. For that reason the old doctrine of a balance of power is unsound. We cannot afford, if we can help it, to work on narrow margins, offering temptations to a trial of strength. If the Western Democracies stand together in strict adherence to the principles of the United Nations Charter, their influence for furthering those principles will be immense and no one is likely to molest them. If however they become divided or falter in their duty and if these all-important years are allowed to slip away then indeed catastrophe may overwhelm us all.

Last time I saw it all coming and cried aloud to my own fellow-countrymen and to the world, but no one paid any attention. Up till the year 1933 or even 1935, Germany might have been saved from the awful fate which has overtaken her and we might all have been spared the miseries Hitler let loose upon mankind. There never was a war in all history easier to prevent by timely action than the one which has just desolated such great areas of the globe.

It could have been prevented in my belief without the firing of a single shot, and Germany might be powerful, prosperous and honored to-day; but no one would listen and one by one we were all sucked into the awful whirlpool. We surely must not let that happen again. This can only be achieved by reaching now, in 1946, a good understanding on all points with Russia under the general authority of the United Nations Organization and by the maintenance of that good understanding through many peaceful years, by the world instrument, supported by the whole strength of the English-speaking world and all its connections. There is the solution which I respectfully offer to you in this Address to which I have given the title "The Sign of Peace."

Let no man underrate the abiding power of the British Empire and Commonwealth. Because you see the 46 millions in our island harassed about their food supply, of which they only grow one half, even in war-time, or because we have difficulty in restarting our industries and export trade after six years of passionate war effort, do not suppose that we shall not come through these dark years of privation as we have come through the glorious years of agony, or that half a century from now, you will not see 70 or 80 millions of Britons spread about the world and united in defense of our traditions, our way of life, and of the world causes which you and we espouse.

If the population of the English-speaking Commonwealths be added to that of the United States with all that such co-operation implies in the air, on the sea, all over the globe and in science and in industry, and in moral force, there will be no quivering, precarious balance of power to offer its temptation to ambition or adventure. On the contrary, there will be an overwhelming assurance of security. If we adhere faithfully to the Charter of the United Nations and walk forward in sedate and sober strength seeking no one's land or treasure, seeking to lay no arbitrary control upon the thoughts of men; if all British moral and material forces and convictions are joined with your own in fraternal association, the high-roads of the future will be clear, not only for us but for all, not only for our time, but for a century to come.

In 1953, at the occasion of his forty-fifth wedding anniversary, Sir Winston Churchill commented:

I married and lived happily ever after...with a being incapable of an ignoble thought.

On March 2, 1955, in an address to the Commons on the hydrogen bomb, Sir Winston Churchill stated:

It doesn't matter so much to old people; they are going soon anyway, but I find it poignant to look at youth in all its activity and ardor and, most of all, to watch little children playing their merry games, and wonder what would lie before them if God wearied of mankind.

On April 4, 1955, in a toast to Queen Elizabeth II at a dinner held at No. 10 Downing Street on the eve of Sir Winston Churchill's resignation, he stated:

I have the honor of proposing a toast which I used to enjoy drinking during the years when I was a cavalry subaltern in the reign of Your Majesty's great-great-grandmother, Queen Victoria. Having served in office or in Parliament under the four sovereigns who have reigned since those days, I felt, with these credentials, that in asking our Majesty's gracious permission to propose a toast...

Never have the august duties which fall upon the monarchy been discharged with more devotion than in the brilliant opening of Your Majesty's reign. We thank God for the gift He has bestowed upon us and vow ourselves anew to the sacred causes and wise and kindly way of life of which Your Majesty is the young, gleaming champion.

Sir Winston Churchill stated:

"Never in the field of human conflict was so much owed by so many to so few."

Schweitzer, Albert (January 14, 1875-September 4, 1965), was a physician, philosopher, musician and a medical missionary who won the Nobel Peace Prize in 1952. He practiced as a doctor in the hospital he founded in the jungle village of Lambarene, Gabon, west central Africa, and even used the $33,000 Nobel prize money to build a leper colony. He had won international acclaim for his writings and recitals of Johann Sebastian Bach's organ music. Albert Schweitzer's writings include: The Philosophy of Civilization; The Decay and Restoration of Civilization; Civilization and Ethics; Out of My Life and Thought; From My African Notebook; and The Quest of the Historical Jesus (1906). His philosophy of life can be best summarized in his ethic of "reverence for life." Albert Schweitzer expressed:

He comes to us as One unknown, without a name, as of old, by the lake-side, He came to those men who knew Him not. He speaks to us the same word: "Follow thou me!" and sets us to the tasks which He has to fulfill for our time. He commands. And to those who obey Him, whether they be wise or simple, He will reveal Himself in the toils, the conflicts, the sufferings which they shall pass through in His fellowship, and, as an ineffable mystery, they shall learn in their own experience who He is.

In proportion as we have the Spirit of Jesus we have the true knowledge of Jesus.

Christianity has need of thought that it may come to the consciousness of its real self. For centuries it treasured the great commandment of love and mercy as traditional truth without recognizing it as a reason for opposing slavery... torture, and all the other ancient and medieval forms of inhumanity.

All living knowledge of God rests upon this foundation: that we experience Him in our lives as Will-to-Love.

It was quite incomprehensible to me - this was before I began going to school - why in my evening prayers I should pray for human beings only. So when my mother had prayed with me and had kissed me good night, I used to add silently a prayer that I had composed for myself for all living creatures. It ran thus: "O heavenly Father, protect and bless all things that have breath; guard them from all evil, and let them sleep in peace."

Facts call us to reflect, even as the tossing of a capsizing vessel cause the crew to rush on deck and to climb the masts.

One day, in my despair, I threw myself into a chair in the consulting room and groaned out: "What a blockhead I was to come out here to doctor savages like these!" Whereupon Joseph quietly remarked: "Yes, Doctor, here on earth you are a great blockhead, but not in heaven."

Dr. Albert Schweitzer, in a statement printed in Guidposts, March, 1956, explained:

Day by day we should weigh what we have granted to the spirit of the world against what we have denied to the spirit of Jesus, in thought and especially in deed.

Penney, J.C. (James Cash) (September 16, 1875-February 12, 1971), was an American businessman, entrepreneur, and founder of the J.C. Penney chain of stores. In his autobiography, entitled Fifty Years With the Golden Rule, J.C. Penney stated:

As to our country, my faith in our America, in its people and in the "American way of life" is unwavering. Its founding I believe to have been divinely ordained, and God has a mighty mission for it among the nations of the world. It was founded in prayer, in faith, and in the heroic spirit of sacrifice. Lives of comparative ease might have been the lot of our forefathers in their own country had they been willing to surrender their convictions. They chose the "hard right," rather than the "easy wrong"....

As a nation, and as individuals, our fate will always be determined by our choice of the "hard right" or the "easy wrong"....

Every aspect of world condition today opens a way provocatively for applying Christian principles to living. Let us not be afraid: loving God, and our neighbors as ourselves, let us only believe. Being not afraid, and believing, let us choose for ourselves the "hard right." If individuals in sufficient number will pledge their part as men willing to follow the hard right, our America will be made safe for her own people and will stand as a beacon light of hope to this war-torn, war-weary world.

J. C. Penny, in an article entitled "Something to Lean On," published in The Rotarian, August 1956, stated:

There is something distinctive that I always look for in men of serious purpose. Those who so live and work are, I find, believing men. Many are praying men.

Pope Pius XII (March 2, 1876-October 9, 1958), whose given name was Eugenio Pacelli, in a radio broadcast on September 1, 1944, stated:

Private property is a natural fruit of labor, a product of intense activity of man, acquired through his energetic determination to ensure and develop with his own strength his own existence and that of his family, and to create for himself and his own an existence of just freedom, not only economic, but also political, cultural and religious.

On August 28, 1947, in an exchange of messages with Pope Pius XII, President Harry S. Truman stated:

Our common goal is to arouse and invigorate the faith of men to attain eternal values in our own generation - no matter what obstacles exist or may arise in the path....

An enduring peace can be built only upon Christian principles. To such a consummation we dedicate all our resources, both spiritual and material, remembering always that "except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain who build it."

In writing to Pope Pius XII, in 1947, President Truman said of America:

This is a Christian nation.

On March 2, 1955, in a tribute to Pope Pius XII, President Eisenhower stated at a new conference:

As to His Holiness, the Pope, [on] his seventy-ninth birthday, a man that I have had the honor of visiting personally, admiring him greatly, and particularly because of his unbroken record of opposition to all forms of fascism and communism, I am quite certain that America, all America, would wish this great spiritual leader a very happy day today, and many more of them.

In reply to an expression of loyalty given him from American bishop Fulton Sheen, published in Look Magazine, August 22, 1955, Pope Pius XII stated:

It is true that Divine Providence has invested me, although unworthily, in this position as head of the Church, but as a man I am nothing... nothing... nothing.

In a message for Labor Day, published in Guidposts, September 1955, Pope Pius XII stated:

Labor is not merely the fatigue of body without sense or value; nor is it merely a humiliating servitude. It is a service of God, a gift of God, the vigor and fullness of human life, the gage of eternal rest.

On January 8, 1956, in an address on the science and morality of painless childbirth, Pope Pius XII stated:

If the new technique spares her the sufferings of childbirth, the mother can accept it without any scruple of conscience; but she is not obliged to do so. In the case of partial success or failure, she knows that suffering can be a source of good, if she bears it with God and in obedience to His will....

The life and sufferings of our Saviour, the pains which so many great men have born and even sought and through which they have matured and risen to the summits of Christian heroism, the daily examples we see of acceptance of the cross with resignation: all this reveals the meaning of suffering, of the patient acceptance of pain in the present plan of salvation, for the duration of this earthly life.

On April 1, 1956, in an Easter address in St. Peter's Square, Rome, Pope Pius XII stated:

This year's celebration of Easter should be primarily a recall to faith in Christ, addressed to people who, through no fault of their own, are still unaware of the saving work of the Redeemer; to those who, on the contrary, would wish to have His name wiped out of the minds and hearts of nations; and finally, in a special manner, to those souls of little faith who, seduced by deceptive enticements, are on the point of exchanging the priceless Christian values for those of a false earthly progress.

On September 1, 1956, in a comment to a group of international heart specialists received at the Vatican, Pope Pius XII stated:

Bodily pain affects man as a whole down to the deepest layers of his moral being. It forces him to face again the fundamental questions of his fate, of his attitude toward God and fellow men, of his individual and collective responsibility and of the sense of his pilgrimage on earth.

On September 3, 1956, in an address from Rome to the seventy-seventh Catholic Day at Cologne, Germany, Pope Pius XII stated:

The Church continues to fight, not in the field of politics and economics as she has been falsely accused of doing, but with weapons that are proper to her: the perseverance of her faithful prayer, truth and love.

On September 21, 1956, in a comment on interplanetary explorations, Pope Pius XII stated:

God has no intention of setting a limit to the efforts of man to conquer space.

On October 15, 1956, in an address to several thousand members of an Italian feminist group, Pope Pius XII stated:

The concept of the woman of the shipyards, of the mines, of heavy labor as it is exalted and practiced by some countries that would want to inspire progress is anything but a modern concept. It is, on the contrary, a sad return toward epochs that Christian civilization buried long ago.

On November 28, 1956, in a message to the Olympic Games at Melbourne, Australia, Pope Pius XII stated:

We have been pleased to recall the harmony of relations between Christian principles and sporting activities. . . . Make manifest in your acts how, without losing any of its technical value, sport, being a school of energy and of self mastery, must be ordained towards the intellectual and moral perfecting of the soul.

Colorado, State of (August 1, 1876), was the 38th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Colorado, adopted March 14, 1876, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of Colorado, with profound reverence for the Supreme Ruler of the Universe, in order to form a more independent and perfect government; establish justice; insure tranquility; provide for the common defense; promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the "State of Colorado."

Article II, Section 4. Religious Freedom. The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination, shall forever hereafter be guaranteed; and no person shall be denied any civil or political right, privilege or capacity, on account of his opinions concerning religion; but the liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be construed to dispense with oaths or affirmations, excuse acts of licentiousness or justify practices inconsistent with the good order, peace or safety of the state.

Article II, Section 26. Slavery Prohibited. There shall never be in this state either slavery or involuntary servitude, except as a punishment for crime, whereof the party shall have been duly convicted.

The Constitution of the State of Colorado, November 3, 1936, stated:

Article X, Section 5. Property used for religious worship, schools and charitable purposes exempt. Property, real and personal, that is used solely and exclusively for religious worship, for schools or for strictly charitable purposes, also cemeteries not used or held for private or corporate profit, shall be exempt from taxation.

Colorado, Motto of The State of (August 1, 1876), stated:

Nil Sine Numine (Nothing without God).

Bennett, William W. (1877), a Confederate Chaplain during the Civil War, published his remarkable documentary, A Narrative of the Great Revival Which Prevailed in the Southern Armies. This was a first-hand account of the spiritual renewal that occurred in General Robert E. Lee's Army of Northern Virginia. As head of the Methodist Soldiers' Tract Association, Chaplain William W. Bennett wrote of the conversions in the Confederate ranks:

Up to January, 1865, it was estimated that nearly 150,000 soldiers had been converted during the progress of the war, and it was believed that fully one-third of all the soldiers in the field were praying men, and members of some branch of the Christian Church.

In the army of General Lee, while it lay on the upper Rappahannock, the revival flame swept through every corps, division, brigade, and regiment. [One chaplain reported]:

"The whole army is a vast field, ready and ripe to the harvest....The susceptibility of the soldiers to the gospel is wonderful, and, doubtful as the remark may appear, the military camp is most favorable to the work of revival. The soldiers, with the simplicity of little children, listen to and embrace the truth. Already over two thousand have professed conversion, and two thousand more are penitent....

Oh, it is affecting to see the soldiers crowd and press about the preacher for want of tracts, etc., he has to distribute, and it is sad to see hundreds retiring without being supplied!"

[Another minister reported] "The cold, mud, and rain, have produced great suffering and sickness among the troops; for we have been entirely without shelter in very exposed positions....In our field hospital we have over 350 sick....

I never saw men who were better prepared to receive religious instruction and advice. . . . The dying begged for our prayers and our songs. Every evening we would gather around the wounded and sing and pray with them. Many wounded, who had hitherto led wicked lives, became entirely changed. . . .

One young Tennessean, James Scott, of the 32d Tennessee, . . . continually begged us to sing for him and to pray with him. He earnestly desired to see his mother before he died, which was not permitted, as she was in the enemy's lines, and he died rejoicing in the grace of God. "

In 1862, after the Battle of Cross Keys, a soldier recounted to Chaplain William W. Bennett his observation of General Stonewall Jackson:

I saw something today which affected me more than anything I ever saw or read on religion. While the battle was raging and the bullets were flying, Jackson rode by, calm as if he were at home, but his head was raised toward heaven, and his lips were moving evidently in prayer.

Chaplain William W. Bennett took the dying words of T. S. Chandler of the 6th South Carolina Regiment:

Tell my mother that I am lying without hope of recovery. . . . My hope is in Christ, for whose sake I hope to be saved. Tell her that she and my brother cannot see me again on earth, but they can meet me in heaven. . . . I know I am going there.

In the spring of 1865, there was almost a continual revival among General Robert E. Lee's ranks. Chaplain Bennett records a Resolution adopted by five brigades of the Georgia troops:

That we hereby acknowledge the sinfulness of our past conduct as a just and sufficient ground for the displeasure of Almighty God; and that, earnestly repenting of our sins, we are determined, by his grace, to amend our lives for the future; and, in earnest supplication to God, through the mediation of his Son, Jesus Christ, we implore the forgiveness of our sins and seek the Divine favor and protection.

Jeans, Sir James Hopwood (September 11, 1877-September 16, 1946), was an English physicist and astronomer. He studied the nature of gases and sun radiations. Educated at Trinity College, Cambridge University, he became a professor at Princeton University in the area of applied mathematics, and later a professor at Cambridge. He was a research associate at the Mount Wilson Observatory, Pasadena, California, 1923-44; Secretary of the Royal Society; president of the Royal Astronomical Society of England; and was knighted in 1928. His works include: The Universe Around Us, 1929; The Mysterious Universe, 1930; and Physics and Philosophy, 1942.

In his work, The Mysterious Universe, 1930, Sir James Hopwood Jeans stated:

All the pictures which science now draws of nature and which alone seem capable of according with observational fact are mathematical pictures. . . . From the intrinsic evidence of his creation, the Great Architect of the Universe now begins to appear as a pure mathematician.

Duquesne University (1878), was founded by the Catholic Church in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania. Its motto stated:

Spiritus est qui vivificat (It is the Spirit that gives light).

United States Supreme Court (1878), rendered its opinion on the case of Reynolds v. United States, 98 U.S. 145, 165 (1878). The same men that passed the act creating religious freedom in Virginia, also passed very strict laws against polygamy and sexual immorality, as documented in the Supreme Court's decision of 1878:

It is a significant fact that on the 8th of December, 1788, after the passage of the act establishing religious freedom, and after the convention of Virginia had recommended as an amendment to the Constitution of the United States the declaration in a bill of rights that "all men have an equal, natural, and unalienable right to the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience," [that] the legislature of that State substantially enacted the... death penalty... [for polygamy].

Fosdick, Henry Emerson (1878-1969), was one of the best-known ministers of his day. He pastored the First Presbyterian Church, New York City, and later the Park Avenue Baptist Church, New York City. He wrote numerous works, including: The Meaning of Prayer; Twelve Tests of Character; The Man From Nazareth; Martin Luther; The Manhood of the Master; On Being a Real Person; On Being Fit to Live; and his autobiography The Living of These Days.

In 1920, he wrote The Meaning of Service, in which he stated:

The Sea of Galilee and the Dead Sea are made of the same water. It flows down, clear and cool, from the heights of Hermon and the roots of the cedars of Lebanon. The Sea of Galilee makes beauty of it, for the Sea of Galilee has an outlet. It gets to give. It gathers in its riches that it may pour them out again to fertilize the Jordan plain. But the Dead Sea with the same water makes horror. For the Dead Sea has no outlet. It gets to keep.

Henry Emerson Fosdick commented:

We Americans say that the Constitution made the nation, well, the Constitution is a great document and we never would have been a nation without it, but it took more than that to make the nation!

Rather it was our forefathers and foremothers who made the Constitution and then made it work. The government they constructed did get great things out of them, but it was not the government primarily that put great things into them.

What put great things into them was their home life, their religion, their sense of personal responsibility to Almighty God, their devotion to education, their love of liberty, their personal character.

When the government pumped, it drew from profound depths in the spiritual lives of men and women where creative spiritual forces had been at work.

Race prejudice is as thorough a denial of the Christian God as atheism is, and it is a much more common form of apostasy.

Lemoine, Paul (1878-1940), was the President of the Geological Society of France, director of the Natural History Museum in Paris and a chief editor of the 1937 edition of the Encyclopedi a Francaise. In writing an article on evolution, he stated:

The theory of evolution is impossible. At base, in spite of appearances, no one any longer believes in it. . . . Evolution is a kind of dogma which the priests no longer believe, but which they maintain for their people.

Sandburg, Carl (January 6, 1878-July 22, 1967), was an American poet and biographer. He received the Pulitzer Prize for history in 1940, and for poetry in 1951. He was honored with Gold Medals from the American Academy of Arts and Letters; the Poetry Society of America; and in 1964 received the Presidential Medal of Freedom. His works include: Chicago Poems, 1915; Rootabaga Stories, 1922; American Songbag, 1927; Remembrance Rock, 1948; and his autobiography Always the Young Strangers, 1953. He received acclaim for the biographical works, Abraham Lincoln-The Prairie Years, 1926; and Abraham Lincoln-The War Years, 1939, resulting in his being asked to address a joint session of Congress on the 150th anniversary of Lincoln's birthday.

Carl Sandburg wrote:

A baby is God's opinion that the world should go on.

Einstein, Albert (March 14, 1879-April 18, 1955), was a German-born American theoretical physicist. He developed the theory of relativity, which was the basis for the application of atomic energy. In 1921, Albert Einstein was the recipient of the Nobel Prize, and in 1952 he was offered the position of President of Israel, but turned it down.

On November 9, 1930, in an article in the The New York Times, Albert Einstein's statement was recorded:

I assert that the cosmic religious experience is the strongest and noblest driving force behind scientific research.

Albert Einstein stated:

God Almighty does not throw dice.

In commenting on wealth, Albert Einstein stated:

I am absolutely convinced that no wealth in the world can help humanity forward, even in the hands of the most devoted worker in this cause. The example of great and pure individuals is the only thing that can lead us to noble thoughts and deeds. Money only appeals to selfishness and irresistibly invites abuse. Can anyone imagine Moses, Jesus, or Gandhi armed with the moneybags of Carnegie?

In describing the theory of relativity, Albert Einstein stated:

When a man sits with a pretty girl for an hour, it seems like a minute. But let him sit on a hot stove for a minute - and it's longer than any hour. That's relativity.

Albert Einstein's statement inscribed in Fine Hall at Princeton University reads:

Raffiniert ist der Herr Gott, aber Boshaft ist er nicht." (God is clever, but not dishonest.)

Albert Einstein stated:

My religion consists of a humble admiration of the illimitable superior spirit who reveals himself in the slight details we are able to perceive with our frail and feeble minds.

Lindsay, (Nicholas) Vachel (November 10, 1879-December 5, 1931), was an American poet and lecturer. Known as "the vagabond poet," his rhythmical verse carried an impressive effect as he would read it aloud. Among his most admired volumes are: General Booth Enters into Heaven and Other Poems, 1913; The Congo and Other Poems, 1914; and The Chinese Nightingale.

In his poem, General Booth Enters into Heaven, Vachel Lindsay wrote:

Booth died blind and still by faith he trod,
Eyes still dazzled by the ways of God.

MacArthur, Douglas (January 26, 1880-April 5, 1964), was a U.S. Military General and World War II hero. He was superintendent of West Point, 1919-20, after having commanded the 42nd (Rainbow) Division during World War I. At the age of 30, he became Chief of Staff of the U.S. Army, the youngest man to hold the post, and was promoted to general. In 1937, he retired from the army, but was recalled in 1941 to command the U.S. forces in the Far East. In 1942, he became Allied Supreme Commander in the Southwest Pacific Area, and in 1944 General of the Army. He received the surrender of the Japanese, and led the reconstruction of Japan after the war. During the Korean War, he served as Commander of the United Nations forces.

On April 9, 1942, in a tribute to the troops of Bataan, General Douglas MacArthur stated:

To the weeping mothers of its dead, I can only say that the sacrifice and halo of Jesus of Nazareth has descended upon their sons, and that God will take them unto Himself.

American Quotations.txt

In commenting on being named Father of the Year, 1942, General Douglas MacArthur stated:

By profession I am a soldier and take pride in that fact. But I am prouder - infinitely prouder - to be a father. A soldier destroys in order to build; the father only builds, never destroys. The one has the potentiality of death; the other embodies creation and life. And while the hordes of death are mighty, the battalions of life are mightier still.

It is my hope that my son, when I am gone, will remember me not from the battle but in the home repeating with him our simple daily prayer, "Our Father Who Art in Heaven.

On October 20, 1944, General Douglas MacArthur landed on Leyte, and began the liberation of the Philippine Islands from oppression. He declared:

I have returned. By the grace of Almighty God, our forces stand again on Philippine soil.

On October 20, 1944, in a radio speech broadcast from the invasion beach on returning to the Philippines, General Douglas MacArthur stated:

Strike at every favorable opportunity. For your homes and hearths, strike! For future generations of your sons and daughters, strike! In the name of your sacred dead, strike! Let no heart be faint. Let every arm be steeled. The guidance of Divine God points the way. Follow in His name to the Holy Grail of righteous victory!

General Douglas MacArthur stated:

In war, when a commander becomes so bereft of reason and perspective that he fails to understand the dependence of arms on Divine guidance, he no longer deserves victory.

On Sunday, September 2, 1945, aboard the battleship USS Missouri in Tokyo Bay, General Douglas MacArthur met with leaders of Allied forces to sign the treaty of the surrender of Japan. After signing, he offered a prayer:

Let us pray that peace be now restored to the world and that God will preserve it always.

In a speech addressing the Allied officers assembled on the deck of the USS Missouri, September 2, 1945, General Douglas MacArthur declared:

We have had our last chance. If we do not now devise some greater and more equitable system, Armageddon will be at our door. The problem is basically theological and involves a spiritual recrudescence and improvement of human character that will synchronize with our almost matchless advances... of the past two thousand years...

It must be of the spirit if we are to save the flesh.

American Quotations.txt

General Douglas MacArthur suggested that Youth for Christ representatives and other missionary groups go to Japan after World War II:

[In order to] provide the surest foundation for the firm establishment of democracy.

On April 19, 1951, following a tour of Korea, General Douglas MacArthur spoke to a Joint Session of Congress to announce his retirement:

I am closing my fifty-two years of military service. When I joined the Army, even before the turn of the century, it was the fulfillment of all my boyish hopes and dreams. The world has turned over many times since I took the oath of the Plain at West Point, and the hopes and dreams have all since vanished, but I still remember the refrain of one of the most popular barracks ballads of that day, which proclaimed most proudly that old soldiers never die; they just fade away. And, like the old soldier of that ballad, I now close my military career and just fade away, an old soldier who has tried to do his duty as God gave him the light to see that duty. Good-by.

On January 18, 1955, a monument was dedicated to General Douglas MacArthur at the occasion of his seventy-fifth birthday, which had inscribed his statement:

Battles are not won by arms alone. There must exist above all else a spiritual impulse - a will to victory. In war there can be no substitute for victory.

On May 12, 1962, Douglas MacArthur addressed the cadets at the U. S. Military Academy at West Point:

The soldier, above all other men, is required to practice the greatest act of religious training - sacrifice. In battle and in the face of danger and death, he discloses those Divine attributes which his Maker gave when He created man in His own image.

No physical courage and no brute instinct can take the place of Divine help which alone can sustain him. However horrible the incidents of war may be, the soldier who is called upon to offer and to give his life for his country is the noblest development of mankind.

General Douglas MacArthur composed "A Father's Prayer" in the early days of World War II while in the Pacific:

Build me a son, O Lord, who will be strong enough to know when he is weak, brave enough to face himself when he is afraid, one who will be proud and unbending in honest defeat, and humble and gentle in victory.

Build me a son whose wishes will not take the place of deeds; a son who will know Thee - and that to know himself is the foundation stone of knowledge.

Lead him, I pray, not in the path of ease and comfort, but under the stress and spur of difficulties and challenge. Here let him learn to stand up in the storm; here let him learn compassion for those who fail.

Build me a son whose heart will be clear, whose goal will be high; a son who will master himself before he seeks to master other men; one who will reach into the future, yet never forget the past.

And after all these things are his, add, I pray, enough of sense of humor, so that he may always be serious, yet never take himself too seriously. Give him humility, so that he may always remember the simplicity of true greatness, the open mind of true wisdom, and the meekness of true strength.

Then, I, his father, will dare to whisper, "I have not lived in vain."

General Douglas MacArthur stated:

History fails to record a single precedent in which nations subject to moral decay have not passed into political and economic decline. There has been either a spiritual awakening to overcome the moral lapse, or a progressive deterioration leading to ultimate national disaster.

Keller, Helen Adams (June 27, 1880-June 1, 1968), was an American author and lecturer. She overcame the tremendous obstacles of being both blind and deaf, due to a debilitating illness suffered at the age of two. Her parents took her to Dr. Alexander Graham Bell, who recommended her to the Perkins Institute for the Blind in Boston. It was there, at the age of seven, that Anne Sullivan began tutoring her through the sense of touch, eventually teaching her to read Braille.

Helen Keller attended Radcliffe College, where Anne Sullivan interpreted the lectures to her, and she was able to type on a special Braille typewriter. Helen Keller became concerned about the conditions of blind, especially those blinded in World War II. The recipient of innumerable national and international honors for her efforts to help the blind, Helen Keller wrote several books, including: The Story of My Life, 1903; Optimism, 1903; The World I Live In, 1908; The Song of the Stone Wall, 1910; Out of the Dark, 1913; My Religion, 1927; Midstream, 1930; Let Us Have Faith, 1941; and The Open Door, 1957.

Helen Keller declared:

Just as all things upon earth represent and image forth all the realities of another world, so the Bible is one mighty representative of the whole spiritual life of humanity.

I thank God for my handicaps, for, through them, I have found myself, my work, and my God.

Four things to learn in life:

To think clearly without hurry or confusion;

To love everybody sincerely;

To act in everything with the highest motives;

To trust God unhesitatingly.

In the film documentary of her life, The Unconquered, Helen Keller responded to the question, "Can you see the world?":

I can see, and that is why I can be so happy, in what you call the dark, but which to me is golden. I can see a God-made world, not a man-made world.

On February 5, 1955, at the age of seventy-four, Helen Keller typed a message on a conventional typewriter during an interview with newsmen just prior to her forty thousand mile world-wide journey, much of which was by airplane:

It's wonderful to climb the liquid mountains of the sky. Behind me and before me is God and I have no fears.

On June 26, 1955, just a few days before her seventy-fifth birthday, Helen Keller stated:

Self-pity is our worst enemy and if we yield to it, we can never do anything wise in the world.

On June 26, 1955, regarding reading the Bible, Helen Keller stated:

It gives me a deep comforting sense that "things seen are temporal and things unseen are eternal."

DeMille, Cecil Blount (August 12, 1881-January 21, 1959), was an American motion-picture producer and director. He was known for the originality and accuracy of his epic productions, which utilized spectacular crowd scenes and special effects. His best-known films include: Cleopatra; Union Pacific; The Crusades; The Sign of the Cross; Autobiography; The King of Kings 1927; Samson and Delilah 1949; The Ten Commandments 1923, remade 1956; and The Greatest Show on Earth, for which he won the 1952 Academy Award for best film.

Born in Ashfield, Massachusetts, Cecil B. DeMille was educated at Pennsylvania Military Academy and at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts. He worked as an actor for several years, wrote two plays, and from 1936 to 1945 produced numerous radio programs. His niece, Agnes de Mille (born 1909), was well-known for her choreography of the films and musicals: Oklahoma! (1943); Paint Your Wagon (1951); Carousel (1945); and Rodeo (1942).

In 1956, at the New York opening of the film The Ten Commandments, Cecil B. DeMille stated:

The Ten Commandments are not the laws. They are THE LAW. Man has made 32 million laws since the Commandments were handed down to Moses on Mount Sinai more than three thousand years ago, but he has never improved on God's law. The Ten Commandments are the principles by which man may live with God and man may live with man. They are the expressions of the mind of God for His creatures. They are the charter and guide of human liberty, for there can be no liberty without the law....

What I hope for our production of The Ten Commandments is that those who see it shall come from the theater not only entertained and filled with the sight of a big spectacle, but filled with the spirit of truth. That it will bring to its audience a better understanding of the real meaning of this pattern of life that God has set down for us to follow.

Temple, William (October 15, 1881-October 26, 1944), was the 98th Archbishop of Canterbury, 1942-44; Archbishop of York, 1929-42, and the bishop of Manchester, 1921-29. Active in social and economic matters, William Temple wrote in The Malvern Manifesto:

There is no structural organization of society which can bring about the coming of the Kingdom of God on earth, since all systems can be perverted by the selfishness of man.

Rayburn, Sam (1882-1961), was a U.S. Representative from Texas, 1912, reelected 24 times, and Speaker of the House of Representatives, 1940-1947; 1949-1953; 1955-1961.

On March 20, 1955, upon the opening of a prayer and meditation room in the U.S. Capitol Building, Representative Sam Rayburn commented:

I do trust that there will not be a show made of this thing...Members in this room want to be alone with their God.

Stine, Charles Milton (1882-1954), was the director of Research for the E. I. Dupont Company. An organic chemist, he was a leader in the development of significant new products and patents, most of which were connected with propellant powder, high explosives, dyes, artificial leather, and paints.

In the book he authored, entitled, A Chemist and His Bible, Charles Stine stated:

The world about us, far more intricate than any watch, filled with checks and balances of a hundred varieties, marvelous beyond even the imagination of the most skilled scientific investigator, this beautiful and intricate creation, bears the signature of its Creator, graven in its works.

Roosevelt, Franklin Delano (January 30, 1882-April 12, 1945), was the 32nd President of the United States, 1933-45, whose Presidential term spanned over 12 years, the longest of any President; the seventh President to die in office; Governor of New York, 1929-33; stricken with infantile paralysis, 1921; Assistant Secretary of the Navy, 1913-20; New York State Senator, 1911-13; admitted to bar, 1907; graduated from Columbia Law School, 1907; married Anna Eleanor Roosevelt, 1905; and graduated from Harvard College, 1904.

At his Inaugurations as Governor of New York and his four terms as President, he chose Scripture out of chapter 13 of the Book of First Corinthians. On Saturday, March 4, 1933, in his First Inaugural Address, President Franklin Delano Roosevelt proclaimed to the nation, as it just entered the Depression:

First of all, let me assert my firm belief that the only thing we have to fear is fear itself...In such a spirit on my part and on yours we face our common difficulties. They concern, thank God, only material things...

Practices of the unscrupulous money changers stand indicted in the court of public opinion, rejected by the hearts and minds of men... They know only the rules of a generation of self-seekers. They have no vision, and where there is no vision the people perish. (Pr. 29:18) The money changers have fled from their high seats in the temple of our civilization. We may now restore that temple to the ancient truths....

We face arduous days that lie before us in the warm courage of national unity; with the clear consciousness of seeking old and precious moral values....

In this dedication of a nation we humbly ask the blessing of God. May He protect each and every one of us! May He guide me in the days to come.

On December 6, 1933, in his address to the Federal Council of Churches of Christ, President Franklin D. Roosevelt stated:

If I were asked to state the great objective which Church and State are both demanding for the sake of every man and woman and child in this country, I would say that that great objective is "a more abundant life."

In a 1935 radio broadcast, Franklin D. Roosevelt declared:

We cannot read the history of our rise and development as a nation, without reckoning with the place the Bible has occupied in shaping the advances of the Republic.... [W]here we have been the truest and most consistent in obeying its precepts, we have attained the greatest measure of contentment and prosperity.

On Wednesday, January 20, 1937, in his Second Inaugural Address, President Franklin D. Roosevelt stated:

In taking again the oath of office as President of the United States, I assume the solemn obligation of leading the American people forward along the road over which they have chosen to advance.

While this duty rests upon me I shall do my utmost to speak their purpose and to do their will, seeking Divine Guidance to help each and every one to give light to them that sit in darkness and to guide our feet into the way of peace.

President Franklin Delano Roosevelt, who was a member of the Episcopal Church, stated:

No greater thing could come to our land today than a revival of the spirit of religion - a revival that would sweep through the homes of the nation and stir the hearts of men and women of all faiths to a reassertion of their belief in God and their dedication to His will for themselves and for their world.

I doubt if there is any problem - social, political or economic - that would not melt away before the fire of such a spiritual awakening.

On January 6, 1941, President Franklin D. Roosevelt gave his Four Freedoms Speech to Congress:

Today, thank God, one hundred and thirty million

Americans, in forty-eight States, have forgotten points of the compass in our national unity....

We look forward to a world founded upon four essential human freedoms. The first in freedom of speech and expression....

The second is freedom of every person to worship God in his own way....

This nation has placed its destiny in the hands and heads and hearts of its millions of free men and women; and its faith in freedom under the guidance of God.

On Monday, January 20, 1941, in his Third Inaugural Address, President Franklin D. Roosevelt stated:

A nation, like a person, has something deeper, something more permanent, something larger than the sum of all its parts. It is that something which matters most to its future - which calls forth the most sacred guarding of its present. It is a thing for which we find it difficult - even impossible - to hit upon a single, simple word. And yet we all understand what it is - the spirit - the faith of America.

It is the product of centuries. It was born in the multitudes of those who came from many lands - some of high degree, but mostly plain people, who sought here, early and late, to find freedom more freely. The democratic aspiration is no mere recent phase of human history. It is human history. It permeated the ancient life of early peoples. It blazed anew in the middle ages. It was written in the Magna Carta.

In the Americas its impact has been irresistible. America has been the New World in all tongues, to all peoples, not because this continent was a new-found land, but because all those who came here believed they could create upon this continent a new life - a life that should be new in freedom. Its vitality was written into our own Mayflower Compact, into the Declaration of Independence, into the Constitution of the United States, into the Gettysburg Address....

But if the spirit of America were killed, even though the Nation's body and mind, constricted in an alien world, lived on, the America we know would have perished.

That spirit - that faith - speaks to us in our daily lives in ways often unnoticed.... The destiny of America was proclaimed in words of prophecy spoken by our first President in his first Inaugural in 1789 - words almost directed, it would seem, to this year of 1941: "The preservation of the sacred fire of liberty and the destiny of the republican model of government are justly considered... deeply... finally, staked on the experiment intrusted to the hands of the American people."...

We do not retreat. We are not content to stand still. As Americans, we go forward in the service of our country by the will of God.

On January 25, 1941, President Roosevelt inscribed a moving prologue to a special edition New Testament published by The Gideons. This New Testament and Psalms, printed by the National Bible Press, Philadelphia, was distributed to the soldiers as they left for service during World War II. The prologue stated:

THE WHITE HOUSE
WASHINGTON

January 25, 1941

To the Armed Forces:

As Commander-in-Chief, I take pleasure in commending the reading of the Bible to all who serve in the armed forces of the United States. Throughout the centuries men of many faiths and diverse origins have found in the Sacred Book words of wisdom, counsel and inspiration. It is a fountain of strength and now, as always, an aid in attaining the highest aspirations of the human soul.

Very sincerely yours,
(signed)
Franklin D. Roosevelt.

On August 10, 1941, President Franklin D. Roosevelt attended the Mid-Atlantic Conference, as recorded by Winston Churchill, British Prime Minister:

On Sunday morning, August 10, Mr. Roosevelt came aboard H. M. S. Prince of Wales and, with his Staff officers and several hundred representatives of all ranks of the United States Navy and Marines, attended Divine Service on the quarterdeck.

This service was felt by us all to be a deeply moving expression of the unity of faith of our two peoples, and none who took part in it will forget the spectacle presented that sunlit morning on the crowded quarterdeck - the symbolism of the Union Jack and the Stars and Stripes draped side by side on the pulpit; the American and British chaplains sharing in the reading of the prayers; the highest naval, military, and air officers of Britain and the United States grouped in one body behind the President and me; the close-packed ranks of British and American sailors, completely intermingled, sharing the same books and joining fervently together in the prayers and hymns familiar to both.

I chose the hymns myself - "For Those in Peril on the Sea" and "Onward Christian Soldiers." We ended with "Oh God, Our Help in Ages Past," which Macaulay reminds us the Ironsides had chanted as they bore John Hampden's body to the grave.

It was a great hour to live. Nearly half of those who sang were soon to die.

In that Mid-Atlantic Summit with Prime Minister Churchill, President Roosevelt led the crew in a singing a rousing chorus of the hymn, "Onward, Christian Soldiers," after having described the United States as:

The lasting concord between men and nations, founded on the principles of Christianity.

On December 8, 1941, President Franklin D. Roosevelt addressed the nation following the surprise attack on Pearl Harbor by over 100 Japanese aircraft. Five American battleships and three destroyers were sunk, 400 planes were destroyed and over 4000 were killed or wounded. President Roosevelt stated:

December 7, 1941 - a date which will live in infamy - the United
Page 961

American Quotations.txt

States of America was suddenly and deliberately attacked by naval and air forces of the Empire of Japan... Our people, our territory and our interests are in grave danger. With confidence in our armed forces, with the unbounding determination of our people, we will gain the inevitable triumph. So help us God.

On January 6, 1942, President Franklin D. Roosevelt stated in his State of the Union Address:

Our enemies are guided by brutal cynicism, by unholy contempt for the human race. We are inspired by a faith which goes back through all the years to the first chapter of the Book of Genesis - "God created man in His own image."

We on our side are striving to be true to that Divine heritage. We are fighting, as our fathers have fought, to uphold the doctrine that all men are equal in the sight of God.

Those on the other side are striving to destroy this deep belief and to create a world in their own image, a world of tyranny and cruelty and serfdom.

On June 6, 1944, in his address to the nation on the occasion of the D-Day invasion of Normandy, France, President Franklin D. Roosevelt stated:

Almighty God: Our sons, pride of our nation, this day have set upon a mighty endeavor, a struggle to preserve our Republic, our religion and our civilization, and to set free a suffering humanity.

Lead them straight and true; give strength to their arms, stoutness to their hearts, steadfastness in their faith....

And for us at home - fathers, mothers, children, wives, sisters and brothers of brave men overseas, whose thoughts and prayers are ever with them - help us, Almighty God, to rededicate ourselves in renewed faith in Thee in this hour of great sacrifice.

With Thy blessings we shall prevail over the unholy forces of our enemy. Help us to conquer the apostles of greed and racial arrogance. Lead us to the saving of our country. Thy will be done, Almighty God. Amen.

On Saturday, January 20, 1945, in his Fourth Inaugural Address, delivered on the Portico of the White House, President Franklin D. Roosevelt stated:

As I stand here today, having taken the solemn oath of office in the presence of my fellow countrymen - in the presence of God - I know that it is America's purpose that we shall not fail....

The Almighty God has blessed our land in many ways. He has given our people stout hearts and strong arms with which to strike mighty blows for freedom and truth. He has given to our country a faith which has become the hope of all peoples in an anguished world.

So we pray to Him now for the vision to see our way clearly - to see the way that leads to a better life for ourselves and for all our fellow men - to the achievement of His will, to peace on earth.

American Quotations.txt

Gibran, Kahlil (January 6, 1883-April 10, 1931), was a Syrian-born American painter and poet, noted for his mystic perspective on life. In his 1923 work, The Prophet, Kahlil Gibran wrote On Prayer:

You pray in your distress and in your need; would that you might pray also in the fullness of your joy and in your days of abundance.

United States Supreme Court (1884), in reference to the individual's God-given rights, stated:

These inherent rights have never been more happily expressed than in the Declaration of Independence, "we hold these truths to be self-evident" - that is so plain that their truth is recognized upon their mere statement - "that all men are endowed" - not by edicts of emperors or decrees of parliament, or acts of Congress, but "by their Creator with certain inalienable rights and that among these are life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness, and to secure these" - not grant them but secure them - "governments are instituted among men."

Truman, Harry S. (May 8, 1884-December 26, 1972), was the 33rd President of the United States, 1945-53; Vice-President under Franklin D. Roosevelt, January 20-April 12, 1945; assuming the Presidency upon Roosevelt's death; U. S. Senator, 1934-45; presiding judge for Jackson County Court, Missouri, 1926-34; salesman, manager of building and loan company, 1925-26; judge of the Eastern District; Jackson County Court, Missouri, 1922-24; married Elizabeth "Bess" Virginia Wallace, 1919; Captain during World War I, 1918, in command of Battery D, 129th Field Artillery, fighting at St. Mihiel, Meuse-Argonne, Sommedieu; First Lieutenant in National Guard, 1917; railroad timekeeper, reporter for the Kansas City Star, bank clerk, 1901-06.

On Thursday, April 12, 1945, Vice-President Harry S. Truman became the 33rd President upon the death of Franklin D. Roosevelt. He recalled:

I knew at once that something unusual had taken place. Mrs. Roosevelt seemed calm in her characteristic, graceful dignity. She stepped forward and placed her arm gently about my shoulder. "Harry," she said quietly, "the President is dead." For a moment I could not bring myself to speak. . . . "Is there anything I can do for you?" I asked at last. I shall never forget her deeply understanding reply. "Is there anything we can do for you?" she asked. "For you are the one in trouble now."

On April 13, 1945, in a statement to newsmen upon his return to the Capitol after becoming President, Harry S. Truman stated:

Boys, if you ever pray, pray for me now. I don't know whether you fellows ever had a load of hay fall on you, but when they told me yesterday what had happened, I felt like the moon, the stars, and all the planets had fallen on me. I've got the most terribly responsible job a man ever had.

American Quotations.txt

Upon in return from Franklin D. Roosevelt's funeral, President Harry S. Truman recalled:

Back in Washington that evening I felt that an epoch had come to an end. A great President, whose deeds and words had profoundly affected our times, was gone. Chance had chosen me to carry on his work, and in these two days I had already experienced some of the weight of its unbelievable burdens. As I went to bed that night, I prayed I would be equal to the task.

The day after Franklin D. Roosevelt's funeral, President Harry S. Truman concluded his First Address before a Joint Session of Congress:

At this moment I have in my heart a prayer. As I have assumed my heavy duties, I humbly pray to Almighty God in the words of King Solomon:

"Give therefore Thy servant an understanding heart to judge Thy people that I may discern between good and bad; for who is able to judge this Thy so great a people?" (I Kings 3: 9)

I ask only to be a good and faithful servant of my Lord and my people.

In his Memoirs - Volume Two: Years of Trial and Hope, published in 1956, Harry S. Truman stated:

When I was in the Senate, I had told my colleagues, Senator Wagner of New York and Senator Taft of Ohio, that I would go along on a resolution putting the Senate on record in favor of the speedy achievement of the Jewish homeland.

In a memorandum to Winston Churchill, dated July 24, 1945, President Harry S. Truman wrote:

The drastic restrictions imposed on the Jewish immigration by the British White Paper of May, 1939, continue to provoke passionate protest from Americans most interested in Palestine and in the Jewish problem.

They fervently urge the lifting of these restrictions which deny to Jews, who have been so cruelly uprooted by ruthless Nazi persecutions, entrance into the land which represents for so many of them their only hope of survival.

President Truman stated to the press:

The American view on Palestine is that we want to let as many of the Jews into Palestine as it is possible to let into that country.

In his Memoirs - Volume Two: Years of Trial and Hope, published in 1956, Harry S. Truman recorded a note he wrote to one of his assistants:

I surely wish God Almighty would give the Children of Israel an Isaiah, the Christians a St. Paul, and the Sons of Ishmael a peep at the Golden Rule.

At noon on March 6, 1946, President Harry S. Truman addressed a Conference of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ given in Deshler-Wallick Hotel in Columbus, Ohio. In the speech, which was broadcast on national radio, he explained:

I like to consider this conference, to which you have so kindly invited me, as one which represents no one particular sect of creed, but rather as one which represents the spirit of the worship of God. We are a people who worship God in different ways. But we are all bound together in a single unity - the unity of the individual freedom in a democracy.

We have just come through a decade in which the forces of evil in various parts of the world have been lined up in a bitter fight to banish from the face of the earth both these ideals - religion and democracy. For these forces of evil have long realized that both religion and democracy are founded on one basic principle, the worth and dignity of the individual man and woman. Dictatorship, by whatever name, is founded on the doctrine that the individual amounts to nothing; that the State is the only thing that counts; and that men and women and children were put on earth solely for the purpose of serving the State.

In that long struggle between these two doctrines, the cause of decency and righteousness has been victorious. The right of every human being to live in dignity and freedom, the right to worship God in his own way, the right to fix his own relationship to his fellow men and to his Creator - these again have been saved for mankind.

The fight to preserve these rights was hard-won. The victory took a toll of human life and treasure so large that it should bring home to us forever, how precious, how invaluable, is our liberty which we had just begun to take for granted.

Now that we have preserved our freedom of conscience and religion, our right to live by a decent moral and spiritual code of our own choosing, let us make full use of that freedom. Let us make use of it to save a world which is beset by so many threats of new conflicts, new terror, and new destruction.

In our relations abroad and in our economy at home, forces of selfishness and greed and intolerance are again at work. They create situations which call for hard decisions, for forthrightness, for courage and determination. But above everything else, they call for one thing, without which we are lost. They call for a moral and spiritual awakening in the life of the individual and in the councils of the world.

The last five years have produced many awesome discoveries in material things. But it has been truthfully said that the greatest discoveries of the future will be in the realm of the spirit. There is no problem on this earth tough enough to withstand the flame of a genuine renewal of religious faith. And some of the problems of today will yield to nothing less than that kind of revival.

If the civilized world as we know it today is to survive, the gigantic power which man has acquired through atomic energy must be matched by spiritual strength of greater magnitude. All mankind now stands in the doorway to destruction - or upon the threshold of the greatest age in history. And I prefer to face that great age. Only a high moral standard can master this new power of the universe, and develop it for the common good.

When the sages and the scientists, the philosophers and the statesmen, have all exhausted their studies of atomic energy, one solution and only one solution will remain - the substitution of decency and reason and brotherhood for the rule of force in the government of man.

If men and nations would but live by the precepts of the ancient prophets and the teachings of the Sermon on the Mount, problems which now seem so difficult would soon disappear.

That is the great task for you teachers of religious faith. That is a supreme opportunity for the church to continue to fulfill its mission on earth. The Protestant Church, the Catholic Church, and the Jewish Synagogue - bound together in the American unity of brotherhood - must provide the shock forces to accomplish this moral and spiritual awakening. No other agency can do it. Unless it is done, we are headed for the disaster we would deserve. Oh, for an Isaiah or a St. Paul to reawaken a sick world to its moral responsibilities! I might be facing that Isaiah or that Saint Paul right now. I hope it is true.

The need for this moral awakening applies to all men and women everywhere, but it applies particularly to the youth of today from whom the leadership of tomorrow will come.

The aftermath of a major war always includes an increase of juvenile delinquency. Sometimes it is the fault of the boys and girls. More often it is the result of everything that is abnormal in war - including the absence of fathers and mothers in the armed forces or in the business or in war industries.

We shall always be grateful to the women of America, who have preformed such an outstanding service to our country during the war. In some cases, however, this patriotic devotion to the national interest has resulted in unavoidable neglect of the children. Smaller children were taken care of through the help of the Government in child-care centers. But this could not be done in the case of older children. We are now paying the social penalties for failing to provide adequate supervision and guidance for many of our children during their formative years.

Whatever the cause, the need is now pressing and unyielding. The younger generation of today yearns for moral uplift. To the parents of the Nation - and to you of the Churches of God - has come the responsibility of helping them on to the right path. That is the greatest job you can do for America today.

And one of the ways we can all help not only the youth of the Nation but all men and women is by the provision of decent homes. . . . Nowhere can the influence of deep religious faith and ethical living be more adequately felt than in the homes of the Nation. The spiritual welfare of our people of tomorrow is going to depend on the kind of home life which our Nation has today.

That is why it is so important that all churches throughout America cooperate in the "National Share the Home" effort. If each congregation of the 250,000 churches and synagogues in this country would open their spare rooms to only four veterans, one million veterans and their families could receive temporary shelter until new houses are available.

Nothing could be more helpful in reaching the goal of a decent home for every American - and by that I mean Americans of all races and religions and of all income groups - than the active cooperation and inspiration of the churches of the Nation. By working in your local communities where the primary job and responsibility lie, you can help make this program the success which it must be. For home life reflects the Nation's life. It must conform to an ever-rising standard.

To raise that standard should be, and is, to constant aim of your Government and the underlying basis of its policies. It would make the effort so much easier if people and nations would apply some of the principles of social justice and ethical standards which have come down to us from Biblical times. All the questions which now beset us in strikes and wages and working conditions would be so much simpler if men and women were willing to apply the principles of the Golden Rule. Do as you would be done by. Consider the beam in your own eye and pay less attention to the mote in your brother's....

As among men, so among nations - nothing will do more to maintain the peace of the world than the rigorous application of the principles of our ancient religion.

We have tried to write into the Charter of the United Nations the essence of religion. The end of aggression, the maintenance of peace, the promotion of social justice and individual rights and freedoms, the substitution of reason and justice for tyranny and war, the protection of the small and weak nations - by these principles the United Nations have laid the framework of the Charter on the sound rock of religious principles....

Ours should be a continuous thanksgiving for the fact of victory and for the blessings which are still with us in this land. The brave men and valiant women who made this possible under God will inspire us to face our new problems with resolution. They are problems which call for the best in us. As long as we remain true to the spirit of these men and women, to the religious faith which carried them to victory, we shall not fail....

Let us determine to carry on in that same spirit - in a spirit of tolerance, and understanding for all men and for all nations - in the spirit of God and religious unity.

On March 23, 1946 in an address at a Jackson Day dinner, President Harry S. Truman stated:

As in Jackson's time, we Americans must continue to live courageously. We should emulate the valor and the determination of our forefathers - those brave men who conquered the physical frontiers of this vast continent. The modern economic, political and social frontiers, which still confront all of us, offer an even greater challenge to our moral stamina and our intellectual integrity. This challenge also must be met. This victory must be won. I am confident that, with Divine guidance, no problem on earth exists that will not yield to the intelligence, courage and eternal faith of free men.

At 10:15 a.m., April 6, 1946, in the Blackstone Hotel in Chicago, President Truman held his 598th news conference. Speaking to The Keen Teen Club of Chicago, a group of youths sponsored by the Chicago Daily News, President Truman fielded questions:

Q. Mr. President, what part has religion played in your advancement from local official to the highest office in our land?

The President. Well, A system of morals is necessary for the welfare of any individual or any nation. The greatest system of morals in the history of the world is that set out in the Sermon on the Mount, which I would advise each of you to study with everything you have.

On May 11, 1946, in an address at Fordham University, President Harry S. Truman stated:

I fear we are too much concerned with material things to remember that our real strength lies in spiritual values. I doubt whether there is in this troubled world today, when nations are divided by jealousy and suspicion, a single problem that could not be solved if approached the spirit of the Sermon on the Mount.

On July 30, 1946, President Harry S. Truman stated:

Men may be educated for justice, liberty and peace. If peace is to endure, education must establish the moral unity of mankind.

On December 20, 1946, President Harry S. Truman addressed the Advisory Commission on Universal Military Training:

I don't like to think of it as a universal military training program. I want it to be a universal training program, giving our young people a background in the disciplinary approach of getting along with one another, informing them of their physical make-up, and what it means to take care of this temple which God gave us.

On Tuesday, December 24, 1946, in an address given at the Ceremony for the lighting of the national Christmas tree, President Harry S. Truman stated:

Again our thoughts and aspirations and the hopes of future years turn to a little town in the hills of Judea where on a winter's night two thousand years ago the prophesy of Isaiah was fulfilled. Shepherds keeping the watch by night over their flocks heard the glad tidings of great joy from the angels of the Lord singing, "Glory to God in the Highest and on Earth, peace, good will toward men." The message of Bethlehem best sums up our hopes tonight. If we as a nation, and the other nations of the world, will accept it, the star of faith will guide us into the place of peace as it did the shepherds on that day of Christ's birth long ago....

In this great country of ours has been demonstrated the fundamental unity of Christianity and democracy. Under our heritage of freedom for everyone on equal terms, we also share the responsibilities of government. Our support of individual freedom - free speech, free schools, free press, and a free conscience - transcend all our differences....

Selfishness and greed, individual or national, cause most of our troubles. He Whose birth we celebrate tonight was the world's greatest teacher. He said: "Therefore all things whatsoever ye would that men should do to you, do ye even so to them; for this is the law and the prophets."...

It is well in this solemn hour that we bow to Washington, Jefferson, Jackson, and Lincoln as we face our destiny with its hopes and fears - its burdens and its responsibilities. Out of the past we shall gather wisdom and inspiration to chart our future course.

With our enemies vanquished we must gird ourselves for the work that lies ahead. Peace has its victories no less hard won than success at arms. We must not fail or falter. We must strive without ceasing to make real the prophesy of Isaiah: "They shall beat their swords into plowshares and their spears into pruning hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more."

It this day, whether it be far or near, the kingdom of this world shall become indeed the Kingdom of God and He will reign forever and ever, Lord of Lords and King of Kings. With that message, I wish my countrymen a Merry Christmas and joyous days in the New Year.

On June 17, 1947, in his Commencement address at Princeton University, President Harry S. Truman stated:

As we gain understanding of man, comparable to our increasing understanding of matter, we shall develop, with God's grace, the ability of nations to work together and live together in lasting peace.

On August 28, 1947, in an exchange of messages with Pope Pius XII, President Harry S. Truman stated:

Our common goal is to arouse and invigorate the faith of men to attain eternal values in our own generation - no matter what obstacles exist or may arise in the path....

An enduring peace can be built only upon Christian principles. To such a consummation we dedicate all our resources, both spiritual and material, remembering always that "except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain who build it."

In writing to Pope Pius XII, in 1947, President Truman said of America:

This is a Christian nation.

On September 26, 1947, in a radio address, President Harry S. Truman stated:

In our generous impulses we should follow the admonition set forth in St. Matthew's Gospel. Our Lord, bidding us to aid and comfort our stricken neighbor, whoever he may be, spoke words as true today as when He uttered them more than nineteen hundred years ago: "Inasmuch as ye have done it unto one of the least of these my brethren, ye have done it unto me."

On December 6, 1947, in an address given at the dedication of Everglades National Park, President Harry S. Truman stated:

For conservation of the human spirit, we need places such as Everglades National Park where we may be more keenly aware of our Creator's infinitely beautiful, and infinitely bountiful handiwork. Here we may draw strength and peace of mind from our surroundings. Here we can truly understand what that great Israelite Psalmist meant when he sang: "He maketh me to lie down in green pastures, He leadeth me beside still water; He restoreth my soul."

On January 7, 1948, in his State of the Union message to Congress, President Harry S. Truman stated:

The basic source of our strength is spiritual. For we are a people with a faith. We believe in the dignity of man. We believe that he was created in the image of the Father of us all. We do not believe that men exist merely to strengthen the state or to be cogs in the economic machines. We do believe that governments are created to serve the people and that the economic systems exist to minister to their wants. We have a profound devotion to the welfare and rights of the individual as a human being.

On March 17, 1948, President Harry S. Truman addressed the Society of the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick in New York:

I can express my firm conviction that, at this moment in history, the faith and strength the United States are mighty forces for the prevention of war and the establishment of peace. Our faith and our strength must be made unmistakably clear to the world.

On July 7, 1948, in his State of the Union Message, President Harry S. Truman stated:

It is our faith in human dignity that underlies our purposes. It is this faith that keeps us a strong and vital people. This is the hour to rededicate ourselves to the faith in mankind that makes us strong. This is the hour to rededicate ourselves to the faith in God that gives us confidence as we face the challenge of the years ahead.

On October 25, 1948, in an address in Chicago Stadium, President Harry S. Truman stated:

The American people cannot afford to trust their future to men of little vision. The Bible warns us that where there is no vision the people perish....

Racial and religious oppression - big business domination - inflation - these forces must be stopped and driven back while there is yet time.

On Monday, November 29, 1948, in a personal letter to Dr. Chaim Weizmann (November 27, 1874-November 9, 1952), the first President of the State of Israel, President Harry S. Truman wrote:

I remember well our conversations about the Negeb, to which you referred in your letter. I agree fully with your estimate of the importance of the area to Israel, and I deplore any attempt to take it away from Israel.

I had thought that my position would have been clear to all the world, particularly in the light of the specific wording of the Democratic Party platform.... I have interpreted my re-election as a mandate from the American people to carry out the Democratic platform - including, of course, the plank on Israel. I intend to do so....

Thank you so much for your warm congratulations and good wishes on my re-election.... In closing, I want to tell you how happy and impressed I have been at the remarkable progress made by the new State of Israel.

In his Memoirs - Volume Two: Years of Trial and Hope, President Truman recorded the events of his Inauguration:

At twelve twenty-three Associate Justice Reed swore Senator Barkley in as Vice-President, and six minutes later I took the oath from Chief Justice Vinson. The words were the same that I had repeated three years and nine months earlier when I had been called so unexpectedly to the White House, but then only a handful of people were with me in the Cabinet Room.

I raised my hand; once more I swore faithfully to defend the Constitution of the United States, repeating the short and simple oath, and kissed the Bible. Then I stepped to the rostrum to begin my inaugural address which is traditionally a part of the ceremony.

On Thursday, January 20, 1949, in his Inaugural Address, President Harry S. Truman stated:

In performing the duties of my office, I need the help and the prayers of every one of you....

The American people stand firm in the faith which has inspired this Nation from the beginning. We believe that all men have a right to equal justice under the law and equal opportunity to share in the common good. We believe that all men have the right to freedom of thought and expression. We believe that all men are created equal because they are created in the image of God. From this faith we will not be moved....

Communism is based on the belief that man is so weak and inadequate that he is unable to govern himself, and therefore requires the rule of strong masters.

Democracy is based on the conviction that man has the moral and intellectual capacity, as well as the inalienable right, to govern himself with reason and justice.

Communism subjects the individual to arrest without lawful cause, punishment without trial, and forced labor as a chattel of the state. It decrees what information he shall receive, what art he shall produce, what leaders he shall follow, and what thoughts he shall think.

Democracy maintains that government is established for the benefit of the individual, and is charged with the responsibility of protecting the rights of the individual and his freedom in the exercise of his abilities....

These differences between communism and democracy do not concern the United States alone. People everywhere are coming to realize that what is involved is material well-being, human dignity, and the right to believe in and worship God....

We are aided by all who desire freedom of speech, freedom of religion, and freedom to live their own lives for useful ends. Our allies are the millions who hunger and thirst after righteousness (Mat. 5:6)....

Steadfast in our faith in the Almighty, we will advance toward a world, where man's freedom is secure. To that end we will devote our strength, our resources, and our firmness of resolve. With God's help the future of mankind will be assured in a world of justice, harmony, and peace.

On April 8, 1949, President Truman made public the first report of the President's Committee on Religion and Welfare in the Armed Forces, (Government Printing Office, March 24, 1949, 22 pp.). In regards to this report, the President stated:

President's Committee on Religion and Welfare in the Armed Forces has submitted its first report, entitled "Community Responsibility to Our Peacetime Servicemen and Women."

This report confirms my belief that there is an immediate and long-term need for an expansion of existing community activities and services in support of the spiritual and moral well-being of personal in the Armed Forces.

On October 5, 1949, in a letter to John L. Sullivan, accepting the Honorary Chairmanship of National Brotherhood Week, President Harry S. Truman stated:

America is dedicated to the conviction that all people are entitled by the gift of God to equal rights and freedoms even though they may differ in religious persuasion, in social and political views, or in racial origin. Our greatness is and will be measured by the degree of our recognition of this fundamental truth.

On October 30, 1949, in a radio address, President Harry S. Truman stated:

Religion is like freedom. We cannot take it for granted. Man - to be free - must work at it. And man - to be truly religious - must work at that, too. Unless men live by their faith, and practice that faith in their daily lives, religion cannot be a living force in the world today....

Religious faith and religious work must be our reliance as we strive to fulfill our destiny in the world....

When the United States was established, its coins bore witness to the American faith in a benevolent deity. The motto then was "In God We Trust." That is still our motto and we, as a people, still place our firm trust in God.

On November 11, 1949: in an address to the national Conference of Christians and Jews in Washington, D.C., President Harry S. Truman stated:

The only sure bedrock of human brotherhood is the knowledge that God is the Father of mankind.

On December 21, 1949, in an address at Arlington National Cemetery, President Harry S. Truman stated:

This is an age where faith in one's self, faith in freedom, faith in the kinship of man and God, are more important to our survival than all the mighty armaments of war.

On February 9, 1950, President Truman issued an Executive Order appointing additional members to the Commission on Religion and Welfare in the Armed Forces; (committee was established by Executive Order 10013 on October 27, 1948, 3 CFR, 1943-48 Comp., p. 835). The Executive Order stated:

To encourage and promote the spiritual, moral, and recreational welfare and character guidance of persons in the Armed Forces and thereby to enhance the military preparedness and security of the Nation.

On February 15, 1950, at 10:05 a.m., President Harry S. Truman addressed the Attorney General's Conference on Law Enforcement Problems in the Department of Justice Auditorium, Washington, DC. In speaking to the organizations present, which included the Department of Justice, the National Association of Attorneys, the U.S. Conference of Lawyers, and the National Institute of Municipal Law Officers, President Truman admonished:

The fundamental basis of this nation's laws was given to Moses on the Mount. The fundamental basis of our Bill of Rights comes from the teachings we get from Exodus and St. Matthew, from Isaiah and St. Paul. I don't think we emphasize that enough these days.

If we don't have a proper fundamental moral background, we will finally end up with a totalitarian government which does not believe in rights for anybody except the State!

On April 16, 1950, in a personal memorandum, President Harry S. Truman recorded:

There is a lure in power. It can get into a man's blood just as gambling and lust for money have been known to do.

This is a Republic. The greatest in the history of the world. I want this country to continue as a Republic.

Cincinnatus and Washington pointed the way. When Rome forgot Cincinnatus, its downfall began. When we forget the examples of such men as Washington, Jefferson and Andrew Jackson, all of whom could have had a continuation in the office, then will we start down the road to dictatorship and ruin.

On May 11, 1950, at 5:07 pm, at Gonzaga University in Spokane, shortly after being given the University's Citation of Merit, President Truman gave an address which was carried over the airwaves:

The good society we are seeking is based on order and peaceful cooperation, among men who share common ideals of freedom and justice. All these things are not easy to attain. For society is made up of men, who are often weak, and selfish, and quarrelsome. And yet, men are the children of God. Men have within them the Divine spark that can lead them to the truth, and unselfishness, and courage to do the right.

Men can build a good society, if they follow the will of the Lord. Our great nation was founded on this faith. Our Constitution, and all our finest traditions, rest on a moral basis....

The greatest obstacle to peace is a modern tyranny led by a small group who have abandoned their faith in God. These tyrants have forsaken ethical and moral beliefs.

They believe that only force makes right. They are aggressively seeking to expand the area of their domination. Our effort to resist and overcome this tyranny is essentially a moral effort.

Those of us who believe in God, and who are fortunate enough to live under conditions where we can practice our faith, cannot be content to live for ourselves alone, in selfish isolation. We must work constantly to wipe out injustice and inequality, and to create a world order consistent with the faith that governs us....

It is the moral and religious beliefs of mankind which alone give our strength meaning and purpose. The struggle for peace is a struggle for moral and ethical principles....

In everything we do, at home and abroad, we must demonstrate our clear purpose, and our firm will, to build a world order in which men everywhere can walk upright and unafraid, and do the work of God.

Thank you.

On July 19, 1950, in a radio and television address, President Harry S. Truman stated:

We believe that freedom and peace are essential if men are to live as our Creator intended us to live. It is this faith that has guided us in the past, and it is this faith that will fortify us in the stern days ahead.

On December 5, 1950, in an address at the Mid-Century White House Conference on Children and Youth, President Harry S. Truman stated:

The basis of mental and moral strength for our children lies in spiritual things. It lies first of all in the home. And next, it lies in the religious and moral influences which are brought to bear on the children. If children have a good home - a home in which they are loved and understood - and if they have good teachers in the first few grades of school, I believe they are well started on the way toward being useful and honorable citizens....
Page 974

I do not think I am being old fashioned when I say that children ought to have religious training when they are young, and that they will be happier for it and better for it the rest of their lives.

In 1950, President Harry S. Truman stated:

But all of us - at home, at war, wherever we may be - are within the reach of God's love and power. We all can pray. We all should pray. We should ask the fulfillment of God's will. We should ask for courage, wisdom, for the quietness of soul which comes alone to them who place their lives in His hands.

In a 1950 a Press Conference, President Harry S. Truman stated:

A man cannot have character unless he lives within a fundamental system of morals that creates character.

On January 8, 1951, in a State of the Union message, President Harry S. Truman stated:

Peace is precious to us. It is the way of life we strive for with all the strength and wisdom we possess. But more precious than peace and freedom and justice. We will fight, if fight we must, to keep our freedom and to prevent justice from being destroyed. These are the things that give meaning to our lives, and which we acknowledge to be greater than ourselves. This is our cause - peace, freedom, justice. We will pursue this cause with determination and humility, asking divine guidance that in all we do we may follow the will of God.

On February 3, 1951, in an address given in Philadelphia, President Harry S. Truman stated:

The unity of our country is an unity under God. It is a unity in freedom, for the service of God is perfect freedom.

On September 28, 1951, in an address given to the Washington Pilgrimage of American Churchmen, Washington, D.C., President Harry S. Truman stated:

If we are to respond to our religious heritage, we must be guided by the principle of charity - charity in the biblical sense of love for one's fellow man. This is the greatest virtue, without which other virtues are of little worth.

On June 17, 1952, President Harry S. Truman issued Proclamation 2978, declaring an annual National Day of Prayer, after signing Congressional Resolution (Public Law 82-324; 66 Stat. 64):

Whereas from the earliest days of our history our people have been accustomed to turn to Almighty God for help and guidance; and

Whereas in times of national crisis when we are striving to strengthen the foundations of peace and security we stand in special need of Divine support; and

Whereas the Congress, by a joint resolution approved on April 17, 1952 (66 Stat. 64), has provided that the President "shall set aside and proclaim a suitable day each year, other than Sunday, as a National Day of Prayer, on which the people of the United States may turn to God in prayer and meditation"; and

Whereas I deem it fitting that this Day of Prayer coincide with the anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, which published to the world this Nation's "firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence":

Now, Therefore, I, Harry S. Truman, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Friday, July 4, 1952, as a National Day of Prayer, on which all of us, in our churches, in our homes, and in our hearts, may beseech God to grant us wisdom to know the course which we should follow, and strength and patience to pursue that course steadfastly. May we also give thanks to Him for His constant watchfulness over us in every hour of national prosperity and national peril.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this 17th day of June in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and fifty-two, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and seventy-sixth. Harry S. Truman.

On August 16, 1952, President Harry S. Truman concluded a personal note to General Dwight D. Eisenhower:

May God guide you and give you light. From a man who has always been your friend and who always intended to be!

President Truman commented:

Peace is the goal of my life. I'd rather have lasting peace in the world than be President. I wish for peace, I work for peace and I pray for peace continually.

In commenting on the Constitution in his Memoirs - Volume Two: Years of Trial and Hope, President Harry S. Truman stated:

The men who wrote the Constitution knew what they were doing when they provided for three separate branches of the government. They were mostly men trained in the law, and they were all well informed on the history of government from Babylon to Britain. They were convinced that the government of the new nation should be one that would protect individual freedom and allow it to flourish.

They knew that arbitrary and even tyrannical government had come about where the powers of government were united in the hands of one man. The system they set up was designed to prevent a demagogue or "a man on horseback" from taking over the powers of government.

As a young man, I had read Montesquieu's Spirit of the Laws and the Federalist Papers, that collection of essays by Hamilton, Madison, and Jay that explains so much of what the Constitution was intended to mean. Later, during my evening studies of the law, I had read some of Blackstone and Coke and the Commentaries of Judge Story.

This reading and the study of history and of our government have been the foundation of my thinking about the Constitution. It is a document of remarkable qualities, and every American owes it to his country to absorb not only its words but also the great ideas for which it stands.

The greatest of these, in my opinion, is the idea of a fair trial. We inherited from the British this idea that no man shall be considered guilty until a fair, judicial process shall have found him so.

Next to this, the most important thought expressed in our Constitution is that the power of government shall always remain limited, through the separation of powers. This means that each of the three branches of the government - the legislative, the judicial, and the executive - must jealously guard its position.

This jealous concern is a good thing.

President Truman recorded his favorite prayer:

O Almighty and Everlasting God, Creator of Heaven, Earth and the Universe:

Help me to be, to think, to act what is right, because it is right; make me truthful, honest and honorable in all things; make me intellectually honest for the sake of right and honor and without thought of reward to me.

Give me the ability to be charitable, forgiving and patient with my fellow men - help me to understand their motives and their shortcomings - even as thou understandest mine! Amen, Amen, Amen.

Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World (July 4, 1884), a symbol of freedom throughout the world, was given by the nation of France to the United States as a symbol of friendship between the two nations. The largest of its kind, the statue weighs 450,000 pounds and stands 305 feet above the base of the pedestal. Sculpted by the French sculptor Frederic Auguste Bartholdi, it was conceived by Edouard de Laboulaye and constructed over a steel structure built by Gustave Eiffel.

Frederic Auguste Bartholdi wrote:

The statue was born for this place which inspired its conception. May God be pleased to bless my efforts and my work, and to crown it with success, the duration and the moral influence which it ought to have.

American Quotations.txt

On October 28, 1886, the inauguration ceremony of the Statue of Liberty Enlightening the World was begun with a prayer by Reverend Richard S. Storrs, D.D.:

Almighty God, our Heavenly Father, who art of infinite majesty and mercy, by whose counsel and might the courses of the worlds are wisely ordained and irresistibly established, yet who takest thought of the children of men, and to whom our homage in all our works is justly due: We bless and praise Thee....

It is in Thy favor, and through the operation of the Gospel of Thy grace, that cities stand in quiet prosperity; that peaceful commerce covers the seas....

We pray that the Liberty which it represents may continue to enlighten with beneficent instruction, and to bless with majestic and wide benediction, the nations which have part in this work of renown....

We pray for all the nations of the earth; that in equity and charity their sure foundations may be established; that in piety and wisdom they may find a true welfare, in obedience to Thee, glory and praise; and that, in all the enlargements of their power, they may be ever the joyful servants of Him to whose holy dominion and kingdom shall be no end.

Roosevelt, Anna Eleanor (October 11, 1884-November 7, 1962), was the wife of President Franklin D. Roosevelt. She appointed by President Harry S. Truman as U.S. Delegate to the United Nations General Assembly, 1945-51; and reappointed in 1961-62. In her autobiographical book, This I Remember, Mrs. Roosevelt wrote of Franklin Delano Roosevelt's faith:

I always felt that my husband's religion had something to do with his confidence in himself. As I have said, it was a very simple religion. He believed in God and in His guidance.

He felt that human beings were given tasks to perform and with those tasks the ability and strength to put them through. He could pray for help and guidance and have faith in his own judgment as a result.

The church services that he always insisted on holding on Inauguration Day, anniversaries and whenever a great crisis impended were the expressions of his religious faith.

I think this must not be lost sight of in judging his acceptance of responsibility and his belief in his ability to meet whatever crisis had to be met.

Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt commented:

Our democracy in this country had its roots in religious belief.

Thomas, Norman Mattoon (November 20, 1884-December 19, 1968), was an author, reformer and U.S. socialist leader. On November 27, 1965, in an anti-war protest in Washington, D.C., he stated in a speech:

I'd rather see America save her soul than her face.

United States Supreme Court (1885), in the case of Murphy v. Ramsey & Others, 144 U.S. 15, 45 (1885), gave its opinion:

Every person who has a husband or wife living...and marries another...is guilty of polygamy, and shall be punished.... Certainly no legislation can be supposed more wholesome and necessary in the founding of a free, self-governing commonwealth... than that which seeks to establish it on the basis of the idea of the family, as consisting in and springing from the union for life of one man and one woman in the holy estate of matrimony; [Marriage is] the sure foundation of all that is stable and noble in our civilization; the best guarantee of that reverent morality which is the source of all beneficent progress in social and political improvement.

Durant, Will (iam James) and Ariel (1885-1981) (1898-1981), were well-known American authors. Will first became famous with the publication of the Story of Philosophy, 1926. In 1932, he began publishing his eight volume work, Story of Civilization, which included Our Oriental Heritage; The Life of Greece; Caesar and Christ; The Age of Faith; and Rousseau and the Revolution, for which he won the Pulitzer Prize in 1968. Their other works include: Philosophy and The Social Problem; Adventures in Genius; and On The Meaning of Life.

In The Lessons of History, 1968, Will and Ariel Durant stated:

The greatest question of our time is not communism versus individualism, not even East versus West; it is whether man can live without God.

The Durants cited the 1866 writings of Joseph Ernest Renan (1823-1892), a French philologist, philosopher and historian, who stated:

What would we do without [Christianity]?... If rationalism wishes to govern the world without regard to the religious needs of the soul, the experience of the French Revolution is there to teach us the consequences of such a blunder.

From Renan and their own studies of history, Will and Ariel Durant's drew the conclusion that:

There is no significant example in history before our time, of a society successfully maintaining moral life without the aid of religion.

Barton, Bruce (1886-1967), was an influential American advertising executive, author and politician. He stated:

Voltaire spoke of the Bible as a short-lived book. He said that within a hundred years it would pass from common use. Not many people read Voltaire today, but his house has been packed with Bibles as a depot of a Bible society.

American Quotations.txt

The Bible rose to the place it now occupies because it deserved to rise to that place, and not because God sent anybody with a box of tricks to prove its divine authority.

Black, Hugo La Fayette (February 27, 1886-September 25, 1971), was an Associate U. S. Supreme Court Justice, 1937-71, appointed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt; and a U. S. Senator from Alabama, 1927-37. He wrote in a 1962 decision:

Indeed, as late as the time of the Revolutionary War, there were established churches in at least eight of the thirteen former colonies and established religions in at least four of the other five.

In Everson v. Board of Education, 1947, Justice Hugo La Fayette Black commented:

This court has previously recognized that the provisions of the First Amendment, in the drafting and adoption of which Madison and Jefferson played such leading roles, had the same objective and were intended to provide the same protection against governmental intrusions on religious liberty as the Virginia statute.

The "establishment of religion" clause of the First Amendment means at least this: Neither a state nor the Federal Government can set up a church, neither can pass laws which aid one religion, aid all religions, or prefer one religion over another.

Ben-Gurion, David (October 16, 1886-December 1, 1973), was an Israeli statesman; organized the Jewish Legion of American, British and Palestinian Jews, which fought against the Turks in the Holy Land; became founder of the National Council of Palestinian Jews; became a member of the executive body of the Jewish Agency, 1933; became chairman of the Agency, 1935; pleaded the cause of an independent Jewish state before the United Nations, 1947; became prime minister and minister of defense of the provisional government of the new republic of Israel, May 15, 1948; was appointed prime minister in the first cabinet of the first elected government, January 1949; and was prime minister of Israel, 1955-63.

On October 5, 1956, in an interview with Edward R. Murrow, "Person to Person," CBS-TV, Prime Minister David Ben-Gurion stated:

In Israel, in order to be a realist you must believe in miracles.

Kilmer, Alfred Joyce (December 6, 1886-July 30, 1918), was an American poet and journalist, whose famous poem, Trees, was first published in the Poetry magazine, 1913. He was educated at Rutgers College and Columbia University, and worked for the New York Times. His works include: Summer of Love, 1911; The Circus and Other Essays, 1916; Main Street and Other Poems, 1917; and Literature in the Making, 1917. He was killed in World War I by a German machine-gun nest along the Ourcq River in France.

In 1913, in his most well-known poem, entitled "Trees," Joyce Kilmer wrote:

I think that I shall never see
A poem lovely as a tree...
Poems are made by fools like me,
But only God can make a tree.

Brooke, Rupert (August 3, 1887-April 23, 1915), was an English poet known for writing verse with vivid beauty. A graduate of Cambridge University, he traveled in Germany, America, the South Seas and the Aegean Sea, before dying in World War I. His works include: Collected Poems; Lithuania-A Drama in One Act; 1914 and The Great Lover.

In his poem Peace, Rupert Brooke wrote:

Now, God be thanked,
Who has matched us with His hour,
And caught our youth, and wakened us from sleeping.

Hilton, Conrad Nicholson (December 25, 1887-January 3, 1979), was founder of the Hilton Hotel chain. After having served in World War I, he was involved in the banking business, and his father's mercantile concerns. In 1919, he purchased his first hotel in Cisco, Texas, which began his world-impacting career.

On May 7, 1952, Conrad Hilton gave an address, entitled, A Battle for Peace:

OUR FATHER IN HEAVEN:
WE PRAY that YOU save us from ourselves.
The world that YOU have made for us, to live in peace,
we have made into an armed camp.
We live in fear of war to come.
We are afraid of "the terror that flies by night, and the arrow that flies by day, the pestilence that walks in darkness and the destruction that wastes at noon-day."
We have turned from YOU to go our selfish way.
We have broken YOUR commandments and denied YOUR truth.
We have left YOUR altars to serve the false gods of money and pleasure and power.
FORGIVE US AND HELP US
Now, darkness gathers around us and we are confused in all our counsels. Losing faith in YOU, we lose faith in ourselves.
Inspire us with wisdom, all of us of every color, race and creed, to use our wealth, our strength to help our brother,
instead of destroying him.
Help us to do YOUR will as it is done in heaven and to be worthy of YOUR promise of peace on earth.
Fill us with new faith, new strength and new courage, that we may win the Battle for Peace.
Be swift to save us, dear God,
before the darkness falls.

In a Prayer Breakfast at the Mayflower Hotel, following addresses by Representative Charles E. Bennett of Florida, Senator Frank Carlson of Kansas, Senator Alexander Wiley and

Vice-President Richard M. Nixon, Mr. Conrad N. Hilton spoke sincerely:

What I like about prayer is that it is a means of direct communication with God. You can speak to Him any time, night or day, and you can know with certainty that He is listening to you....

You can thank Him for the things He has done for you. You can tell Him you are baffled, bewildered, discouraged, or that you are the happiest person in the world....

It took a war to put prayer at the center of the lives of our fighting men. It took a war, and the frightening evil of Communism, to show the world that this whole business of prayer is not a sissy, a counterfeit thing that man can do or not as he wishes.

Prayer...is a part of man's personality, without which he limps....It is with this limp that man walks without God. That is how men grope in darkness unless they believe that God, in His kindness, is willing to lift the shadows if we ask Him in prayer; is willing to raise men to the vision of the children of God if men ask Him in prayer; is willing to help us live like children of God with the permanent peace, and happiness of the children of God - if we ask Him in prayer.

Lawrence, David (1888-1973), was an American journalist and editor. He stated:

The destiny of the world is in the hands of those statesmen who can interpret faithfully the commands of the Almighty.

Dulles, John Foster (February 25, 1888-May 24, 1959), was the U.S. Secretary of State, 1953-59, during the Eisenhower administration, where he helped negotiate the Peace Treaty with Japan after World War II, 1950-51. A graduate of Princeton University and George Washington University, he served as an international attorney with the law firm of Sullivan and Cromwell in New York, 1911-49. He was instrumental in the creation of the United Nations, to which he was the U.S. ambassador, 1945-49, and was an interim U.S. Senator, 1949.

On March 30, 1954, in an address to the Overseas Press Club in New York, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles stated:

There is only one defense - a defense compounded of eternal vigilance, sound policies, and high courage.

On May 7, 1954, in reply to a question from a Danish student, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles stated:

Neighborly love, in political actions, means loving others, based on the brotherhood that was created with God as the Father of all. It means that the political power of any government must be considered an opportunity, not to favor individuals but to do well for all.

On April 11, 1955, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles delivered a speech before the Fifth Annual All-Jesuit Alumni

Dinner, in which he stated:

Peace is a goal which men above always sought. It is a goal which we particularly think of at this Easter Season when we commemorate the resurrection of the Prince of Peace....

One cannot but shrink from buying peace at the price of extending over human beings the rule of those who believe that men are in fact nothing more than animated bits of matter and that, to insure harmony and conformity, they should be deprived of the capacity for moral and intellectual judgment.

Man, we read in the Holy Scriptures, was made a little lower than the angels. Should man now be made little, if any, higher than domesticated animals which serve the purpose of their human masters?

So men face the great dilemma of when and whether to use force to resist aggression which imposes conditions which violate the moral law and the concept that man has his origins and his destiny in God....

The government of the United States has, I like to believe, a rather unique tradition in this respect. Our nation was founded as an experiment in human liberty.

Our institutions reflect the belief of our founders that all men were endowed by their Creator with inalienable rights and had duties prescribed by moral law.

They believed that human institutions ought primarily to help men develop their God-given possibilities and that our nation, by its conduct and example, could help men everywhere to find the way to a better and more abundant life.

Our nation realized that vision. There developed here an area of spiritual and economic vigor the like of which the world had never seen.

On June 13, 1955, in delivering the baccalaureate address at Indiana University, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles stated:

Our people have always been endowed with a sense of mission in the world. They have believed that it was their duty to help men everywhere to get the opportunity to be and do what God designed.

On September 3, 1955, in a toast to Japanese Foreign Minister Mamoru Shigemitsu, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles stated:

War is an awful thing. God grant that we have seen the last of it. But war in this case made the people of our two countries know each other as never before.

On June 17, 1956, Secretary of State John Foster Dulles, who was a life elder in the Presbyterian Church, commented after attending the ordination of his son, Avery, as a Roman Catholic priest in the Society of Jesus, Fordham University, New York:

I feel very happy that my son has found a faith and the satisfaction of that faith. I have three children, all of whom, I'm happy to say, are very devout and religious. They have each in their own way found a communion with God and for that I'm very happy.

American Quotations.txt

Secretary of State John Foster Dulles remarked:

Our institutions of freedom will not survive unless they are constantly replenished by the faith that gave them birth.

Our greatest need is to regain confidence in our spiritual heritage.

Berlin, Irving (May 11, 1888-September 22, 1989), was a Russian-born American songwriter. The son of a rabbi, he was four-years old when he came with his family to New York. He served as a U.S. infantry sergeant during World War I. His works include: Remember; Always; Alexander's Ragtime Band; Easter Parade; and White Christmas. In 1945, President Harry S. Truman awarded him the Medal of Merit for "extraordinary service as creator and producer of the musical revue, This Is the Army."

In 1954, President Eisenhower signed a Congressional bill awarding Berlin a gold medal "in recognition of his services in composing many popular songs, including "God Bless America." Upon receiving the medal, February 19, 1955, Irving Berlin commented to President Eisenhower:

To me, "God Bless America" was not just a song but an expression of my feeling toward the country to which I owe what I have and what I am.

In 1917, he wrote the patriotic song God Bless America, though not introducing it until 1938. He gave all the royalties from the song, approximately $100,000, to the Boy Scouts and the Girl Scouts of America.

God Bless America, Land that I Love,
Stand Beside Her, and Guide Her,
Through the Night, with the Light From Above,
From the Mountains, to the Prairies,
To the Oceans White with Foam,
God Bless America, My Home Sweet Home,
God Bless America, My Home Sweet Home!

United States Supreme Court (1889), stated in the case of Davis v. Beason, 133 U.S. 333, 341-343, 348 (1890), that the U.S. considers bigamy and polygamy as crimes. The State of Idaho also declared bigamy and polygamy illegal, and declared that anyone who commits it, teaches it or even encourages it, is forbidden from voting or holding office in that Territory.

A man named Samuel Davis was caught in the crime, fined and jailed. He argued that he was being imprisoned for his religious belief and that he should have the freedom to commit bigamy and polygamy under the First Amendment. The decision of the Court was delivered by Justice Stephen Field, who had been appointed by President Abraham Lincoln in 1863. It stated:

Bigamy and polygamy are crimes by the laws of all civilized and Christian countries. They are crimes by the laws of the United States, and they are crimes by the laws of Idaho. They tend to destroy the purity of the marriage relation, to disturb the peace of families, to degrade woman and debase man...

To extend exemption from punishment for such crimes would be to shock the moral judgement of the community. To call their advocacy a tenet of religion is to offend the commonsense of mankind.

There have been sects which denied as a part of their religious tenets that there should be any marriage tie, and advocated promiscuous intercourse of the sexes as prompted by the passions of its members....

Should a sect of either of these kinds ever find its way into this country, swift punishment would follow the carrying into effect of its doctrines, and no heed would be given to the pretence that...their supporters could be protected in their exercise by the Constitution of the United States.

Probably never before in the history of this country has it been seriously contended that the whole punitive power of the government for acts, recognized by the general consent of the Christian world...must be suspended in order that the tenets of a religious sect...may be carried out without hindrance.

The constitutions of several States, in providing for religious freedom, have declared expressly that such freedom shall not be construed to excuse acts of licentiousness....

The constitution of New York of 1777 provided: The free exercise and enjoyment of religious profession and worship, without discrimination or preference, shall forever hereafter be allowed, within this State, to all mankind: Provided, That the liberty of conscience, hereby granted, shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness.... The constitutions of California, Colorado, Connecticut, Florida, Georgia, Illinois, Maryland, Minnesota, Mississippi, Missouri, Nevada and South Carolina contain a similar declaration.

Toynbee, Arnold Joseph (April 14, 1889-October 2, 1975), was a British historian. He studied at Winchester College and Balliol College, Oxford University, becoming a fellow at Balliol in ancient history. During World War I, he worked for the British government, 1915; the Political Intelligence Department of the Foreign Office, 1919; and was a member of the Middle Eastern Section of the British delegation to the Paris Peace Conference. He was appointed Koras Professor of Byzantine and modern Greek languages, literature, and history at the University of London, 1919; research director on international history, 1925; and director of studies at the Royal Institute of International Affairs, 1925. During World War II, he served as director of foreign research and press service of the Royal Institute, 1939-1943; director of the research department of the Foreign Office, 1943-1946; and was a member of the British delegation to the Paris Peace Conference, 1946.

His works include: A Study of History (vols. 1-6), 1934-1939, 1946; The Western Question in Greece and Turkey, 1922; Greek Civilization and Character, 1924; A Journey to China, 1931; Civilization on Trial, 1948; and World and the West, 1953. He prepared and edited a series of international yearbooks, A Survey of International Affairs, 1924-1946.

On March 30, 1956, as recorded in Collier's, Arnold Joseph Toynbee stated:

The course of human history consists of a series of encounters between individual human beings and God in which each man or woman or child, in turn, is challenged by God to make his free choice between doing God's will and refusing to do it.

When Man refuses, he is free to make his refusal and to take the consequences. When Man accepts, his reward for willing what is the will of God is that he finds himself taken by God into a partnership in the doing of God's creative work.

When Man is thus cooperating with God, Man's freedom is at its maximum, because Man is then realizing the potentialities for which God has created him. God has created Man to be God's free partner in the work of creation.

North Dakota, State of (November 2, 1889), was the 39th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of North Dakota, adopted 1889, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of North Dakota, grateful to Almighty God for the blessings of civil and religious liberty, do ordain and establish this Constitution.

South Dakota, State of (November 2, 1889), was the 40th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of South Dakota, adopted 1889, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of South Dakota, grateful to Almighty God for our civil and religious liberties... establish this Constitution.

Article VI, Section 3. The right to worship God according to the dictates of conscience shall never be infringed.

South Dakota, Motto of the State of (November 2, 1889), stated:

Under God The People Rule.

Montana, State of (November 8, 1889), was the 41st State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Montana, adopted 1889, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of Montana, grateful to Almighty God for the blessings of liberty... establish this Constitution.

Washington, State of (November 11, 1889), was the 42nd State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Washington, adopted 1889, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of the State of Washington, grateful to the Supreme Ruler of the Universe for our liberties, do ordain this Constitution.

United States Supreme Court (1890), in the case of The Church of Jesus Christ of Latter Day Saints v. United States, 136 U.S. 1 (1890), forbade the practice of polygamy in the United States, stating:

It is contrary to the spirit of Christianity and the civilization which Christianity has produced in the Western world.

Wisconsin State Court (1890), in the case of Weiss v. District Board of School District No. 8 of Edgerton, 76 Wis. 177, 44 N.W. 967 (Wis. 1890), stated:

The term "sectarian instruction," in the constitution, manifestly refers exclusively to instruction in religious doctrines, and the prohibition is only aimed at such instruction as is sectarian... Hence, to teach the existence of a Supreme Being, of infinite wisdom, power, and goodness, and that it is the highest duty of all men to adore, obey, and love Him, is not sectarian, because all religious sects so believe and teach. The instruction becomes sectarian when it goes further, and inculcates doctrine or dogma, concerning which the religious sects are in conflict.

Idaho, State of (July 3, 1890), was the 43rd State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Idaho, adopted 1889, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of the State of Idaho, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, to secure its blessings and promote our common welfare do establish this Constitution.

Wyoming, State of (July 10, 1890), was the 44th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Wyoming, adopted 1890, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of the State of Wyoming, grateful to God for our civil, political, and religious liberties... establish this Constitution.

Rickenbacker, Edward Vernon "Eddie" (October 8, 1890-July 23, 1973), was a celebrated American aviator in France during World War I. Having begun his career as an auto racer, he grew to international fame before the war. In 1917 he was sent to France as the personal chauffeur of General John J. Pershing.

Eddie Rickenbacker requested transfer to the air service. He became commanding officer of the 94th Aero Pursuit Squadron, which was responsible for destroying sixty-nine enemy aircraft, the highest number shot down by any American Squadron. Eddie Rickenbacker was awarded the Congressional Medal of Honor for personally shooting down twenty-six enemy aircraft. He wrote his World War I experiences in the book, Fighting the Flying Circus, 1919. In recounting one of the numerous times he barely escaped death, Eddie Rickenbacker wrote:

I want to make it clear that this escape and the others were not the result of any superability or knowledge on my part. I wouldn't be alive today if I had to depend on that. I realized then, as I headed for France on one wing, that there had to be something else. I had seen others die, brighter and more able than I. I knew there was a power. I believe in calling upon it for aid and for guidance.

I am not such an egotist as to believe that God has spared me because I am I. I believe there is work for me to do and that I am spared to do it, just as you are.

After the war, he worked in the auto and aircraft industries, serving as president of Eastern Airlines, 1939-63. He was the president of the Indianapolis Motor Speedway Corporation, which holds the annual 500 mile auto race.

During World War II, he was asked to go on a special mission to inspect the Pacific air bases for Secretary of War Henry L. Stimson. On October 21, 1942, his plane was shot and had to make a forced landing in the Pacific. For twenty-four days, in almost hopeless conditions, Eddie Rickenbacker and seven others drifted aimlessly on the open sea.

Succumbing to exposure and dehydration, the crew would have died had not Eddie Rickenbacker, the oldest person on the raft, continued to encourage them that they would make it. The exciting story of their survival is written in his book, Seven Came Through, 1943. Eddie Rickenbacker stated:

I pray to God every night of my life to be given the strength and power to continue my efforts to inspire in others the interest, the obligation and the responsibilities that we owe to this land for the sake of future generations - for my boys and girls - so that we can always look back when the candle of life burns low and say "Thank God I have contributed my best to the land that contributed so much to me."

Eisenhower, Dwight David (October 14, 1890-March 25, 1969), the 34th President of the United States, 1953-61; Supreme Commander of Allied Forces in Europe, 1950-52; president of Columbia University, 1948-52; U. S. Army Chief of Staff, 1945-48; Supreme Commander of Allied Expeditionary Force, 1944, directing the D-Day invasion of Normandy; Commanding General of Allied Powers in European Theater, 1943, directing invasion of Sicily and Italy; Lieutenant General, Allied Commander in Chief of North Africa, 1942, directing invasion of North Africa; Assistant Chief of Staff to General Marshall, 1942; Brigadier General, 1941; Chief of Staff of Third Division, 1940; assigned to Philippines, 1935-39; attached to staff of General Douglas MacArthur, 1932; worked in office of Assistant Secretary of War, 1929; wrote guide to French battlefields, 1928; attended Command and General Staff School, 1925; assigned to Panama, 1922; commanded tank-training center, 1918; married Mamie Geneva Doud, 1916; commissioned 2nd Lieutenant, 1915; and graduated from West Point, 1915.

Dwight D. Eisenhower was a descendent of the Eisenhower family which fled seventeenth century religious persecution in Germany and Switzerland. They belonged to the Brethren in Christ, similar to the Quaker faith, and briefly stayed in Holland, before eventually settling in Pennsylvania in 1735. His grandfather, Reverend Jacob E. Eisenhower, moved the family to Virginia, before his father moved to Denison, Texas, and then finally to Abilene, Kansas.

American Quotations.txt

As a child, Eisenhower recalled how every evening, after their chores, he, along with his six brothers and father, would gather and sing hymns, accompanied by their mother Ida Eisenhower on the piano. They would then read the Bible as a part of their daily routine.

Open about his faith, fellow soldiers were impressed with his knowledge of Holy Land history when they visited Jerusalem, to which Eisenhower replied:

I practically had to memorize the Bible when I was a kid.

Dwight D. Eisenhower, who graduated from West Point in 1915, rose to the rank of lieutenant colonel in World War I. In 1935, he was named senior assistant to General Douglas MacArthur in the Philippines. In June of 1942 he was selected to lead the Allied invasion on North Africa and command all the United States troops in Europe. Famous for the D-Day invasion of Normandy, Ike was named chief of staff in 1945.

As recorded by Senator Frank Carlson of Kansas, Dwight D. Eisenhower commented at the dedication of a chapel at Kansas State College while he was still in the Army:

I don't believe our country will ever be the country that our forefathers had planned, and God has intended for us, unless we get back to fundamental spiritual principles.

On the night of July 10, 1943, General Eisenhower observed the armada of 3000 naval ships that he had ordered to battle, sailing from Malta to the shores of Sicily. He saluted his men, then bowed his head in prayer. To the officer next to him he commented:

There comes a time when you've used your brains, your training, your technical skill, and the die is cast and the events are in the hands of God, and there you have to leave them.

On June 6, 1944, in launching the greatest invasion in history, General Eisenhower issued his "D-day Orders of the Day":

Supreme Headquarters
Allied Expeditionary Force
Soldiers, Sailors and Airmen of the Allied Expeditionary Force!

You are about to embark upon the Great Crusade, toward which we have striven these many months. The eyes of the world are upon you. The hopes and prayers of liberty-loving people everywhere march with you.

In company with our brave Allies and brothers-in-arms on other Fronts, you will bring about the destruction of the German war machine, the elimination of Nazi tyranny over the oppressed peoples of Europe, and security for ourselves in a free world.

Your task will not be an easy one. Your enemy is well trained, well equipped and battle-hardened. He will fight savagely.

But this is the year 1944! Much has happened since the Nazi triumphs of 1940-41. The United Nations have inflicted upon the Germans great defeats, in open battle, man-to-man. Our air offensive has seriously reduced their strength in the air and their capacity to wage war on the ground.

Our Home Fronts have given us an overwhelming superiority in weapons and munitions of war, and placed at our disposal great reserves of trained fighting men. The tide has turned! The free men of the world are marching together to Victory!

I have full confidence in your courage, devotion to duty and skill in battle. We will accept nothing less than full Victory!

Good luck! And let us all beseech the blessing of Almighty God upon this great and noble undertaking.

On December 22, 1944, during the historic "Battle of the Bulge," General Eisenhower declared in his "Orders of the Day":

By rushing out from his fixed defenses the enemy may give us the chance to turn his great gamble into his worst defeat. So I call upon every man, of all the Allies, to rise now to new heights of courage, of resolution and of effort.

Let everyone hold before him a single thought - to destroy the enemy on the ground, in the air, everywhere - destroy him! United in this determination and with unshakable faith in the cause for which we fight, we will, with God's help, go forward to our greatest victory.

Dwight D. Eisenhower was elected President receiving over 33,000,000 votes, more than any previous Presidential candidate in United States history. On January 20, 1953, after having attended a pre-Inaugural worship service at Washington's National Presbyterian Church, President Dwight D. Eisenhower delivered his First Inaugural Address, the first ever such address to be televised:

My friends, before I begin the expression of those thoughts that I deem appropriate to this moment, would you permit me the privilege of uttering a little private prayer of my own. And I ask that you bow your heads.

Almighty God, as we stand here at this moment my future associates in the Executive Branch of government join me in beseeching that Thou will make full and complete our dedication to the service of the people in this throng, and their fellow citizens everywhere. Give us, we pray, the power to discern clearly right from wrong, and allow all our words and actions to be governed thereby, and by the laws of this land. Especially we pray that our concern shall be for all the people regardless of station, race, or calling. May cooperation be permitted and be the mutual aim of those who, under the concepts of our Constitution, hold to differing political faiths; so that all may work for the good of our beloved country and Thy glory. Amen.

My fellow citizens... We are summoned by this honored and historic ceremony to witness more than the act of one citizen swearing his oath of service, in the presence of God. We are called as a people to give testimony in the sight of the world our faith that the future shall belong to the free...

In the swift rush of great events, we find ourselves groping to know the full sense and meaning of these times in which we live. In our quest of understanding, we beseech God's guidance....

At such a time in history, we who are free must proclaim anew our faith. This faith in America is the abiding creed of our fathers. It is our faith in the deathless dignity of man, governed by eternal moral and natural laws. This faith defines our full view of life. It establishes beyond debate, those gifts of the Creator that are man's inalienable rights, and that makes all men equal in His sight....

This faith rules our whole way of life. It decrees that we, the people, elect leaders not to rule but to serve.... It is because we, all of us, hold to these principles that the political changes accomplished this day do not imply turbulence, upheaval or disorder. Rather this change expresses a purpose of strengthening our dedication and devotion to the precepts of our founding documents, a conscious renewal of faith in our country and in the watchfulness of a Divine Providence.

The enemies of this faith know no god but force, no devotion but it use. They tutor men in treason. They feed upon the hunger of others. Whatever defies them, they torture, especially the truth. Here, then, is joined no argument between slightly differing philosophies. This conflict strikes directly at the faith of our fathers and the lives of our sons. No principle or treasure that we hold, from the spiritual knowledge of our free schools and churches to the creative magic of free labor and capital, nothing lies safely beyond the reach of this struggle. Freedom is pitted against slavery; lightness against the dark....

We feel this moral strength because we know that we are not helpless prisoners of history. We are free men. We shall remain free, never to be proven guilty of the one capital offense against freedom, a lack of staunch faith....

These basic precepts are not lofty abstractions, far removed from matters of daily living. They are laws of spiritual strength that generate and define our material strength. Patriotism means equipped forces and a prepared citizenry. Moral stamina means more energy and more productivity. Love of liberty means the guarding of every resource that makes freedom possible - from the sanctity of our families and the wealth of our soil to the genius our scientists....

This is the hope that beckons us onward in this century of trial. This is the work that awaits us all, to be done with bravery, with charity, and with prayer to Almighty God.

On July 9, 1953, in a message to the National Co-Chairmen of the Commission on Religious Organizations, National Conference of Christians and Jews, President Dwight D. Eisenhower stated:

The churches of America are citadels of our faith in individual freedom and human dignity. This faith is the living source of our spiritual strength. And this strength is our matchless armor in our world-wide struggle against the forces of Godless tyranny and oppression.

President Eisenhower was notably faithful in his church attendance. He became a communicant member of The National Presbyterian Church in Washington, D. C., only twelve days after assuming office. On July 12, 1953, an editorial in the Jacksonville, Florida, Times-Union attested

There is something soul-stirring about Ike's church going, something that makes a person feel as if the President enters a sanctuary to gain strength, wisdom, and guidance from an All-seeing Power that resides above....

From the same source that Eisenhower finds divine guidance to steer a straight course over the uncharted waters that lie ahead, there is a new way of life for others who would follow the example of the White House and seek where it can be found, and ask where it can be given.

On Saturday, October 31, 1953, President Eisenhower recorded a program for the Committee on Religion in American Life. In the message, which was broadcast nationally over radio and television, President Eisenhower commended:

Each Year the Committee on Religion in American Life reminds us of the importance of faithful church attendance. It urges full support of religious institutions to the end that we may add strength and meaning to the religious virtues - charity, mercy, brother love, and faith in Almighty God.

These spiritual concepts are the inspiration of the American way. It was once said, "America is great because America is good - and if America ever ceases to be good, America will cease to be great."

By strengthening religious institutions, the Committee on Religion in American Life is helping to keep America good, thus it helps each of us to keep America great.

I earnestly hope that during November, and throughout this and every year, each American citizen will actively support the religious institution of his own choice.

In his State of the Union Message, January 7, 1954, President Eisenhower stated:

I am flatly opposed to the socialization of medicine. The great need for hospital and medical services can best be met by the initiative of private plans.

On March 25, 1954, in his message at the annual convention of the National Catholic Family Life Conference, New Orleans, President Eisenhower stated:

The destiny of the nation is as great in promise as its young people are great in character. In that light, we need constant and profound appreciation of the mother as a builder of a brighter and better future.

On June 14, 1954, President Eisenhower supported and signed into law the Congressional Act, Joint Resolution 243, which added the phrase "one Nation under God" to the Pledge of Allegiance. He stated:

From this day forward, the millions of our school children will daily proclaim in every city and town, every village and rural school house, the dedication of our nation and our people to the Almighty.

In this way we are reaffirming the transcendence of religious faith in America's heritage and future; in this way we shall constantly strengthen those spiritual weapons which forever will be our country's most powerful resource in peace and war.

President Eisenhower then stood on the steps of the Capitol Building and recited the Pledge of Allegiance for the first time with the phrase, "one Nation under God":

I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

(The Pledge of Allegiance was first written in 1892 by a Baptist minister from Boston named Francis Bellamy, who was ordained in the Baptist Church of Little Falls, New York. He was a member of the staff of The Youth's Companion, which first published the Pledge on September 8, 1892. Public-school children first recited it during the National School Celebration on the 400th anniversary of Columbus' discovery of America, October 12, 1892, at the dedication of the 1892 Chicago World's Fair. The words "under God" were taken from Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, "...that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth...")

On November 6, 1954, in a remark to newsmen during the football season, President Eisenhower stated:

An atheist is a guy who watches a Notre Dame-SMU football game and doesn't care who wins.

On Tuesday, November 9, 1954, President Eisenhower remarked to the first National Conference on the Spiritual Foundation of American Democracy in a luncheon meeting at the Sheraton-Carlton Hotel in Washington, DC:

We are talking about the spiritual foundations of our form of government, and I meet with the spiritual leaders of the Nation...

Now Dr. Lowry said something about my having certain convictions as to a God in Heaven and an Almighty power. Well, I don't think anyone needs a great deal of credit for believing in what seems to me to be obvious...

Now it seems to me that this relationship between a spiritual faith, a religious faith, and our form of government is so closely defined and so obvious that we should really not need to identify a man as unusual because he recognizes it...

Milton asserted that all men are born equal, because each is born in the image of his God. Our whole theory of government finally expressed in our Declaration, you will recall, said - and remember the first part of the Preamble of the Declaration was to give the reasons to mankind why we had established such a government: "Man is endowed by his Creator." It did not assert that [only] Americans had certain rights, "Man" is endowed by his Creator - or "All Men" I believe was the expression used. So this connection is very, very clear.

And no matter what Democracy tries to do in terms of maximum individual liberty for an individual, in the economic and in the intellectual and every other field, no matter what it tries to do in providing a system of justice, and a system of responsibility - of public servants to all the people - and identifying the people as the source of political power in that government, when you come back to it, there is just one thing: it is a concept, it is a subjective sort of thing, that a man is worthwhile because he was born in the image of his God....

So we are under tremendous attacks. But it is not that we have just to establish the fact. We have to establish the fervor, the strength of our convictions, because fundamentally, Democracy is nothing in the world but a spiritual conviction, a conviction that each of us is enormously valuable, because of a certain standing before our own God.

Now, any group that binds itself together to awaken all of us to these simple things, and to discover new ways and means by which they are brought home to us through our surroundings, through our relationships with other nations, our relationships with one another, and through our peering into the future, any organizations such as that is, in my mind, a dedicated, patriotic group that can well take the Bible in one hand and the a flag in the other, and march ahead.

Upon lighting the National Christmas Tree at the White House, 1954, President Eisenhower stated:

This year, even as two thousand years ago when the Prince of Peace was born into the world, the drums of war are still.... Mankind's unquenchable hope for peace burns brighter than for many years.

In 1954, President Dwight David Eisenhower, said:

The purpose of a devout and united people was set forth in the pages of The Bible... (1) to live in freedom, (2) to work in a prosperous land... and (3) to obey the commandments of God.... This Biblical story of the Promised Land inspired the founders of America. It continues to inspire us.

In 1955, President Dwight David Eisenhower stated:

Without God there could be no American form of government, nor an American way of life. Recognition of the Supreme Being is the first - the most basic - expression of Americanism. Thus the founding fathers of America saw it, and thus with God's help, it will continue to be.

On January 6, 1955, in his State of the Union Message to Congress, President Eisenhower stated:

A decade ago, in the death and desolation of European battlefields, I saw the courage and resolution, I felt the inspiration of American youth. In these young men, I felt America's buoyant confidence and irresistible will-to-do. In them I saw, too, a devout America, humble before God. And so I know in my heart, and I believe all Americans know, that despite the anxieties of this divided world, our faith and the cause in which we all believe will surely prevail.

On January 24, 1955, in a message to Congress asking their support, which they granted, in protecting Formosa from Communist China, President Eisenhower stated:

A suitable Congressional Resolution... would make clear the unified and serious intentions of our government, our Congress and our people. Thus it will reduce the possibility that the Chinese Communists, misjudging our firm purpose and national unity, might be disposed to challenge the position of the United States, and precipitate a major crisis which even they would neither anticipate nor desire.

On February 8, 1955, in a message to Congress on the state of American education, President Eisenhower stated:

Unless education continues to be free - free in its response to local community needs, from any suggestion of political domination... it will cease to serve the purposes of free men.

The finest buildings, of themselves, are no assurance that the pupils who use them each day are better fitted to shoulder the responsibilities, to meet the opportunities, to enjoy the rewards that one day will be their lot as American citizens.

Good teaching and good teachers made even the one-room crossroads school of the nineteenth century a rich source of the knowledge and the enthusiasm and patriotism, joined with spiritual wisdom, that mark a vigorously dynamic people.

On March 2, 1955, in a tribute to Pope Pius XII, President Eisenhower stated at a new conference:

As to His Holiness, the Pope, [on] his seventy-ninth birthday, a man that I have had the honor of visiting personally, admiring him greatly, and particularly because of his unbroken record of opposition to all forms of fascism and communism, I am quite certain that America, all America, would wish this great spiritual leader a very happy day today, and many more of them.

On May 10, 1955, in an address to the Republican Women's National Conference, President Eisenhower stated:

I believe that women are better apostles than men. Men are engrossed in many kinds of activities. They earn the living. They are engaged in business all day, and they are very apt, at times, to lose that great rounded concept of that women almost always have before them: that he is a spiritual and intellectual and a physical being. He is not merely someone trying to get a higher wage. He wants a higher wage for a purpose, to give greater opportunity in all three of these fields to his family.

Because women think of these things in their process of homemaking, think of them in terms of children and the family, I believe that their influence in spreading the basic doctrines of this kind is more profound than that of men.

On May 17, 1955, the Prime Minister of Australia, Robert Menzies, commented during a visit to Washington, D.C.:

The time will come when senators and representatives will be picked for their beauty, and God help the country then.

On June 7, 1955, in giving the commencement address at West Point, President Eisenhower stated:

All of us gratefully acknowledge, as our fathers did before us, our dependence on the guidance of a Divine Providence. But this dependence must not tempt us to evade our personal responsibility to use every one of our individual and collective talents for the better discharge of our lifetime missions.

Working and living in this spirit, you as soldiers will make yourselves and the Army a professional counterpart of the American way - jealously conserving principle; forceful in practice; courageous and calm in present crises; steadfast and patient in the long campaign for a secure and peaceful world; stout of faith in yourselves, your Alma Mater, your country and your God.

On June 11, 1955, in delivering the commencement address at Pennsylvania State University, President Eisenhower stated:

While we design bombs that can obliterate great military objectives - because we must - we are also designing generators, channels, and reservoirs of atomic energy so that man may profit from this gift which the Creator of all things has put into his hands. And build them we shall.

On June 21, 1955, in speaking at the Vermont Dairy Festival, Rutland, Vermont, President Eisenhower stated:

I know that Americans everywhere are the same, in their longing for peace, a peace that is characterized by justice, by consideration for others, by decency, above all by its insistence on respect for the individual human being as a child of his God.

On July 15, 1955, in a national address given just prior to his departure for the Big Four Conference in Geneva, President Eisenhower stated:

It is natural for a people steeped in a religious civilization when they come to moments of great importance - maybe even crises, such as now we face - to turn to the Divine Power....

I have not doubt that tonight throughout this country, and indeed throughout the free world, such prayers are ascending. This is a mighty force. And this brings to me the thought that through prayer we could also achieve a very definite and practical result at this very moment.

On July 25, 1955, in a broadcast given upon his return from the Geneva Conference, President Eisenhower stated:

We must never be deluded into believing that one week of friendly fruitful negotiations can wholly eliminate a problem arising out of the wide gulf that separates so far East and West. A gulf as wide and deep as the difference between individual liberty and regimentation, as wide and deep as the gulf that lies between the concept of man made in the image of his God and the concept of man as a mere instrument of the state.

On August 17, 1955, President Eisenhower ordered the text of the code of conduct for war prisoners to be put into effect in the armed services:

1. I am an American fighting man. I serve in the forces which guard my country and our way of life. I am prepared to give my life in their defense.

2. I will never surrender of my own free will. If in command I will never surrender my men while they still have means to resist.

3. If I am captured I will continue to resist by all means available. I will make every effort to escape and aid others to escape. I will accept neither parole nor special favors from the enemy.

4. If I become a prisoner of war, I will keep faith with my fellow prisoners. I will give no information or take part in any action which might be harmful to my comrades. If I am senior, I will take command. If not I will obey the lawful orders of those appointed over me and will back them up in every way.

5. When questioned, should I become a prisoner of war, I am bound to give only name, rank, service number, and date of birth. I will evade answering further questions to the utmost of my ability. I will make no oral or written statements disloyal to my country and its allies or harmful to their cause.

6. I will never forget that I am an American fighting man, responsible for my actions, and dedicated to the principles which made my country free. I will trust in my God and in the United States of America.

On December 5, 1955, in a telephone address to the unification meeting of the American Federation of Labor and Congress of Industrial Organizations, New York, President Eisenhower stated:

Man is created in the Divine Image and has spiritual aspirations that transcend the material.

On February 1, 1956, in a joint statement with British Prime Minister Anthony Eden at the end of a three-day conference in Washington, D. C., President Eisenhower stated:

While resolutely pursuing these aims, which are the products of our faith in God and in the peoples of the earth, we shall eagerly grasp any genuine opportunity to free mankind of the pall of fear and insecurity which now obscures what can and should be a glorious future.

On March 21, 1956, in a news conference, President Eisenhower stated:

Now, this is what I see in Billy Graham: A man who clearly understands that any advance in the world has got to be accompanied by a clear realization that man is, after all, a spiritual being. He teaches, he carries his religion to the far corners of the earth, trying to promote peace, trying to promote mediation instead of conflict, tolerance instead of prejudice. Now, he does that in this country, he does it abroad. Therefore, because of the very great crowds that he attracts to listen to him, I am very much interested in Billy Graham's activities, but for that reason only. I have never discussed with him any plan for mobilizing nations.

On May 25, 1956, in delivering the commencement address at Baylor University, Waco, Texas, President Eisenhower stated:

Communism is, in deepest sense, a gigantic failure. Even in the countries it dominates, hundreds of millions who dwell there still cling to their religious faith; still are moved by aspirations for justice and freedom that cannot be answered merely by more steel or by bigger bombers; still seek a reward that is beyond money or place or power; still dream of the day that they may walk fearlessly in the fullness of human freedom.

The destiny of man is freedom and justice under his Creator. Any ideology that denies this universal faith will ultimately perish or be recast. This is the first great truth that must underlie all our thinking, all our striving in this struggling world.

On July 22, 1956, in an address to the presidents of the American Republics, Panama City, Panama, President Eisenhower stated:

We here pay tribute to the faith of our fathers, which was translated into new institutions and new works. But we cannot go on forever merely on the momentum of their faith. We, too, must have our faith and see that it is translated into works.

On November 8, 1956, at the Election Night celebrations in Washington, D. C., President Eisenhower stated:

With whatever talents the good God has given me, with whatever strength there is within me, I will continue - and so will my associates - to do just one thing; to work for 168 million Americans here at home - and for peace in the world.

On Monday, January 21, 1957, in his Second Inaugural Address, President Dwight D. Eisenhower stated:

Before all else, we seek upon our common labor as a nation, the blessings of Almighty God. And the hopes in our hearts fashion the deepest prayers of our whole people....

We look upon this shaken earth, and we declare our firm and fixed purpose - the building of a peace with justice in a world where moral law prevails.... And so the prayer of our people carries far beyond our own frontiers, to the wide world of our duty and our destiny.

The magazine, Episcopal Churchnews asked President Dwight D. Eisenhower to write a summary of his ideas on religion. He responded with a lesson in America's founding principles and with comments on his reaction to the invasion of Normandy in June of 1944:

It was part of the privilege into which I was born that my home was a religious home. My father and mother believed that "the fear of God is the beginning of wisdom."... The history of our country is inseparable from the history of such God-fearing families.

In this fact we accept the explanation of the miracle of America.... The founding fathers had to refer to the Creator in order to make their revolutionary experiment make sense; it was because "all men are endowed by their Creator with certain inalienable rights" that men could dare to be free.

They wrote their religious faith into our founding documents, stamped their trust in God on the face of our coins and currency, put it boldly at the base of our institutions, and when they drew up their bold Bill of Rights, where did they put freedom to worship? First, in the cornerstone position! That was no accident.

Our forefathers proved that only a people strong in Godliness is a people strong enough to overcome tyranny and make themselves and others free.... What is our battle against communism if it is not a fight between anti-God and a belief in the Almighty?

If there was nothing else in my life to prove the existence of an Almighty and Merciful God, the events of the next twenty-four hours did it. This is what I found out about religion: It gives you courage to make the decisions you must make in a crisis, and then the confidence to leave the results to a higher power. Only by trust in oneself and trust in God can a man carrying responsibility find repose.

If each of us in his own mind would dwell upon the simple virtues - integrity, courage, self-confidence, and unshakable belief in his Bible - would not some of our problems tend to simplify themselves?

Dwight D. Eisenhower stated:

The spirit of man is more important than mere physical strength, and the spiritual fiber of a nation than its wealth.

The Bible is endorsed by the ages. Our civilization is built upon its words. In no other book is there such a collection of inspired wisdom, reality, and hope.

America is the greatest force that God ever allowed to exist on His footstool.
Page 999

People who value their privileges above their principles soon lose both.

I should like to feel that, in every American family, some place is made for an expression of our gratitude to Almighty God, and for a frank acknowledgement of our faith that He can supply that additional strength which, for these trying times, is so sorely needed.

On January 17, 1961, in his Farewell Address, President Eisenhower stated:

Three days from now, after half a century in the service of our country, I shall lay down the responsibilities of office as, in traditional and solemn ceremony, the authority of the presidency is vested in my successor. This evening I come to you with a message of leavetaking and farewell, and to share a few final thoughts with you, my country.

Like every other citizen, I wish the new President and all who will labor with him Godspeed. I pray that the coming years will be blessed with peace and prosperity for all....

Throughout America's adventure in free government our basic purposes have been to keep the peace, to foster progress in human achievement, and to enhance liberty, dignity, and integrity among people and among nations. To strive for less would be unworthy of a free and religious people....

We face a hostile ideology - global in scope, atheistic in character, ruthless in purpose, and insidious in method. Unhappily, the danger it poses promises to be of indefinite duration....

A vital element in keeping the peace is our military establishment. Our arms must be mighty, ready for instant action, so that no potential aggressor may be tempted to risk his own destruction....

Another factor in maintaining balance involves the element of time. As we peer into society's future, we - you and I, and our government - must avoid the impulse to live only for today, plundering for our own ease and convenience the precious resources of tomorrow. We cannot mortgage the material assets of our grandchildren without risking the loss also of their political and spiritual heritage. We want democracy to survive for all generations to come, not to become the insolvent phantom of tomorrow....

You and I, my fellow citizens, need to be strong in our faith that all nations, under God, will reach the goal of peace with justice. May we be ever unswerving in devotion to principle, confident but humble with power, diligent in pursuit of the nation's great goals. To all the peoples of the world, I once more give expression to America's prayerful and continuing aspiration:

We pray that peoples of all faiths, all races, all nations, may have their great human needs satisfied; that those now denied opportunity shall come to enjoy it to the full; that all who yearn for freedom may experience its spiritual blessings.

American Quotations.txt

President Eisenhower's wife, Mamie Geneva Doud Eisenhower, later confided:

I have gone to the neighborhood Presbyterian church here in Denver all my life, and Ike always goes with me when he is here. Our two sons were christened in this church...Ike is a man who lives his religion every day of his life.

In commenting on their son John, who was serving in the Korean War at the time, Mrs. Eisenhower explained:

I have built a philosophy to sustain me during these trying times, knowing that John has a mission to fulfill and that God will see to it that nothing will happen to him until he fulfills this mission.

On November 23, 1963, the day after President John F. Kennedy had been assassinated, former President Dwight D. Eisenhower drove from Gettysburg to Washington D.C., to meet with President Lyndon B. Johnson and deliver a confidential memorandum:

Confidential Notes for the President...

I am bold enough to suggest that you call a Joint Session of the Congress to make a speech of not over ten or twelve minutes. I think it might cover the following points:

A. Point out first that you have come to this office unexpectedly and you accept the decision of the Almighty, who in His inscrutable wisdom has now place you in the position of highest responsibility of this nation.

Warren, Earl (March 19, 1891-July 9, 1974), was Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, appointed in 1953, after having been Governor of California for three terms, 1943-53. He held the unique honor as having been first man ever to win both the Democratic and Republican nominations for governor in 1946. He was the Republican nominee for Vice-President in 1948.

On February 5, 1954, in addressing the International Council for Christian Leadership, U.S. Supreme Court Chief Justice Earl Warren stated:

Before these perplexing, troublesome days pass it may be necessary to move mountains. It is good that we keep the faith together.

On February 14, 1954, in Time magazine, Chief Justice Earl Warren stated:

I believe no one can read the history of our country...without realizing that the Good Book and the spirit of the Saviour have from the beginning been our guiding geniuses...Whether we look to the first Charter of Virginia...or to the Charter of New England...or to the Charter of Massachusetts Bay...or to the Fundamental Orders of Connecticut...the same objective is present: a Christian land governed by Christian principles...

I believe the entire Bill of Rights came into being because of the knowledge our forefathers had of the Bible and their belief in it: freedom of belief, of expression, of assembly, of petition, the dignity of the individual, the sanctity of the home, equal justice under the law, and the reservation of powers to the people....

I like to believe we are living today in the spirit of the Christian religion. I like also to believe that as long as we do so, no great harm can come to our country.

Christie, Agatha, Dame (September 15, 1891-January 12, 1975), was an acclaimed British playwright and author of popular detective fiction. She was educated at home by her mother and served as a volunteer nurse during World War I. The Mysterious Affair at Styles, her first manuscript, was rejected over 6 times by publishers until it was finally published in 1920. She created the well-known fictional detectives, Miss Jane Marple and Hercule Poirot. One of the foremost writers in the 20th century, Agatha Christie's works include: The Murder of Roger Ackroyd, 1926; Murder on the Orient Express, 1934; Death on the Nile, 1937; and The Mousetrap, 1952, which, when performed as a play, set a world record for the longest run at one theater.

In An Autobiography, published in 1977, Agatha Christie wrote in Part III, Growing Up:

If you love, you will suffer, and if you do not love, you do not know the meaning of a Christian life.

Mindszenty, Josef Cardinal (1892-1975), was a Roman Catholic Cardinal, 1946; Archbishop of Esztergom, 1945; and ordained a priest, 1915. On November 12, 1956, commenting on his eight years of confinement by the Russian occupation troops in Hungary, Josef Cardinal Mindszenty stated:

I suffered torture bodily and in my soul. It's God's miracle that I am here and that I am as I am.

Niemoeller, Martin (1892-1984), was a German submarine captain in World War I; studied theology at Munster; was a pastor at Dahlheim; formed the Pastor's Emergency League to protest the Nazi government; was arrested in 1937; and spent 7 years in concentration camps. He helped to rebuild the Evangelical church in Europe after World War II and served as the president of the World Council of Churches, 1961-68.

As a citizen in Germany during the Nazi regime, Martin Niemoeller wrote:

In Germany they came first for the Communists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Communist. Then they came for the Jews, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a Jew. Then they came for the trade unionists, and I didn't speak up because I wasn't a trade unionist. Then they came for the Catholics, and I didn't speak up because I was a Protestant. Then they came for me, and by that time no one was left to speak up.

Vallejo, Cesar (1892-1938), in Poemas Humanos, 1939, Whatever May Be the Cause, wrote:

Whatever may be the cause I have to defend before God, beyond death I have a defender: God.

Willke, Wendell Lewis (February 18, 1892-October 8, 1944), was a business executive, lawyer, and U.S. Presidential Candidate. He had been a Democrat most of his life till he became a Republican in the middle 1930's. After having served in World War I, he became a lawyer, and later the president of Southern Electric Utilities Company, 1933-40, selling properties to the Tennessee Valley Authority for $78,000,000.

He opposed the New Deal regulations and control on businesses, and favored restructuring the tax system to encourage business expansion. In 1940, winning 22,000,000 votes, he almost defeated Franklin D. Roosevelt's bid for a third term. He wrote We The People, and One World.

Wendell Willke stated:

Only if the religious forces have the courage and the intelligence to insist that America keeps its purpose clean and clear will religious values be enabled to play an active role in the building of the new world.

United States Supreme Court (February 29, 1892), in the case of Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 US 457-458, 465-471, 36 L ed 226, Justice David Josiah Brewer rendered the high Court's decision:

No purpose of action against religion can be imputed to any legislation, state or national, because this is a religious people. This is historically true. From the discovery of this continent to the present hour, there is a single voice making this affirmation.

The commission to Christopher Columbus... [recited] that "it is hoped that by God's assistance some of the continents and islands in the ocean will be discovered...."

The first colonial grant made to Sir Walter Raleigh in 1584... and the grant authorizing him to enact statutes for the government of the proposed colony provided that they "be not against the true Christian faith...."

The first charter of Virginia, granted by King James I in 1606... commenced the grant in these words: "...in propagating of Christian Religion to such People as yet live in Darkness...."

Language of similar import may be found in the subsequent charters of that colony... in 1609 and 1611; and the same is true of the various charters granted to the other colonies. In language more or less emphatic is the establishment of the Christian religion declared to be one of the purposes of the grant. The celebrated compact made by the Pilgrims in the Mayflower, 1620, recites: "Having undertaken for the Glory of God, and advancement of the Christian faith... a voyage to plant the first colony in the northern parts of Virginia...."

The fundamental orders of Connecticut, under which a provisional government was instituted in 1638-1639, commence with this declaration: "...And well knowing where a people are gathered together the word of God requires that to maintain the peace and union...there should be an orderly and decent government established according to God...to maintain and preserve the liberty and purity of the gospel of our Lord Jesus which we now profess...of the said gospel is now practiced amongst us."

In the charter of privileges granted by William Penn to the province of Pennsylvania, in 1701, it is recited: "...no people can be truly happy, though under the greatest enjoyment of civil liberties, if abridged of...their religious profession and worship...."

Coming nearer to the present time, the Declaration of Independence recognizes the presence of the Divine in human affairs in these words:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights...appealing to the Supreme Judge of the world for the rectitude of our intentions...And for the support of this Declaration, with firm reliance on the Protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes, and our sacred Honor."

...We find everywhere a clear recognition of the same truth...because of a general recognition of this truth [that we are a Christian nation], the question has seldom been presented to the courts...

There is no dissonance in these declarations. There is a universal language pervading them all, having one meaning; they affirm and reaffirm that this is a religious nation. These are not individual sayings, declarations of private persons: they are organic utterances; they speak the voice of the entire people.

While because of a general recognition of this truth the question has seldom been presented to the courts, yet we find that in Updegraph v. The Commonwealth, it was decided that, Christianity, general Christianity, is, and always has been, a part of the common law...not Christianity with an established church...but Christianity with liberty of conscience to all men.

And in The People v. Ruggles, Chancellor Kent, the great commentator on American law, speaking as Chief Justice of the Supreme Court of New York, said:

"The people of this State, in common with the people of this country, profess the general doctrines of Christianity, as the rule of their faith and practice...We are a Christian people, and the morality of the country is deeply engrafted upon Christianity, and not upon the doctrines or worship of those impostors [other religions]."

And in the famous case of Vidal v. Girard's Executors, this Court...observed:

"It is also said, and truly, that the Christian religion is a part of the common law...."

If we pass beyond these matters to a view of American life as expressed by its laws, its business, its customs and its society, we find everywhere a clear recognition of the same truth. Among other matters note the following: The form of oath universally prevailing, concluding with an appeal to the Almighty; the custom of opening sessions of all deliberative bodies and most conventions with prayer; the prefatory words of all wills, "In the name of God, amen"; the laws respecting the observance of the Sabbath, with the general cessation of all secular business, and the closing of courts, legislatures, and other similar public assemblies on that day; the churches and church organizations which abound in every city, town and hamlet; the multitude of charitable organizations existing everywhere under Christian auspices; the gigantic missionary associations, with general support, and aiming to establish Christian missions in every quarter of the globe.

These, and many other matters which might be noticed, add a volume of unofficial declarations to the mass of organic utterances that this is a Christian nation. . . . we find everywhere a clear recognition of the same truth.

The happiness of a people and the good order and preservation of civil government essentially depend upon piety, religion and morality.

Religion, morality, and knowledge [are] necessary to good government, the preservation of liberty, and the happiness of mankind.

A commentary on the 1892 case Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, summarized:

Our laws and our institutions must necessarily be based upon and embody the teachings of the Redeemer of mankind. It is impossible that it should be otherwise; and in this sense and to this extent our civilization and our institutions are emphatically Christian.

Niebuhr, Reinhold (June 21, 1892-June 1, 1971), was an internationally known lecturer, writer and teacher. He graduated from Yale Divinity School; was professor at Union Theological Seminary New York City, 1930-60; dean of faculty, 1950-55; vice-president, 1955-60. He gained a reputation for being concerned with the needs of the poor, and in 1964 received the Presidential Medal of Freedom. His works include: Faith and History; The Irony of American History; Christian Realism and Political Problems; The Self and the Dramas of History; Man's Nature and His Communities; and Faith and Politics.

In 1934, Reinhold Niebuhr wrote The Serenity Prayer:

God, give us grace to accept with serenity the things that cannot be changed, courage to change the things which should be changed, and the wisdom to distinguish the one from the other.

In Discerning the Signs of the Times, 1949, Reinhold Niebuhr wrote:

Humor is a prelude to faith and Laughter is the beginning of prayer.

Reinhold Niebuhr wrote:

Man's capacity for Justice makes democracy possible, but man's inclination to injustice makes democracy necessary.

Bradley, Omar Nelson (February 12, 1893-April 8, 1981), was U.S. Military General. During World War II, he commanded the Second Army Corps in North Africa throughout the Tunisian and Sicilian campaigns. He was the senior commander on the U.S. Ground Forces, 1944-45, for the invasion of France. In August of 1944, he led the 12th Army Group in France and Germany, consisting of 1,000,000 men in four armies. He was Chief of Staff of the U.S. Army, 1948-49; made a five star general of the Army, 1950; and was the first chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, 1949-53.

In his address on Armistice Day, November 11, 1948, General Bradley stated:

We have grasped the mystery of the atom and rejected the Sermon on the Mount....The world has achieved brilliance without conscience. Ours is a world of nuclear giants and ethical infants.

Pennsylvania State Court (1894), in the case of Hysong v. School District of Gallitzin Borough, 164 Pa. St. 629, 30 A. 482 (Pa. 1894), stated:

We cannot infer, from the mere fact that a school board composed of Catholics has selected a majority of Catholic teachers, that therefore it has unlawfully discriminated in favor of Catholics, because the selection of Catholic teachers is not a violation of law or, which is the same thing, is not an abuse of discretion.

Nor does the fact that these teachers contribute all their earnings beyond their support to the treasury of their order, to be used for religious purposes, have any bearing on the question. It is none of our business, nor that of these appellants, to inquire into this matter. American men and women, of sound mind and twenty-one years of age, can make such disposition of their surplus earnings as suits their own notions. We might as well, so far as any law warranted it, inquire of a lawyer before admitting him to the bar, what he intended to do with his surplus fees, and make his answer a test of admission. What he did with his money could no way affect his right to be sworn as an officer of this court.

But it is further argued that...they ought to enjoin from appearing in the school room in the habit of their order. It may be conceded that the dress and crucifix impart at once knowledge to the pupils of the religious belief...of the wearer. But is this, in any reasonable sense of the word, "sectarian" teaching, which the law prohibits?...The dress is but the announcement of a fact, that the wearer holds a particular religious belief. The religious belief of teachers and all others is generally well known to the neighborhood and to pupils, even if not made noticeable in the dress, for that belief is not secret, but is publicly professed. Are the courts to decide that the cut of a man's coat or the color of a woman's gown is sectarian teaching, because they indicate sectarian religious belief? If so, then they can be called upon to go further. The religion of a teacher being known, a pure, unselfish life, exhibiting itself in tenderness to the young, and helpfulness for the suffering, necessarily tends to promote the religion of the man or woman who lives it. In sensibly, in both young and old, there is a disposition to reverence such a one, and at least, to some extent, consider the life as the fruit of the particular religion. Therefore, irreproachable conduct to that degree is sectarian teaching. But shall the education of the children of the Commonwealth be entrusted only to those men and women who are destitute of any religious belief?

United States Supreme Court (1895), in the case of Pollock v. Farmers' Loan and Trust Co., 157, U.S. 429, 574, 596 (1895), declared income tax unconstitutional. The court consisted of Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller, Ill.; Justice David Josiah Brewer, Kan.; Justice Horace Gray, Mass.; Justice John M. Harlan, Ky.; Justice Henry B. Brown, Mich.; Justice Stephen J. Field, Ca.; Justice George Shiras, Jr., Pa.; Justice Howell E. Jackson, Tenn.; and Justice Edward D. White, La.

Chief Justice Melville W. Fuller rendered the opinion:

The original expectation was that the power of direct taxation would be exercised only in extraordinary exigencies, and down to August 15, 1894, this expectation has been realized.

Justice Stephen J. Field concurred:

The income tax law under consideration is marked by discriminating features which affect the whole law. It discriminates between those who receive an income of four thousand dollars and those who do not...

The legislation, in the discrimination it makes, is class legislation. Whenever a distinction is made in the burdens a law imposes or in the benefits it confers on any citizens by reason of their birth, or wealth, or religion, it is class legislation, and leads inevitably to oppression and abuses, and to general unrest and disturbance in society. It was hoped and believed that the great amendments to the Constitution which followed the late civil war had rendered such legislation impossible for all future time. But the objectional legislation reappears in the act under consideration. It is the same in essential character as that of the English income statute of 1691, which taxed Protestants at a certain rate, Catholics, as a class, at double the rate of Protestants, and Jews at another and separate rate.

Hoover, J. (John) Edgar (January 1, 1895-May 2, 1972), was the American director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI), 1924-1972. He graduated from George Washington University, 1916; earned a Masters Degree in Law, 1917; served as assistant to Attorney General A. Mitchell Palmer. He became famous for his dramatic campaigns to stop organized crime. J. Edgar Hoover explained:

The criminal is the product of spiritual starvation. Someone failed miserably to bring him to know God, love Him and serve Him.

In writing the introduction to Edward L. R. Elson's book, America's Spiritual Recovery, 1954, J. Edgar Hoover expressed:

We can see all too clearly the devastating effects of the resultant Secularism on our Christian way of life. The period when it was smart to "debunk" our traditions undermined inspiring customs and high standards of conduct. A rising emphasis on materialism caused a decline of "God-centered" deeds and thoughts. The American home became a place of transient, furtive living and ceased to be a school of moral and spiritual education. . . .

When spiritual guidance is at a low ebb, moral principles are accordingly in a state of deterioration. Secularism advances in periods when men forget God. . . .

But there are hopeful signs for a better day. There was hope in the words of General Eisenhower when he bowed his head on Inaugural Day and asked in part, "Give us, we pray, the power to discern right from wrong and allow all our words and actions to be governed thereby and by the laws of this land." This humble prayer touched Americans from coast to coast. Here was hope manifested in a manner which inspired the hearts of countless millions. A President with such a deep religious sense and with such a sincere spiritual motivation, seeking to be guided by the right, sets an example for all the people.

On October 9, 1962, in an address to the National Convention of the American Legion, J. Edgar Hoover stated:

Where is faith in God which fortified us through our past trials? Have our national pride, our moral conscience, our sensitivity to filth and degradation, grown so weak that they no longer react to assaults upon our proud heritage of freedom? . . .

There is a dangerous flaw in our Nation's moral armor. Self-indulgence - the principle of pleasure. . . is undermining those attributes of personal responsibility and self-discipline which are essential to our national survival. It is creating citizens who reach maturity with a warped sense of values and an undeveloped conscience.

Sheen, Fulton John (May 8, 1895-December 9, 1979), was an American Catholic Bishop whose powerful communication style and pioneer use of the television helped shape the conscience of the nation during his lifetime. He was professor of philosophy at the Catholic University of America, 1927-50; bishop of Rochester, New York, 1966-69; and in 1952 won an Emmy for outstanding male personality on television. His works include: Peace of Soul, Lift Up Your Heart; Three to Get Married; Life is Worth Living; and The Life of Christ. Named as one of the ten most important Americans in 1953, Bishop Fulton J. Sheen described true Americanism as:

. . . the belief in the freedom of man as a divine derivative. For that reason if we wish to keep pure

Americanism we must keep our religion... Dictatorships, such as the Communists, regard man only as a stomach to be fed by the state, or as a tool to amass wealth for the state. Put men on that level and they need no religion, any more than animals need religion, or a monkey needs liturgy.

Democracy has to rely not on force but on freedom and liberty. But freedom and liberty are inseparable from responsibility, and responsibility is inseparable from conscience, and conscience is inseparable from religion.

In commenting on Communism, Bishop Fulton J. Sheen wrote:

One may hate Communism as an evil system, but still love the Communists as creatures made to the image and likeness of God and capable of Divine Redemption.

On December 24, 1954, Bishop Fulton Sheen's comment upon receiving a Look award for his television addresses was quoted in Faye Emerson's column of the New York World-Telegram & Sun:

I feel it is time that I also pay tribute to my four writers, Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John.

On December 14, 1955, in Look magazine, Bishop Fulton Sheen stated:

An atheist is a man who has no invisible means of support.

Manion, Clarence E. (1896-1983), was dean of the Notre Dame College of Law, 1941-52, and Professor of Constitutional Law at the University of Notre Dame, 1925-52. In 1946, Dean Manion was quoted regarding the Declaration of Independence in Verne Paul Kaub's book, Collectivism Challenges Christianity:

Look closely at these self-evident truths, these imperishable articles of American Faith upon which all our government is firmly based. First and foremost is the existence of God. Next comes the truth that all men are equal in the sight of God. Third is the fact of God's great gift of unalienable rights to every person on earth. Then follows the true and single purpose of all American Government, namely, to preserve and protect these God-made rights of God-made man.

Regarding the birth of Christ, Dean Clarence Manion commented:

The long march of measured time suddenly stopped. It then did an about-face and started to march in another direction and to a different drum straight through the ensuing centuries of Christ and Christendom....

B. C. (before Christ) and A. D. (Anno Domini, the year of our Lord) mark each one of the only reliable milestones along the path of world history. The end of the first time-chain, and the beginning of the second, came together on the night that Christ was born in Bethlehem. The first Christmas Day thus stands as the Great Divide for the timing and recording of all people, things and events that have lived or taken place upon this earth...

It is the one place where an inquiring mind can go in either direction without stopping; the one place on the long, long trail of time where the magnetic needle of history stands vertical and points up.

Utah, State of (January 4, 1896), was the 45th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Utah, adopted 1896, stated:

Preamble. Grateful to Almighty God for life and liberty, we... establish this Constitution.

Michigan State Court (1898), in the case of Pfeiffer v. Board of Education of City of Detroit, 118 Mich. 560, 77 N.W. 250 (Mich. 1898), stated:

It might be said that many of the students in our schools are not in position to avail themselves of the opportunity to study the dead languages. Is it therefore an unjust discrimination to provide for instruction in Latin and Greek for such pupils as are able to devote their time to those studies? Does it harm one who does not, for conscientious reasons, care to listen to readings from the Bible, that others are given the opportunity to do so? Is it not intolerant for one not required to attend to object to such readings? It may be said, of course, that the services of the teacher while engaged in these exercises are paid out of the fund in which all are entitled to share; but the same is true of a time which the teacher devoted to the languages, or instruction in higher mathematics. Does it follow that the civil rights or privileges of the students who do not accept teaching in those branches, or those who do, have been, on the one hand, diminished, or, on the other, enlarged? I do not think it should be so held.

Benson, George Stuart (1898-1991), was a university chancellor and educator. He wrote in "The American Dream," paragraph 3:

The American dream is the latent fire that lies buried, awaiting a spark, in the breast of every American... the dream of achieving, the dream of contributing, the dream of fulfillment. It is all this, and much, much more - all of it comes from a bedrock foundation of spiritual understanding, faith in God, a dedication to God's laws.

United States Congress (April 20, 1898), in a Joint Resolution, passed following a message from President McKinley, recognized the independence of Cuba and declared war with Spain:

Whereas the abhorrent conditions which have existed for more than three years in the Island of Cuba, so near our own borders, have shocked the moral sense of the people of the United States, have been a disgrace to Christian civilization, culminating, as they have, in the destruction of a United States battleship, with two hundred and sixty-six of its officers and crew, while on a friendly visit in the harbor of Havana, and can not longer be endured, as has been set forth by the President of the United States in his message to Congress of April eleventh, eighteen hundred and ninety-eight, upon which the action of Congress was invited: Therefore,

Resolved, by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States assembled... that the people of the Island of Cuba are, and of right ought to be, free and independent.

Douglas, William Orville (October 16, 1898-January 19, 1980), was a Justice of the U. S. Supreme Court, 1939-75. He received his law degree from Columbia University, New York City, 1925; worked at a Wall Street law firm; was assistant professor of Columbia's law school, 1927; was professor at Yale's law school, 1928-39.

In the 1952 case of Zorach v. Clauson, 343 US 306 307 313, Justice Douglas asserted:

The First Amendment, however, does not say that in every respect there shall be a separation of Church and State. Rather, it studiously defines the manner, the specific ways, in which there shall be no concert or union or dependency one on the other.

That is the common sense of the matter. Otherwise the state and religion would be aliens to each other - hostile, suspicious, and even unfriendly....

Municipalities would not be permitted to render police or fire protection to religious groups. Policemen who helped parishioners into their places of worship would violate the Constitution.

Prayers in our legislative halls; the appeals to the Almighty in the messages of the Chief Executive; the proclamation making Thanksgiving Day a holiday; "so help me God" in our courtroom oaths - these and all other references to the Almighty that run through our laws, our public rituals, our ceremonies, would be flouting the First Amendment.

A fastidious atheist or agnostic could even object to the supplication with which the Court opens each session: God save the United States and this Honorable Court.

We are a religious people and our institutions presuppose a Supreme Being....

When the state encourages religious instruction or cooperates with religious authorities by adjusting the schedule of public events to sectarian needs, it follows the best of our traditions.

For it then respects the religious nature of our people and accommodates the public service to their spiritual needs. To hold that it may not would be to find in the Constitution a requirement that the government show a callous indifference to religious groups. That would be preferring those who believe in no religion over those who do believe....

We find no constitutional requirement makes it necessary for government to be hostile to religion and to throw its weight against the efforts to widen the scope of religious influence. The government must remain neutral when it comes to competition between sects....

We cannot read into the Bill of Rights such a philosophy of hostility to religion.

We agree of course that the state may not establish a "religion of secularism" in the sense of affirmatively opposing or showing hostility to religion, thus preferring those who believe in no religion over those who do believe.

Lewis, "C. S." Clive Staples (November 29, 1898-November 22, 1963), was an author, historian and professor at Oxford and Cambridge Universities. He was educated by a private tutor as a child; studied at Malvern College in England; University College, Oxford, 1916; served in World War I, 1918; taught at Magdalen College, Oxford, 1925-54; and was professor of medieval and Renaissance English at Cambridge University, 1954-63. Though his death went almost unnoticed, having died on the same day that President John F. Kennedy was assassinated, his works have become some of the most widely read in English literature. His works include: The Pilgrim's Regress, 1933; The Allegory of Love—a Study in Medieval Tradition, 1936; Out of the Silent Planet, 1938; The Problem of Pain, 1940; The Screwtape Letters, 1942; Perelandra, 1943; That Hideous Strength, 1945; Miracles, 1947; The Chronicles of Narnia, 1950; and Mere Christianity, 1952; and his autobiography, Surprised by Joy, 1955, in which he wrote:

I know very well when, but hardly how, the final step was taken. I was driven to Whipsnade one sunny morning. When we set out I did not believe that Jesus Christ is the Son of God, and when we reached to zoo I did. Yet I had not exactly spent the journey in thought. Nor in great emotion. "Emotional" is perhaps the last word we can apply to some of the most important events. It was more like when a man, after long sleep, still lying motionless in bed, becomes aware that he is now awake. And it was, like that moment on top of the bus, ambiguous.

Freedom, or necessity? Or do they differ at their maximum? At that maximum a man is what he does; there is nothing of him left over or outside the act. As for what we commonly call Will, and what we commonly call Emotion, I fancy these usually talk too loud, protest too much, to be quite believed, and we have a secret suspicion that the great passion or the iron resolution is partly a put-up job.

They have spoiled Whipsnade since then. Wallaby Wood, with the birds singing overhead and the blue-bells underfoot and the Wallabies hopping all round one, was almost Eden come again.

Having once been an agnostic, C. S. Lewis expressed:

I am trying to prevent anyone from saying the really foolish thing that people often say about Him: "I am ready to accept Jesus as a great moral teacher, but I don't accept His claims to be God." That is one thing we must not say.

A man who was merely a man and said the sort of things that Jesus said would not be a great moral teacher. He would either be a lunatic - on a level with the man who says he is a poached egg - or else he would be the devil of hell.

You must make your choice. Either this man was, and is, the Son of God: or else a madman or something worse.

In The Screwtape Letters, 1942, C. S. Lewis wrote:

The safest road to Hell is the gradual one - the gentle slope, soft underfoot, without sudden turnings, without milestones, without signposts.

In Mere Christianity, 1952, C. S. Lewis wrote:

The Eternal Being, who knows everything and who created the whole universe, became not only a man but (before that) a baby, and before that a fetus in a woman's body.

C. S. Lewis remarked:

God cannot give us happiness and peace apart from Himself, because it is not there. There is no such thing.

Christianity is a religion you could not have guessed. It has that queer twist about it that real things have.

Everyone says forgiveness is a lovely idea, until they have something to forgive.

Good people know about both good and evil; bad people do not know about either.

There are two kinds of people: those who say to God, "Thy will be done," and those to whom God says, "All right, then, have it your way."

Relying on God has to begin all over again every day as if nothing had yet been done.

If...I swallow the scientific cosmology as a whole, then not only can I not fit in Christianity, but I cannot even fit science. If minds are wholly dependent on brains, and brains on bio-chemistry, and bio-chemistry (in the long run) on the meaningless flux of atoms, I cannot understand how the thought of those minds should have any significance than the sound of the wind in the trees.

Summerfield, Arthur Ellsworth (1899-1972), was Postmaster General in President Eisenhower's cabinet, 1953-1961. He had been successful in the real-estate, oil distribution and auto-sales industries before becoming involved in the 1940 Presidential campaign. In 1943, he was elected finance director of the State Central Committee of the Republican Party; in 1944, he became a member of the Republican National Committee, and in 1952, became the chairman of the Republican National Committee.

On April 5, 1954, in announcing the first U.S. postage stamp to carry the inscription, "In God We Trust," Postmaster General Arthur Summerfield stated:

American Quotations.txt

In sixteen years we have seen the first of radar, jet planes, guided missiles, atomic bombs, and all the misery and slavery and tragedy the world's great war has wrought, but we still retain our faith in the partnership of God and liberty that has preserved our country.

Romulo, Carlos Peña (January 14, 1899-December 15, 1985), was a Philippine general, diplomat and journalist. He was renowned for his heroic activities during World War II. He was an aide-de-camp to U.S. General Douglas MacArthur on Corregidor Island and in Australia. He won the Pulitzer Prize in 1941, and in 1948 he served as president of the United Nations Conference on Freedom of Information in Geneva. He was president of the U.N. General Assembly, 1949-50; Philippine ambassador to the United States, 1952; chairman of the U.N. Security Council, 1957; and was the president of the University of the Philippines. General Carlos P. Romulo stated:

Never forget, Americans, that yours is a spiritual country. Yes, I know you're a practical people. Like others, I've marvelled at your factories, your skyscrapers, and your arsenals. But underlying everything else is the fact that America began as a God-loving, God-fearing, God-worshipping people.

Hemingway, Ernest (July 21, 1899-July 2, 1961), was an American author who exerted a profound influence on American writers. He served in an American volunteer ambulance unit in France and Italy during World War I. Following the war he was the European correspondent for the Toronto Star, and later the Paris correspondent for the Syndicated News Service. He reported on the Spanish Civil War, 1937-1938, and during World War II was a war correspondent on the Western Front, 1944-1945. His works include: Three Stories and Ten Poems (1923); In Our Time (1924); The Sun Also Rises (1926); The Torrents of Spring (1926); Men Without Women (1927); A Farewell to Arms (1929); Winner Takes Nothing (1933); Death in the Afternoon (1933); Greenhills of Africa (1935); The Fifth Column and the First Forty-Nine Stories (1938); For Whom the Bell Tolls (1940); and Across the River and into the Trees (1950).

When asked his opinion of the Nobel Prize for literature, as recorded in McCall's Magazine, May 1956, Ernest Hemingway stated:

I am very happy for any writer who deserves it to get the prize. I am sorry about any writer who deserves it and doesn't get it. This makes me very humble in accepting it. One shouldn't win the Nobel Prize, then rewrite the Bible and become a bore - I accept the Bible in its original version.

Clark, Tom Campbell (September 23, 1899-June 13, 1977), was an Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, 1949-67, having been appointed by President Truman. He was circuit judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals, 1967-77; and U.S. Attorney General, 1945-49, a position held later by his son, Ramsey Clark. Justice Tom Campbell Clark stated:

The Founding Fathers believed devoutly that there was a God and that the unalienable rights of man were rooted - not in the state, nor the legislature, nor in any other human power - but in God alone.

Chambers, (Jay David) Whittaker (April 1, 1901-July 9, 1961), was an American journalist who had formerly been a Communist agent. He recanted and defected to the West. Whittaker Chambers stated:

Freedom is a need of the soul, and nothing else. It is in striving toward God that the soul strives continually after a condition of freedom. God alone is the inciter and guarantor of freedom. He is the only guarantor.

External freedom is only an aspect of interior freedom. Political freedom, as the Western world has known it, is only a political reading of the Bible. Religion and freedom are indivisible. Without freedom the soul dies. Without the soul there is no justification for freedom.

Humanism is not new. It is, in fact, man's second oldest faith. Its promise was whispered in the first days of the Creation under the Tree of the Knowledge of Good and Evil: "Ye shall be as gods."

(Jay David) Whittaker Chambers warned:

In proportion as Americans let go of faith in the absolute power of God, they accepted the belief in the all powerful state. This is true of peoples, of nations, for their idea of God determines the form of their civil, political, religious and social institutions.

In his book, Witness, (Jay David) Whittaker Chambers :

Communism is what happens when, in the name of mind, men free themselves from God. Economics is not the central problem of this century. It is a relative problem which can be solved in relative ways.

Faith is the central problem of this age. The crisis of the western world exists to the degree in which it is indifferent to God.

Religion and freedom are indivisible. Without freedom the soul dies. Without the soul there is no justification for freedom.

Malraux, Andre' (November 3, 1901-November 23, 1976), was a French novelist and essayist. He was involved in the civil strife in China in the 1920's, the Republican forces during the Spanish Civil War and the French Resistance during World War II, being captured twice by the Nazi's. He served as minister of information, 1945-46; and minister of cultural affairs, 1959-69, under President Charles de Gaulle.

His works include: The Temptation of the West, 1926; The Conquerors; The Human Condition; The Royal Way; Man's Fate, 1933; Man's Hope, 1937; Voices of Silence, 1951; and Museum without Walls, 1967.

In his volume of memoirs, entitled Anti-Memoirs, 1967, Andre' Malraux declared:

The genius of Christianity is to have proclaimed that the path to the deepest mystery is the path of love.

Nebraska State Court (1902), in the case of Freeman v. Scheve, 91 N.W. 846 (Neb. 1902), Holcomb concurring, stated:

The Bible itself is not a sectarian book, and it is an erroneous conception to so regard it. Altogether aside from its theological aspects, the Bible has an historical and literary value surpassed by no secular writings. Its moral teachings and precepts are of the purest and highest, and appeal to the noblest impulses of mankind, as no other literary production ever has. Can anyone successfully contend, in light of the contemporaneous history of the times, that the constitutional framers and the people who adopted that instrument intended to altogether exclude the Bible from the schools? If such had been the intention, would not the members of the convention have expressed themselves in such language as could not be misunderstood? A constitutional provision concerning religious freedom should, it is said, be construed in relation to the state of the law and custom as they existed at the time of its adoption, and the courts can take judicial notice of customs and usages in regard to the use of the Bible in the public schools. . . . This is accomplished by firmly excluding therefrom all forms of instruction calculated to establish and confirm in the minds of students those theological doctrines and beliefs which are peculiar to some only of the different religious sects. Further than this we are not warranted in going.

In 1903, the Nebraska State Court, Freeman v. Scheve, 93 N.W. 169 (Neb. 1903), on a motion for rehearing, stated:

[This] decision does not, however, go to extent of entirely excluding the Bible from the public schools. . . . Certainly the Iliad may be read in the schools without inculcating a belief in the Olympian divinities, and the Koran may be read without teaching the Moslem faith. Why may not the Bible also be read without indoctrinating children in the creed or dogma of any sect? Its contents are largely historical and moral. Its language is unequalled in purity and elegance. Its style has never been surpassed. Among the classics of our literature it stands as pre-eminent. . . . The law does not forbid the use of the Bible in either version in the public schools. It is not proscribed either by the constitution or the statutes. And the courts have no right to declare its use to be unlawful because it is possible or probable that those who are privileged to use it will misuse the privilege by attempting to propagate their own peculiar theological and ecclesiastical views and opinions.

Kopf, Carl Health (1902-1958), was an American clergyman. He once stated:

Whether God blesses America or not does not depend so much upon God as it does upon us Americans.
Page 1016

Lodge, Henry Cabot, Jr. (1902-1985), was the chief United States delegate to the United Nations, 1953-1960; a U.S. Senator from Massachusetts, 1937-1953, except for the years 1944-1946 when he resigned to serve in World War II; Republican Vice-Presidential nominee, 1960; ambassador to South Vietnam, 1963-1964, 1965-1967; ambassador to West Germany 1968-1969; Presidential emissary to the Vatican, 1970-1975.

Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., was the grandson of Henry Cabot Lodge (1850-1924), the U.S. Senator from Massachusetts who vigorously opposed President Woodrow Wilson's plan for a League of Nations after World War I. He was also the great-great-grandson of George Cabot (1752-1823), the member of the Provincial Congress of Massachusetts, the Massachusetts Constitutional Convention, and a U.S. Senator.

On December 30, 1955, in a letter sent to each member state of the United Nations, Henry Cabot Lodge, Jr., stated:

I propose that God should be openly and audibly invoked at the United Nations in accordance with any one of the religious faiths which are represented here. I do so in the conviction that we cannot make the United Nations into a successful instrument of God's peace without God's help - and that with His help we cannot fail. To this end I propose that we ask for that help.

Lindbergh, Charles Augustus (February 4, 1902 - August 26, 1974), American aviator, of international fame for being the first person to fly solo across the Atlantic Ocean. The son of U.S. Congressman, Charles A. Lindbergh, Sr., Charles attended the University of Wisconsin for three semesters, 1918-1920; studied aviation at Lincoln, Nebraska; made his first solo flight at Americus, Georgia, April 1923; and for a short time earned his living by barnstorming, performing daring exhibitions of aviation and giving passengers short rides.

In March 1924, he became a flying cadet in the United States Air Service Reserve, having been trained at Brooks and Kelly Air Fields, near San Antonio, Texas. He was hired as a test pilot by a St. Louis firm and on April 15, 1926, began flying a mail route to Chicago. Early in 1927, Lindbergh entered the contest to fly the first non-stop flight between New York City and Paris, which had a $25,000 prize, offered by hotel owner Raymond B. Orteig.

On May 10, 1927, Charles Lindbergh flew from San Diego to St. Louis, and then to New York, setting a coast-to-coast record. On May 20, 1927, 7:52am, he departed from Roosevelt Field, Long Island in his silver monoplane named The Spirit of St. Louis, and landed 33.5 hours later at Le Bourget Field, Paris. At the age of 25 he performed the greatest aviation feat in history. He was decorated by the president of France, the king of Belgium; the king of England; and was given the Distinguished Flying Cross and was made a colonel in the Air Corps Reserve by President Calvin Coolidge.

In 1929, he married Anne Spencer Morrow, the daughter of the U.S. Ambassador to Mexico. Together they blazed an air route from New York to China, 1931; studied the North Atlantic coast for commercial flying lanes and bases, 1933; and surveyed an air route from England to India, 1937. In 1932, the Lindbergh's child was kidnapped and killed, leading to them live in England for several years.

American Quotations.txt

After first opposing the U. S. involvement in World War II, Charles Lindbergh served as a civilian employee in the Pacific War zone, flying over 50 missions by the war's end. In 1954, he was named a brigadier general in the Air Force Reserve, and was awarded the Pulitzer Prize for his autobiographical work The Spirit of St. Louis. He published War Time Journals of Charles A. Lindbergh, 1970, and made many contributions in the areas of aviation, medical research and conservation.

On February 1, 1954, in an address at the Institute of Aeronautical Sciences, New York, Charles A. Lindbergh stated:

It was not the outer grandeur of the Roman but the inner simplicity of the Christian that lived through the ages.

Marshall, Peter (May 27, 1902-January 25, 1949), was the Chaplain of the U. S. Senate, 1947-49. He emigrated from Scotland, 1927; was ordained a Presbyterian minister, 1931; and became a U. S. citizen in 1938. His life story, based on the biography written by his wife, Catherine Marshall, was made into a major motion-picture by Twentieth-Century Fox, entitled A Man Called Peter, 1955. Catherine Marshall's novel, Christy, was also made into a CBS television series. U. S. Senate Chaplain Peter Marshall's son is the well-known author and speaker, Peter Marshall, whose best-selling works include: The Light and the Glory, 1977, and From Sea to Shining Sea, 1986.

On January 13, 1947, U. S. Senate Chaplain Peter Marshall admonished Americans:

The choice before us is plain: Christ or chaos, conviction or compromise, discipline or disintegration. I am rather tired of hearing about our rights and privileges as American citizens. The time is come - it is now - when we ought to hear about the duties and responsibilities of our citizenship. America's future depends upon her accepting and demonstrating God's government.

On May 22, 1947, during the Eightieth Congress, Senate Chaplain Peter Marshall offered the prayer:

God of our fathers, give unto us, thy servants, a true appreciation of our heritage, of great men and great deeds in the past, but let us not be intimidated by feelings of our own inadequacies for this troubled hour.

Remind us that the God they worshipped, and by whose help they laid the foundations of our Nation, is still able to help us uphold what they bequeathed and give it meaning...

On July 3, 1947, Peter Marshall opened the Eightieth Congress with the prayer:

God of our Fathers, whose Almighty hand hath made and preserved our Nation, grant that our people may understand what it is they celebrate tomorrow.

May they remember how bitterly our freedom was won, the down payment that was made for it, the installments that have been made since this Republic was born, and the price that must be paid for our liberty.

American Quotations.txt

May freedom be seen not as the right to do as we please but as the opportunity to please to do what is right.

May it be ever understood that our liberty is under God and can be found nowhere else.

May our faith be something that is not merely stamped upon our coins, but expressed in our lives.

Let us, as a nation, be not afraid of standing alone for the rights of men, since we were born that way, as the only nation on earth that came into being "for the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith."

We know that we shall be true to the Pilgrim dream when we are true to the God they worshiped.

To the extent that America honors Thee, wilt Thou bless America, and keep her true as Thou hast kept her free, and make her good as Thou hast made her rich. Amen.

In the U.S. Congress, June 11, 1948, Senate Chaplain Peter Marshall opened with the prayer:

Help us, our Father, to show other nations an America to imitate... the America that loves fair play, honest dealing, straight talk, real freedom and faith in God.

Cummings, William Thomas (1903-1944), was a chaplain in the U.S. Army at the beginning of World War II. He was eventually captured by the Japanese and died when his unmarked ship was sunk en route from the Philippines to Japan. In 1942, at Bataan, while serving with the American troops who were defending the Philippines, Father Cummings gave a stirring field sermon declaring:

There are no atheists in the foxholes.

Page, Robert Morris (1903-1970), was the physicist who invented pulsation radar used for the detection of aircraft. He served with the Naval Research Laboratory in Washington, D.C.; received the U.S. Navy Distinguished Civilian Service Award; the Presidential Certificate of Merit; the IRE Fellowship Harry Diamond Memorial Award; as well as the Stuart Ballantyne Medal of the Franklin Institute. Robert Morris Page held thirty-seven patents, mostly in radar. He wrote:

The authenticity of the writings of the prophets, though the men themselves are human, is established by such things as the prediction of highly significant events far in the future that could be accomplished only through a knowledge obtained from a realm which is not subject to the laws of time as we know them.

One of the great evidences is the long series of prophecies concerning Jesus the Messiah. These prophecies extend hundreds of years prior to the birth of Christ. They include a vast amount of detail concerning Christ himself, His nature and the things He would do when He came - things which to the natural world, or the scientific world, remain to this day completely inexplicable.

Muggeridge, Malcolm Thomas (March 24, 1903-November 14, 1990), was a well-known British author, columnist, philosopher and lecturer, known for his piercing wit. Educated at Selwyn College and at Cambridge, he worked as a journalist in Manchester, Moscow, Calcutta, London and Washington, and later became the editor of Punch, England's best-known humor magazine. In his 1975 work, entitled Jesus, Malcolm Muggeridge wrote:

As Man alone, Jesus could not have saved us; as God alone, he would not; Incarnate, he could and did.

In 1980, in The Human Life Review, Malcolm Muggeridge first published his article, "The Human Holocaust," stating:

The Barnard experience stayed in my mind, and as I thought about it, I realized that it amounted to a sort of parable illustrating a basic dilemma of our time, as between the sanctity of life as conceived through the Christian centuries, and the quality of life as conceived in a materialist society. Those doctors in the BBC studio rejoicing in the new possibilities in surgery that Dr. Barnard seemed to have opened up, saw human beings as bodies merely, and so capable of constant improvement, until at last perfection was achieved.

No more sick or misshapen bodies, no more disturbed or twisted minds, no more hereditary idiots or mongoloid children. Babies not up to scratch would be destroyed, before or after birth, as would also the old beyond repair. With the developing skills of modern medicine, the human race could be pruned and carefully tended until only the perfect blooms - the beauty queens, the mensa I.Q.'s, the athletes - remained. Then at last, with rigid population control to prevent the good work being ruined by excessive numbers, affliction would be ended, and maybe death itself abolished, and men become, not just like gods, but in their perfect mortality, very God.

Against this vision of life without tears in fleshly paradise, stands the Christian vision of mankind as a family whose loving father is God. Here, the symbol is not the perfected body, the pruned vine, the weeded garden, but a stricken body nailed to a cross, signifying affliction, not as the enemy of life, but as its greatest enhancement and teacher. In an army preparing for battle the unfit are indeed discarded, but in a Christian family the handicapped are particularly cherished, and give special joy to those who cherish them.

Which vision are we for? On the one hand, as the pattern of our collective existence, the broiler house or factory-farm, in which the concern is solely for the physical well-being of the livestock and the financial well-being of the enterprise; on the other, mankind as a family, all of whose members, whatever physical or mental qualities or deficiencies they may have, are equally deserving of consideration in the eyes of their Creator, and whose existence has validity, not just in itself, nor just in relation to history, but in relation to a destiny reaching beyond time and into eternity. Or, in simple terms, on the one hand, the quality of life; on the other, the sanctity of life.

The sanctity of life is, of course, a religious or transcendental concept, and has no meaning otherwise; if there is no God, life cannot have sanctity. By the same token, the quality of life is an earthly or worldly concept, and can only be expressed legalistically, and in materialistic terms; the soul does not come into it. Thus a child conceived in conditions of penury, or with a poor heredity, or against its mother's wishes, or otherwise potentially handicapped, may be considered as lacking the requisite quality of life prospects, and so should not be born. Equally, if follows, at the other end of our life span, that geriatrics unable any longer to appreciate what this world has to offer in the way of aesthetic carnal and egotistic satisfaction, in other words, by virtue of their years losing out on quality of life, should be subjected to euthanasia and mercy-killing, and discreetly murdered.

On this basis, for instance, Beethoven would scarcely have been allowed to be born; his heredity and family circumstances were atrocious, a case history of syphilis, deafness and insanity. Today, his mother's pregnancy would be terminated. Dr. Johnson, when he was born, was scrofulous, and already showed signs of the nervous disorders which plagued him all his life. He, too, under present conditions, would probably not have been allowed to survive. Indeed, a good number of the more notable contributors to the sanctity of life, like Dr. Johnson, would have failed to make the grade on the quality of life, the supreme example being the founder of the Christian religion. Imagine a young girl, unmarried and pregnant, who insists that the Holy Ghost is responsible for her pregnancy, and that its outcome, according to a vision she has been vouchsafed, would be the birth of a long-awaited Messiah. Not much quality of life potential there, I fancy, and it wouldn't take the pregnancy and family-planning pundits long to decide that our Saviour, while still at the fetus stage, should be thrown away with the hospital waste....

The origins of the holocaust lay, not in the Nazi terrorism and anti-semitism, but in the pre-Nazi Weimar Germany's acceptance of euthanasia and mercy-killing as humane and estimable. And by one of those sick jokes which haunt our human story, just when the penitential holocaust was being shown on American, and then on German and other Western European TV screens, a humane holocaust was getting under way, this time in the countries that had defeated Hitler's Third Reich, and, at the Nuremberg War Crimes Tribunal, condemned as a war crime the very propositions and practices with which the Nazi holocaust had originated, and on which the humane one was likewise based.

No one could have put the matter more cogently and authoritatively than has Dr. Leo Alexander, who worked with the Chief American Counsel at the Nuremberg Tribunal:

"Whatever proportion these crimes finally assumed, it became evident to all who investigated them they had started from small beginnings. The beginnings at first were merely a subtle shift in emphasis in the basic attitudes of the physicians. It started with the acceptance of the attitude, basic in the euthanasia movement, that there is such a thing as life not worthy to be lived. This attitude in its early stages concerned itself merely with the severely and chronically sick. Gradually, the sphere of those to be included in this category was enlarged to encompass the socially unproductive, the ideologically unwanted, the racially unwanted, and finally all non-Germans. But it is important to realize that the infinitely small wedged-in lever from which the entire trend of mind received its impetus was the attitude towards the non-rehabilitable sick."

Surely some future Gibbon surveying our times will note sardonically that it took no more than three decades to transform a war crime into an act of compassion, thereby enabling the victors in the war against Nazi-ism to adopt the very practices for which the Nazis had been solemnly condemned at Nuremberg. Then they could mount their own humane holocaust, which in its range and in the number of its victims may soon far surpass the Nazi one. Nor need we marvel that, whereas the Nazi holocaust received lavish TV and film coverage, the humane one just goes rolling along, largely unnoticed by the media.

It all began in the early twenties, in the decadent years in the post-1914-18 war Germany which have been so glorified by writers like Christopher Isherwood, but which, as I remember them at first hand, were full of sinister portent for the future. All the most horrible and disgusting aspects of the last decades of the twentieth century - the pornography, the sadism, the violence, the moral and spiritual vacuum - were already in evidence there.

In this sick environment, the notion of mercy-killing was put forward in 1920 in a book entitled The Release of the Destruction of Life Devoid of Value by Alfred Hoche, a reputable psychiatrist, and Karl Binding, a jurist. The authors advocated killing off "absolutely worthless human beings," pointing out that the money spent of spent on keeping them alive thus saved could be better used to better purpose - for instance, on helping a young married couple to set up house. Frederick Wertham, in his scholarly and deeply disturbing book, A Sign For Cain, says that the Hoche-Binding book influenced, or at least crystalized, the thinking of a whole generation.

From these beginnings, a program of mercy-killing developed which was initiated, directed and supported by doctors and psychiatrists, some of them of considerable eminence - all this when the Nazi movement was still at an embryonic stage, and Hitler had barely been heard of. Initially, the holocaust was aimed, not against Jews or Slavs, but against handicapped Aryan Germans, and was justified, not by racial theories, but by Hegelian utilitarianism, whereby what is useful is per se good, without any consideration being given to Judeo-Christian values, or, indeed to any concept whatsoever of Good and Evil. Subsequently, of course, the numbers of the killed rose to astronomical figures, and the medical basis for their slaughter grew ever flimsier; but it should never be forgotten that it was the euthanasia program first organized under the Weimar Republic by the medical profession, which led to and merged into the genocide program of 1941-45. "Technical experience gained first with killing psychiatric patients," Wertham writes, "was utilized later for the destruction of millions. The psychiatric murders came first."

Can this sort of thing happen in countries like Canada and England and the United States? In my opinion, yes; in fact, it is already happening. Abortion on demand has come to be part of our way of life; in the world as a whole there are estimated to have been last year something in the neighborhood of fifty million abortions - an appalling figure, which, however, with media help, did not loom very large, or throw any kind of shadow over 1979 as the Year of the Child....

Euthanasia, it is true, has not yet been legalized except in some American states, but notoriously it is being practiced on an ever-increasing scale. Already among old people there is reluctance to go into government institutions for fear of being done away with. As for governments - hard pressed financially as they all now are...will they not look ever more longingly at the possibility of making substantial savings by the simple expedient of mercy-killing off the inmates of institutions for the incurably sick, the senile old, the mentally deranged and other such? With abortions and family-planning ensuring a zero population growth rate, and euthanasia disposing of useless mouths among the debilitated old, besides mopping up intervening freaks, the pursuit of happiness should be assured of at any rate financial viability.

In Christian terms, of course, all this is quite indefensible. Our Lord healed the sick, raised Lazarus from the dead, gave back sanity to the deranged, but never did He practice or envisage killing as part of the mercy that held possession of His heart. His true followers cannot but follow His guidance here. For instance, Mother Teresa, who, in Calcutta, goes to great trouble to have brought into her Home for Dying Derelicts, castaways left to die in the streets. They may survive for no more than a quarter of an hour, but in that quarter of an hour, instead of feeling themselves rejected and abandoned, they meet with Christian love and care. From a purely humanitarian point of view, the effort involved in this ministry of love could be put to some more useful purpose, and the derelicts left to die in the streets, or even helped to die there by being given requisite injection. Such calculations do not come into Mother Teresa's way of looking at things; her love and compassion reach out to the afflicted without any other consideration than their immediate need, just as our Lord does when He tells us to feed the hungry, shelter the homeless, clothe the naked. She gives all she has to give at once, and then finds she has more to give. As between Mother Teresa's holocaust of love and the humane holocaust, I am for hers.

There is an episode in my own life which, though it happened long ago, provides, as I consider, a powerful elucidation of the whole issue of euthanasia - a study, as it were, in mercy-living in contradistinction to mercy-killing. Some forty years ago, shortly before the outbreak of the 1939-45 war, the person whom I have most loved in this world, my wife Kitty, was desperately ill, and, as I was informed by the doctor attending her, had only an outside chance of surviving. The medical details are unimportant; probably today, with the great advances that have taken place in curative medicine, her state would not be so serious. But as the situation presented itself then, she was hovering between life and death, though, needless to say, there was no voice, as there might well be nowadays, to suggest that it might be better to let her go.

The doctor explained that an emergency operation was essential, and, in honesty, felt bound to tell me that it would be something of a gamble. Her blood, it appeared, was so thin as a result of a long spell of jaundice that before he operated a blood-transfusion was desperately needed - this was before the days of plasma. As he said this, an incredible happiness amounting to ecstasy surged up inside me. If I could be the donor! My blood-count was taken, and found to be suitable; the necessary gear was brought in, very primitive by contemporary standards - just a glass tube one end of which was inserted in her arm and the other end in mine, with a pump in the middle drawing out my blood and sending it into her. I could watch the flow, shouting out absurdly to the doctor: "Don't stint yourself, take all you want!" and noting delightedly the immediate effect in bringing back life into her face that before had seemed grey and lifeless. It was the turning point; from that moment she began to mend. At no point in our long relationship has there been a more ecstatic moment than when I thus saw my life-blood pouring into hers to revivify it. We were one, blood to blood, as no other kind of union could make us.

To give life - this was what love was for; to give it in all circumstances and eventualities, whether God creating the universe, or a male and female creating another human being; whereas to destroy life, be it in a fertilized ovum one second after conception, or in some octogenarian or sufferer from a fatal illness, was the denial of life and so the antithesis of love. In life-denying terms, as we have seen, compassion easily becomes a holocaust; garden suburbs and gulags derive from the same quest for quality of life, and the surgeon's knife can equally be used to sustain and extinguish life.

Dostoevski makes the same point: "Love toward men, but love without belief in God, very naturally leads to the greatest coercion over men, and turns their lives completely into hell on earth." We should never forget that if ever there was a killing without mercy, a death without dignity, it was on Golgotha. Yet from that killing, what a pouring out of mercy through the subsequent centuries! From that death, what a stupendous enhancement of human dignity!

Arkansas Supreme Court (cited in 1905) by Supreme Court Justice David Josiah Brewer in his lecture, entitled "The United States a Christian Nation," rendered its opinion in the case of Shover v. The State, 10 English, 263, stating:

This system of religion (Christianity) is recognized as constituting a part and parcel of the common law.

New York Supreme Court (cited in 1905) by Supreme Court Justice David Josiah Brewer in his lecture, entitled "The United States a Christian Nation," rendered its opinion in the case of Lindenmuller v. The People, 33 Barbour, 561, stating:

Christianity...is in fact, and ever has been, the religion of the people. This fact is everywhere prominent in all our civil and political history, and has been, from the first, recognized and acted upon by the people, as well as by constitutional conventions, by legislatures and by courts of justice.

Denver Post (January 20, 1905), reported the revealing article:

Remarkable Outburst of Gospel Sentiment... Noonday Meetings Draw Congregations Unprecedented in Numbers.

For two hours at midday all Denver was held in a spell.... The marts of trade were deserted between noon and two o'clock this afternoon, and all worldly affairs were forgotten, and the entire city was given over to meditation of higher things. The Spirit of the Almighty pervaded every nook.

Going to and coming from the great meetings, the thousands of men and women radiated this Spirit which filled them, and the clear Colorado sunshine was made brighter by the reflected glow of the light of God shining from happy faces.

Seldom has such a remarkable sight been witnessed - an entire great city, in the middle of a busy weekday, bowing before the throne of heaven and asking and receiving the blessings of the King of the Universe.

Malik, Charles Habib (1906-1967), was the Ambassador to the United Nations from Lebanon. He was a member of the U.N. Security Council, 1953-54, and President of the 13th Session of the United Nations General Assembly in 1959. The Honorable Charles Habib Malik, in his Farewell speech upon his retirement, stated in 1958:

The good (in the United States) would never have come into being without the blessing and power of Jesus Christ... Whoever tries to conceive the American word without taking full account of the suffering and love and salvation of Christ is only dreaming.

I know how embarrassing this matter is to politicians, bureaucrats, businessmen and cynics; but, whatever these honored men think, the irrefutable truth is that the soul of America is at its best and highest, Christian.

In an address before the Washington Federation of Churches, Dr. Charles Malik expressed:

The United States is new to the world scene. It suddenly finds itself able too wield unprecedented power. It is natural, therefore, for some people who do not fully know you to be afraid of you: they feel you are not sufficiently seasoned in the exercise of power.

They do not know that there are in the classical American character wonderful reserves of humanity, humility and humor, and that in the fundamental accent upon the dignity of the individual and his worth you have a real salvation from the possible abuse of power....

The world rightly expects the revelation of what America ultimately really believes in. Nothing is more needful today than the adequate articulation of this message.... It requires the greatest possible sense of responsibility to truth, to God and to history....

Then the weight of America will be informed and sustained, not only with politics and power, but with truth, with vision, and with holiness.

Dr. Charles Malik stated:

If I were asked to choose between the dialectical materialism of the Soviet and the practiced commercialism of the West, I'm not sure I would choose the Western brand.... We have lost the sense of the eternal battle raging between Christ and the devil."

Brennan, William Joseph, Jr. (b. April 25, 1906), was a U.S. Supreme Court Justice, 1956-90, appointed by President Dwight Eisenhower. He served on the New Jersey Superior Court, 1949-50; the appellate division, 1950-52; and Supreme Court of New Jersey, 1952-56. In the 1963 case of Abington School District v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 225 (1963), Justice Brennan concurred with the majority opinion, stating:

The holding of the Court today plainly does not foreclose teaching about the Holy Scriptures or about the differences between religious sects in classes in literature or history. Indeed, whether or not the Bible is involved, it would be impossible to teach meaningfully many subjects in the social sciences or the humanities without some mention of religion....

Any attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God or references to the Bible in the classroom would be fraught with dangers.

Burger, Warren Earl (September 17, 1907-June 25, 1995), was Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, 1969-86. He had served on the faculty of William Mitchell College of Law, St. Paul, 1931-48; assistant U.S. Attorney General, 1953-56; and judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals, District of Columbia, 1956-69. He delivered the court's opinion in the case of Marsh v. Chambers, 675 F. 2d 228, 233 (8th Cir. 1982); review allowed, 463 U.S. 783 (1982), regarding chaplains opening Legislative sessions with prayer:

The men who wrote the First Amendment religion clause did not view paid legislative chaplains and opening prayers as a violation of that amendment... the practice of opening sessions with prayer has continued without interruption ever since that early session of Congress.

It can hardly be thought that in the same week the members of the first Congress voted to appoint and pay a chaplain for each House and also voted to approved the draft of the First Amendment... (that) they intended to forbid what they had just declared acceptable.
Page 1026

[Prayer and Chaplains] are deeply embedded in the history and tradition of this country.

The legislature by majority vote invites a clergyman to give a prayer, neither the inviting nor the giving nor the hearing of the prayer is making a law. On this basis alone... the sayings of prayers, per se, in the legislative halls at the opening session is not prohibited by the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

The case of Bogen v. Doty... involved a county board's practice of opening each of its public meetings with a prayer offered by a local member of the clergy... This Court upheld that practice, finding that it advanced a clearly secular purpose of establishing a solemn atmosphere and serious tone for the board meetings... Establishing solemnity is the primary effect of all invocations at gatherings of persons with differing views on religion.

In a 1985 opinion of Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 673 (1985), Chief Justice Warren Burger upheld that the city of Pawtucket, R.I., did not violate the Constitution by displaying a Nativity scene. Noting that presidential orders and proclamations from Congress have designated Christmas as a national holiday in religious terms since 1789, he wrote:

The city of Pawtucket, R.I., annually erects a Christmas display in a park... The creche display is sponsored by the city to celebrate the Holiday recognized by Congress and national tradition and to depict the origins of that Holiday; these are legitimate secular purposes... The creche... is no more an advancement or endorsement of religion than the congressional and executive recognition of the origins of Christmas...

It would be ironic if... the creche in the display, as part of a celebration of an event acknowledged in the Western World for 20 centuries, and in this country by the people, the Executive Branch, Congress, and the courts for 2 centuries, would so 'taint' the exhibition as to render it violative of the Establishment Clause. To forbid the use of this one passive symbol... would be an overreaction contrary to this Nation's history.

There is an unbroken history of official acknowledgement by all three branches of government of the role of religion in American life... The Constitution does not require a complete separation of church and state. It affirmatively mandates accommodation, not merely tolerance, of all religions and forbids hostility towards any...

Anything less would require the "callous indifference" we have said was never intended by the Establishment Clause. Indeed, we have observed, such hostility would bring us into a "war with our national tradition as embodied in the First Amendment's guaranty of the free exercise of religion."

On May 23, 1971, in the Los Angeles Herald-Examiner, Chief Justice Warren Burger stated;

I am developing a deep conviction as to the necessity for civility if we are to keep the jungle from closing in on us and taking over all that the hand and brain of man has created in thousands of years... Without civility no private discussion, no public debate, no legislative process, no political campaign, no trial of any case, can serve its purpose or achieve its objective. When men shout and shriek or call names, we witness the end of rational thought process if not the beginning of blows and combat. I hardly dare take the risk of adding that this may also be relevant to the news media.

Oklahoma, State of (November 16, 1907), was the 46th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Oklahoma, adopted 1907, stated:

Preamble. Invoking the guidance of Almighty God, in order to secure and perpetuate the blessings of liberty... establish this Constitution.

Forgy, Howell M. (1908-1983), was the chaplain on a cruiser during the time of the Japanese attack on Pearl Harbor. He encouraged the men as they were handling the ammunition on December 7, 1941:

Praise the Lord and pass the ammunition.

Johnson, Lyndon Baines (August 27, 1908-January 22, 1973), was the 36th President of the United States, 1963-69; Vice-President under John F. Kennedy, 1961-63, assuming the Presidency upon Kennedy's assassination; initiated the Great Society program of social legislation, passed the Civil Rights Act, escalated U.S. involvement in the Vietnam War, 1964; U.S. Senator, 1949-61, becoming Senate Majority Leader in 1954; Lieutenant Commander, Commander in U.S. Naval Reserve, active duty 1941-45; sent to Pacific as President Franklin D. Roosevelt's Representative, 1942, awarded Silver Star Medal; U.S. Representative, 1937-49; Texas Director of the National Youth Administration, a New Deal program of F.D.R., 1935; married Claudia Alta "Lady Bird" Taylor, 1934; secretary for U.S. Representative Richard Kleberg, 1932; attended Georgetown University Law School; taught school in Houston, Texas, 1930; and graduated from Southwest Texas State Teachers College, 1927.

On Friday, November 22, 1963, at approximately 2:40 p.m. Central Standard Time, just a few hours after John F. Kennedy was shot, Judge Sarah Hughes administered the oath of office to Lyndon Baines Johnson in the stateroom aboard the Air Force One, parked at the Love Field Airport in Dallas, Texas, with his hand upon a Catholic Missal, as a Bible could not be located:

I do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States and will, to the best of my ability, preserve, protect, and defend the Constitution of the United States, so help me God.

On Friday, November 22, 1963, at 6 p.m. Eastern Standard Time, as he disembarked the Air Force One at Andrews Air Force Base outside Washington D.C., President Lyndon B. Johnson stated to the press:

This is a sad time for all people. We have suffered a loss that cannot be weighed. For me, it is a deep personal tragedy. I know that the world shares the sorrow that Mrs. Kennedy and her family bear. I will do my best. That is all I can do. I ask for your help - and God's.

On November 23, 1963, former President Dwight D. Eisenhower had driven from Gettysburg to Washington D.C., to meet with President Lyndon B. Johnson and deliver a confidential memorandum:

Confidential Notes for the President....

I am bold enough to suggest that you call a Joint Session of the Congress to make a speech of not over ten or twelve minutes. I think it might cover the following points:

A. Point out first that you have come to this office unexpectedly and you accept the decision of the Almighty, who in His inscrutable wisdom has now placed you in the position of highest responsibility of this nation...

On Wednesday, November 27, 1963, in his first formal address before a joint session of Congress, with members of the Supreme Court and of the Cabinet in attendance, President Lyndon Johnson stated:

John Kennedy's death commands what his life conveyed - that America must move forward. The time has come for Americans of all races and creeds and political beliefs to understand and to respect one another.... Let us here highly resolve that John Fitzgerald Kennedy did not live - or die - in vain. And on this Thanksgiving Eve, as we gather together to ask the Lord's blessings and give Him our thanks, let us unite in those familiar and cherished words:

America, America,
God shed His grace on thee,
And crown they good
With brotherhood
From sea to shining sea.

On May 14, 1964, prior to his 1964 Presidential Campaign, President Lyndon B. Johnson received a note from his wife, Lady Bird Johnson, encouraging him to run for the office:

If you win, let's do the best we can for 3 years and 3 or 4 months - and then, the Lord letting us live that long, announce in February or March of 1968 that you are not a candidate for re-election.

On August 25, 1964, at about 3 o'clock in the afternoon, President Lyndon B. Johnson wrote his thoughts concerning campaigning for President, while in the Oval Office:

In the time given me, I did my best. On that fateful day last year I accepted the responsibilities of the Presidency, asking God's guidance and the help of all of the people. For nine months I've carried on as effectively as I could.

On Wednesday, January 20, 1965, in his Inaugural Address, President Lyndon B. Johnson stated:

My fellow countrymen, on this occasion, the oath I have taken before you and God is not mine alone, but ours together. We are one nation and one people. Our fate as a nation and our future as a people rest not upon one citizen, but upon all citizens....

Our destiny in the midst of change will rest on the unchanged character of our people, and on their faith.... We have discovered that every child who learns, every man who finds work, every sick body that is made whole - like a candle added to an altar - brightens the hope of all the faithful....

Let us join reason to faith and action to experience, to transform our unity of interest into a unity of purpose....

We have no promise from God that our greatness will endure. We have been allowed by Him to seek greatness with the sweat of our hands and the strength of our spirit....

In each generation - with toil and tears - we have had to earn our heritage again. If we fail now, we shall have forgotten in abundance what we learned in hardship: that democracy rests on faith, that freedom asks more than it gives, and that the judgement of God is harshest on those who are most favored....

If we succeed, it will not be because of what we have, but it will be because of what we believe. For we are a nation of believers....

Our enemies have always made the same mistake. In my lifetime - in depression and in war - they have awaited our defeat. Each time, from the secret places of the American heart, came forth the faith they could not see or that they could not even imagine. It brought us victory. And it will again....

For myself, I ask only, in the words of an ancient leader: "Give me now wisdom and knowledge, that I may go out and come in before this people: for who can judge this, Thy people, that is so great?" (I Kings 3: 7-9)

In commenting on his desire for the Water Quality Act, which passed in Congress in 1965, President Lyndon B. Johnson stated:

I wanted, as I once expressed it, to leave to future generations "a glimpse of the world as God really made it, not as it looked when we got through with it."

In explaining his support for the Model Cities Act, passed by Congress in September of 1966, President Lyndon B. Johnson stated:

Every family in America deserves a decent home, whether a farmhouse or a city apartment, rented or owned, modest or splendid. What matters is that the home be a place for a family to live in health and grow in dignity. I have been criticized for such statements by people who think I raised hopes that can never be fulfilled, but I believe in the wisdom of the Bible - "Where there is no vision, the people perish." (Pr. 29: 18)

On November 2, 1966, after touring many Asian and Pacific nations, President Lyndon B. Johnson arrived in Dulles Airport where he recalled, to those waiting, a prayer offered ten days earlier while they attended Sunday service in the Cathedral Church of St. James, Townsville, northern Australia:

O God, Who has bound us together in the bundle of life, give us grace to understand how our lives depend upon the courage, the industry, the honesty, and the integrity of our fellow men; that we may be mindful of their needs and grateful for their faithfulness, and faithful in our responsibilities to them.

On Sunday, March 31, 1968, after attending church at St. Dominic's in Washington D.C., President Lyndon B. Johnson noted his feeling concerning his daughter Lynda's husband, Chuck Robb, and his daughter Luci's husband, Pat Nugent:

They were so very young, and they had such promising and happy lives ahead of them, if they were lucky. Pat already had his orders for Vietnam. In a matter of days, by his own insistence, he would be with Chuck Robb in action in Vietnam. The good Lord had blessed us with two brave sons-in-law, and no man could have been prouder of them than I. Now, for a year or more, their wives would wait and pray, as other wives across America would, for their husbands to return to them and their babies.

At 9:01 p.m., Sunday, March 31, 1968, President broadcast an address from the Oval Office:

Tonight I have ordered our aircraft and our naval vessels to make no attacks on North Vietnam, except in the area north of the demilitarized zone, where the continuing enemy build-up directly threatens allied forward positions and where the movements of their troops and supplies are clearly related to that threat....

Fifty-two months and ten days ago in a moment of tragedy and trauma, the duties of this office fell upon me. I asked then for "your help and God's" that we might continue America on its course, binding up our wounds, healing our history, moving forward in new unity to clear the American agenda and to keep the American commitment for all our people. United, we have kept that commitment, and united, we have enlarged that commitment....

With America's sons in the field far away, with America's future under challenge right here at home, with our hopes and the world's hopes for peace in the balance every day, I do not believe that I should devote an hour or a day of my time to any personal partisan causes or to any duties other than the awesome duties of this office - the Presidency of your country.

Accordingly, I shall not seek, and I will not accept, the nomination of my party for another term as your President. But let men everywhere know, however, that a strong, a confident, and a vigilant America stands ready tonight to seek an honorable peace - and stands ready tonight to defend an honored cause - whatever the price, whatever the burden, whatever the sacrifice that duty may require.

Thank you for listening. Good night and God bless all of you.

Recalling January 20, 1969, after Richard M. Nixon had been inaugurated as the 37th President of the United States, Lyndon B. Johnson noted:

I heard Richard Nixon conclude his oath of office with the words "so help me God." To me, they were welcome words.

President Lyndon B. Johnson encouraged:

Come now, let us reason together.

Wurmbbrand, Rev. Heinrich Richard (March 24, 1909-February 19, 2001), was released in 1964 after having spent 14 years in prison in Romania for his faith. A Lutheran minister, he became internationally known as a speaker and the founder of The Voice of the Martyrs. He wrote: Tortured For Christ; Underground Saints; Christ in the Communist Prison, 1968; Stronger Than Prison Walls, 1969; and My Answer to the Moscow Atheists, 1975.

Born in Bucharest, Romania, his parents died when he was young, and he spent many years adrift in society during World War I. He was educated at school in Bucharest, where he met and married Sabina Oster on October 26, 1936.

While on a vacation later in 1936, both Richard and Sabina were converted and baptized in the Christian faith, joining the church of the Anglican Mission in Bucharest. Richard became a minister and pastored the Norwegian Lutheran Mission in Bucharest. He and his wife were arrested several times by the Nazi government, and he began his underground ministry evangelizing Russian soldiers who were prisoners of war.

After August of 1944, he continued this ministry with the Russian occupation forces. He and Sabina were active in working with the underground, unregistered church in Romania during World War II and throughout the Communist regime.

Richard was kidnapped by Romanian authorities in February 1948 following the Congress of Cults, and imprisoned in the underground Central Interior Ministry Building prison area in the center of Bucharest. While there he was subjected to brainwashing attempts, physical and mental torture, and threats to his family.

In 1950, his wife Sabina was imprisoned as well, forced to serve as a laborer on the Danube Canal project. She was released in 1953. Following her release, the Romanian authorities informed her that Richard had died in prison. Richard was discovered alive in prison by a doctor masquerading as a Communist Party member. He was released in 1956 and served as church pastor in Orsova.

During this time he once again worked with the underground church. He was rearrested in 1959 and was sentenced to 25 years for preaching Scriptures that were contrary to the Communist doctrine. Due to increased political pressure from Western countries, he was released in 1964.

In December 1965, the Norwegian Mission to the Jews and the Hebrew Christian Alliance paid $10,000 in ransom to the Communist government in order for the Wurmbrand family to leave Romania. This was more than five times the standard payment price for political prisoners. Although reluctant to leave Romania, other Romanian underground church leaders convinced him to leave and become a "Voice" for the underground church to the world.

Richard, Sabina, and their son Michael left Romania. The following May, Richard testified before the U.S. Senate Internal Security Subcommittee about his experiences in prison.

In 1966 he continued to keep his promise to the Romanian underground church to become their voice when he embarked on an international speaking tour. In October 1967 he published the first issue of "The Voice of the Martyrs" newsletter, and began to establish the international offices which would assist him in efforts to inform Christians everywhere about persecuted Christians.

By the mid-1980s his work was established in 80 restricted nations with offices in 30 countries. In 1990 Richard and Sabina returned to Romania after 25 years of exile. He retired from the day-to-day work of The Voice of the Martyrs in 1992, but remained as a member of the Board of Directors and consultant until his death. His wife Sabina died August 11, 2000.

During his ministry, Rev. Wurmbrand wrote 18 books in English, others in Romanian, which have been translated into 38 languages. His most well-known book, "Tortured for Christ," is about his prison experiences. He received numerous honors and citations for his work during his lifetime.

His contribution to the work of Christianity will continue through his legacy of missions established around the world and the vision he provided for their leadership, as documented on the Internet site: www.persecution.com. He is survived by his son Michael Wurmbrand, and 3 grandchildren.

Rev. Richard Wurmbrand gave the world's view of America in 1967:

Every freedom-loving man has two fatherlands; his own and America. Today, America is the hope of every enslaved man, because it is the last bastion of freedom in the world. Only America has the power and spiritual resources to stand as a barrier between militant Communism and the people of the world.

It is the last "dike" holding back the rampaging floodwaters of militant Communism. If it crumples, there is no other dike, no other dam; no other line of defense to fall back upon.

America is the last hope of millions of enslaved peoples. They look to it as their second fatherland. In it lies their hopes and prayers.

I have seen fellow-prisoners in Communist prisons beaten, tortured, with 50 pounds of chains on their legs - praying for America... that the dike will not crumple; that it will remain free.

Land, Edwin Herbert (May 7, 1909-March 1, 1991), was the U.S. inventor and manufacturer of the Polaroid Land Camera, which developed pictures inside the camera through a process of light polarization. He was an advisor to the U.S. guided missile system during World War II; introduced the first black and white instant Polaroid Camera, 1947; and introduced the first color instant Polaroid camera, 1963.

In 1977, when presented with a statement that the only thing that mattered was the bottom line on a balance sheet, Edwin Herbert Land replied:

The bottom line is in heaven.

Mother Teresa of Calcutta (August 27, 1910-September 5, 1997), whose given name was Agnes Gonxha Bojaxhiu, founded the Order of the Missionaries of Charity to minister to the destitute and dying in Calcutta, India, and around the globe. Born in Albania, she was awarded the Nobel Prize in 1979 for her work among the poor and outcast. She confessed:

Many people mistake our work for our vocation. Our vocation is the love of Jesus.

God hasn't called me to be successful. He's called me to be faithful.

We can do no great things, only small things with great love.

If you want to pray better, you must pray more.

I see Jesus in every human being. I say to myself, this is hungry Jesus, I must feed him. This is sick Jesus. This one has leprosy or gangrene; I must wash him and tend to him. I serve because I love Jesus.

On February 3, 1994, Mother Teresa spoke at the National Prayer Breakfast in Washington, D.C., before an audience of 3,000, including President and Mrs. Bill Clinton and Vice-President Al Gore. The frail 83-year-old Mother Teresa spoke simply, yet with a powerful directness to America, saying:

Jesus died on the Cross because that is what it took for Him to do good to us - to save us from our selfishness in sin. He gave up everything to do the Father's will - to show us that we too must be willing to give up everything to do God's will....

But I feel that the greatest destroyer of peace today is abortion, because it is a war against the child, a direct killing of the innocent child, murder by the mother herself, and if we accept that a mother can kill even her own child, how can we tell other people not to kill one another?

How do we persuade a woman not to have an abortion? As always, we must persuade her with love and we remind ourselves that love means to be willing to give until it hurts. Jesus gave even His life to love us. So the mother who is thinking of abortion, should be helped to love, that is, to give until it hurts her plans or her free time, to respect the life of her child.

The father of that child, whoever he is, must also give until it hurts. By abortion, the mother does not learn to love, but kills even her own child to solve her problems. And, by abortion, the father is told that he does not have to take any responsibility for the child he has brought into the world. The father is likely to put other women into the same trouble. So abortion just leads to more abortion.

Any country that accepts abortion is not teaching its people to love, but to use violence to get what they want. That is why the greatest destroyer of love and peace is abortion.

Many people are very, very concerned with the children of India, with the children of Africa where quite a few die of hunger, and so on. Many people are also concerned about all the violence in this great country of the United States. These concerns are very good. But often these same people are not concerned with the millions who are being killed by the deliberate decision of their own mothers....

We have sent word to the clinics, to the hospitals and police stations: "Please don't destroy the child; we will take the child." So we always have someone tell the mothers in trouble: "Come, we will take care of you, we will get a home for your child." And we have a tremendous demand from couples who cannot have a child....

Jesus said, "Anyone who receives a child in my name, receives me." By adopting a child, these couples receive Jesus but by aborting a child, a couple refuses to receive Jesus.

Please don't kill the child. I want the child. Please give me the child. I am willing to accept any child who would be aborted and to give that child to a married couple who will love the child and be loved by the child. From our children's home in Calcutta alone, we have saved over 3,000 children from abortion....

If we remember that God loves us, and that we can love others as He loves us, then America can become a sign of peace for the world. From here, a sign of care for the weakest of the weak - the unborn child - must go out to the world. If you become a burning light of justice and peace in the world, then really you will be true to what the founders of this country stood for. God bless you!

Reagan, Ronald Wilson (b. February 6, 1911), was the 40th President of the United States, 1981-89; the oldest President elected; survived assassination attempt, March 30, 1981; Governor of California, 1966-74; switched from being a liberal Democrat to the Republican Party, 1962; actor, making over 50 movies in his career; president of the Screen Actor's Guild, 1959-60; married Nancy Davis, 1952, children Patti and Ron; president of the Screen Actor's Guild, 1947-52; Captain in the U.S. Army Air Corp during World War II; first marriage to Jane Wyman, children Maureen and Michael; announcer for radio station in Davenport, Iowa, and WHO Radio, Des Moines, Iowa; and graduated from Eureka College, Illinois, 1932.

On March 30, 1961, at the annual meeting of the Phoenix Chamber of Commerce, Ronald Reagan stated:

All other revolutions simply exchanged one set of rulers for another. Here for the first time the Founding Fathers - that little band of men so advanced beyond their time that the world has never seen their like since - evolved a government based on the idea that you and I have the God-given right and ability within ourselves to determine our own destiny.

On October 27, 1964, in a nationally televised address on behalf of Senator Barry Goldwater, Ronald Reagan stated:

During the hectic split-second timing of a campaign... this is the man who said to his 19-year-old son, "There's no foundation like the rock of honesty and fairness, and when you begin to build your life upon that rock, with the cement of the faith in God that you have, then you have a real start." This is not a man who could carelessly send other people's sons to war....
Page 1035

When Nikita Khrushchev has told his people he knows what our answer will be. He has told them that we are retreating under the pressure of the Cold War, and someday when the time comes to deliver the ultimatum, our surrender will be voluntary because by that time we will have been weakened from within spiritually, morally, and economically....

You and I know and do not believe that life is so dear and peace so sweet as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery. If nothing in life is worth dying for, when did this begin - just in the face of this enemy? Or should Moses have told the children of Israel to live in slavery under the pharaohs? Should Christ have refused the cross? Should the patriots at Concord Bridge have thrown down their guns and refused to fire the shot heard 'round the world? The martyrs of history were not fools, and our honored dead who gave their lives to stop the advance of the Nazis didn't die in vain.

Where, then, is the road to peace? Well, it's a simple answer after all. You and I have the courage to say to our enemies, "There is a price we not pay." There is a point beyond which they must not advance....

In January of 1967, the same week of his Inauguration as Governor of California, Ronald Reagan stated at a Prayer Breakfast:

Belief in the dependence on God is essential to our state and nation. This will be an integral part of our state as long as I have anything to do with it.

In 1972, at the Governor's Prayer Breakfast, Governor Reagan stated:

I think our nation and the world need a spiritual revival as it has never been needed before... a simple answer... a profound and complete solution to all the trouble we face.

In 1973, Governor Ronald Reagan stated:

The classical Liberal, during the Revolutionary time, was a man who wanted less power for the king and more power for the people. He wanted people to have more say in the running of their lives and he wanted protection for the God-given rights of the people. He did not believe those rights were dispensations granted by the king to the people, he believed that he was born with them. Well, that today is the Conservative.

On December 7, 1973, at the Convention of the Southern GOP, Atlanta, Georgia, Governor Ronald Reagan stated:

There is a hunger in this country today - a hunger for spiritual guidance.

In 1973, as Governor of California, Ronald Reagan stated:

With freedom goes responsibility. Sir Winston Churchill once said you can have 10,000 regulations and still not have respect for the law. We might start with the Ten Commandments. If we lived by the Golden Rule, there would be no need for other laws.

In introducing evangelist Billy Graham to a rally in southern California, Governor Ronald Reagan commented:

There is no need in our land today greater than the need to rediscover our spiritual heritage.

Why is a representative of government here? To welcome with humble pride a man whose mission in life has been to remind us that in all our seeking, in all our confusion, the answer to each problem is to be found in the simple words of Jesus of Nazareth, who urged us to love one another.

In a speech as Governor of California, Ronald Reagan stated:

I believe this nation hungers for a spiritual revival; hungers to once again see honor placed above political expediency; to see government once again the protector of our liberties, not the distributor of gifts and privileges.

Government should uphold, not undermine those institutions which are custodians of the very values upon which civilization is founded - religion, education, and above all, the family.

In 1974, as Governor of California, Ronald Reagan stated:

If a bureaucrat had been writing the Ten Commandments, a simple rock slab would not have been near enough room. Those simple rules would have read: "Thou Shalt Not, unless you feel strongly to the contrary, or for the following stated exceptions, see paragraphs 1-10 subsection #A."

The teaching of respect for the law cannot be left to education alone. It is a responsibility we all must assume, in our daily lives, in every school, in our churches, throughout our social structure.

On June 1, 1976, in a television interview with Reverend Adrian Rogers, then president of the Southern Baptist Convention and George Otis, director of High Adventure Ministries, Ronald Reagan spoke:

I can't remember a time in my life when I didn't call upon God, and hopefully thank Him as often as I called upon Him. And, yes, in my own experience there came a time when there developed a new relationship with God and it grew out of a need. So, yes, I have had an experience that could be described as "born again."

When asked by a reporter, "Governor, whom are you patterning your life after?" Ronald Reagan answered:

American Quotations.txt

Oh, that's very easy: The Man from Galilee.

The March 6, 1980, issue of The Los Angeles Times quoted Ronald Reagan as he spoke on the question of Gay Rights:

A fellow asked me if I believe that they should have the same civil rights, and I said I think they do, and should have, but that my criticism of the gay rights movement - it is asking for a recognition and acceptance of an alternative life style which I do not believe society can condone, nor can I.

You could find that in the Bible. It says that in the eyes of the Lord, this is an abomination.

During the 1980 presidential debates Ronald Reagan spoke:

I feel a great hunger in America for a spiritual revival, for a belief that a law must be based on a higher law, for a return to traditions and values that we once had.

In 1980, Ronald Reagan admonished:

The time has come to turn to God and reassert our trust in Him for the healing of America... Our country is in need of and ready for a spiritual renewal.

On Tuesday, January 20, 1981, Ronald Reagan chose as the Scripture for his Presidential Inauguration:

If my people, who are called by my name, will humble themselves and pray and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven, will forgive their sin, and heal their land. (II Chronicles 7:14)

On Tuesday, January 20, 1981, in his Inaugural Address, President Reagan stated:

Your dreams, your hopes, your goals are going to be the dreams, the hopes, and the goals of this administration, so help me God....

I am told that tens of thousands of prayer meetings are being held on this day, and for that I am deeply grateful. We are a nation under God, and I believe God intended for us to be free. It would be fitting and good, I think, if on each Inauguration Day in future years it should be declared a day of prayer....

The crisis we are facing today... does require, however, our best effort, and our willingness to believe in ourselves, and to believe in our capacity to perform great deeds; to believe that together, with God's help, we can and will resolve the problems which now confront us. And after all, why shouldn't we believe that? We are Americans. God bless you, and thank you.

On February 5, 1981, at the annual National Prayer Breakfast, President Ronald Reagan stated:

An unknown author wrote of a dream and in the dream was walking down the beach beside the Lord. As they walked, above him in the sky was reflected each stage and experience of his life. Reaching the end of the beach, and of his life, he turned back, looked down the beach, and saw the two sets of footprints in the sand.... He looked again and realized that every once in a while there was one set of footprints. And each time there was only one set of footprints, it was when the experience reflected in the sky was one of despair, of desolation, of great trial or grief in his life....
Page 1038

He turned to the Lord and said, "You said that if I would walk with you, you would always be beside me and take my hand. Why did you desert me? Why are you not there in my times of greatest need?" And the Lord said, "My child, I did not leave you. Where you see only one set of footprints, it was there that I carried you."...

Abraham Lincoln once said, "I would be the most foolish person on this footstool earth if I believed for one moment that I could perform the duties assigned to me without the help of one who is wiser than all." I know that in the days to come and the years ahead there are going to be many times when there will only be one set of footprints in my life. If I did not believe that, I could not face the days ahead.

On March 19, 1981, in a Proclamation of a National Day of Prayer, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Our Nation's motto - "In God We Trust" - was not chosen lightly. It reflects a basic recognition that there is a divine authority in the universe to which this nation owes homage.

Throughout our history, Americans have put their faith in God, and no one can doubt that we have been blessed for it. The earliest settlers of this land came in search of religious freedom. Landing on a desolate shoreline, they established a spiritual foundation that has served us ever since.

It was the hard work of our people, the freedom they enjoyed and their faith in God that built this country and made it the envy of the world. In all of our great cities and towns evidence of the faith of our people is found: Houses of worship of every denomination are among the oldest structures.

While never willing to bow to a tyrant, our forefathers were always willing to get to their knees before God. When catastrophe threatened, they turned to God for deliverance. When the harvest was bountiful, the first thought was thanksgiving to God.

Prayer is today as powerful a force in our nation as it has ever been. We as a nation should never forget this source of strength. And while recognizing that the freedom to choose a Godly path is the essence of liberty, as a nation we cannot but hope that more of our citizens would, through prayer, come into a closer relationship with their Maker.

Recognizing our great heritage, the Congress, by Joint Resolution approved April 17, 1952, has called upon the president to set aside a suitable day each year as a National Day of Prayer.

Now, therefore, I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Thursday,

May 7, 1981, National Day of Prayer. On that day I ask all who believe to join me in giving thanks to Almighty God for the blessings He has bestowed on this land and the protection He affords us as a people. Let us as a nation join together before God, fully aware of the trials that lie ahead and the need, yes, the necessity, for divine guidance. With unshakable faith in God and the liberty which is heritage, we as a free nation will surely survive and prosper.

On March 20, 1981, at the annual Conservative Political Action Conference Dinner, President Ronald Reagan stated:

This is the task before us: To reassert our commitment as a nation to a law higher than our own, to renew our spiritual strength.

On May 17, 1981, at the Commencement Exercise of the University of Notre Dame, President Ronald Reagan stated:

It is time for the world to know our intellectual and spiritual values are rooted in the source of all strength, a belief in a Supreme Being, and a law higher than our own.

On May 20, 1981, in a Proclamation of Father's Day, President Ronald Reagan stated:

"Train up a child in the way he should go: and when he is old, he will not depart from it," Solomon tells us. Clearly, the future is in the care of our parents. Such is the responsibility, promise, and hope of fatherhood. Such is the gift that our fathers give us.

On September 28, 1981, at the meeting of the International Association of the Chiefs of Police, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Only our deep moral values and our strong social institutions can hold back the jungle and restrain the darker impulses of human nature.

On January 19, 1982, in a news conference, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I have been one who believes that abortion is the taking of a human life....

The fact that they could not resolve the issue of when life begins was a finding in and of itself. If we don't know, then shouldn't we morally opt on the side of life? If you came upon an immobile body and you yourself could not determine whether it was dead or alive, I think that you would decide to consider it alive until somebody could prove it was dead. You wouldn't get a shovel and start covering it up. And I think we should do the same thing with regard to abortion.

On February 4, 1982, at the annual National Prayer Breakfast, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Last year, you all helped me begin celebrating the 31st anniversary of my 39th birthday. And I must say that all of those pile up, and increase of numbers, don't bother me at all, because I recall that Moses was 80 when God commissioned him for public service, and he lived to be 120. And Abraham was 100 and his wife, Sarah, 90 when they did something truly amazing - and he lived to be 175. Just imagine if he had put $2,000 a year into his IRA account....

I recall talking to one senator who came into my office. We both deeply believed what it was we were espousing, but we were on opposite sides. And when we finished talking, as he rose he said, "I'm going out of here and do some praying." And I said, "Well, if you get a busy signal, it's me there ahead of you."...

Well, God is with us. We need only believe. The psalmist says, "Weeping may endure for a night, but joy cometh in the morning." Speaking for Nancy and myself, we thank you for all your prayers on our behalf. And it is true that you can sense and feel that power....

I've always believed that we were, each of us, put here for a reason, that there is a plan, somehow a divine plan for all of us. I know now that whatever days are left to me belong to Him....

I also believe this blessed land was set apart in a very special way, a country created by men and women who came here not in search of gold, but in search of God. They would be free people, living under the law with faith in their Maker and their future.

Sometimes it seems we've strayed from that noble beginning, from our conviction that standards of right and wrong do exist and must be lived up to. God, the source of our knowledge, has been expelled from the classroom. He gives us His greatest blessing - life - and yet many would condone the taking of innocent life. We expect Him to protect us in a crisis, but turn away from Him too often to our day-to-day living. I wonder if He isn't waiting for us to wake up....

We have God's promise that what we give will be given back many times over, so let us go forth from here and rekindle the fire of our faith. Let our wisdom be vindicated by our deeds. We are told in II Timothy that when our work is done, we can say, "We have fought the good fight. We have finished the race. We have kept the faith."...

On February 9, 1982, at the annual convention of the National Religious Broadcasters, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I've always believed that we were put here for a reason, that there is a path somehow, a divine plan for all of us and for each one of us. And I've also always believed that America was set apart in a special way, that it was put here between the oceans to be found by a certain kind of people, based on a quality that these people had in that they came from every corner of the world. And a country then was created by men and women who came not for gold but mainly in search of God. They would be free people, living under the law, with faith in their Maker and in their future.

It's been written that the most sublime figure in American history was George Washington on his knees in the snow at Valley Forge. He personified a people who knew that it was not enough to depend on their own courage and goodness, that they must seek help from God - their Father and Preserver. Where did we begin to lose sight of that noble beginning, of our convictions that standards of right and wrong do exist and must be lived up to? Do we really think that we can have it both ways, that God will protect us in a time of crisis even as we turn away from Him in our day-to-day life?...

Education doesn't begin with Washington officials or stated officials or local officials. It begins with the family, where it is the right and the responsibility of every parent. And that responsibility, I think, includes teaching children respect for skin color that is different from their own; religious beliefs that are different from their own; religious beliefs that are different from their own. It includes conveying the message to the young as well as to the old that racial discrimination and religious bigotry have no place in the free society....

The Book of St. John tells us, "For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life." We have God's promise that what we give will be given back many times over. And we also have His promise that we could take to heart with regard to our country - "That if my people who are called by my name humble themselves and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and will forgive their sins and heal their land."...

To preserve our blessed land, we must look to God... Rebuilding America begins with restoring family strength and preserving family values.

On February 12, 1982, in a Proclamation of a National Day of Prayer, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Through the storms of Revolution, Civil War, and the great World Wars, as well as during the times of disillusionment and disarray, the nation has turned to God in prayer for deliverance. We thank Him for answering our call, for, surely, He has. As a nation, we have been richly blessed with His love and generosity.

On February 26, 1982, at the annual Conservative Political Action Conference Dinner, President Ronald Reagan stated:

We must with calmness and resolve help the vast majority of our fellow Americans understand that the more than one and one-half million abortions performed in America in 1980 amount to a great moral evil, and assault on the sacredness of human life....

Let us go forward, determined to serve selflessly a vision of man with God, government for people, and humanity at peace.

On March 8, 1982, at the annual Washington Policy Meeting of the National Association of Manufacturers, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The Lord's Prayer contains 57 words. Lincoln's Gettysburg Address has 266 words. The Ten Commandments are presented in just 297 words, and the Declaration of Independence has only 300 words. And...an Agriculture Department order setting the price of cabbage has 26,911 words.

American Quotations.txt

On March 15, 1982, to the Alabama State Legislature, President Ronald Reagan stated:

To those who cite the First Amendment as reason for excluding God from more and more of our institutions and every-day life, may I just say: The First Amendment of the Constitution was not written to protect the people of this country from religious values; it was written to protect religious values from government tyranny.

On March 23, 1982, to the National Conference of Christians and Jews, New York, President Ronald Reagan stated:

A strong, credible America is also an indispensable incentive for a peaceful resolution of differences between Israel and her neighbors. America has never flinched from its commitment to the State of Israel - a commitment which remains unshakable.

On April 13, 1982, at a luncheon for National Religious Leaders regarding Private Sector Initiatives, in the White House, President Ronald Reagan stated:

We just celebrated the happiest and holiest holiday of the Christian faith, and we're in the sixth of the eight days of Passover, a reminder of our nation's Judeo-Christian tradition....

For some time now, I've been convinced that there is a great hunger on the part of our people for a spiritual revival in this land.

On April 26, 1982, to the U.S. Chamber of Commerce, President Ronald Reagan stated:

True wealth comes from the heart, from the treasure of ideas and spirit, from the investments of millions of brave people with hope for the future, trust in their fellow men, and faith in God.

On May 1, 1982, at the Knoxville International Energy Exposition, World's Fair, Tennessee, President Ronald Reagan stated:

No government in the history of civilization has ever voluntarily reduced itself in size. But with God's help, this one's going to.

On May 6, 1982, in a ceremony at the White House in observance of the National Day of Prayer, President Ronald Reagan stated:

All of us are here with a common purpose: to observe a National Day of Prayer, a tradition that was begun by the Continental Congress....

Prayer has sustained our people in crisis, strengthened us in times of challenge, and guided us through our daily lives since the first settlers came to this continent. Our forefathers came not for gold, but mainly in search of God and the freedom to worship in their own way.

We've been a free people living under the law, with faith in our Maker and in our future. I've said before that the most sublime picture in American history is of George Washington on his knees in the snow of Valley Forge. That image personifies a people who know that it's not enough to depend on our own courage and goodness; we must also seek help from God, our Father and Preserver. . . .

The French philosopher Alexis de Tocqueville, visiting America a hundred and fifty years ago, marveled at Americans because they understood that a free people must also be a religious people. "Despotism," he wrote, "may be able to do without faith, but freedom cannot."

Today, prayer is still a powerful force in America, and our faith in God is a mighty source of strength. Our Pledge of Allegiance states that we are "one nation under God," and our currency bears the motto, "In God We Trust."

The morality and values such faith implies are deeply embedded in our national character. Our country embraces those principles by design, and we abandon them at our peril. Yet in recent years, well-meaning Americans in the name of freedom have taken freedom away.

For the sake of religious tolerance, they've forbidden religious practice in the classrooms. The law of this land has effectively removed prayer from our classrooms.

How can we hope to retain our freedom through the generations if we fail to teach our young that our liberty springs from an abiding faith in our Creator?

Thomas Jefferson once said, "Almighty God created the mind free." But current interpretation of our Constitution holds that the minds of our children cannot be free to pray to God in public schools. No one will ever convince me that a moment of voluntary prayer will harm a child or threaten a school or state. But I think it can strengthen our faith in a Creator who alone has the power to bless America.

One of my favorite passages in the Bible is the promise God gives us in II Chronicles: "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves and pray, and search for me, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven and forgive their sins and heal their land." That promise is the hope of America and of all our people.

Because of my faith in that promise, I'm particularly pleased to be able to tell you today that this administration will soon submit to the United States Congress a proposal to amend our Constitution to allow our children to pray in school. No one must ever be forced or coerced or pressured to take part in any religious exercise, but neither should the government forbid religious practice. The amendment we'll propose will restore the right to pray.

I thank you all for coming here today and for the good work that you do for our people, our country, and our God every day of the year. . . .

Let us take up the challenge to reawaken America's religious and moral heart, recognizing that a deep and abiding faith in God is the rock upon which this great nation was founded.

On May 10, 1982, in an Administrative Briefing with Editors from the Midwest, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The First Amendment is to protect not government from religion, but religion from government tyranny... The polls show that it is overwhelming, the percentage of people who want prayer restored... We refer to ours as a country under God. It says "In God We Trust" on our coins. They open the Congress sessions with a chaplain. I've never been sure whether he prays for the Congress or for the nation.

On May 17, 1982, in a proposed Constitutional Amendment of Prayer in Schools, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I have attached for your consideration a proposed constitutional amendment to restore the simple freedom of our citizens to offer prayer in our public schools and institutions. The public expression through prayer of our faith in God is a fundamental part of our American heritage and a privilege which should not be excluded by law from any American school, public or private.

One hundred fifty years ago, Alexis de Tocqueville found that all Americans believed that religious faith was indispensable to the maintenance of their republican institutions. Today, I join with the people of this nation in acknowledging this basic truth, that our liberty springs from and depends upon an abiding faith in God. This has been clear from the time of George Washington, who stated in his Farewell Address: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports... And let us with caution indulge the suppositions that morality can be maintained without religion... Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle."

Nearly every president since Washington has proclaimed a day of public prayer thanksgiving to acknowledge the many favors of Almighty God. We have acknowledged God's guidance on our coinage, in our national anthem, and in the Pledge of Allegiance. As the Supreme Court has stated: "We are a religious people whose institutions presuppose a Supreme Being."

The founders of our nation and the framers of the First Amendment did not intend to forbid public prayer. On the contrary, prayer has been part of our public assemblies since Benjamin Franklin's eloquent request that prayer be observed by the Constitution Convention:

"I have lived, Sir, a long time, and the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth - that God governs in the affairs of men... I also believe that without His concurring aid we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel: We shall be divided by our little partial local interests; our projects will be confounded, and we ourselves shall become a reproach and a bye-word down to future ages... I therefore beg leave to move - that henceforth prayers imploring the assistance of Heaven, and its blessings on our deliberations, be held in this Assembly every morning before we proceed to business. . . ."

Just as Benjamin Franklin believed it was beneficial for the Constitutional Convention to begin each day's work with a prayer, I believe that it would be beneficial for our children to have an opportunity to begin each school day in the same manner. Since the law has been construed to prohibit this, I believe that the law should be changed. It is time for the people, through their Congress and the state legislatures, to act, using the means afforded them by the Constitution.

The amendment I propose will remove the bar to school prayer established by the Supreme Court and allow prayer back in our schools. However, the amendment also expressly affirms the right of anyone to refrain from prayer. The amendment will allow communities to determine for themselves whether prayer should be permitted in their public schools and to allow individuals to decide for themselves whether they wish to participate in prayer.

I am confident that such an amendment will be quickly adopted, for a vast majority of our people believe there is a need for prayer in our public schools and institutions. I look forward to working with Congress to achieve the passage of this amendment.

In July of 1982, at the National Right to Life Convention, President Ronald Reagan stated:

It is you who have attempted to protect the helpless and speak for the unborn; you have carried the burden and fought the good fight. For this, God will bless you; and for this, millions of Americans, myself included, thank you.

On September 8, 1982, in support of adding Senator Jesse Helms' anti-abortion amendment to the debt ceiling bill, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The amendment is a responsible statutory approach to one of the most sensitive problems our society faces. . . . an amendment which:

1. Affirms the humanity of the unborn child in our society.
2. Bans permanently federal funding and support for the taking of the life of an unborn child except to save the life of the mother.
3. Provides opportunity for the Supreme Court to reconsider its usurpation of the role of legislature and state courts in this area.

On September 9, 1982, at the Alfred M. Landon Lecture Series on Public Issues, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I know now what I'm about to say will be very controversial, but I also believe that God's greatest gift is human life and that we have a sacred duty to protect the innocent human life of an unborn child. . . .

I think the American people are hungry for a spiritual revival. More and more of us are beginning to sense that we can't have it both ways. We can't expect God to protect us in a crisis and just leave Him over there on the shelf in our day-to-day living. I wonder if sometimes He isn't waiting for us to wake up, He isn't maybe running out of patience.

On September 18, 1982, in a Radio Address to the Nation of Prayer, President Ronald Reagan stated:

At every crucial turning point in our history Americans have faced and overcome great odds, strengthened by spiritual faith. The Plymouth settlers triumphed over hunger, disease, and a cruel Northern wilderness because, in the words of William Bradford, "They knew they were Pilgrims, so they committed themselves to the will of God and resolved to proceed."

George Washington knelt in prayer at Valley Forge and in the darkest days of our struggle for independence said that "the fate of unborn millions will now depend, under God, on the courage and conduct of this army."

Thomas Jefferson, perhaps the wisest of our founding fathers, had no doubt about the source from which our cause was derived. "The God who gave us life," he declared, "gave us liberty."

And nearly a century later, in the midst of a tragic and at times seemingly hopeless Civil War, Abraham Lincoln vowed that "this nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom."

It's said that prayer can move mountains. Well, it's certainly moved the hearts and minds of Americans in their times of trial and helped them to achieve a society that, for all its imperfections, is still the envy of the world and the last, best hope of mankind

And just as prayer has helped us as a nation, it helps us as individuals. In nearly all our lives, there are moments when our prayers and the prayers of our friends and loved ones help to see us through and keep [us] on the right path. In fact, prayer is one of the few things in the world that hurts no one and sustains the spirit of millions.

The founding fathers felt this so strongly that they enshrined the principle of freedom of religion in the First Amendment of the Constitution. The purpose of that amendment was to protect religion from the interference of government and to guarantee, in its own words, "the free exercise of religion."

Yet today we're told that to protect that First Amendment, we must suppress prayer and expel God from our children's classrooms. In one case, a court has ruled against the right of children to say grace in their own school cafeteria before they had lunch. A group of children who sought, on their initiative and with their parents' approval, to begin the school day with a one-minute prayer meditation have been forbidden to do so. And some students who wanted to join in prayer or religious study on school property, even outside of regular class hours, have been banned from doing so.

A few people have been objected to prayers being said in Congress. That's just plain wrong. The Constitution was never meant to prevent people from praying; its declared purpose was to protect their freedom to pray.

The time has come for this Congress to give a majority of American families what they want for their children - the firm assurance that children can hold voluntary prayers in their schools just as the Congress, itself, begins each of its daily sessions with an opening prayer.

With this in mind, last May I proposed to the Congress a measure that declares once and for all that nothing in the Constitution prohibits prayer in public schools or institutions. It also states that no person shall be required by government to participate in prayer who does not want to. So, everyone's rights - believers and nonbelievers alike - are protected by our voluntary prayer measure.

I'm sorry to say that so far the Congress has failed to vote on the issue of school prayer.

On September 24, 1982, in meeting the Editors and Publishers of Trade Magazines, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I believe this country is hungry for a spiritual revival. I also believe that what Teddy Roosevelt said once is true - "The presidency is a bully pulpit." And we're not going to give up on those social issues that have to do with the morals of this country and the great standards that made this country great.

On September 25, 1982, at a candle-lighting ceremony for prayer in schools, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Unfortunately, in the last two decades we've experienced an onslaught of such twisted logic that if Alice were visiting America, she might think she'd never left Wonderland.

We're told that it somehow violates the rights of others to permit students in school who desire to pray to do so. Clearly this infringes on the freedom of those who choose to pray, the freedom taken for granted since the time of our Founding Fathers...

Now, no one is suggesting that others should be forced into any religious activity, but to prevent those who believe in God from expressing their faith is an outrage. And the relentless drive to eliminate God from our schools can and should be stopped... We can and must not cut ourselves off from this indispensable source of strength and guidance...

I think it'd be a tragedy for us to deny our children what the rest of us, in and out of government, find so valuable. If the President of the United States can pray with others in the Oval Office - and I have on a number of occasions - then let's make certain that our children have the same right as they go about preparing for their future and for the future of this country.

On Monday, October 4, 1982, as authorized and requested by a Joint Resolution of the 97th Congress of the United States of America, held at the City of Washington, President Ronald Reagan designated 1983 as the national "Year of the Bible." The Resolution, Public Law 97-280, declared:

WHEREAS the Bible, the Word of God, has made a
Page 1048

the English system of law inherited by our own nation, as well as the ideals set forth in the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution.

For centuries, the Bible's emphasis on compassion and love for our neighbor has inspired institutional and governmental expressions of benevolent outreach such as private charity, the establishment of schools and hospitals, and the abolition of slavery.

Many of our greatest national leaders - among them Presidents Washington, Jackson, Lincoln, and Wilson - have recognized the influence of the Bible on our country's development. The plainspoken Andrew Jackson referred to the Bible as no less than "the rock on which our Republic rests." Today our beloved America and, indeed, the world, is facing a decade of enormous challenge. As a people we may well be tested as we have seldom, if ever, been tested before. We will need resources of spirit even more than resources of technology, education, and armaments.

There could be no more fitting moment than now to reflect with gratitude, humility, and urgency upon the wisdom revealed to us in the writing that Abraham Lincoln called, "the best gift God has ever given to man... But for it we could not know right from wrong."

The Congress of the United States, in recognition of the unique contribution of the Bible in shaping the history and character of this nation and so many of its citizens, has by Senate Joint Resolution 165 authorized and requested the President to designate the year 1983 as the "Year of the Bible."

Now, therefore, I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, in recognition of the contributions and influence of the Bible on our Republic and our people, do hereby proclaim 1983 the Year of the Bible in the United States. I encourage all citizens, each in his or her own way, to reexamine and rediscover its priceless and timeless message.

On November 16, 1982, to the U.S. League of Savings Associations, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Above all, let us remember the mountain of strength that offers the greatest hope and inspiration for all. I believe with all my heart that standing up for America means standing up for the God who has blessed our land. We need God's help to guide our nation through stormy seas. But we can't expect Him to protect America in a crisis if we just leave Him over on the shelf in our day-to-day living. There's a lovely old hymn which says: "When morning lights the eastern skies, O Lord Thy mercy show. On Thee alone our hope relies, let us Thy kindness know."

In 1983, in an article entitled "Abortion and the Conscience of the Nation," published in The Human Life Review, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Make no mistake, abortion-on-demand is not a right granted by the Constitution. No serious scholar, including one disposed to agree with the Court's result, has argued that the framers of the Constitution intended to create such a right.

Shortly after the Roe v. Wade decision, Professor

John Hart Ely, now Dean of Stanford Law School, wrote that the opinion "is not constitutional law and gives almost no sense of an obligation to try to be." Nowhere do the plain words of the Constitution even hint at a "right" so sweeping as to permit abortion up to the time the child is ready to be born. Yet that is what the Court ruled.

As an act of "raw judicial power" (to use Justice White's biting phrase), the decision by the seven-man majority in Roe v. Wade has so far been made to stick. But the Court's decision has by no means settled the debate. Instead, Roe v. Wade has become a continuing prod to the conscience of the nation.

Abortion concerns not just the unborn child, it concerns every one of us. The English poet, John Donne, wrote: "...and man's death diminishes me, because I am involved in mankind; and therefore never send to know for whom the bell tolls; it tolls for thee."

We cannot diminish the value of one category of human life - the unborn - without diminishing the value of all human life. We saw the tragic proof of this truism last year when the Indiana courts allowed the starvation death of "Baby Doe" in Bloomington because the child had Down's Syndrome.

Many of our fellow citizens grieve over the loss of life that has followed Roe v. Wade. Margaret Heckler, soon after being nominated to the head of the largest department of our government, Health and Human Services, told an audience that she believed abortion to be the greatest moral crisis facing our country today. And the revered Mother Teresa, who works in the streets of Calcutta ministering to dying people in her world-famous mission of mercy, has said that "the greatest misery of our time is the generalized abortion of children."

Over the first two years of my administration I have closely followed and assisted efforts in Congress to reverse the tide of abortion - efforts of congressmen, senators and citizens responding to an urgent moral crisis. Regrettably, I have also seen the massive efforts of those who, under the banner of "freedom of choice," have so far blocked every effort to reverse nationwide abortion-on-demand.

Despite the formidable obstacles before us, we must not lose heart. This is not the first time our country has been divided by a Supreme Court decision that denied the value of human lives. The Dred Scott decision of 1857 was not overturned in a day, or a year, or even a decade. At first, only a minority of Americans recognized and deplored the moral crisis brought about by denying the full humanity of our black brothers and sisters; but that minority persisted in their vision and finally prevailed. They did it by appealing to the hearts and minds of their countrymen, to the truth of human dignity under God. From their example, we know that respect for the sacred value of human life is too deeply engrained in the hearts of our people to remain forever suppressed. But the great majority of the American people have not yet made their voices heard, and we cannot expect them to - any more than the public voice arose against slavery - until the issue is clearly framed and presented.

What, then, is the real issue? I have often said that when we talk about abortion, we are talking about two lives - the life of the mother and the life of the unborn child. Why else do we call a pregnant woman a mother? I have also said that anyone who doesn't feel sure whether we are talking about a second human life should clearly give life the benefit of the doubt. If you don't know whether a body is alive or dead, you would never bury it. I think this consideration itself should be enough for all of us to insist on protecting the unborn.

The case against abortion does not rest here, however, for medical practice confirms at every step the correctness of these moral sensibilities. Modern medicine treats the unborn child as a patient. Medical pioneers have made great breakthroughs in treating the unborn - for genetic problems, vitamin deficiencies, irregular heart rhythms, and other medical conditions. Who can forget George Will's moving account of the little boy who underwent brain surgery six times during the nine weeks before he was born? Who is the patient if not that tiny unborn human being who can feel pain when he or she is approached by doctors who come to kill rather than to cure?

The real question today is not when human life begins, but, what is the value of human life? The abortionist who reassembles the arms and legs of a tiny baby to make sure all its parts have been torn from its mother's body can hardly doubt whether it is a human being. The real question for him and for all of us is whether that tiny human life has a God-given right to be protected by the law - the same right we have.

What more dramatic confirmation could we have of the real issue than the Baby Doe case in Bloomington, Indiana? The death of that tiny infant tore at the hearts of all Americans because the child was undeniably a live human being - one lying helpless before the eyes of the doctors and the eyes of the nation. The real issue for the courts was not whether Baby Doe was a human being. The real issue was whether to protect the life of a human being who had Down's Syndrome, who would probably be mentally handicapped, but who needed a routine surgical procedure to unblock his esophagus and allow him to eat. A doctor testified to the presiding judge that, even with his physical problem corrected, Baby Doe would have a "non-existent" possibility for "a minimally adequate quality of life" - in other words, that retardation was the equivalent of a crime deserving the death penalty. The judge let Baby Doe starve and die, and the Indiana Supreme Court sanctioned his decision.

Federal law does not allow federally-assisted hospitals to decide that Down's Syndrome infants are not worth treating, much less to decide to starve them to death. Accordingly, I have directed the Department of Justice and Health and Human Services to apply civil rights regulations to protect handicapped newborns. All hospitals receiving federal funds must post notices which will clearly state that failure to feed handicapped babies is prohibited by federal law.

The basic issue is whether to value and protect the lives of the handicapped, whether to recognize the sanctity of human life. This is the same basic issue that underlies the question of abortion.

The 1981 Senate hearings on the beginning of human life brought out the basic issue more clearly than ever before. The many medical and scientific witnesses who testified disagreed on many things, but not on the scientific evidence that the unborn child is alive, is a distinct individual, or is a member of the human species. They did disagree over the value question, whether to give value to a human life at its early and most vulnerable stages of existence.

Regrettably, we live at a time when some persons do not value all human life. They want to pick and choose which individuals have value. Some have said that only those individuals with a "consciousness of self" are human beings. One such writer has followed this deadly logic and concluded that "shocking as it may seem, a newly born infant is not a human being."

A Nobel Prize winning scientist has suggested that if a handicapped child "were not declared fully human until three days after birth, then all parents could be allowed the choice." In other words, "quality control" to see if newly born human beings are up to snuff.

Obviously, some influential people want to deny that every human life has intrinsic, sacred worth. They insist that a member of the human race must have certain qualities before they accord him or her status as a "human being."

Events have borne out the editorial in a California medical journal which explained three years before Roe v. Wade that the social acceptance of abortion is a "defiance of the long-held Western ethic of intrinsic and equal value for every human life regardless of its stage, condition, or status."

Every legislator, every doctor, and every citizen needs to recognize that the real issue is whether to affirm and protect the sanctity of all human life, or to embrace a social ethic where some human lives are valued and others are not. As a nation, we must choose between the sanctity of life ethic and the "quality of life" ethic.

I have no trouble identifying the answer our nation has always given to this basic question, and the answer that I hope and pray it will give in the future. America was founded by men and women who shares a vision of the value of each and every individual. They stated this vision clearly from the very start in the Declaration of Independence, using words that every school boy and school girl can recite:

"We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness."

We fought a terrible war to guarantee that one category of mankind - black people in America - could not be denied the inalienable rights with which their Creator endowed them. The great champion of the sanctity of all human life in that day, Abraham Lincoln, gave us his assessment of the Declaration's purpose. Speaking of the framers of that noble document, he said:

"This was their majestic interpretation of the economy of the Universe. This was their lofty, and wise, and noble understanding of the justice of the Creator to His creatures. Yes, gentlemen, to all His creatures, to the whole great family of man. In their enlightened belief, nothing stamped with the divine image and likeness was sent into the world to be trodden on. . . . They grasped not only the whole race of man then living, but they reached forward and seized upon the farthest posterity. They erected a beacon to guide their children, and the countless myriads who should inhabit the earth in other ages."

He warned also of the danger we would face in we ever closed our eyes to the value of life in any category of human beings:

"I should like to know if taking this old Declaration of Independence, which declares that all men are equal upon principle and making exceptions to it where will it stop. If one man says it does not mean Negro, why not another say it does not mean some other man?"

When Congressman John A. Bingham of Ohio drafted the Fourteenth Amendment to guarantee the rights of life, liberty, and property to all human beings, he explained that all are "entitled to the protection of American law, because its divine spirit of equality declares that all men are created equal." He said the rights guaranteed by the amendment would therefore apply to "any human being." Justice William Brennan, in another case decided only the year before Roe v. Wade, referred to our society as one that "strongly affirms the sanctity of life."

Another William Brennan - not the Justice - has reminded us of the terrible consequences that can follow when a nation rejects the sanctity of life ethic:

"The cultural environment for a human holocaust is present whenever any society can be misled into defining individuals as less than human and therefore devoid of value and respect.

As a nation today, we have not rejected the sanctity of human. The American people have not had an opportunity to express their view on the sanctity of human life in the unborn. I am convinced that Americans do not want to play God with the value of human life. It is not for us to decide who is worthy to live and who is not. Even the Supreme Court's opinion in Roe v. Wade did not explicitly reject the traditional American idea of intrinsic worth and value in all human life; it simply dodged this issue.

The Congress has before it several measures that would enable our people to reaffirm the sanctity of human life, even the smallest and the youngest and the most defenseless. The Human Life Bill expressly recognizes the unborn as human beings and accordingly protects them as persons under our Constitution. This bill, first introduced by Senator Jesse Helms, provided the vehicle for the Senate hearings in 1981 which contributed so much to our understanding of the real issue of abortion.

The Respect Human Life Act, just introduced in the ninety-eighth Congress, states in its first section that the policy of the United States is "to protect innocent life, both before and after birth." This bill, sponsored by Congressman Henry Hyde and Senator Roger Jepsen, prohibits the federal government from performing abortions or assisting those who do so, except to save the life of the mother. It also addresses the pressing issue of infanticide which, as we have seen, flows inevitably from permissive abortion as another step in the denial of the inviolability of innocent human life.

I have endorsed each of these measures, as well as the more difficult route of constitutional amendment, and I will give these initiatives my full support. Each of them, in different ways, attempts to reverse the tragic policy of abortion-on-demand imposed by the Supreme Court ten years ago. Each of them is a decisive way to affirm the sanctity of human life.

We must all educate ourselves to the reality of the horrors taking place. Doctors today know that unborn children can feel a touch within the womb and that they respond to pain. But how many Americans are aware that abortion techniques are allowed today, in all fifty states, that burn the skin of a baby with a salt solution, in a agonizing death that can last for hours?

Another example: two years ago, Philadelphia Inquirer ran a Sunday special supplement on "The Dreaded Complication." The "dreaded complication" referred to in the article - the complication feared by doctors who perform abortions - is the survival of the child despite all the painful attacks during the abortion procedure. Some unborn children do survive the late-term abortions the Supreme has made legal. Is there any question that these victims of abortion deserve our attention and protection? Is there any question that those who don't survive were living human beings before they were killed?

Late-term abortions, especially when the baby survives, but is then killed by starvation, neglect, or suffocation, show once again the link between abortion and infanticide. The time to stop both is now. As my administration acts to stop infanticide, we will be fully aware of the real issue that underlies the death of babies before and soon after birth.

Our society has, fortunately, become sensitive to the rights and special needs of the handicapped, but I am shocked that physical or mental handicaps of newborns are still used to justify their extinction. This administration has a Surgeon General, Dr. C. Everett Koop, who has done perhaps more than any other American for handicapped children, by pioneering surgical techniques to help them, by speaking out on the value of their lives, and by working with them in the context of loving families. You will not find his former patients advocating the so-called "quality-of-life" ethic.

I know that when the true issue of infanticide is placed before the American people, with all the facts openly aired, we will have no trouble deciding that a mentally or physically handicapped baby has the same intrinsic worth and right to life as the rest of us. As the New Jersey Supreme Court said two decades ago, in a decision upholding the sanctity of human life, "a child need not be perfect to have a worthwhile life."

Whether we are talking about pain suffered by unborn children, or about late-term abortions, or about infanticide, we inevitably focus on the humanity of the unborn child. Each of these issues is a potential rallying point for the sanctity of life ethic. Once we as a nation rally around any one of these issues to affirm the sanctity of life, we will see the importance of affirming this principle across the board.

Malcolm Muggeridge, the English writer, goes right to the heart of the matter: "Either life is always and in all circumstances sacred, or intrinsically of no account; it is inconceivable that it should be in some cases the one, and in some the other." The sanctity of innocent human life is a principle that Congress should proclaim at every opportunity.

It is impossible that the Supreme Court itself may overturn its abortion rulings. We need only recall that in Brown v. Board of Education the court reversed its own earlier "separate-but-equal" decision. I believe if the Supreme Court took another look at Roe v. Wade, and considered the real issue between the sanctity of life ethic and the quality of life ethic, it would change its mind once again.

As we continue to work to overturn Roe v. Wade, we must also continue to lay the groundwork for a society in which abortion is not the accepted answer to unwanted pregnancy. Pro-life people have already taken heroic steps, often at great personal sacrifice, to provide for unwed mothers. I recently spoke about a young pregnant woman named Victoria, who said, "In this society we save whales, we save timberwolves and bald eagles and Coke bottles. Yet, everyone wanted me to throw away my baby." She has been by Sav-a-Life, a group in Dallas, which provides a way for unwed mothers to preserve the human life within them when they might otherwise be tempted to resort to abortion. I think also of House of His Creation in Coatesville, Pennsylvania, where a loving couple has taken in almost two hundred young women in the past ten years. They have seen, as a fact of life, that the girls are not better off having abortions than saving their babies. I am also reminded of the remarkable Rossow family of Ellington, Connecticut, who have opened their hearts and their homes to nine handicapped adopted and foster children.

The Adolescent Family Life Program, adopted by Congress at the request of Senator Jeremiah Denton, has opened new opportunities for unwed mothers to give their children life. We should not rest until our entire society echoes the tone of John Powell in the dedication of his book, Abortion: The Silent Holocaust, a dedication to every woman carrying an unwanted child: "Please believe that you are not alone. There are many of us that truly love you, who want to stand at your side, and help in any way we can." And we can echo the always-practical woman of faith, Mother Teresa, when she says, "If you don't want the little child, that unborn child, give him to me." We have so many families in America seeking to adopt children that the slogan "every child a wanted child" is now the emptiest of all reasons to tolerate abortion.

I have often said we need to join in prayer to bring protection to the unborn. Prayer and action are needed to uphold the sanctity of human life. I believe it will not be possible to accomplish our work of saving lives, "without being a soul of prayer." The famous British member of Parliament William Wilberforce prayed with his small group of influential friends, the "Clapham Sect," for decades to see an end to slavery in the British empire. Wilberforce led that struggle in Parliament, unflinchingly, because he believed in the sanctity of human life. He saw the fulfillment of his impossible dream when Parliament outlawed slavery just before his death.

Let his faith and perseverance be our guide. We will never recognize the true value of our own lives until we affirm the value in the life of others, a value of which Malcolm Muggeridge says: "...however low it flickers or fiercely burns, it is still a Divine flame which no man dare presume to put out, be his motives ever so humane and enlightened."

Abraham Lincoln recognized that we could not survive as a free land when some men could decide that others were not fit to be free and should therefore be slaves. Likewise, we cannot survive as a free nation when some men decide that others are not fit to live and should be abandoned to abortion or infanticide.

My administration is dedicated to the preservation of America as a free land, and there is no cause more important for preserving that freedom than affirming the transcendent right to life of all human beings, the right without which no other rights have any meaning.

On January 21, 1983, from the White House, Washington, D.C., President Ronald Reagan stated:

Nancy and I are very pleased to extend our warmest greetings and best wishes to all those gathered from across the land for this historic "March for Life." This nation was founded by men and women who shared a strong moral vision of the great value of each and every individual. America has come to symbolize that belief for the rest of the world.

But the tragic United States Supreme Court decision which legalized "abortion on demand" in 1973 severely tests our moral commitments. You are assembled here to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the Roe v. Wade decision and to march and pray for its reversal. We join with you in that hope and plea. The abortion decision was a tragedy, and we have the responsibility to do all we can to protect the unborn children.

On January 22, 1983, in a Radio Address to the Nation, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I, too, have always believed that God's greatest gift is human life and that we have a duty to protect the life of an unborn child.

On Thursday, January 27, 1983, in a Proclamation of a National Day of Prayer, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Prayer is the mainspring of the American spirit, a fundamental tenet of our people since before the Republic was founded. A year before the Declaration of Independence, in 1775, the Continental Congress proclaimed the first National Day of Prayer as the initial positive action they asked of every colonist.

Two hundred years ago in 1783, the Treaty of Paris officially ended the long, weary Revolutionary War during which a National Day of Prayer had been proclaimed every spring for eight years. When peace came, the National Day of Prayer was forgotten. For almost half a century, as the nation grew in power and wealth, we put aside this deepest expression of American belief - our national dependence on the providence of God.

It took the tragedy of the Civil War to restore a National Day of Prayer. As Abraham Lincoln said, "Intoxicated with unbroken success, we have become too self-sufficient to feel the necessity of redeeming and preserving grace, too proud to pray to the God that made us."

Revised as an annual observance by Congress in 1952, the National Day of Prayer has become a great unifying force for our citizens who come from all the great religions of the world. Prayer unites people. This common expression of reverence heals and brings us together as a nation, and we pray it may one day bring renewed respect for God to all peoples of the world.

From General Washington's struggle at Valley Forge to the present, this nation has fervently sought and received divine guidance as it pursued the course of history. This occasion provides our nation with an opportunity to further recognize the source of our blessings, and to seek His help for the challenges we face today and in the future.

On January 31, 1983, at the annual convention of the National Religious Broadcasters, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Let us come together, Christians and Jews, let us pray together, march, lobby, and mobilize every force we have, so that we can end the tragic taking of unborn children's lives. Who among us can imagine the excruciating pain the unborn must feel as their lives are snuffed away?...

I read in the Washington Post about a young woman named Victoria. She's with child, and she said, "In this society we save whales, we save timber wolves and bald eagles and Coke bottles. Yet everyone wanted me to throw away my baby." Well, Victoria's story has a happy ending. Her baby will be born. Victoria has received assistance from a Christian couple, and from Sav-A-Life, a new Dallas group run by Jim McKee.... They're living the meaning of the two great commandments: "Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy might" and "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself."

When American reach out for values of faith, family, and caring for the needy, they're saying, "We want the Word of God. We want to face the future with the Bible."

We're blessed to have its words of strength, comfort, and truth. I'm accused of being simplistic at times with some of the problems that confront us. But I've often wondered: Within the covers of that single Book are all the answers to all the problems that face us today, if we'd only look there. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever." It's my firm belief that the enduring values, as I say, presented in its pages have a great meaning for each of us and for our nation. The Bible can touch our hearts, order our minds, refresh our souls.

Now, I realize it's fashionable in some circles to believe that no one in government should...encourage others to read the Bible....We're told that will violate the constitutional separation of church and state established by the founding fathers in the First Amendment.

Well, it might interest those critics to know that none other than the father of our country, George Washington, kissed the Bible at his inauguration. And he also said words to the effect that there could be no real morality in a society without religion.

John Adams called it "the best book in the world." and Ben Franklin said, "...the longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men...without His concurring aid, we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel; we shall be divided by our little, partial, local interests, our projects will be confounded, and we ourselves shall become a reproach, a bye-word down to future ages."...

All of us, as Protestants, Catholics, and Jews, have a special responsibility to remember our fellow believers who are being persecuted in other lands. We're all children of Abraham. We're children of the same God....

This year, for the first time in history, the Voice of America broadcast a religious service worldwide - Christmas Eve at the National Presbyterian Church in Washington, D. C.

Now, these broadcasts are not popular with government of totalitarian power. But make not mistake, we have a duty to broadcast. Aleksandr Herzen, the Russian writer, warned, "To shrink from saying a word in defense of the oppressed is as bad as any crime." Well, I pledge to you that America will stand us, speak out, and defend the values we share. To those who would crush religious freedom, our message is plain: You may jail your believers. You may close their churches, confiscate their Bibles, and harass their rabbis and priests, but you will never destroy the love of God and freedom that burns in their hearts. They will triumph over you.

Malcolm Muggeridge, the brilliant English commentator, has written, "The most important happening in the world today is the resurgence of Christianity in the Soviet Union, demonstrating that the whole effort sustained over sixty years to brainwash the Russian people into accepting materialism has been a fiasco."

Think of it: the most awesome military machine in history, but it is not match for that one single man, hero, strong yet tender, Prince of Peace. His name alone, Jesus, can lift our hearts, soothe our sorrows, heal our wounds, and drive away our fears....

With His message and with your conviction and commitment, we can still move mountains.

Before I say goodbye, I wanted to leave with you these words from an old Netherlands folk song, because they made me think of our meeting here today:

"We gather together to ask the Lord's blessing;
We all do extol Thee, Thou Leader triumphant,
And pray that Thou still our Defender wilt be.

American Quotations.txt

Let Thy congregation escape tribulation:
Thy name be ever praised! O Lord, make us free!"
To which I would only add a line from another song:

"America, America, God shed His grace on thee."

On February 2, 1983, in meeting with Jewish Leaders,
President Ronald Reagan stated:

America knows God's blessings. Our cup truly runneth over. We seek only to share the blessings of liberty, peace, and prosperity.

On February 3, 1983, at the annual National Prayer
Breakfast, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I'm so thankful that there will always be one day in the year when people all over our land can sit down as neighbors and friends and remind ourselves of what our real task is. This task was spelled out in the Old and New Testament. Jesus was asked, "Master, which is the great commandment in the law?" And he replied,
"Thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thy heart, and with all thy soul, and with all thy mind. This is the first and great commandment. The second is like unto it, thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself. On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets."

Can we resolve to reach, learn, and try to heed the greatest message ever written - God's Word and the Holy Bible? Inside its pages lie all the answers to all the problems that man has ever known.

Now, I am assuming a new position; but I should warn our friends in the loyal opposition, this new job won't require me to leave the White House. With the greatest enthusiasm, I have agreed to serve as the honorary chairman for the Year of the Bible.

We think how many people in the world are imprisoned or tortured - harassed for even possessing a Bible or trying to read one....In its lessons and the great wealth of its words, we find comfort, strength, wisdom, and hope....We might remember something Abraham Lincoln said over a hundred years ago: "We have forgotten the gracious hand that preserved us in peace, and multiplied and enriched and strengthened us; and we have vainly imagined, in the deceitfulness of our hearts, that all these blessings were produced by some superior wisdom and virtue of our own...we have become to proud to pray to the God that made us."

We face great challenges in this country, but we've faced great challenges before and conquered them.
What carried us through was a willingness to seek power and protection from One much greater than ourselves, to turn back to Him and to trust in His mercy. Without His help, America will not go forward.

I have a very special old Bible. And alongside a verse in the Second Book of Chronicles there are some words, handwritten, very faded by now. And believe me, the person who wrote these words was an authority. Her name was Nelle Wilson Reagan. She was my mother. And she wrote about that verse, "A most wonderful verse for the healing of nations."

Now, the verse that she'd marked read: "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven...and will heal their land."

I know at times all of us - I do - feel that perhaps in our prayers we ask for too much. And then there other times when we feel that something isn't important enough to bother God with it. Maybe we should let Him decide those things.

The war correspondent Marguerite Higgins, who received the Pulitzer Prize for International Reporting because of her coverage of the Korean War, among her writings had an account of the Fifth Company of Marines who were part of an 18,000-man force that was in combat with a hundred thousand of the enemy. And she described an incident that took place early, just after dawn on a very cold morning. It was forty-two degrees below zero. And the weary marines, half frozen, stood by their dirty, mud-covered trucks, eating their breakfast from tin cans.

One huge marine was eating cold beans with a trench knife. His clothes were frozen stiff as a board; his face was covered with a heavy beard and crusted with mud. And one of the little group of war correspondents who were on hand went up to him and said, "If I were God and could grant you anything you wished, what would you most like?" And the marine stood there for a moment, looking down at that cold tin of beans, and then he raised his head and said, "Give me tomorrow."

On February 18, 1983, while speaking at the annual Conservative Political Action Conference, President Reagan expressed:

Our Founding Fathers prohibited a Federal establishment of religion, but there is no evidence that they intended to set up a wall of separation between the state and religious belief itself.

The evidence of this is all around us. In the Declaration of Independence, alone, there are no fewer than four mentions of a Supreme Being. "In God We Trust" is engraved on our coinage. The Supreme Court opens its proceedings with a religious invocation. And the Congress opens each day with prayer from its chaplains.

The school children of the United States are entitled to the same privileges as Supreme Court Justices and Congressmen.

Join with me in persuading the Congress to accede to the overwhelming desire of American people for a constitutional amendment permitting prayer in our schools.

On March 8, 1983, at the National Association of Evangelicals in Orlando, Florida, President Reagan stated:

There are a great many God-fearing, dedicated, noble men and women in public life...And, yes, your help [is needed] to keep us ever mindful of the ideas and the principles that brought us into the public arena in the first place. The basis of those ideals and principles is a commitment to freedom and personal liberty that itself is grounded in the much deeper realization that freedom prospers only where the blessings of God are avidly sought and humbly accepted....

I want you to know that this administration is motivated by a political philosophy that sees the greatness of America in you, her people, and in your families, churches, neighborhoods, communities - the institutions that foster and nourish values [such as] concern for others and respect for the rule of law under God....

Drugs and devices are prescribed without getting parental consent or giving notification after they've done so. Girls termed "sexually active" - and that has replaced the word "promiscuous" - are given this help in order to prevent illegitimate birth or abortion. Well, we have ordered clinics receiving federal funds to notify the parents such help has been given. One of the nation's leading newspapers has created the term "squeal rule" in editorializing against us for doing this, and we're being criticized for violating the privacy of young people. A judge recently granted an injunction against an enforcement of our rule. I've watched TV panel shows discuss this issue, seen columnists' pontification on our error, but no one seems to mention morality as playing a part in the subject of sex.

Is the Judeo-Christian tradition wrong? Are we to believe that something so sacred can be looked upon as a pure physical thing with no potential for emotional and psychological harm? And isn't it the parents' right to give counsel and advice to keep their children from making mistakes that may affect their entire lives?

Many of us in government would like to know what parents think about this intrusion into their families by government. We're going to fight in the courts. The right of parents and the rights of family take precedence over those of Washington-based bureaucrats and social engineers.

But the fight against parental notification is really only one example of many attempts to water down traditional values and even abrogate the original terms of American democracy.

There's a great spiritual awakening in America, a renewal of the traditional values that have been the bedrock of America's goodness and greatness.

One recent survey by a Washington-based research council concluded that Americans were far more religious than the people of other nations. Ninety-five percent of those surveyed expressed a belief in God. A huge majority believed the Ten Commandments had real meaning in their lives. Another study has found that an overwhelming majority of Americans disapprove of adultery, teenage sex, pornography, abortion, and hard drugs. And this same study showed a deep reverence for the importance of family ties and religious belief.

There is sin and evil in the world, and we're enjoined by Scripture and the Lord Jesus to oppose it with all our might....

The real crisis we face today is a spiritual one; at root, it is a test of moral will and faith.

Whittaker Chambers...wrote the crisis of the Western world exists to the degree in which the West is indifferent to God, the degree to which it collaborates in communism's attempt to make man stand alone without God....

The source of our strength in the quest for human freedom is not material, but spiritual. And because it knows no limitation, it must terrify and ultimately triumph over those who would enslave their fellow man.

For in the words of Isaiah: "He giveth power to the faint; and to them that have no might He increases strength....But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary."...

Freedom prospers when religion is vibrant and the rule of law under God is acknowledged. When our founding fathers passed the First Amendment, they sought to protect churches from government interference. They never intended to construct a wall of hostility between government and the concept of religious belief itself.

The evidence of this permeates our history and our government. The Declaration of Independence mentions the Supreme Being no less than four times. "In God We Trust" is engraved on our coinage. The Supreme Court opens its proceedings with a religious invocation. And members of Congress open their sessions with a prayer. I just happen to believe that the school children of the United States are entitled to the same privileges as Supreme Court Justices and Congressmen.

On March 8, 1983, in a message to Congress regarding the proposed Constitutional Amendment on Prayer in Schools, President Ronald Reagan stated:

One hundred and fifty years ago, Alexis de Tocqueville found that all Americans believed that religious faith was indispensable to the maintenance of their republican institutions. Today, I join with the people of this Nation in acknowledging this basic truth, that our liberty springs from and depends upon an abiding faith in God.

On April 2, 1983, in a Radio Address to the Nation, President Ronald Reagan stated:

This week Jewish families and friends have been celebrating Passover, a tradition rich in symbolism and meaning. Its observance reminds all of us that the struggle for freedom and the battle against oppression waged by the Jews since ancient times is one shared by people everywhere. And Christians have been commemorating the last momentous days leading to the crucifixion of Jesus 1,950 years ago. Tomorrow, as morning spreads around the planet, we'll celebrate the triumph of life over death, the resurrection of Jesus. Both observances tell of sacrifice and pain but also of hope and triumph....

Men and women around the world who love God and freedom - bear a message of world hope and brotherhood like the rites of Passover and Easter that we celebrate this weekend....

We want peace....We want no wars....We want to travel without fear....And then they ask, "Do you think that we can have these things one day?" Well, I do. I really do. Nearly 2,000 years after the coming of the Prince of Peace, such simple wishes may still seem far from fulfillment. But we can achieve them. We must never stop trying.

On April 6, 1983, in a Proclamation for Mother's Day, President Ronald Reagan stated:

To our mothers, we owe our highest esteem, for it is from their gift of life that the flow of events begins that shapes our destiny. A mother's love, nurturing, and beliefs are among the strongest influences molding the development and character of our youngsters. As Henry Ward Beecher wrote, "What a mother sings to the cradle goes all the way down to the coffin."

On April 23, 1983, in a Radio Address to the Nation on the Death of Federal Diplomatic and Military Personnel in Beirut, Lebanon, President Ronald Reagan stated:

"Greater love hath no man." The courage and dedication of these men and women reflect the best tradition of our Foreign Service, our Armed Forces, and the other departments....

On May 6, 1983, at the annual banquet of the National Rifle Association, Phoenix, Arizona, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Standing up for America also means standing up for the God who has blessed this land. If we could just keep remembering that Moses brought down from the mountain the Ten Commandments, not ten suggestions - and if those of us who live for the Lord could remember that He wants us to love our Lord and our neighbor, then there's no limit to the problems we could solve or the mountains we could together as a mighty force for good.

On May 7, 1983, in a Radio address to the Nation, President Ronald Reagan stated:

We also first learn at home, and, again, often from our mothers, about the God who will guide us through life....

The progress we're making with the economy, just like the national renewal we're seeing spring up all around us, is the product of our reliance again on good old-fashioned common sense, renewed belief in ourselves, and faith in God.

Now and then I find guidance and direction in the worn brown Bible I used to take the oath of office. It's been the Reagan family Bible, and, like many of yours, has its flyleaf filled with important events; its margins are scrawled with insights and passages underlined for emphasis. My mother, Nelle, made all those marks in that book. She used it to instruct her two young sons, and I look to it still.

A passage in Proverbs describes the ideal woman, saying: "Strength and dignity are her clothing, and she smiles at the future. She opens her mouth in wisdom, and the teaching of her kindness is on her tongue. Give her the product of her hands, and let her work praise her in the gates."

On May 20, 1983, at the Cuban Independence Day Celebration, Miami, Florida, President Ronald Reagan stated:

This is a story of a commissar who visited one of their collective farms, and he stopped the first farmer that he met, and he asked about life on the farm. And the man said, "It's wonderful. I've never heard anyone complain about anything since I've been here." And the commissar then said, "Well, what about the crops?" "Oh," he said, "the crops are wonderful." "What about the potatoes?" "Oh, sir," he said, "the potatoes, there are so many that if we put them in one pile they would touch the foot of God." And the commissar said, "Just a minute. In the Soviet Union there is no God." And the farmer said, "Well, there are no potatoes either."

On June 16, 1983, at a dinner honoring Senator Jesse Helms of North Carolina, President Ronald Reagan stated:

We're a nation under God, a living and loving God. But Thomas Jefferson warned us, "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just." We cannot expect Him to protect us in crisis if we turn away from Him in our everyday living.

But you know, He told us what to do in II Chronicles. Let us reach out to Him. He said, "If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves and pray and seek my face and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from Heaven and will forgive their sin and will heal their land."

On June 22, 1983, at the National Conference of the National Federation of Independence, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The principles of wealth creation transcend time, people, and place. Governments which deliberately subvert them by denouncing God, smothering faith, destroying freedom, and confiscating wealth have impoverished their people.

Communism works only in heaven, where they don't need it, and in hell, where they've already got it.

On July 19, 1983, at the annual observance of Captives Nations Week, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Two visions of the world remain locked in dispute. The first believes all men are created equal by a loving God who has blessed us with freedom. Abraham Lincoln spoke for us: "No man," he said, "is good enough to govern another without the other's consent."

The second vision believes that religion is opium for the masses. It believes that eternal principles like truth, liberty, and democracy have no meaning beyond the whim of the state. And Lenin spoke for them: "It is true, that liberty is precious," he said, "so precious that must be rationed."

We'll take Lincoln's version over Lenin's - and so will citizens of the world if they're given free choice....

You are the conscience of the free world, and I appeal to you to make your voices heard. Tell [totalitarian governments]: "You may jail your people. You may seize their goods. You may ban their unions. You may bully their rabbis and dissidents. You may forbid the name of Jesus to pass through their lips. But you will never destroy the love of God and freedom that burns in their hearts. They will triumph over you...."

The Prophet Isaiah admonished the world, "Bind up the brokenhearted, to proclaim liberty to the captives." Some twenty-five centuries later, philosophers would declare that "the cause of freedom is the cause of God."

On July 28, 1983, at a White House reception for the National Council of Negro Women, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I've lived a long time, but I can't remember a time in my life when I didn't believe that prejudice and bigotry were the worst of sins. My mother was the kindest person I've ever known and truly believed that we are all brothers and sisters - children of God.

On August 1, 1983, at the annual meeting of the American Bar Association, Atlanta, Georgia, President Ronald Reagan stated:

It's not good enough to have equal access to our law; we must also have equal access to the higher law - the law of God. George Washington warned that morality could not prevail in exclusion of religious principles. And Jefferson asked, "Can the liberties of a nation be thought secure, when we've removed their only firm basis, a conviction in the minds of people that these liberties are the gifts of God?"

We must preserve the noble promise of the American dream for every man, woman, and child in this land. And make no mistake, we can preserve it, and we will. That promise was not created by America. It was given to America as a gift from a loving God - a gift proudly recognized by the language of liberty in the world's greatest charters of freedom: our Declaration of Independence, the Constitution, and the Bill of Rights....

The explicit promise in the Declaration that we're endowed by our Creator with certain inalienable rights was meant for all of us. It wasn't meant to be limited or perverted by special privilege or by double standards....

Trusting in God and helping one another, we can and will preserve the dream of America, the last best hope of man on earth.

On September 26, 1983, upon signing the Challenge Grant Amendments, President Ronald Reagan stated:

A fellow fell off a cliff, and as he was falling grabbed a limb sticking out the side of the cliff and looked down 300 feet to the canyon floor below and then looked up and said, "Lord, if there's anyone up there, give me faith. Tell me what to do." And a voice from the heavens said, "If you have faith, let go." He looked down at the canyon and then took another look up and said, "Is there anyone else up there?"

On October 13, 1983, in a question and answer session with women leaders of Christian religious organizations, President Ronald Reagan:

Many groups come to visit, but I believe yours is the first leadership group of Christian women to be welcomed to the White House in a long, long time, and I'm glad to be the one that's doing the greeting. I won't speculate why this hasn't been done before. I only know that as long as I'm president, your group and others who stand up for our Judeo-Christian values will be welcomed here, because you belong here....

No greater truth shines through than the one you live by every day: that preserving America must begin with faith in the God who has blessed our land. And we don't have the answers; He does. Isaiah reminded us that "the Lord opens His gates and keeps in peace the nation that trusts in Him."

I hope you won't mind my saying I think I know you all very well. Nelle Reagan, my mother, God rest her soul, had an unshakable faith in God's goodness. And while I may not have realized it in my youth, I know now that she planted that faith very deeply in me. She made the most difficult Christian message seem very easy. And, like you, she knew you could never repay one bad deed with another. Her way was forgiveness and goodness, and both began with love....

Well, thanks to Nelle Reagan, I believe in intercessory prayer. And I know that those prayers are giving me strength that I otherwise would not possess....

The Founding Fathers believed that faith in God was the key to our being a good people and America's becoming a great nation. George Washington kissed the Bible at his inauguration. And to those who would have government separate from religion, he had these words: "Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principles."

And Benjamin Franklin, at the time when they were struggling with what was to be the American Constitution, finally one day said to those who were working with him that, "Without God's help, we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel." And if we ever forget that, we're lost...

I pray that we won't lose that idea, and that's why I was motivated to proclaim or designate 1983 the Year of the Bible....

And I hope we will also recognize the true meaning of the first amendment. Its words were meant to guarantee freedom of religion to everyone. But I believe the First amendment has been twisted to the point that freedom of religion is in danger of becoming freedom from religion....

Finally, let me just say a few words about another part of freedom that is under siege: the sanctity of human life. Either the law protects human beings, or it doesn't.... Will she be denied her chance for love and life because someone decides she's too weak to warrant our help, or because someone has taken it upon himself or herself to decide the quality of her life doesn't justify keeping her alive? Is that not God's decision to make? And isn't it our duty to serve even the least of these, for in so doing we serve Him?

In 1983, in a Proclamation of a National Day of Thanksgiving, President Ronald Reagan stated:

In his remarks at Gettysburg, President Lincoln referred to ours as a "nation under God." We rejoiced in the fact that, while we have maintained separate institutions of church and state over 200 years of freedom, we have at the same time preserved reverence for spiritual beliefs.

On December 9, 1983, in recognizing Bill of Rights Day, and Human Rights Day and Week, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Saint John told us, "Ye shall know the truth and the truth shall make you free." Well, in many countries people aren't even allowed to read the Bible. It is up to us to make sure the message of hope and salvation gets through.

You know - I should have brought it with me, although maybe some of you have seen it - but I have a little book, about that big, and about that thick, that contains a verse or two, printed in small type... from the Bible. Its was smuggled out of Russia and was finally delivered to me as an example of what they do just to try and cling to their faith and belief, that when someone has a Bible, they then take just a verse so that everyone can have at least some words - a few words of Scripture - something that can be easily hidden. And that, when we think our own freedom, makes it very evident.

On December 14, 1983, in a Proclamation of a National Day of Prayer, President Ronald Reagan stated:

In 1787, a then elderly Benjamin Franklin said to George Washington as he presided over the Constitutional Convention, "I have lived, sir, a long time, and the longer I live the more convincing proofs I see of this truth, that God governs in the affairs of men. And if a sparrow cannot fall to the ground without His notice, is it probable that an empire can rise without His aid?"

With these words, Mr. Franklin called upon the Convention to open each day with prayer, and from the birth of our Republic, prayer has been vital to the whole fabric of American life.

As we crossed and settled a continent, built a nation in freedom, and endured war and critical struggles to become the leader of the free world and sentinel of liberty, we repeatedly turned to our Maker for strength and guidance in achieving the awesome tasks before us.

From the poignancy of General Washington's legendary prayer in the snow at Valley Forge to the dangerous times in which we live today, our leaders and the people of this nation have called upon Divine Providence and trusted in God's wisdom to guide us through the challenges we have faced as a people and a nation.

Whether at the landing of our forbearers in New England and Virginia, the ordeal of the Revolutionary War, the stormy days of binding the thirteen colonies into one country, the Civil War, or other moments of trial over the years, we have turned to God for His help. As we are told in II Chronicles 7:14: "If my people, will humble themselves and pray, and search for me, and turn from their wicked ways, I will hear from heaven and forgive their sins and heal their land."
Page 1068

By Joint Resolution of the Congress approved April 17, 1952, the recognition of a particular day set aside each year as a National Day of Prayer has become part of our unification as a great nation. This is a day on which the people of the United States are invited to turn to God in prayer and meditation in places of worship, in groups, and as individuals. Since 1952, each President has proclaimed annually a National Day of Prayer, resuming the tradition started by the Continental Congress.

Now, therefore, I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Thursday, May 3, 1984, as National Day of Prayer. I call upon the citizens of this great nation to gather together on that day in homes and places of worship to pray, each after his or her own manner, for unity of hearts of all mankind.

On December 24, 1983, in a Radio Address to the Nation, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The image of George Washington kneeling in prayer in the snow is one of the most famous in American history. He personified a people who knew it was not enough to depend on their own courage and goodness; they must also seek help from God, their Father and Preserver....

Some celebrate Christmas as the birthday of a great teacher and philosopher. But to other millions of us, Jesus is much more. He is divine, living assurance that God so loved the world He gave us His only begotten Son so that by believing in Him and learning to love each other we could one day be together in paradise.

On January 13, 1984, in celebrating the National Sanctity of Human Life Day, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The values and freedoms we cherish as Americans rests on our fundamental commitment to the sanctity of human life. The first of the "unalienable rights" affirmed by our Declaration of Independence is the right to life itself, a right [that] the Declaration states has been endowed by our Creator on all human beings - whether young or old, weak or strong, healthy or handicapped.

Since 1973, however, more than 15 million unborn children have died in legalized abortions - a tragedy of stunning dimensions that stands in sad contrast to our belief that each life is sacred... Abortion has denied them the first and most basic of human rights, and we are infinitely poorer for their loss.

On January 25, 1984, in his State of the Union Address, President Ronald Reagan stated:

American Quotations.txt

Each day your members observe a 200-year-old tradition meant to signify America is one nation under God. I must ask: If you can begin your day with a member of the clergy standing right here leading you in prayer, then why can't freedom to acknowledge God be enjoyed again by children in every school room across this land?

America was founded by people who believed that God was their rock of safety. I recognize we must be cautious in claiming that God is on our side, but I think it's all right to keep asking if we're on His side....

Carl Sandburg said, "I see America not in the setting sun of a black night of despair....I see America in the crimson light of a rising sun fresh from the burning, creative hand of God.

On January 26, 1984, in a Salute to Free Enterprise, President Ronald Reagan stated:

We are a nation under God. I've always believed that this blessed land was set apart in a special way, that some divine plan placed this great continent here between the oceans to be found by a people from every corner of the earth who have a special love for freedom and the courage to uproot themselves, leave homeland and friends, to come to a strange land. And coming here they created something new in all the history of mankind - a land where man is not beholden to government; government is beholden to man.

George Washington believed that religion, morality, and brotherhood were the pillars of society. He said you couldn't have morality without religion. And yet today we're told that to protect the First Amendment we must expel God, the source of all knowledge, from our children's classrooms. Well, pardon me, but the First Amendment was not written to protect the American people from religion; the First Amendment was written to protect the American people from government tyranny.

Indeed, there is nothing in the Constitution at all about public education and prayer. There is, however, something very pertinent in the act that gave birth to our public school system - a national act, if you will. It called for public education to see that our children - and quoting from that act - "learned about religion and morality."

Well, the time has come for Congress to give a majority of American families what they want for their children - a constitutional amendment making it unequivocally clear that children can hold voluntary prayer in their schools.

We can make America stronger not just economically and militarily, but also morally and spiritually. We can make our beloved country the source of all the dreams and opportunities she was placed on this good earth to provide. We need only to believe in each other and in the God who has so blessed our land.

On January 30, 1984, in speaking at the National Religious Broadcasters Convention, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Let's begin at the beginning. God is the center of our lives; the human family stands at the center of society; and our greatest hope for the future is in the faces of our children....

God's most blessed gift to His family is the gift of life. He sent us the Prince of Peace as a babe in a manger. I've said that we must be cautious in claiming God in on our side. I think the real question we must answer is, are we on His side?...

This nation fought a terrible war so that black Americans would be guaranteed their God-given rights. Abraham Lincoln recognized that we could not survive as a free land when some could decide whether others should be free or slaves. Well today another question begs to be asked: How can we survive as a free nation when some decide that others are not fit to live and should be done away with?

I believe no challenge is more important to the character of America than restoring the right to life to all human beings. Without that right, no other rights have meaning. "Suffer the little children to come unto me, and forbid them not, for such is the kingdom of God...."

I was pleased last year to proclaim 1983 the Year of the Bible. But, you know, a group called the ACLU severely criticized me for doing that. Well, I wear their indictment like a badge of honor. I believe I stand in pretty good company.

Abraham Lincoln called the Bible "the best gift God has given to man. But for it," he said, "we could not know right from wrong." Like that image of George Washington kneeling in prayer in the snow at Valley Forge, Lincoln described a people who knew it was not enough to depend on their own courage and goodness; they must also look to God their Father and Preserver. And their faith to walk with Him and trust in His Word brought them the blessings of comfort, power, and peace that they sought.

The torch of their faith has been passed from generation to generation. "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth, but the word of our God shall stand forever."

More and more Americans believe that loving God in their hearts is the ultimate value. Last year, not only were Year of the Bible activities held in every state of the union, but more than twenty-five states and 500 cities issued their own Year of the Bible proclamations. One school-teacher, Mary Gibson, in New York, raised $4,000 to buy Bibles for working people in downtown Manhattan.

Nineteen eighty-three was the year more of us read the Good Book. Can we make a resolution here today? That 1984 will be the year we put its great truths into action?

My experience in this office I hold has only deepened a belief I've held for many years: Within the covers of that single Book are all the answers to all the problems that face us today - if we'd only read and believe....

I know one thing I'm sure most of us agree on: God, source of all knowledge, should never have been expelled from our children's classrooms. The great majority of our people support voluntary prayer in schools.

We hear of cases where courts say it is dangerous to allow students to meet in Bible study or prayer clubs. And then there was the case of that kindergarten class that was reciting a verse. They said "We thank you for the flowers so sweet. We thank you for the food we eat. We thank you for the birds that sing. We thank you, God, for everything." A court of appeals ordered them to stop. They were supposedly violating the Constitution of the United States.

Well, Teddy Roosevelt told us, "The American people are slow to wrath, but when their wrath is once kindled, it burns like a consuming flame."

I think Americans are getting angry. I think they have a message, and Congress better listen. We are a government of, by, and for the people. And people want a constitutional amendment making unequivocally clear our children can hold voluntary prayer in every school across this land. If we could get God and discipline back in our schools, maybe we could get drugs and violence out....

I know that some believe that voluntary prayer in schools should be restricted to a moment of silence. We already have the right to remain silent - we can take our Fifth Amendment....

Restoring the right to life and protecting people from violence and exploitation are important responsibilities. But as members of God's family we share another, and that is helping to build a foundation of faith and knowledge to prepare our children for the challenges of life. "Train up a child in the way he should go," Solomon wrote, "and when he is old he will not depart from it."

In January of 1984, at the National Religious Broadcasters Convention, President Ronald Reagan stated:

If the Lord is our light, our strength, and our salvation, whom shall we fear? Of whom shall we be afraid? No matter where we live, we have a promise that can make all the difference, a promise from Jesus to soothe our sorrows, heal our hearts, and drive away our fears. He promised there will never be a dark night, but joy cometh in the morning. He promised if our hearts are true, His love will be as sure as sunlight. And by dying for us, Jesus showed how far our love should be ready to go: all the way....

"For God so loved the world that He gave His only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in Him should not perish but have everlasting life."

Helping each other, believing in Him, we need never be afraid. We will be part of something far more powerful, enduring, and good than all the forces here on earth. We will be part of paradise.

On February 2, 1984, at a National Prayer Breakfast, President Ronald Reagan stated:

We all in this room, I know, and we know many millions more everywhere, turn to God in prayer, believe in the power and the spirit of prayer. And yet, so often, we direct our prayers to those problems that are immediate to us, knowing that He has promised His help to us when we turn to Him. And yet, in a world today that is so torn with strife where the divisions seem to be increasing...I wonder if we have ever thought about the greatest tool that we have. The power of prayer and God's help.

If you could add together the power of prayer of the people just in this room, what would be its megatonnage? And have we maybe been neglecting...the broader [sense] toward someone in perhaps a legitimate dispute, and at the same time recognize that while the dispute will go on, we have to realize that the other individual is a child of God even as we are....

This power of prayer can be illustrated by the story that goes back to the fourth century - the monk living in a little remote village, spending most of his time in prayer or tending the garden from which he obtained his sustenance...One day he thought he heard the voice of God telling him to go to Rome. And believing that he had heard, he set out. Weeks and weeks later, he arrived there, having traveled most of the way on foot. It was at a time of a festival in Rome. They were celebrating over the Goths. He followed a crowd into the Colosseum, and then, there in the midst of this great crowd, he saw the gladiators come forth, stand before the Emperor, and say, "We who are about to die salute you." And he realized they were going to fight to the death for the entertainment of the crowds. He cried out, "In the Name of Christ, stop!" And his voice was lost in the tumult there in the great Colosseum.

And as the games began, he made his way down through the crowd and climbed over the wall and dropped to the floor of the arena. Suddenly the crowds saw this scrawny little figure making his way out to the gladiators and saying, over and over again, "In the Name of Christ, stop!" And they thought it was part of the entertainment, and at first they were amused. But then, when they realized it wasn't, they grew belligerent and angry. And as he was pleading with the gladiators, "In the Name of Christ, stop!" one of them plunged his sword into his body. And as he fell to the sand of the arena in death, his last words were, "In the Name of Christ, stop!"

And suddenly, a strange thing happened. The gladiators stood looking at this tiny form lying in the sand. A silence fell over the Colosseum. And then, someplace up in the upper tiers, an individual made his way to an exit and left, and the others began to follow. And in the dead silence, everyone left the Colosseum. That was the last battle to the death between gladiators in the Roman Colosseum. Never again did anyone kill or did men kill each other for the entertainment of the crowd.

One tiny voice that could hardly be heard above the tumult. "In the Name of Christ, stop!" It is something we could be saying to each other throughout the world today.

Now, several days ago, while I was very concerned about what I was going to say here today...I received through diplomatic channels a message from far out across the Pacific. Sometime ago, our ambassador presented to General Romulo of the Philippines the American Medal of Freedom. Not only had he been a great friend of the United States in our time of war, but then he had spent seventeen years as an ambassador here in Washington, from his country to ours. And for whatever reason, he sent this message of thanks to me for the medal that had been given, and then included the farewell statement that he had made when he left Washington, left this country, after those seventeen years.

And I had to confess, I had never been aware that there had been such a farewell message, and I'm quite sure that many of you hadn't. And so, I'm going to share it with you. I think it fits what we're talking about today. He said, "I am going home, America. For seventeen years, I have enjoyed your hospitality, visited every one of your fifty States. I can say I know you well. I admire and love America. It is my second home. What I have to say now in parting is both tribute and warning.

"Never forget, Americans, that yours is a spiritual country. Yes, I know you're a practical people. Like others, I've marveled at your factories, your skyscrapers, and your arsenals. But underlying everything else is the fact that America began as a God-loving, God-fearing, God-worshipping people, knowing that there is a spark of the divine in each one of us. It is this respect for the dignity of the human spirit which keeps America invincible.

"May you always endure and, as I say again in parting, thank you, America, and farewell. May God keep you always, and may you always keep God."

On February 6, 1984, in an address at Eureka College, President Ronald Reagan stated:

In Chambers' autobiography, Witness, he added a sequel. Chambers marked the beginning of his personal journey away from communism on the day that he was suddenly struck by the sight of his infant daughter's ear as she sat there having breakfast. And then, he said, he realized that such intricacy, such precision could be no accident, no freak of nature. He said that while he didn't know it at the time, in that moment, God - the finger of God - had touched his forehead.

On February 7, 1984, at the meeting of the National Association of Secondary School Principals, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The God who blessed us with life, gave us knowledge, and made us a good and caring people should never have been expelled from America's schools.

As we struggle to teach our children the fundamental values we hold so dear, we dare not forget that our civilization was built by men and women who placed their faith in a loving God. If Congress can begin each day with a moment of prayer and meditation, so then can our sons and daughters.

On February 12, 1984, in a Proclamation of a National Day of Prayer, President Ronald Reagan stated:

National prayer is deeply rooted in our American heritage. From the earliest days of our Republic, Americans have asked God to hear their prayers in times of sorrow and crisis and in times of bounty.

The first National Day of Prayer was proclaimed in 1775 by the Second Continental Congress. As thousands gathered in prayer in places of worship and encampments throughout the new land, the dispersed colonists found a new spirit of unity and resolve in this remarkable expression of public faith. For the first time, Americans of every religious persuasion prayed as one, asking for divine guidance in their quest for liberty and justice. Ever since, Americans have shared a special sense of destiny as a nation dedicated under God to the cause of liberty for all men.

Through the storms of Revolution, Civil War, and the great World Wars, as well as during times of disillusionment and disarray, the nation has turned to God in prayer for deliverance. We thank you for answering our call, for, surely, he has. As a nation, we have been richly blessed with his love and generosity.

On February 25, 1984, in a radio address, President Reagan explained:

From the early days of the colonies, prayer in school was practiced and revered as an important tradition. Indeed, for nearly 200 years of our nation's history, it was considered a natural expression of our religious freedom. But in 1962, the Supreme Court handed down a controversial decision prohibiting prayer in public schools.

Sometimes I can't help but feel the First Amendment is being turned on its head. Ask yourselves: Can it really be true that the First Amendment can permit Nazis and Klux Klansmen to march of public property, advocate the extermination of people of the Jewish faith and the subjugation of blacks, while the same amendment forbids our children from saying a prayer in school?

When a group of students at the Guilderland High School in Albany, New York, sought to use an empty classroom for voluntary prayer meetings, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals said no. The court thought it might be dangerous because students might be coerced into praying if they saw the football captain or student body president participating in prayer meetings....

Up to 80 percent of the American people support voluntary prayer. They understand what the founding fathers intended. The First Amendment of the Constitution was not written to protect the people from religion; that amendment was written to protect religion from government tyranny.

The amendment says, "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." What could be more clear?

The act that established our public school system called for public education to see that our children learned about religion and morality. References to God can be found in the Mayflower Compact of 1620, the Declaration of Independence, the Pledge of Allegiance, and the National Anthem. Our legal tender states, "In God We Trust."

When the Constitution was being debated at the Constitutional Convention, Benjamin Franklin rose to say, "The longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see that God governs in the affairs of men. Without His concurring aid, we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel." He asked: "Have we now forgotten this powerful Friend? Or do we imagine we no longer need His assistance?" Franklin then asked the Convention to begin its daily deliberations by asking for the assistance of Almighty God.

George Washington believed that religion was an essential pillar of a strong society. In his Farewell Address, he said, "Reason and experience both forbid us to expect that national morality can prevail in exclusion of religious principle." And when John Jay, the first Chief Justice of the United States Supreme Court, was asked in his dying hour if he had any farewell counsels to leave his children, Jay answered, "They have the Book."

But now we're told our children have no right to pray in school. Nonsense. The pendulum has swung too far toward intolerance against genuine religious freedom. It is time to redress the balance.

Former Supreme Court Justice Potter Stewart noted if religious exercises are held to be impermissible activity in schools, religion is placed at an artificial and state-created disadvantage. Permission for such exercises for those who want them is necessary if the school are truly to be neutral in the matter of religion. And a refusal to permit them is seen not as the realization of state neutrality, but rather as the establishment of a religion of secularism.

The Senate will soon vote on a constitutional amendment to permit voluntary vocal prayer in public schools. If two-thirds of the Senate approve, then we must convince the House leadership to permit a vote on the issue. I am confident that if the Congress passes our amendment this year, then the state legislatures will do likewise, and we'll be able to celebrate a great victory for our children.

Our amendment would ensure that no child be forced to recite a prayer. Indeed, it explicitly states this. Nor would that state be allowed to compose the words of any prayer. But the courts could not forbid our children from voluntary vocal prayer in their schools. And by reasserting their liberty of free religious expression, we will be helping our children understand the diversity of America's religious beliefs and practices.

If ever there was a time for you, the good people of this country, to make your voices heard, to make the mighty power of your will the decisive force in the halls of Congress, that time is now.

On March 2, 1984, at a Conservative Political Action Conference, President Ronald Reagan expressed:

If you take away the belief in a greater future, you cannot explain America - that we're a people who believed there was a promised land; we were a people who believed we were chosen by God to create a greater world....

Eric Liddell, Scotland's Olympic champion runner, said in Chariots of Fire... "So where does the power come from to see the race to its end? From within. God made me for a purpose, and I will run for His pleasure. "... If we trust in Him, keep His work, and live our lives for His pleasure, He'll give us the power we need - power to fight the good fight, to finish the race, and to keep the faith. ...

We're restoring our faith in the greatest resource this nation has - the mighty spirit of free people under God.

On March 6, 1984, at the annual convention of the National Association of Evangelicals, President Ronald Reagan stated:

There was minister who put his sermon text on the pulpit a half an hour before service. And one Sunday a smart aleck hid the last page. And the minister preached powerfully, but when he got to the words, "So Adams said to Eve," he was horrified to discover that the final sheet was gone. And riffling through the other pages, he stalled time by repeating, "So Adam said to Eve" - and then in a low voice he said, "There seems to be a missing leaf. ..."

Talking to a church audience like this reminds me of a little church in a little town in Illinois - Dixon, Illinois - that I used to attend as a boy. One sweltering Sunday morning in July, the minister told us he was going to preach the shortest sermon he had ever given. And then he said a single sentence: "If you think it's hot today, just wait. ..."

The debates over independence and the records of the Constitutional Convention make it clear that the founding fathers were sustained by their faith in God. In the Declaration of Independence itself, Thomas Jefferson wrote that all men are "... endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights. ..." And it was George Washington who said, "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, Religion and Morality are indispensable supports." So the record is clear. The first Americans proclaimed their freedom because they believed God himself had granted their liberty prayerfully, avidly seeking and humbly accepting God's blessings on their new land.

For decades, America remained a deeply religious country, thanking God in peacetime and turning to Him in moments of crisis. During the Civil War, perhaps our nation's darkest hour, Abraham Lincoln said, "I have been driven many times upon my knees by the conviction that I had nowhere else to go." Believe me, no one can serve in this office without understanding and believing exactly what he said. ...

During World War II... a rally to promote war bonds was held at Madison Square Garden in New York. ... Joe Louis, who had come from the cotton fields to become the world heavyweight prizefighting champion... now [a] fifty-four-dollar-a-month private, walked out to center stage after all those other celebrities had been there, and he said, "I know we'll win, because we're on God's side." There was a moment of silence, and then that crowd nearly took the roof off.

During the civil rights struggles of the fifties and early sixties, millions worked for equality in the name of their Creator. Civil rights leaders like Dr. Martin Luther King based all their efforts on the claim that black or white, each of us is child of God. ...

American Quotations.txt

The Almighty who gave us this great land also gave us free will, the power under God to choose our own destiny... America has begun a spiritual awakening. Faith and hope are being restored. Americans are turning back to God. Church attendance is up. Audiences for religious books and broadcasts are growing....

One of my favorite Bible quotations comes from II Chronicles: "...If my people who are called by my name humble themselves and pray and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways, then will I hear from heaven, and forgive their sins and heal their land."...

School prayer... From the early days of the American colonies, prayer in schools was practiced and revered as an important tradition. Indeed, for early two centuries of our history it was considered a natural expression of our religious freedom. Then in 1962, the Supreme Court declared school prayer illegal. Well, I firmly believe the loving God who has blessed our land and made us a good caring people should never have been expelled from America's classrooms. And the country agrees. Polls show that by a majority of 80 percent, the American people want prayer back in our schools.

We stand on firm historical and constitutional ground. During the constitutional convention, Benjamin Franklin rose to say, "The longer I live, the more convincing proofs I see that God governs the affairs of men. Without His concurring aid, we shall succeed in this political building no better than the builders of Babel." And he asked, "Have we not forgotten this powerful Friend? Or do we imagine we no longer need His assistance?" And then Franklin moved that the convention begin its daily deliberations by asking for the assistance of Almighty God.

Today, prayer remains a vital part of American public life. The Congress begins each day with prayer, and the Supreme Court begins each sitting with an invocation. Now, I just have to believe that if the members of Congress and Justices can acknowledge the Almighty, our children can too....

Saint Paul wrote a verse that I've always cherished, "Now abide faith, hope, love, these three: but the greatest of these is love." May we have faith in our God and all the good that we can do with His help.

On April 27, 1984, to Chinese community leaders in Beijing, China, President Ronald Reagan stated:

During my lifetime, I have seen the rise of fascism and communism. Both philosophies glorify the arbitrary power of the state. These ideologies held, at first, a certain fascination for some intellectuals. But both theories fail. Both deny those God-given liberties that are the inalienable right of each person on this planet; indeed, they deny the existence of God.

On May 11, 1984, as recorded in the Santa Ana Register, President Reagan confided shortly after an attempted assassination:

I just feel there is a reason God spared me...He spared me so that I can devote the rest of my days to serving God.
Page 1078

On May 20, 1984, on a School Prayer Amendment to the Constitution, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I am deeply disappointed that, although a majority of the Senate voted for it, the school prayer amendment fell short of the special two-thirds majority needed to win in the Senate today. I would like to express my heart-felt gratitude for the unprecedented outpouring of support from citizens who made their views known to their senators on this issue. And I want to thank Senator Baker, Thurmond, Helms, and Hatch for their valiant efforts to restore this revered American tradition.

This has been an important debate revealing the extent to which the freedom of religious speech has been abridged in our nation's public schools. The issue of free religious speech is not dead as a result of this vote. We have suffered a setback, but we have not been defeated. Our struggle will go on.

The courts themselves can restore a more balanced view of the First Amendment, as we have seen in some recent cases. My administration will continue our efforts to allow government to accommodate prayer and religious speech by citizens in ways that do not risk an establishment of religion. I urge the Congress to consider the equal access legislation before both Houses so that voluntary student religious groups can meet on public school property on the same terms as other student groups.

In a July 12, 1984, response to a questionnaire by The Scoreboard, Reagan gave his views on values:

In part the erosion of these values has given way to a celebration of forms of sexual expression most people reject. We will resist the efforts of some to obtain government endorsement of homosexuality.

Like so many Americans I have been disturbed at attempts to water down traditional values and even abrogate the original terms of American democracy with respect to religious freedom.

I firmly believe that freedom prospers when religion is vibrant and the rule of law under God is acknowledged.

On August 23, 1984, following the enactment of the "Equal Access Bill of 1984," President Ronald Reagan spoke at an Ecumenical Prayer Breakfast at the Reunion Arena in Dallas, Texas:

In 1962, the Supreme Court in the New York prayer case banned the...saying of prayers. In 1963, the Court banned the reading of the Bible in our public schools. From that point on, the courts pushed the meaning of the ruling ever outward, so that now our children are not allowed voluntary prayer.

We even had to pass a law - pass a special law in the Congress just a few weeks ago - to allow student prayer groups the same access to school rooms after classes that a Young Marxist Society, for example, would already enjoy with no opposition. . . .

The 1962 decision opened the way to a flood of similar suits. Once religion had been made vulnerable, a series of assaults were made in one court after another, on one issue after another.

Cases were started to argue against tax-exempt status for churches. Suits were brought to abolish the words "Under God" from the Pledge of Allegiance, and to remove "In God We Trust" from public documents and from our currency.

Without God there is no virtue because there is no prompting of the conscience. . . . without God there is a coarsening of the society; without God democracy will not and cannot long endure. . . . America needs God more than God needs America. If we ever forget that we are One Nation Under God, then we will be a Nation gone under.

On August 23, 1984, continuing his address to the 17,000 supporters at the Ecumenical Prayer Breakfast, the morning before he was nominated as the Republican candidate, President Ronald Reagan expressed:

The truth is, politics and morality are inseparable. And as morality's foundation is religion, religion and politics are necessarily related.

The frustrating thing is that those who are attacking religion claim they are doing it in the name of tolerance and freedom and open-mindedness. Question: Isn't the real truth that they are intolerant of religion? That they refuse to tolerate its importance in our lives?

In 1984, President Reagan observed:

Religion and government are inevitably related.

On January 14, 1985, in a Proclamation for National Sanctity of Human Life Day, President Ronald Reagan stated:

If America is to remain what God, in His wisdom, intended for it to be - a refuge, a safe haven for those seeking human rights - then we must once again extend the most basic human right to the most vulnerable members of the human family. We must commit ourselves to a future in which the right to life of every human being - no matter how weak, no matter how small, no matter how defenseless - is protected by our laws and public policy.

On Monday, January 21, 1985, in his Second Inaugural Address, President Ronald Reagan stated:

God bless you and welcome back. . . . There is, however, one who is not with us today: Representative Gillis Long of Louisiana left us last night. I wonder if we could all join in a moment of silent prayer. . . . Amen.

This is, as Senator Mathias told us, the 50th time that we the people have celebrated this historic occasion. When the first President, George Washington, placed his hand upon the Bible, he stood less than a single day's journey by horseback from raw, untamed wilderness. So much has changed. And yet we stand together as we did two centuries ago....

Well, with heart and hand, let us stand as one today: One people under God determined that our future shall be worthy of our past....

The time has come for a new American emancipation - a great national drive to tear down economic barriers and liberate the spirit of enterprise in the most distressed areas of our country. My friends, together we can do this, and do it we must, so help me God.

As an older American, I remember a time when people of different race, creed, or ethnic origin in our land found hatred and prejudice installed in social custom and, yes, in law. There is no story more heartening in our history than the progress that we have made toward the "brotherhood of man" that God intended for us. Let us resolve there will be no turning back or hesitation on the road to an America rich in dignity and abundant with opportunity for all our citizens.

For all our problems, our differences, we are together as of old, as we raise our voices to the God who is the Author of this most tender music. And may He continue to hold us close as we fill the world with our sound - sound in unity, affection, and love - one people under God, dedicated to the dream of freedom that He has placed in the human heart, called upon now to pass that dream on to a waiting and hopeful world....

God bless you and may God bless America.

On January 29, 1985, in a Proclamation of a National Day of Prayer, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Today our nation is at peace and is enjoying prosperity, but our need for prayer is even greater. We can give thanks to God for the ever-increasing abundance He has bestowed on us, and we can remember all those in our society who are in need of help, whether it be material assistance in the form of charity or simply a friendly word of encouragement.

We are all God's handiwork, and it is appropriate for us as individuals and as a nation to call on Him in prayer.

On January 30, 1985, President Ronald Reagan spoke at the National Religious Broadcaster's Convention held in Washington, D. C. :

And if we could get God and discipline back in our schools, maybe we could get drugs and violence out.

On January 31, 1985, at the annual National Prayer Breakfast, President Ronald Reagan stated:

You see the heroism and the goodness of man and know in a special way that we are all God's children. The clerk and the king and the communist were made in His image. We all have souls, and we all have the same problems. I'm convinced, more than ever, that man finds liberation only when he binds himself to God and commits himself to his fellow man.

On February 6, 1985, President Reagan delivered his State of the Union Address:

I am pleased, that after four years of united effort, the American people have brought forth a nation renewed - stronger, freer, and more secure than before....

Tonight, America is stronger because of the values that we hold dear. We believe faith and freedom must be our guiding stars, for they show us truth, they make us brave, they give us hope and leave us wiser than we were.

Our progress began not in Washington, D.C., but in the hearts of our families, communities, work places and voluntary groups, which together are unleashing the invincible spirit of one great nation under God....

No citizen need tremble, nor the world shudder, if a child stands in a classroom and breathes a prayer. We ask you again, give children back a right they had for a century and a half or more.

In 1985, President Reagan issued a National Sanctity of Human Life Proclamation, in which he stated:

Our laws have sought to foster and protect human life at all of its stages.

On April 16, 1985, at the Conference on Religious Liberty, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I believe that the most essential element of our defense of freedom is our insistence on speaking out for the cause of religious liberty.

On May 6, 1985, to the citizens of Hambach, in the Federal Republic of Germany, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Each of us, each of you, is made in the most enduring, powerful image of Western civilization. We're made in the image of God, the image of God the Creator.

On May 11, 1985, in a Radio Address to the Nation on Mother's Day, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I find my thoughts turning to my own mother, Nelle Reagan. She was a truly remarkable woman - ever so strong in her determination yet always tender, always giving of herself to others. She never found time in her life to complain; she was too busy living those values she sought to impart in my brother and myself. She was the greatest influence on my life, and as I think of her this weekend I remember the words of Lincoln, "All that I am, or hope to be, I owe to my mother."

On July 2, 1985, in addressing the freed hostages of a hijacked Trans World Airlines jet, President Ronald Reagan stated:

And in closing, I'd like to say that many of my fellow hostages share with me the profound conviction that it was our Father, God, that brought us through this ordeal safely. And in the spirit of giving credit where credit is due, I just wonder if you'd join with me in a brief word of thanks to the Lord.

Our Father, we just gather before you in humble adoration and praise and thanks. For we know that it was your strong hands that held us safely through this ordeal, that gave us the courage and the strength to withstand the darkest times. And, so, Father, we just thank you for this, and we give you all the praise and the glory, through Jesus. Amen.

On July 25, 1985, in a Time Magazine interview with Hugh Sidney, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I have a very real and deep faith. Probably, I'm indebted to my mother for that. And I figure that He will make a decision, and I can't doubt that whatever He decides will be the right decision.

On January 6, 1986, in a message on the Observance of Orthodox Christmas, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The date that you and we celebrate Christmas may be different. But the meaning and magnificence of what we celebrate - the divine birth of one man, hero, strong yet tender, Prince of Peace - is the same. This birth brought forth good tidings of great joy to all people. For unto us was born this day a Savior who is Christ the Lord.

On January 28, 1986, in his address to the Nation after the Challenger Space Shuttle disaster, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The crew of the space shuttle Challenger honored us by the manner in which they lived their lives. We will never forget them, nor the last time we saw them, this morning, as they prepared for their journey and waved goodbye and "slipped the surly bonds of earth," to "touch the face of God."

On April 19, 1986, in a Proclamation for Education Day 1986, President Ronald Reagan stated:

No true education can leave out the moral and spiritual dimensions of human life.

On May 1, 1986, in a Proclamation for a National Day of Prayer, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Prayer, of course, is deeply personal: The way in which it finds expression depends on our individual dispositions as well as on our religious convictions. Just as our religious institutions are guaranteed freedom in this land, so also do we cherish the diversity of our faiths and the freedom afforded to each of us to pray according to the promptings of our individual conscience.

On June 11, 1986, in remarking to participants of the Young Astronauts Program, President Ronald Reagan stated:

When we come to the edge of our known world, we're standing on the shores of the infinite. Dip your hand in that limitless sea; you're touching the mystery of God's universe.

On July 3, 1986 at the relighting of the Statue of Liberty, President Ronald Reagan expressed:

I've always thought that a Providential Hand had something to do with the founding of this country, that God had His reasons for placing this land here between two great oceans to be found by a certain kind of people.

On July 29, 1986, at a White House briefing for Republican student interns on Soviet-United States Relations, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The purpose toward which everything else we do in this town is - or should be - aimed...Creating a peaceful and safe world in which we can all securely enjoy the rights and the freedoms that have been given to us by God.

On December 22, 1986, upon signing the 1987 National Day of Prayer Proclamation, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Many of us have been taught to pray by people we love. In my case, it was my mother. I learned quite literally at her knee. My mother gave me a great deal, but nothing she gave me was more important than that special gift, the knowledge of the happiness and solace to be gained by talking to the Lord.

The way we pray depends both on our religious convictions and our own individual dispositions, but the light of prayer has a common core. It is our hopes and our aspirations, our sorrows and fears, our deep remorse and renewed resolve, our thanks and joyful praise, and most especially our love, all turned toward a loving God.

On May 20, 1987, upon receiving the Department of Education Report on Improving Education, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I remember one day I was sitting in the principal's office. I wasn't invited there for a social visit. And he said something that fortunately stuck in my mind, and I remembered. He said, "Reagan, I don't care what you think of me now. I'm only concerned with what you'll think of me 15 years from now."

And I thank the Lord that I had the opportunity to tell him shortly before he did how I felt about him 15 years afterward, after that visit in his office. And he was a very great influence on my life.

On May 21, 1987, in a Proclamation of Prayer for Peace, Memorial Day, President Ronald Reagan stated:

We pray for peace and for devotion and strength of soul to build it and protect it always. We pray and we resolve to keep holy the memory of those who have died for our country and to make their cause inseparably our own. We pray and we promise, so that one day Taps will sound again for the young and the brave and the good.

On July 3, 1987, announcing America's Economic Bill of Rights, President Ronald Reagan stated:

We're still Jefferson's children, still believe that freedom is the unalienable right of all of God's children.

On September 8, 1987, in remarking on Administration goals to Senior Presidential Appointees, President Ronald Reagan stated:

And may I conclude with a little Irish blessing - although, some suggest it's a curse: May those who love us, love us. And those who don't love us, may God turn their hearts. And if He doesn't turn their hearts, may He turn their ankles so we'll know them by their limping.

On January 25, 1988, the 100th Congress of the United States of America, by a Joint Resolution, declared the first Thursday of each May to be recognized as a National Day of Prayer. Wholly concurring with Congress, President Ronald Reagan the bill into law:

PUBLIC LAW 100-307 - MAY 5, 1988
One Hundredth Congress of the United States of America
AT THE SECOND SESSION
Begun and held at the City of Washington on Monday, the twenty-fifth day of January, one thousand nine hundred and eighty-eight
AN ACT

To provide for setting aside the first Thursday in May as the date on which the National Day of Prayer is celebrated.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the joint resolution entitled "Joint Resolution to provide for setting aside an appropriate day as a National Day of Prayer," approved April 17, 1952 (Public Law 82-324; 66 Stat. 64), is amended by striking "a suitable day each year, other than a Sunday," and inserting in lieu thereof "the first Thursday in May in each year."

Speaker of the House of Representatives
President of the Senate Pro Tempore
APPROVED
May-5 1988
Ronald Reagan.

On January 25, 1988, at a fund-raising luncheon for Governor Richard L. Thornburg, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Ben Franklin once said, "Work as if you were to live a hundred years. Pray as if you were to die tomorrow." And ever since he told me that, I've been doing just fine.

On February 3, 1988, in a Proclamation of a National Day of Prayer, President Ronald Reagan stated:

The First Continental Congress made its first act
Page 1085

a prayer - the beginning of a great tradition. We have then, a lesson from the founders of our land, those giants of soul and intellect whose courageous pledge of life and fortune and sacred honor, and whose "firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence," have ever guided and inspired Americans and all who would fan freedom's mighty flames and live in "freedom's holy light." That lesson is clear: That in the winning of freedom and in the living of life, the first step is prayer....

Let us, young and old, join together, as did the First Continental Congress, in the first step - humble, heartfelt prayer. Let us do so for the Love of God and His great goodness, in search of His guidance, and the grace of repentance, in seeking His blessings, His peace, and the resting of His kind and holy hands on ourselves, our Nation, our friends in the defense of freedom, and all mankind, now and always.

On February 4, 1988, at the annual National Prayer Breakfast, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Our forefathers drew on the wisdom and strength of God when they turned a vast wilderness into a blessed land of plenty called the United States of America. God has truly blessed this country, but we never should fall into the trap that would detract from the universality of God's gift. It is for all mankind. God's love is the hope and the light of the world.

On May 18, 1988, at the U.S. Coast Guard Academy Commencement Ceremony, New London, Connecticut, President Ronald Reagan stated:

It's our earnest prayer to serve America in peace. It's our solemn commitment to defend her in a time of war.

On June 3, 1988, to members of the Royal Institute of International Affairs, London, England, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Our faith is in a higher law. Yes, we believe in prayer and its power. And like the Founding Fathers of both our lands, we hold that humanity was meant not to be dishonored by the all-powerful state, but to live in the image and likeness of Him who made us.

On July 28, 1988, at the Student Congress on Evangelism, President Ronald Reagan stated:

If Benjamin Franklin rose to invoke the Almighty as the Constitution itself was being drafted, if the Congress of the United States opens each day with prayer, then isn't it time we let God back into the classroom?...

I grew up in a home where I was taught to believe in intercessory prayer. I know it's those prayers and millions like them that are building high and strong the cathedral of freedom that we call America, those prayers and millions like them that will always keep our country secure and make her a force for good in this too troubled world....

Whenever I consider the history of this nation,
Page 1086

I'm struck by how deeply imbued with faith the American people were, even from the very first. Many of the first settlers came for the express purpose of worshipping in freedom.

Historian Samuel Morrison wrote of one such group: "Doubting nothing and fearing no man, they undertook all to set all crooked ways straight and create a new Heaven and Earth. If they were not permitted to do that in England, they would find some other place to establish their city of God." Well, that place was this broad and open land we call America.

On September 22, 1988, at a Republican Party Rally, Waco, Texas, President Ronald Reagan stated:

When the liberals say "family," they mean "Big Brother in Washington." When we say "family," we mean "honor thy father and mother."

On October 14, 1988, in congratulating the crew of the Space shuttle Discovery, President Ronald Reagan stated:

This is the mission for which our nation itself was created, and we ask for God's guidance. America's as large as the universe, as infinite as space, as limitless as the vision and courage of her people.

On November 11, 1988, at the Veteran's Day Ceremony at the Vietnam Veterans Memorial, President Ronald Reagan stated:

We have faith that as He does all His sacred children, the Lord will bless you and keep you, the Lord will make His face to shine upon you and give you peace, now and forevermore.

On December 1, 1988, at a dinner honoring Representative Jack F. Kemp of New York, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I believe we really can, however, say that God did give mankind virtually unlimited gifts to invent, produce and create. And for that reason alone, it would be wrong for governments to devise a tax structure that suppresses and denies those gifts....

And come January, when I saddle up and ride into the sunset it will be with the knowledge that we've done great things. We kept faith with a promise as old as this land we love and as big as the sky. A brilliant vision of America as a shining city upon a hill. Thanks to all of you, and with God's help, America's greatest chapter is still to be written, for the best is yet to come.

On December 16, 1988, in his remarks upon his departure from the University of Virginia, Charlottesville, President Ronald Reagan stated:

Help one another, trust in yourselves, and have faith in God and you'll find more joy and happiness than you could imagine.

On January 11, 1989, in his Farewell Address to the Nation, President Ronald Reagan stated:

American Quotations.txt

I've spoken of the shining city all my political life, but I don't know if I ever quite communicated what I saw when I said it. But in my mind it was a tall, proud city built on rocks stronger than oceans, windswept, God-blessed, and teeming with people of all kinds living in harmony and peace....

I am warning of an eradication of the American memory that could result ultimately in an erosion of the American spirit.

On January 12, 1989, at the Armed Forces Farewell Salute, Camp Springs, Maryland, President Ronald Reagan stated:

On behalf of all America, I thank you and pray God that He may bless you now and forever.

On January 14, 1989, in his Final Radio Address to the Nation, President Ronald Reagan stated:

I've often recalled one group of early settlers making a treacherous crossing of the Atlantic on a small ship when their leader, a minister, noted that perhaps their venture would fail and they would become a byword, a footnote to history. But perhaps, too, with God's help, they might found a new world, a city upon a hill, a light unto nations.

President Ronald Reagan declared:

There are times when I'm in church, I think God might recognize the magnitude of my responsibility and give me an extra portion of His grace...and I don't feel guilty for feeling that way.

Within the covers of the Bible are all the answers for all the problems men face. The Bible can touch hearts, order minds and refresh souls.

May we have faith in our God and all the good we can do with His help. May we stand firm in the hope of making America all that she can be - a nation of opportunity and prosperity and a force for peace and good will among nations.

President Ronald Reagan wrote:

The family has always been the cornerstone of American society. Our families nurture, preserve, and pass on to each succeeding generation the values we share and cherish, values that are the foundation for our freedoms. In the family we learn our first lessons of God and man, love and discipline, rights and responsibilities, human dignity and human frailty.

Our families give us daily examples of these lessons being put into practice. In raising and instructing our children, in providing personal and compassionate care for the elderly, in maintaining the spiritual strength of religious commitment among our people - in these and other ways, America's families make immeasurable contributions to America's well-being.

Today more than ever, it is essential that these contributions not be taken for granted and that each of us remember that the strength of our families is vital to the strength of our nation.

We cannot diminish the value of one category of human life - the unborn - without diminishing the value of all human life.... There is no cause more important.

On June 22, 1990 at the annual board meeting of the Heritage Foundation, Carmel, California, Ronald Reagan stated:

You may think this a little mystical, and I've said it many times before, but I believe there was a divine plan to place this great continent here between two oceans to be found by peoples from every corner of the Earth. I believe we were preordained to carry the torch of freedom for the world.

On July 15, 1991, at the Captives Nations Week Conference, Los Angeles, California, Ronald Reagan stated:

Our founding documents proclaim to the world that freedom is not the sole prerogative of a chosen few. It is the universal right of all God's children.

On November 4, 1991, at the dedication of the Ronald Reagan Presidential Library in California, Ronald Reagan stated:

My optimism comes not just from my strong faith in God, but from my strong and enduring faith in man.

On March 6, 1992, at a tribute to his wife, Nancy Reagan, at their 40th Wedding Anniversary, Ronald Reagan stated:

With Nancy, I soon realized, my life was complete. With her, nothing was impossible.... When I needed her most, she was with me. On a fateful day in March 1981, an assassin's bullet came within an inch of my heart. But perhaps it didn't come closer because Nancy was already there, in my heart, making it stronger. Her love washed away the pain. She rescued me, prodded me during the hard work of recovery, bringing me back to a normal and healthy life....

I always try to be there for the woman who has given so much to me. She lost both her parents when she was First Lady. I was very fond of them, and quite grateful they produced such a wonderful daughter. In fact, whenever Nancy's birthday came, I sent my mother-in-law flowers. I also removed the mother-in-law jokes from my speeches! I remember holding Nancy's hand as we whispered prayers when she battled cancer....

I'll always be grateful that Nancy was at my side along my chosen trails.

On August 17, 1992, at the Republican National Convention, Houston, Texas, Ronald Reagan stated:

Whether we come from poverty or wealth; whether we are Afro-American or Irish-American; Christian or Jewish, from big cities or small towns, we are all equal in the eyes of God....

May all of you as Americans never forget your heroic origins, never fail to seek divine guidance, and never lose your natural, God-given optimism....

My fellow Americans, on behalf of both of us, goodbye, God bless each and every one of you, and God bless this country we love.

On December 4, 1992, in a message entitled, "Democracy's Next Battle," delivered at the Oxford Union Society, Oxford, England, Ronald Reagan stated:

At the height of World War II, Sir Winston Churchill reminded Britons that, "These are not dark days; these are great days - the greatest days our country has ever lived; and we must all thank God that we have been allowed, each of us according to our stations, to play a part in making these days memorable in the history of our race.

On January 13, 1993, at the Presidential Medal of Freedom Ceremony at the White House, Ronald Reagan stated:

Presidents come and go. History comes and goes, but principles endure and insure future generations to defend liberty - not a gift from government, but a blessing from our Creator.

On November 5, 1994, in a hand-written letter to the American people, Ronald Reagan stated:

I intend to live the remainder of the years God gives me on this earth doing the things I have always done. I will continue to share life's journey with my beloved Nancy and my family....
When the Lord calls me home, whenever that may be,
I will leave with the greatest love for this country of ours and eternal optimism for its future. I now begin the journey that will lead me into the sunset of my life. I know that for America there will always be a bright dawn ahead. Thank you, my friends. May God always bless you.

Schaeffer, Francis August (1912-1983), was a renowned philosopher, author and commentator. He wrote in his book, A Christian Mani festo:

It follows from [Samuel] Rutherford's thesis that citizens have a moral obligation to resist unjust and tyrannical government. While we must always be subject to the office of the magistrate, we are not to be subject to the man in that office who commands that which is contrary to the Bible.

Rutherford suggested that there are three appropriate levels of resistance: First, he must defend himself by protest (in contemporary society this would most often be by legal action); second, he must flee if at all possible; and third, he may use force, if necessary, to defend himself.

One should not employ force if he may save himself by flight; nor should one employ flight if he can save himself and defend himself by protest and the employment of constitutional means of redress.
Rutherford illustrated this pattern of resistance from the life of David [fleeing from King Saul] as it is recorded in the Old Testament.

The civil government, as all life, stands under the Law of God. . . . when any office commands that which is contrary to the Word of God, those who hold that office abrogate their authority and they are not to be obeyed.

[Justice is] based on God's written Law, back through the New Testament to Moses' written Law; and the content and authority of that written Law is rooted back to Him who is the final reality. Thus, neither church nor state were equal to, let alone above, that Law. The base for law is not divided, and no one has the right to place anything, including king, state or church, above the contents of God's Law.

In Escape from Reason, Francis A. Schaeffer wrote:

Modern man has not only thrown away Christian theology, he has thrown away the possibility of what our forefathers had as a basis for morality and law.

New Mexico, State of (January 6, 1912), was the 47th State admitted into the Union. The Constitution of the State of New Mexico, adopted 1911, stated:

Preamble. We, the People of New Mexico, grateful to Almighty God for the blessings of liberty.

Article II, Section 2. Every man shall be free to worship God according to the dictates of his own conscience.

Arizona, State of (February 14, 1912), was the 48th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Arizona, adopted December 12, 1911, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of the State of Arizona, grateful to Almighty God for our liberties, do ordain this Constitution.

Article II, Section 12. Liberty of Conscience. The liberty of conscience secured by the provisions of this Constitution shall not be so construed as to excuse acts of licentiousness.

. . . nor shall any person be incompetent as a witness or juror in consequence of his opinion on matters of religion, nor be questioned touching his religious belief in any court of justice to affect the weight of his testimony.

Article II, Section 26. Bearing Arms. The right of the individual citizen to bear arms in defense of himself or the State shall not be impaired.

Article XI, Section 7. Sectarian Instruction. . . . The liberty of conscience hereby secured shall not be so construed as to justify practices or conduct inconsistent with the good order, peace, morality, or safety of the State, or with the rights of others.

Article XX. Ordinance. First. Toleration of Religious Sentiment. Perfect toleration of religious sentiment shall be secured to every inhabitant of this State, and no inhabitant of this State shall ever be molested in person or property on account of his or her mode of religious worship, or lack of the same.

Second. Polygamy. Polygamous or plural marriages, or polygamous co-habitation, are forever prohibited within the State.

Article XXVIII, Section 2. Requiring this State to preserve, protect and enhance English. Section 2. This State and all political subdivisions of this State shall take all reasonable steps to preserve, protect and enhance the role of the English language as the official language of the State of Arizona.

Arizona, Motto of The State of (February 14, 1912), originally adopted by the territory in 1863, stated:

Di tat Deus (God Enriches).

Braun, Wernher Magnus Maximilian von (March 23, 1912-June 16, 1977), was the director of NASA; the U.S. guided missile program; and founded the National Space Institute, 1975. He was known as the "Father of the American Space Program." He earned a Ph.D. from the University of Berlin, and went on to develop the famed V-2 rocket during World War II. In 1945, he emigrated from Germany to the United States; became a citizen, 1955; and on January 31, 1958, launched the first U.S. satellite, Explorer I.

Wernher von Braun, one of the top space scientists in the world, stated:

In this age of space flight, when we use the modern tools of science to advance into new regions of human activity, the Bible - this grandiose, stirring history of the gradual revelation and unfolding of the moral law - remains in every way an up-to-date book.

Our knowledge and use of the laws of nature that enable us to fly to the Moon also enable us to destroy our home planet with the atom bomb. Science itself does not address the question whether we should use the power at our disposal for good or for evil.

The guidelines of what we ought to do are furnished in the moral law of God. It is no longer enough that we pray that God may be with us on our side. We must learn to pray that we may be on God's side.

In the foreword to his Anthology on the Creation and Design exhibited in Nature, Wernher von Braun stated:

Manned space flight is an amazing achievement, but it has opened for mankind thus far only a tiny door for viewing the awesome reaches of space. An outlook through this peephole at the vast mysteries of the universe should only confirm our belief in the certainty of its Creator.

I find it as difficult to understand a scientist who does not acknowledge the presence of a superior rationality behind the existence of the universe as it is to comprehend a theologian who would deny the advance of science.

In May of 1974, Wernher von Braun, in a published article, stated:

One cannot be exposed to the law and order of the universe without concluding that there must be design and purpose behind it all... The better we understand the intricacies of the universe and all it harbors, the more reason we have found to marvel at the inherent design upon which it is based...

To be forced to believe only one conclusion - that everything in the universe happened by chance - would violate the very objectivity of science itself... What random process could produce the brains of a man or the system of the human eye?...

They (evolutionists) challenge science to prove the existence of God. But must we really light a candle to see the sun?... They say they cannot visualize a Designer. Well, can a physicist visualize an electron?... What strange rationale makes some physicists accept the inconceivable electron as real while refusing to accept the reality of a Designer on the ground that they cannot conceive Him?...

It is in scientific honesty that I endorse the presentation of alternative theories for the origin of the universe, life and man in the science classroom. It would be an error to overlook the possibility that the universe was planned rather than happening by chance.

Cheever, John (May 27, 1912-June 18, 1982), was an American author. In 1958 he won the National Book award for writing The Wapshot Chronicle. His other works include: The Wapshot Scandal; Bullet Park; The Way Some People Live; The Brigadier and the Golf Widow.

In The Wapshot Chronicle, 1957, John Cheever wrote:

Fear tastes like a rusty knife and do not let her into your house. Courage tastes of blood. Stand up straight. Admire the world. Relish the love of a gentle woman. Trust in the Lord.

Pope John Paul I (October 17, 1912-September 30, 1978), whose given name was Albino Luciani, was pope of the Roman Catholic church for 34 days before his sudden death. Known for his humble and friendly manner, he stated in the homily of the mass celebrating his installation, September 3, 1978:

If all the sons and daughters of the Church would know how to be tireless missionaries of the Gospel, a new and flowering of holiness and renewal would spring up, in this world that thirsts for love and for truth.

Nixon, Richard Milhous (January 9, 1913-April 22, 1994), was the 37th President of the United States, 1969-74, resigned; his administration U. S. ended involvement in the Vietnam War, 1973;

American Quotations.txt

26th Amendment was added to the U.S. Constitution, 1971, granting 18-years-olds the right to vote; Apollo 11 astronauts took first walk on the moon, July 20, 1969; Republican Presidential candidate, 1960, losing to John F. Kennedy by the smallest margin ever in a presidential election; Vice-President under Dwight D. Eisenhower, 1952-60; U.S. Senator, 1950-52; U.S. Representative, 1946-50; Lieutenant Commander in the U.S. Navy during World War II; married Patricia Ryan, 1940; graduated third in his class from Duke University Law School, North Carolina; graduated second in his class from Whittier College, California, having been president of the student body.

On October 1, 1955, in calling to order a meeting of the National Security Council following President Eisenhower's heart attack, Vice-President Richard Nixon stated:

Gentlemen, as we all know, it is a custom of the Cabinet to open with a silent prayer. While this has not been the practice of the Security Council, may I propose a moment of silent prayer of thanksgiving for the marvelous record of recovery the President has made up to this hour.

On Monday, January 20, 1969, in his First Inaugural Address, President Richard M. Nixon stated:

Standing in this same place a third of a century ago, Franklin Delano Roosevelt addressed a nation ravaged by depression and gripped in fear. He could say in surveying the Nation's troubles: "They concern, thank God, only material things."...

No man can be fully free while his neighbor is not. To go forward at all is to go forward together. This means black and white together as one nation, not two. The laws have caught up with our conscience. What remains is to give life to what is in the law: to insure at last that as all are born equal in dignity before God, all are born equal in dignity before man....

I have taken an oath in the presence of God and my countrymen to uphold and defend the Constitution of the United States. To that oath I now add this sacred commitment: I shall consecrate my Office, my energies, and all the wisdom I can summon to the cause of peace among nations. Let this message be heard by strong and weak alike:

The peace we seek - the peace we seek to win - is not victory over any other people but the peace that comes "with healing in its wings"....

Only a few short weeks ago we shared the glory of man's first sight of the world as God sees it, as a single sphere reflecting light in the darkness. As the Apollo astronauts flew over the moon's gray surface on Christmas Eve, they spoke to us the beauty of earth - and in that voice so clear across the lunar distance, we heard them invoke God's blessing on its goodness....

Let us go forward, firm in our faith, steadfast in our purpose, cautious of the dangers, but sustained by our confidence in the will of God.

On Saturday, January, 20, 1973, in his Second Inaugural Address, President Richard Milhous Nixon stated:

We have the chance today to do more than ever before in our history to make life better in America - to ensure better education, better health, better housing, better transportation, a cleaner environment - to restore respect for law, to make our communities more livable - and to insure the God-given right of every American to full and equal opportunity....

American Quotations.txt

We shall answer to God, to history, and to our conscience for the way in which we use these years....

Today, I ask your prayers that in the years ahead I may have God's help in making decisions that are right for America, and I pray for your help so that together we may be worthy of our challenge....

Let us go forward from here confident in hope, strong in our faith in one another, sustained by our faith in God who created us, and striving always to serve His purpose.

On Thursday, August 8, 1974, in a televised address to the nation, President Richard M. Nixon announced his resignation from office:

I have never been a quitter. To leave office before my term is completed is abhorrent to every instinct in my body. But as President, I must put the interest of America first. America needs a full-time President and a full-time Congress, particularly at this time with problems we face at home and abroad.

To continue to fight through the months ahead for my personal vindication would almost totally absorb the time and attention of both the President and the Congress in a period when our entire focus should be on the great issues of peace abroad and prosperity without inflation at home.

Therefore, I shall resign the Presidency effective at noon tomorrow. Vice-President Ford will be sworn in as President at that hour in this office. As I recall the high hopes for America with which we began this second term, I feel a great sadness that I will not be here to achieve those hopes....

To those who have stood with me during these past difficult months, to my family, my friends, to many others who joined in supporting my cause because they believed it was right, I will be eternally grateful for your support....

To have served in this office is to have felt a very personal sense of kinship with each and every American. In leaving it, I do so with this prayer: May God's grace be with you in all the days ahead.

On Thursday, August 8, 1974, in a private farewell to the members of his Cabinet, members of the White House Staff and friends, President Richard M. Nixon stated:

Mistakes, yes. But for personal gain, never. You did what you believed in. Sometimes right, sometimes wrong....

Nobody will ever write a book, probably, about my mother. Well, I guess all of you would say this about you mother - my mother was a saint. And I think of her, two boys dying to tuberculosis, nursing four others in order that she could take care of my older brother for 3 years in Arizona, and seeing each of them die, and when they died, it was like one of her own. Yes, she will have no books written about her, but she was a saint....

Always give your best, never get discouraged, never be petty; always remember others may hate you, but those who hate you don't win unless you hate them, and then you destroy yourself....

I can only say to each and every one of you, we come from many faiths...but really the same God...you will be in our hearts and you will be in our prayers.

Ford, Gerald Rudolph (b. July 14, 1913), became the 38th President of the United States, 1974-77, after Vice-President Spiro Agnew resigned, and President Nixon resigned; the only person to succeed to that office without being elected; U.S. Representative, 1948-73, being elected House Minority Leader in 1964; married Betty Bloomer, 1948; practiced law in Grand Rapids, Michigan, 1945-48; served in U.S. Navy during World War II, 1941-45; graduated from Yale Law School, 1940; coached at Yale University; attended the University of Michigan on a football scholarship, being named Most Valuable Player; the first Eagle Scout President; given the name Leslie Lynch King, Jr. at his birth, his stepfather renamed him Gerald Rudolph Ford, Jr.

On August 9, 1974, in the East Room at the White House, Vice-President Gerald R. Ford took the Presidential Oath of Office:

I, Gerald R. Ford, do solemnly swear that I will faithfully execute the Office of President of the United States, and will to the best of my ability, preserve, protect and defend the Constitution of the United States, so help me God.

On Friday, August 9, 1974, after swearing in as the 38th President of the United States, Gerald R. Ford addressed Chief Justice Warren E. Burger, members of Congress and the citizens of America:

I am acutely aware that you have not elected me as your President by your ballots, and so I ask you to confirm me as your President with your prayers. And I hope that such prayers will also be the first of many....

Our Constitution works; our great Republic is a Government of laws and not of men. Here the people rule. But there is a Higher Power, by whatever name we honor Him, who ordains not only righteousness but love, not only justice but mercy.

As we bind up the internal wounds of Watergate, more painful and more poisonous than those of foreign wars, let us restore the Golden Rule to our political process, and let brotherly love purge our hearts of suspicion and of hate.

In the beginning, I asked you to pray for me. Before closing, I ask again your prayers, for Richard Nixon and his family. May our former President, who brought peace to millions, find it for himself. May God bless and comfort his wonderful wife and daughters, whose love and loyalty will forever be a shining legacy to all who bear the lonely burdens of the White House....

I now solemnly reaffirm my promise I made to you last December 6; to uphold the Constitution, to do what is right as God gives me to see the right, and to do the very best I can for America. God helping me, I will not let you down.

On Monday, August 12, 1974, in his First Address to Congress, President Gerald R. Ford stated:

I am not here to make an inaugural address. The Nation needs action, not words. Nor will this be a formal report of the State of the Union. God willing, I will have at least three more chances to do that.... I do not want a honeymoon with you. I want a good marriage.

On Sunday, September 8, 1974, in announcing his decision to pardon former President Nixon, President Gerald R. Ford stated:

To procrastinate, to agonize, and to wait for a more favorable turn of events that may never come or more compelling external pressures that may as well be wrong as right, is itself a decision of sorts and a weak and potentially dangerous course for a President to follow. I have promised to uphold the Constitution, to do what is right as God gives me to see the right, and to do the very best that I can for America.

I have asked your help and your prayers, not only when I became President but many times since. The Constitution is the supreme law of our land and it governs our actions as citizens. Only the laws of God, which govern our consciences, are superior to it.

As we are a Nation under God, so I am sworn to uphold our laws with the help of God. And I have sought such guidance and searched my own conscience with special diligence to determine the right thing for me to do....

I do believe, with all my heart and mind and spirit, that I, not as President, but as a humble servant of God, will receive justice without mercy if I fail to show mercy.

On September 8, 1974, in Presidential Proclamation 4311, President Gerald R. Ford stated:

Now, Therefore, I, Gerald R. Ford, President of the United States, pursuant to the pardon power conferred upon me by Article II, Section 2, of the Constitution, have granted and by these presents do grant a full, free, and absolute pardon unto Richard Nixon for all offenses against the United States which he, Richard Nixon, has committed or may have committed or taken part in during the period from January 20, 1969 through August 9, 1974.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this eighth day of September, in the year of Our Lord nineteen hundred and seventy-four, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and ninety ninth. Gerald R. Ford.

On Thursday, December 5, 1974, in a National Day of Prayer Proclamation, President Gerald R. Ford, stated:

Without God there could be no American form of government, nor an American way of life. Recognition of the Supreme Being is the first - the most basic - expression of Americanism. Thus the founding fathers of America saw it, and thus with God's help, it will continue to be.

Luckhoo, Sir Lionel Alfred (1914-December 12, 1997), was the ambassador of Barbados and Guyana, the only person to have been an ambassador for two sovereign nations simultaneously. He was knighted twice by the Queen of England, served as Lord Mayor of Georgetown, Guyana, and presided as Judge of the Supreme Court of Guyana. Sir Lionel Luckhoo held the distinction of being acknowledged in the Guinness Book of World Records as the world's most successful criminal attorney, with over 245 successive murder acquittals.

Sir Lionel Luckhoo had spoken at the United Nations, to presidents, kings, parliaments, bar associations, cabinets, etc., all over the world. He wrote several books, which he gave away gratis. After having diligently studied Buddha, Confucius, Mohammed and numerous other religious leaders, Sir Lionel accepted Jesus Christ as his personal Lord and Saviour on November 7, 1978. He explained:

The bones of Muhammad are in Medina, the bones of Confucius are in Shantung, the cremated bones of Buddha are in Nepal. Thousands pay pilgrimages to worship at their tombs which contain their bones. But in Jerusalem there is a cave cut into the rock. This is the tomb of Jesus. IT IS EMPTY! YES, EMPTY! BECAUSE HE IS RISEN! He died, physically and historically. He arose from the dead, and now sits at the right hand of God.

Wisconsin State Court (1916), in the case of State v. District Board of Joint School District Number 6, 162, Wis. 482, 156 N.W. 477 (Wis. 1916), stated:

The fact that certain persons desire to attend graduation exercises with their children, and that they say being compelled to enter a church of a different denomination from that to which they belong is violative of their assured rights of conscience, does not make it so... The individual must decide for himself whether his conscience tells him that he must not frequent a certain place. If it does, he should punctiliously regard its behests and stay away. But the court cannot turn casuist further than to determine whether a legal right has been invaded in any given case. Neither can it say that a thing offends against conscience when there is no substantial reason why it should. It is not sufficient for a person to say: "This thing is contrary to what my conscience tells me to be right therefore it must be stopped." The individual cannot foreclose inquiries into the reasonableness of his request by his bare assertion. Some consciences are very tender and very highly developed so much so that the possessor regards as being wrong many things that the law regards as harmless. Some refrain from playing cards for amusement, some from dancing, some from attending places of amusement, and some from all these things, because they consider it wrong to participate in or countenance them. The law regards none of these things as being essentially wrong in itself. At the same time it recognizes the right of anyone to stay away from them where the prompting of conscience indicate that it would be wrong to attend.

Koop, Charles Everett, M.D. (b. October 14, 1916), was U.S. Surgeon General during President Ronald Reagan's Administration, 1982-89; surgeon-in-chief of Children's Hospital of Philadelphia, 1948-81; professor of pediatric surgery and pediatrics at the University of Pennsylvania School of Medicine; and served on the board of directors of MAP International, a relief agency to undeveloped countries.

In 1977, Dr. C. Everett Koop delivered an address entitled "The Slide to Auschwitz," to The American Academy of Pediatrics, upon receiving the William E. Ladd Medal, the highest honor given to pediatric surgeons in the country. In this address, published in The Human Life Review, Spring, 1977, C. Everett Koop, M.D., stated:

Leo Alexander, a Boston psychiatrist, was at one time (1946-47) consultant to the Secretary of War on duty with the office of chief counsel for war crimes in Nuremberg. In a remarkable paper (which appeared in the New England Journal of Medicine, July 4, 1949, 241: 39-47), "Medical Science Under Dictatorship," he outlined the problem. Let me just mention the highlights of Dr. Alexander's presentation. The guiding philosophical principle of recent dictatorships, including that of the Nazis, was Hegelian in that what was considered "rational utility" and corresponding doctrine and planning had replaced moral, ethical and religious values. Medical science in Nazi Germany collaborated with this Hegelian trend particularly in the following enterprises: the mass extermination of the chronically sick in the interest of saving "useless" expenses to the community as a whole; the mass extermination of those considered socially disturbing or racially and ideologically unwanted; the individual, inconspicuous extermination of those considered disloyal to the ruling group; and the ruthless use of "human experimental material" in medical military research. Remember, physicians took part in this planning.

Adults were propagandized; one outstanding example being a motion picture called "I Accuse," which dealt with euthanasia. This film depicted the life history of a woman suffering from multiple sclerosis and eventually showed her husband, a doctor, killing her to the accompaniment of soft piano music played by a sympathetic colleague in an adjacent room. The ideology was implanted even in high school children when their mathematics texts included problems stated in distorted terms of the cost of caring for and rehabilitating the chronically sick and crippled. For example, one problem asked how many new housing units could be built and how many marriage-allowance loans could be given newlyweds for the amount of money it cost the state to care for "the crippled, the criminal, and the insane." This was all before Hitler. And it was all in the hands of the medical profession.

The first direct order for euthanasia came from Hitler in 1939. All state institutions were required to report on patients who had been ill for five years or more or who were unable to work. The decision regarding which patients should be killed was made entirely on the basis on name, race, marital status, nationality, next of kin, regularly visited by whom, and a statement of financial responsibility. The experts who made the decisions were chiefly professors of psychiatry in the key universities in Germany. They never say the patients. There was a specific organization for the killing of children which was known by the euphemistic name of "Realms Committee for Scientific Approach to Severe Illness Due to Heredity and Constitution." Transportation of the patients to the killing centers was carried out by the "Charitable Transport Company for the Sick." "The Charitable Foundation for Institutional Care" was in charge of collecting the cost of the killings from the relatives without, however, informing them what the charges were for....

We here should be old enough to know that history does teach lessons. Destructiveness eventually is turned on the destroyer and self-destruction is the result. If you do not believe me, look at Nazi Germany. My concern is that the next time around the destruction will be greater before the ultimate self-destruction beings an end to the holocaust....

I see the progression from abortion to infanticide, to euthanasia, to the problems that developed in Nazi Germany, and being aware of the appeal of alliteration in titles, is "Dominoes to Dachau." But having just visited Auschwitz in the company of some of my Polish confreres and having read extensively from the Germans' own reports about what went on there, I view what we are experiencing now as a dynamic situation which can accelerate month by month until the progress of our downhill momentum cannot be stopped. Therefore, I guess I favor the title: "The Subtle, Slippery Slide to Auschwitz."...

The euthanasia movement - and I use that in the broadest possible sense - is with us today with greater strength and persuasion than ever has been the case before in the history of what we call modern civilization. Do not dismiss contemptuously my concern in reference to the wedge principle - that when the camel gets his nose in the tent he will soon be in bed with you. Historians and jurists are well aware of what I am saying. The first step is followed by the second step.

You can say that if the first step is moral then whatever follows must be moral. The important thing, however, is this: whether you diagnose the first step as being one worth taking or being one that is precarious rests entirely on what the second step is likely to be....

I am concerned that there is no outcry. I can well understand that there are people who are led to starve children to death because they think that they are doing something right for society or are following a principle of Hegel that is utilitarian for society. But I cannot understand why the other people, and I know that there are many, don't cry out. I am concerned about this because when the first 273,000 German aged, infirm, and retarded were killed in gas chambers there was no outcry from that medical profession either, and it was not far from there to Auschwitz.

American Quotations.txt

Kennedy, John Fitzgerald (May 29, 1917-November 22, 1963), was the 35th President of the United States, 1961-63, the youngest man and the first Roman Catholic ever elected to that position; assassinated in Dallas, Texas, November 22, the eighth President to die in office; promoted space program and moon exploration, sent federal troops to quiet race riots in Birmingham, aided peaceful integration of University of Alabama, 1963; resolved the Cuban-Missile Crisis, 1962; attempted the ill-fated Bay of Pigs invasion intended to end Communist control in Cuba, formed the Peace Corps, 1961; U. S. Senator, 1953-60; published Profiles in Courage, 1956, which won the Pulitzer Prize; undergoes spinal-fusion operation, 1954; married Jacqueline Lee Bouvier, 1953; U. S. Representative, 1946-52; employed by International News Service, 1945, covering United Nations conference; undergoes disc operation, 1944; commander of Patrol Torpedo boat PT-109 in the Pacific during World War II, 1943, sunk by Japanese destroyer; assigned to Motor Torpedo Boat Squadron, 1942; Ensign in Naval Reserve, 1941; published Why England Slept, 1940; graduated from Harvard, 1940; and attended Princeton University, 1935.

On Friday, January 20, 1961, President John F. Kennedy delivered his Inaugural Address, following prayers offered by a rabbi, a Protestant minister, a Catholic cardinal, a Greek Orthodox archbishop, and a poem read by Robert Frost. President Kennedy stated:

Mr. Chief Justice, President Eisenhower, Vice-President Nixon, President Truman, reverend clergy, fellow citizens, we observe today not a victory of party, but a celebration of freedom - symbolizing an end, as well as a beginning - signifying renewal, as well as change. For I have sworn before you and Almighty God, the same solemn oath our forbears prescribed nearly a century and three quarters ago.

The world is very different now. For man holds in his mortal hands the power to abolish all forms of human poverty and all forms of human life. And yet the same revolutionary beliefs for which our forebears fought are still at issue around the globe - The belief that the rights of man come not from the generosity of the state but from the hand of God....

Let every nation know, whether it wishes us well or ill, that we shall pay any price, bear any burden, meet any hardship, support any friend, oppose any foe, in order to assure the survival and the success of liberty....

Let both sides united to heed in all corners of the earth the command of Isaiah - to "undo the heavy burdens and to let the oppressed go free." (Is. 58:6)....

Now the trumpet summons us again - not as a call to bear arms, though arms we need; not as a call to battle, though embattled we are; but a call to bear the burden of a long twilight struggle, year in, and year out, "rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation" (Ro. 12:12) - a struggle against the common enemies of man: tyranny, poverty, disease, and war itself....

The energy, the faith, the devotion which we bring to this endeavor will light our country and all who serve it - and the glow from that fire can truly light the world. And so, my fellow Americans - ask not what your country can do for you - ask what you can do for your country....

Let us go forth to lead the Land we love, asking

His blessing and His help, but knowing that here on earth God's work must truly be our own.

On January 31, 1961, in a message greeting President Quadros of Brazil on the occasion of his inauguration, President John F. Kennedy stated:

Once in every twenty years presidential inaugurations in your country and mine occur within days of each other. This year of 1961 is signalized by the happy coincidence. At this time, each of us assumes challenging duties for which he has been freely chosen by his fellow citizens. To each of us is entrusted the heavy responsibility of guiding the affairs of a democratic nation founded on Christian ideals and aspiring to common goals of peace and human betterment.

On February 9, 1961, at the 9th Annual Presidential Prayer Breakfast, sponsored by the International Christian Leadership, Inc., held at the Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D.C., President John F. Kennedy stated:

Mr. Chairman, Dr. Graham, Mr. Vice President - gentlemen:

I think it is most appropriate that we should be gathered together for this morning's meeting. This country was founded by men and women who were dedicated or came to be dedicated to two propositions: first, a strong religious conviction, and secondly a recognition that this conviction could flourish only under a system of freedom.

I think it is appropriate that we pay tribute to this great constitutional principle which is enshrined in the First Amendment of the Constitution: the principle of religious independence, of religious liberty, of religious freedom. But I think it is also important that we pay tribute and acknowledge another great principle, and that is the principle of religious conviction. Religious freedom has no significance unless it is accompanied by conviction. And therefore the Puritans and the Pilgrims of my own section of New England, the Quakers of Pennsylvania, the Catholics of Maryland, the Presbyterians of North Carolina, the Methodists and Baptists who came later, all shared these two great traditions which, like silver threads, have run through the warp and the woof of American history.

No man who enters upon the office to which I have succeeded can fail to recognize how every President of the United States has placed special reliance upon his faith in God. Every President has taken comfort and courage when told, as we are told today, that the Lord "will be with thee. He will not fail nor forsake thee. Fear not - neither be thou dismayed."

While they came from a variety of religious backgrounds and held a wide variety of religious beliefs, each of our Presidents in his own way has placed a special trust in God. Those who were strongest intellectually were also the strongest spiritually.

Today our Nation is passing through another time of trial. In many ways, our dangers and our problems are far greater - and certainly infinitely more complex. We will need to draw upon the best that this Nation has - often - and draw upon it physically and intellectually and materially.

But we need also to call upon our great reservoir of spiritual resources. We must recognize that human collaboration is not enough, that in times such as these we must reach beyond ourselves if we are to seek ultimate courage and infinite wisdom.

It is an ironic fact that in this nuclear age, when the horizon of human knowledge and human experience has passed far beyond any that any age has ever known, that we turn back at this time to the oldest source of wisdom and strength, to the words of the prophets and the saints, who tell us that faith is more powerful than doubt, that hope is more potent than despair, and that only through the love that is sometimes called charity can we conquer those forces within ourselves and throughout all the world that threaten the very existence of mankind.

Keeping in mind that "when a man's ways please the Lord, he maketh even his enemies to be at peace with him," let us go forth to lead this land that we love, joining in the prayer of General George Washington in 1783, "that God would have you in His holy protection, that He would incline the hearts of the citizens... to entertain a brotherly love and affection one for another... and finally that He would most graciously be pleased to dispose us all to do justice, to love mercy, and to demean ourselves with... the characteristics of the Divine Author of our blessed religion, without an humble imitation of whose example we can never hope to be a happy nation."

The guiding principle and prayer of this Nation has been, is now, and ever shall be "In God We Trust."
Thank you.

On February 9, 1961, in addressing the Ladies at the 9th Annual Presidential Prayer Breakfast, sponsored by the International Christian Leadership, Inc., held at the Mayflower Hotel, east room, Washington, D. C., President John F. Kennedy stated:

Madam Chairwoman, Dr. Graham, Mr. Vice President,

It seems to me that in the true Christian spirit next year we should all sit together, and that we should have gentlemen and ladies pray and reason together, and not confine them in different rooms.

But we are glad we came here - the Vice President and I came upon the protection of Dr. Graham.

I do want to say that it is a pleasure to be here and to have participated in the breakfast this morning. I had an opportunity in the White House the other day to talk to a group of men and women from the Baptist World Alliance who have been missionaries, some in the Congo, one lady who has been in Bengal, India, since 1926, others who have been in Thailand and Korea.

I do not regard religion as a weapon in the cold war. I regard it as the essence of the differences which separate those on the other side of the Iron Curtain and ourselves.

The whole basis of the struggle is involved in the meeting this morning: our strong belief in religious freedom, our strong conviction, as I attempted to say in my inaugural, that the blessings which come to us come not from the generosity of the state but from the hand of God - and this alternate concept that the state is the master and the people the servants.

This is really the essence of the issue. We cannot have religious freedom without political freedom, and therefore what we really need is not to confuse a system of freedom with one of disinterest, uninterest, cynicism, materialism, but like the ladies and gentlemen I talked to the other day, who have been willing to spend their lives under the most difficult of circumstances, in great hardships, in order to carry the message in which they have a great conviction, it seems to me it shows a lesson for us all.

We must match that faith. We must demonstrate in our lives, whatever our responsibility may be, that we care deeply.

I see no reason why the servants of the Communist system should be marked by a discipline and strong conviction in the ultimate success of their cause. I believe that our cause is just, that ultimately it will be successful. But it can only be successful if we demonstrate our strong conviction in it.

Religious freedom and religious conviction are the two hallmarks of American society, and therefore as a strong believer in both, I wanted to say that I deem it an honor to share this evidence of our common belief in these two great principles at this breakfast this morning. What we do this morning, I hope we can do every day.

Thank you.

On October 28, 1961, President John F. Kennedy issued Proclamation 3438, National Thanksgiving Day, 1961:

By the President of the United States of America a Proclamation:

"It is a good thing to give thanks unto the Lord."

More than three centuries ago, the Pilgrims, after a year of hardship and peril, humbly and reverently set aside a special day upon which to give thanks to God for their preservation and for the good harvest from the virgin soil upon which they had labored. Grave and unknown dangers remained. Yet by their faith and by their toil they had survived the rigors of the harsh New England winter. Hence they paused in their labors to give thanks for the blessings that had been bestowed upon them by Divine Providence.

This year, as the harvest draws near its close and the year approaches its end, awesome perils again remain to be faced. Yet we have, as in the past, ample reason to be thankful for the abundance of our blessings. We are grateful for the blessings of faith and health and strength and for the imperishable spiritual gifts of love and hope. We give thanks, too, for our freedom as a nation; for the strength of our arms and the faith of our friends; for the beliefs and confidence we share; for our determination to stand firmly for what we believe to be right and to resist mightily what we believe to be base; and for the heritage of liberty bequeathed by our ancestors which we are privileged to preserve for our children and our children's children.

It is right that we should be grateful for the plenty amidst which we live; the productivity of our farms, the output of our factories, the skill of our artisans, and the ingenuity of our investors. But in the midst of our thanksgiving, let us not be unmindful of the plight of those in many parts of the world to whom hunger is no stranger and the plight of those millions more who live without the blessings of liberty and freedom. With some we are to share our material abundance through our Food-for-Peace Program and through our support of the United Nations Freedom-from-Hunger Campaign. To all we can offer the sustenance of hope that we shall not fail in our unceasing efforts to make this a peaceful and prosperous world for all mankind.

Now, Therefore, I, John F. Kennedy, President of the United States of America, in consonance with the joint resolution of Congress approved December 26, 1941, which designates the fourth Thursday in November of each year as Thanksgiving Day, do hereby proclaim Thursday, the twenty-third day of November of this year, as a day of national thanksgiving.

I urge all citizens to make this Thanksgiving not merely a holiday from their labors, but rather a day of contemplation. I ask the head of each family to recount to his children the story of the first New England Thanksgiving, thus to impress upon future generations the heritage of this nation born in toil, in danger, in purpose, and in the conviction that right and justice and freedom can through man's efforts persevere and come to fruition with the blessing of God.

Let us observe this day with reverence and with prayer that will rekindle in us the will and show us the way not only to preserve our blessings, but also to extend them to the four corners of the earth. Let us by our example, as well as by our material aid, assist all peoples of all nations who are striving to achieve a better life in freedom.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this twenty-seventh day of October in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and sixty-one, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and eighty-sixth.
John F. Kennedy.

By the President.
Dean Rusk, Secretary of State.

On Thursday, November 16, 1961, at the University of Washington, President John F. Kennedy stated:

While we negotiate freely, we shall not negotiate freedom. Our answer to the classic question of Patrick Henry is still "No." Life is not so dear and peace is not so precious "... as to be purchased at the price of chains and slavery."...

No other generation of free men in any country has ever faced so many and such difficult challenges - not even those who lived in the days when this university was founded in 1861.

This nation was then torn by war. This territory had only the simplest elements of civilization. And this city had barely begun to function. But a university was one of their earliest thoughts, and they summed it up in the motto that they adopted: "Let there be light." What more can be said today regarding all the dark and tangled problems we face than: Let there be light.

On November 21, 1961, to the officers of the National Conference of Christians and Jews, meeting in the Rose Garden of the White House, Washington, D.C., President John F. Kennedy stated:

Gentlemen:

I want to express my great pleasure at having you here today at the White House. I think your efforts in this field represent a very valuable service to our country. It has always seemed to me that when we all - regardless of our particular religious convictions - draw our guidance and inspiration, and really in a sense moral direction from the same general area, the Bible, the Old and the New Testaments, we have every reason to believe that our various religious denominations should live together in the closest harmony.

We have a great advantage, really, in so much of the world, in having such common roots, and therefore though our convictions may take us in different directions in our faith, nevertheless the basic presumption of the moral law, the existence of God, man's relationship to Him - there is generally consensus on those questions.

So that we should set a happy model for the world, but like all things, these things cannot be taken for granted. Your efforts, really, over the last period of 30 years, I think have done perhaps more than any other factor in our national life to provide for harmonious living among our different religious groups.

I think there are still important tasks ahead, so I am delighted to hear, Doctor[Lewis Webster Jones], that your group is committing itself to an intelligent and nonpartisan and open discussion - continued discussion, really - of the relationship between the state and religion.

It, after all, was a matter which occupied our Founding Fathers, and should occupy our attention; and I am hopeful that the fact that you are discussing it will be another evidence of what an open and happy society we live in. So I welcome you here. I congratulate you for the efforts you are making in this area. You are performing a valuable function as citizens. And therefore, speaking as President, and personally, we want to emphasize how much your work is appreciated, how valuable it is, and what a service you're rendering.

Thank you.

On March 1, 1962, at the 10th Annual Presidential Prayer Breakfast, Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D.C., President John F. Kennedy stated:

Senator[Frank Carlson-Ks], Judge[Boyd Leedom], Mr. Speaker[John W. McCormick-Mass], Mr. Justice[Earl

Warren], Governor[Price Daniel -Tx], gentlemen:

I want to, as President, express my appreciation to all those whose efforts make this breakfast possible. This is only one of a worldwide effort, I believe, to build a closer and more intimate association among those different faiths in different countries and in different continents, who are united by a common belief in God, and therefore united in a common commitment to the moral order - and as Governor Daniels said, the relationship of the individual to the state.

The effort made in New Delhi among the World Council of Churches, the efforts that have been made in Europe to build better understanding among men and women of different faiths, the effort made in this country, I believe are most important and most essential.

I do not suggest that religion is an instrument of the cold war. Rather it is the basis of the issue which separates us from those who make themselves our adversary. And at the heart of the matter, of course, is the position of the individual - his importance, his sanctity, his relationship to his fellow men, his relationship to his country and his state. This is in essence the struggle, and it is necessary, therefore, that in these difficult days, when men and women who have strong religious convictions are beleaguered by those who are neither hot nor cold, or by those who are icy cold, it is important that we make these common efforts - as we do this morning. So I congratulate you all, and express appreciation to you and hope that it will serve as an inspiration to others in other parts of our country.

I believe yesterday we saw an interesting contrast in the response which Colonel Glenn made as to whether he had prayed, and he said that he had not, that he had made his peace with his Maker many years before, and the statement made by Titov in which during his flight, as he flew over the Soviet Union he realized, he said, the wonders of the Communist system.

I preferred Colonel Glenn's answer because I thought it was solidly based, in his own life, in his activities in his church, and I think it reflects a quality which we like to believe and I think we can believe is much a part of our American heritage. So I congratulate you.

In our program this morning there is a quotation from Lincoln which I think is particularly applicable today. He said, "I believe there is a God. I see the storm coming, and I believe He has a hand in it. If He has a part and a place for me, I believe that I am ready." We see the storm coming, and we believe He has a hand in it; and if He has a place and a part for us, I believe that we are ready.

On March 1, 1962, in addressing the ladies in the state and east rooms at the 10th Annual Presidential Prayer Breakfast, Mayflower Hotel, Washington, D. C., President John F. Kennedy stated:

Ladies,

Last year I expressed some concern that instead of having been separated at these breakfasts - the pharisees and the publicans and the sinners and the saints - that the separation occurred on the basis of sex and not on those who should have been in the front room and those who were in the back room.

I do want to say, however - express my appreciation to you for the effort that you are making, to tell you how valuable I think it is that in this Capitol of this most important country, upon which so much depends, that these breakfasts should be held, and that this demonstration of our commitment should be made.

We bear great responsibilities and great burdens not only to ourselves in this country but to so many around the world whose future hangs in the balance and depends so much on us.

We may not feel that our efforts are always appreciated, and I am not sure that that is so important, but we want to make sure that our efforts are effective, and that this generation - which faces the greatest challenges that any country, any free people, have ever faced, and moves in the midst of the greatest opportunities and the greatest of dangers - that we shall meet our responsibility, which carries with it an obligation to our country, but I think those who desire to live a life of freedom and a life which permits them to participate with their neighbors and with God in the way they choose.

So I commend you for the example you set to us all. Upon your convictions and your efforts so much depends, and it is a source of satisfaction to be here with Mrs. Johnson, the Vice President's wife and with the Governor of Texas, - and Senator Carlson - Senator Stennis - most importantly, I think, of Reverend Billy Graham, who has served this cause about which I speak so well here and around the world. He has, I think, transmitted this most important quality of our common commitments to faith in a way which makes all of us particularly proud.

So we are glad to see you this morning, and we appreciate what you are doing.

On December 17, 1962, in the Pageant of Peace Ceremonies Lighting the National Christmas Tree, President John F. Kennedy stated:

With the lighting of this tree, which is an old ceremony in Washington and one which has been among the most important responsibilities of a good many Presidents of the United States, we initiate in a formal way the Christmas Season. We mark the festival of Christmas which is the most sacred and hopeful day in our civilization. For nearly two thousand years the message of Christmas, the message of peace and good will towards all men, has been the guiding star of our endeavors... Pause from their labors on the 25th day of December to celebrate the birthday of the Prince of Peace... We still need to ask God to bless everyone.

On Thursday, July 11, 1963, in a radio and television address to the Nation, President John F. Kennedy stated:

It ought to be possible, in short, for every American to enjoy the privileges of being American without regard to his race or his color. In short, every American ought to have the right to be treated as he would wish to be treated, as one would wish his children to be treated....

We are confronted primarily with a moral issue. It is as old as the Scriptures and is as clear as the American Constitution.... We face, therefore, a moral crisis as a country and as a people.

John F. Kennedy explained:

There is little that is more important for an American citizen to know than the history and traditions of his country. Without such knowledge, he stands uncertain and defenseless before the world, knowing neither where he has come from or where he is going.

With such knowledge, he is no longer alone but draws a strength far greater than his own from the cumulative experience of the past and the cumulative vision of the future....

History is the means by which a nation established its sense of identity and purpose. The future arises out to the past, and a country's history is a statement of the values and hopes which, having forged what has gone before, will now forecast what is to come.

In speaking of past presidents, President John F. Kennedy expressed:

While they came from a wide variety of religious backgrounds and held a wide variety of religious beliefs, each of our Presidents in his own way has placed a special trust in God. Those who were strongest intellectually were also strongest spiritually.

President John F. Kennedy stated:

The question for our time is not whether all men are brothers. That question has been answered by God who placed us on this earth together. The question is whether we have the strength and the will to make the brotherhood of man the guiding principle of our daily lives.

On Friday, November 22, 1963, President John F. Kennedy was killed in an assassination plot. The speech he was about to deliver at the Dallas Trade Mart concluded with these words:

We in this country, in this generation, are - by destiny rather than choice - the watchmen on the walls of world freedom. We ask, therefore, that we may be worthy of our power and responsibility, that we may exercise our strength with wisdom and restraint, and that we may achieve in our time and for all time the ancient vision of peace on earth, goodwill toward men. That must always be our goal - and the righteousness of our cause must always underlie our strength. For as was written long ago, "Except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain."

most influential historians and cherished writers, Schlesinger is a former Harvard professor and special assistant to President Kennedy. Also the author or editor of twenty-two books, he examines the current American trends of racial polarization and ethnic violence in his latest, The Disuniting of America: Reflections on a Multicultural Society. This recipient of two Pulitzer Prizes and two National Book Awards is currently working on the fourth volume of his highly regarded study of Franklin D. Roosevelt and the New Deal.

Born in Columbus, Ohio, on October 15, 1917, Arthur Schlesinger was educated at Phillips Exeter Academy and Harvard, where he received an A.B. summa cum laude in history in 1938. He was a Henry Fellow at Peterhouse, Cambridge University, in 1938-39, and a member of the Society of Fellows at Harvard from 1939 to 1942.

During the war, he served first in the Office of War Information (1942-43) and then overseas in the Office of Strategic Services (1943-45); he was also in the United States Army. In 1946, he came to Harvard as an associate professor of history, promoted to full professor in 1954. In 1948, he was Averell Harriman's special assistant in Paris in the first months of the Marshall Plan. In 1952 and 1956, he was a member of Governor Adlai Stevenson's campaign staff. He was appointed special assistant to President John F. Kennedy in 1961 and served in the White House throughout his administration. In 1966, he was a visiting fellow at the Institute for Advanced Study at Princeton. He then became Albert Schweitzer Professor in the Humanities at the Graduate School of the City University of New York, retiring in 1996.

Schlesinger is the author of numerous books: Orestes A. Brownson (1939); The Age of Jackson (1945), The Vital Center (1949), The General and the President with Richard H. Rovere (1951); The Age of Roosevelt, volumes I, II, and III; The Politics of Hope (1963); A Thousand Days: John F. Kennedy in the White House (1965); The Bitter Heritage (1967); The Crisis of Confidence (1968); The Imperial Presidency (1973, 1989); Robert Kennedy and His Times (1978); The Cycles of American History (1986); and The Disuniting of America (1992). He is also the editor of various works, among them are Paths to American Thought (1963); The State of the Union Messages of the Presidents (1966); History of American Presidential Elections (1973, 1986); History of United States Political Parties (1973); Congress Investigates (1975); and Running for President (1994).

He received the Pulitzer Prize for History in 1946 and for Biography in 1996; also the National Book Award in 1966 and again in 1979; the Francis Parkman Prize for History, 1957; the Bancroft Prize, 1958; the Gold Medal for History from the American Academy of Arts and Letters in 1967; the Fregene Prize for Literature (Italy, 1983); the Bruce Catton Prize for History (1996); and other awards and honors. He holds honorary degrees from many institutions, including Oxford (1987).

Schlesinger served as president of the American Academy of Arts and Letters (1981-84) and as chancellor (1984-87). A former president of the Society of American Historians (1989-92), he has served as co-chair of the Franklin and Eleanor Roosevelt Institute since 1983. He has been a trustee of the Twentieth Century Fund since 1959 and is a member of the advisory board of the Arthur and Elizabeth Schlesinger Library on the History of Women in America (named for his parents).

In The Disuniting of America (1992), Arthur M. Schlesinger wrote:

History is to the nation...as memory is to the individual. An individual deprived of memory becomes disoriented and lost, not knowing where he has been or where he is going, so a nation denied a conception of its past will be disabled in dealing with its present and future.

Byrd, Robert Caryle (b. November 20, 1917), a U.S. Senator from West Virginia, 1950-52; reelected 1958. He served as Senate majority leader, 1977-79; 1987-88; Senate minority leader, 1980-87; U.S. Representative, 1952-58; and as a West Virginia State Representative, 1946-50. He was the chairman of the Democratic Steering Committee; Democratic Policy Conference; and Senate Democratic Conference.

On June 27, 1962, Senator Robert Byrd delivered a message in Congress just two days after the Supreme Court declared prayer in schools unconstitutional:

Inasmuch as our greatest leaders have shown no doubt about God's proper place in the American birthright, can we, in our day, dare do less?...

In no other place in the United States are there so many, and such varied official evidences of deep and abiding faith in God on the part of Government as there are in Washington....

Every session of the House and the Senate begins with prayer. Each house has its own chaplain.

The Eighty-third Congress set aside a small room in the Capitol, just off the rotunda, for the private prayer and meditation of members of Congress. The room is always open when Congress is in session, but it is not open to the public. The room's focal point is a stained glass window showing George Washington kneeling in prayer. Behind him is etched these words from Psalm 16:1: "Preserve me, O God, for in Thee do I put my trust."

Inside the rotunda is a picture of the Pilgrims about to embark from Holland on the sister ship of the Mayflower, the Speedwell. The ship's revered chaplain, Brewster, who later joined the Mayflower, has open on his lap the Bible. Very clear are the words, "the New Testament according to our Lord and Savior, Jesus Christ." On the sail is the motto of the Pilgrims, "In God We Trust, God With Us."

The phrase, "In God We Trust," appears opposite the President of the Senate, who is the Vice-President of the United States. The same phrase, in large words inscribed in the marble, backdrops the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

Above the head of the Chief Justice of the Supreme Court are the Ten Commandments, with the great American eagle protecting them. Moses is included among the great lawgivers in Herman A MacNeil's marble sculpture group on the east front. The crier who opens each session closes with the words, "God save the United States and this Honorable Court."

Engraved on the metal on the top of the Washington Monument are the words: "Praise be to God." Lining the walls of the stairwell are such biblical phrases as "Search the Scriptures," "Holiness to the Lord," "Train up a child in the way he should go, and when he is old he will not depart from it."

Numerous quotations from Scripture can be found within its [the Library of Congress] walls. One reminds each American of his responsibility to his Maker: "What doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly and love mercy and walk humbly with thy God" (Micah 6:8).

Another in the Lawmaker's library preserves the Psalmist's acknowledgment that all nature reflects the order and beauty of the Creator, "The heavens declare the glory of God, and the firmament showeth His handiwork" (Psalm 19:1). And still another reference: "The light shineth in darkness, and the darkness comprehendeth it not" (John 1:5).

Millions have stood in the Lincoln Memorial and gazed up at the statue of the great Abraham Lincoln. The sculptor who chiseled the features of Lincoln in granite all but seems to make Lincoln speak his own words inscribed into the walls.

"...That this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom, and that government of the people, by the people, for the people, shall not perish from the earth."

At the opposite end, on the north wall, his Second Inaugural Address alludes to "God," the "Bible," "providence," "the Almighty," and "divine attributes."

It then continues:

As was said 3000 years ago, so it still must be said, "The judgements of the Lord are true and righteous altogether."

On the south banks of Washington's Tidal Basin, Thomas Jefferson still speaks:

"God who gave us life gave us liberty. Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have removed a conviction that these liberties are the gift of God? Indeed I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just, that his justice cannot sleep forever."

[Jefferson's words are] a forceful and explicit warning that to remove God from this country will destroy it.

Graham, William Franklin "Billy" (b. November 7, 1918), an American evangelist and statesman. Since 1944, he has addressed crowds in North America, Europe, Africa, China, the Far East, Eastern Europe, and the former Soviet Union. Originally desiring to be a baseball player, he was converted at a revival meeting at the age of 16 and began preaching. He was ordained a Baptist minister, after having studied at Bob Jones University and the Florida Bible Institute. He attended Wheaton College and served as pastor in Western Springs, Illinois. In 1949, he began serving as the vice-president of Youth for Christ International, and president of Northwestern Schools. He established the Billy Graham Evangelistic Association in Minneapolis, Minnesota; wrote books and columns; produced movies; aired crusades on radio and television; and broadcast his Hour of Decision program which is heard by millions internationally.

Dr. Billy Graham, who has had the unique opportunity of being friends and giving confidential counsel to every U.S. President from Harry S. Truman to Bill Clinton, was presented with the Congressional Gold Medal in 1996.

He wrote in The Chicago American, April 16, 1967:

The most eloquent prayer is the prayer through hands that heal and bless. The highest form of worship is the worship of unselfish Christian service. The greatest form of praise is the sound of consecrated feet seeking out the lost and helpless.

Billy Graham expressed:

God has given us two hands - one for receiving and the other for giving.

William Franklin "Billy" Graham stated:

The ethical and moral principles of Christianity are found all the way through the Declaration of Independence. It was on July 4, 1776 that fifty men gathered in Independence Hall in Philadelphia to declare this nation free from Great Britain... Down through the years God has mightily blessed America.

Billy Graham stated:

Bad politicians are elected by good people who don't vote.

In discussing miracles, Billy Graham stated:

We have to go back to the basics, Jesus performed these miracles to prove his divinity, and so I accept them, and I accept them by faith. I can't prove everything scientifically. But when I do accept the Scripture by faith, it has an impact in my own personal life, and I can apply the principles Jesus taught to everyday life.

So to me the miracles of Christ are essential. They are not essential to salvation but to one's Christian living.

On April 22, 1954, Ruth Graham, Billy Graham's wife stated:

Just pray for a thick skin and a tender heart.

On May 31, 1954, after meeting Sir Winston Churchill, Billy Graham stated:

I felt as if I were shaking hands with Mr. History.

Billy Graham's favorite benediction, as recorded in Newsweek, February 1, 1954, was:

May the Lord bless you real good.

On December 12, 1955, in a comment on establishing his national headquarters in Washington, D.C., Billy Graham stated:

I just want to lobby for God.

On March 21, 1956, in a news conference, President Eisenhower stated:

Now, this is what I see in Billy Graham: A man who clearly understands that any advance in the world has got to be accompanied by a clear realization that man is, after all, a spiritual being. He teaches, he carries his religion to the far corners of the earth, trying to promote peace, trying to promote mediation instead of conflict, tolerance instead of prejudice. Now, he does that in this country, he does it abroad. Therefore, because of the very great crowds that he attracts to listen to him, I am very much interested in Billy Graham's activities, but for that reason only. I have never discussed with him any plan for mobilizing nations.

In introducing evangelist Billy Graham to a rally in southern California, Governor Ronald Reagan commented:

There is no need in our land today greater than the need to rediscover our spiritual heritage.

Why is a representative of government here? To welcome with humble pride a man whose mission in life has been to remind us that in all our seeking, in all our confusion, the answer to each problem is to be found in the simple words of Jesus of Nazareth, who urged us to love one another.

Evangelist Billy Graham lauded Pope John Paul II's 11th papal encyclical, entitled "Evangelium Vitae" - "Gospel of Life," issued April of 1995, as:

A forceful and thoughtful defense of the sacredness of human life in the face of the modern world's reckless march toward violence and needless death.

On Thursday, May 2, 1996, during the celebration of the National Day of Prayer, Dr. Billy Graham, and his wife Ruth, were presented with the distinguished Congressional Gold Medal. This award, having been given to only 263 individuals in the history of the United States, is the highest honor which can be bestowed on an American citizen, the first recipient being President George Washington. Dr. Graham stated in his acceptance speech, entitled "The Hope for America":

Mr. Vice President, Speaker Newt Gingrich, Majority Leader Bob Dole, Senator Strom Thurmond, Members of the House of Representatives and the Senate, distinguished guests and friends...

Ruth and I are overwhelmed by the very kind words that have been spoken today, and especially by the high honor you have just bestowed on both of us. It will always be one of the high points of our lives, and we thank you from the bottom of our hearts for this unforgettable event. We are grateful for all of you in the Senate and House who have had a part in it; and President Clinton for his support in signing the resolution.

As we read the list of distinguished Americans who have received the Congressional Gold Medal in the past - beginning with George Washington in 1776 - we know we do not belong in the same company with them, and we feel very unworthy. One reason is because we both know this honor ought to be shared with those who have helped us over the years - some of whom are here today. As a young boy I remember gazing at that famous painting of Washington crossing the Delaware. Only later did it occur to me that Washington did not get across that river by himself. He had the help of others

- and that has been true of us as well. Our ministry has been a team effort, and without our associates and our family we never could have accomplished anything.

I am especially grateful my wife Ruth and I are both being given this honor. No one has sacrificed more than Ruth has, or been more dedicated to God's calling for the two of us.

However, I would not be here today receiving this honor if it were not for an event that happened to me many years ago as a teenager on the outskirts of Charlotte, North Carolina. An evangelist came through our town for a series of meetings. I came face-to-face with the fact that God loved me, Billy Graham, and had sent His Son to die for my sin. He told how Jesus rose from the dead to give us hope of eternal life.

I never forgot a verse of Scripture that was quoted, "As many as received Him, to them gave he power to become the sons of God, even to them that believe on His name" (John 1:12, KJV). That meant that I must respond to God's offer of mercy and forgiveness. I had to repent of my own sins and receive Jesus Christ by faith.

When the preacher asked people to surrender their lives to Christ, I responded. I had little or no emotion; I was embarrassed to stand with a number of other people when I knew some of my school peers saw me; but I meant it. And that simple repentance and open commitment to Jesus Christ changed my life. If we have accomplished anything at all in life since then, however, it has only been because of the grace and mercy of God.

As Ruth and I receive this award we know that some day we will lay it at the feet of the One we seek to serve.

As most of you know, the President has issued a proclamation for this day, May 2, 1996, to be a National Day of Prayer. Here in Washington you will see and hear of people throughout the District of Columbia praying today. It is encouraging and thrilling that here, and across the country, people have committed themselves to pray today for our leaders, our nation, our world, and for ourselves as individuals. I am so glad that before business each morning, both the House of Representatives and the Senate have a prayer led by Chaplain Ogilvie of the Senate, who has had so much to do with this event today, and Chaplain Jim Ford, who used to be chaplain at West Point when I went almost every year to bring a message to the cadets.

Exactly 218 years ago today - on May 2, 1778 - the first recipient of this award, George Washington, issued a General order to the American people. He said, "The... instances of Providential Goodness which we have experienced and which have now almost crowned our labors with complete success demand from us... the warmest returns of Gratitude and Piety to the Supreme Author of all Good." It was a message of hope and trust, and it also was a challenge for the people to turn to God in repentance and faith.

We are standing at a similar point in our history as less than four years from now the world will enter the Third Millennium. What will it hold for us? Will it be a new era of unprecedented peace and prosperity? Or will it be a continuation of our descent into new depths of crime, oppression, sexual immorality, and evil?

Ironically, many people heralded the dawn of the 20th century with optimism. The steady march of scientific and social progress, they believed, would vanquish our social and economic problems. Some optimistic theologians even predicted the 20th Century would be "The Christian Century," as humanity followed Jesus' exhortation to love your neighbor as yourself. But no other century has been ravaged by such devastating wars, genocides and tyrannies. During this century we have witnessed the outer limits of human evil.

Our mood on the brink of the 21st Century is far more somber. Terms like "ethnic cleansing" "random violence" and "suicide bombing" have become part of our daily vocabulary.

Look at our own society. There is much, of course, that is good about America, and we thank God for our heritage of freedom and our abundant blessings. America has been a nation that has shown a global compassion that the rest of the world seemingly does not understand. After World War II, because we had the Atom Bomb, we had the opportunity to rule the world, but America turned from that and instead helped rebuild the countries of our enemies.

Nevertheless, something has happened since those days and there is much about America that is no longer good. You know the problems as well as I do: racial and ethnic tensions that threaten to rip apart our cities and neighborhoods; crime and violence of epidemic proportions in most of our cities; children taking weapons to school; broken families; poverty; drugs; teenage pregnancy; corruption; the list is almost endless. Would the first recipients of this award even recognize the society they sacrificed to establish? I fear not. We have confused liberty with license - and we are paying the awful price. We are a society poised on the brink of self-destruction.

But what is the real cause? We call conferences and consultations without end, frantically seeking solutions to all our problems; we engage in shuttle diplomacy, and yet in the long run little seems to change. Why is that? What is the problem? The real problem is within ourselves.

Almost three thousand years ago King David, the greatest king Israel ever had, sat under the stars and contemplated the reasons for the human dilemma. He listed three things that the world's greatest scientists and sociologists have not been able to solve, and it seems the more we know, and the greater our technology, the more difficulties we are in. In perhaps the best-known passage of the Old Testament, Psalm 23, he touches on the three greatest problems of the human race.

First, David said, is a problem of emptiness. David wrote, "The Lord is my shepherd; I shall not want." He was not talking just about physical want, but spiritual want.

I stood on the campus of one of our great universities some time ago, and I asked the Dean. "What is the greatest problem on your campus?" He replied in one word: "Emptiness." The human heart craves for meaning, and yet we live in a time of spiritual emptiness that haunts millions.

"Nirvana" is the Hindu word for someone who has arrived into the state of perpetual bliss. Media reports said that Kurt Cobain, the NIRVANA rock group's leader, was the pacesetter for the nineties, and the "savior of rock and roll." But he said the song in the end which best described his state of mind was "I hate myself and I want to die!" And at age 27 he committed suicide with a gun.

Second, is the problem of guilt. David wrote, "He restoreth my soul, He leadeth me in the paths of righteousness." Down inside we all know that we have not measured up even to our own standards, let alone God's standard.

Third, David pointed to the problem of death. "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death. I will fear no evil, for thou art with me." Death is the one common reality of all human life. Secretary of Commerce Ron Brown did not realize his time had come when he stepped on that plane in Croatia a few weeks ago.

From time to time I have wandered through Statuary Hall and looked at all those statues of some of the greatest men and women in our nation's history. But one thing is true of every one of them, they are all dead.

Yes, these three things - emptiness, guilt, and the fear of death - haunt our souls. We frantically seek to drown out their voices, driving ourselves into all sorts of activities from sex to drugs or tranquilizers - and yet they are still there.

But we must probe deeper. Why is the human heart this way? The reason is because we are alienated from our Creator. That was the answer David found to these three problems: "The Lord in my shepherd." This is why I believe the fundamental crisis of our time is a crisis of the spirit. We have lost sight of the moral and spiritual principles on which this nation was established - principles drawn largely from the Judeo-Christian tradition as found in the Bible.

What is the cure? Is there any hope? Ruth and I have devoted our lives to the deep conviction that the answer is yes. There is hope! Our lives can be changed, and our world can be changed. The Scripture says, "You must be born again." You could have a spiritual rebirth right here today.

What must be done? Let me briefly suggest three things. First, we must repent. In the depths of the American Civil War, Abraham Lincoln called for special days of public repentance and prayer. Our need for repentance is no less today. What does repentance mean? Repentance means to change our thinking and our way of living. It means to turn from our sins and to commit ourselves to God and His will. Over 2700 years ago the Old Testament prophet Isaiah declared "Seek the Lord while he may be found, call on Him while He is near. Let the wicked forsake his way, and the evil man his thoughts. Let him turn to the Lord, and He will have mercy on him, and to our God, for He will freely pardon" (Isaiah 55: 6-7, NIV). Those words are as true today as they were over two and a half millennia ago.

Second, we must commit our lives to God, and to the moral and spiritual truths that have made this nation great. Think how different our nation would be if we sought to follow the simple and yet profound injunctions of the Ten Commandments and the Sermon on the Mount. But we must respond to God, Who in offering us forgiveness, mercy, supernatural help, and the power to change.

Third, our commitment must be translated into action - in our homes, in our neighborhoods, and in our society. Jesus taught there are only two roads in life. One is the broad road that is easy and well-traveled, but which leads to destruction. The other, He said, is the narrow road of truth and faith that at times is hard and lonely, but which leads to life and salvation.

As we face a new millennium, I believe America has gone a long way down the wrong road. We must turn around and go back and change roads. If ever we needed God's help, it is now. If ever we needed spiritual renewal, it is now. And it can begin today in each one of our lives, as we repent before God and yield ourselves to Him and His Word.

What are YOU going to do? The other day I heard the story of a high school principal who held an assembly for graduating seniors, inviting a recruiter from each branch of the service, Army, Navy, Air Force, Marines, to each give a twelve minute presentation on career opportunities. They offered to the students. He stressed the importance of each staying within their allotted time.

The Army representative went first, and was so eloquent that he got a standing ovation, but went eighteen minutes. Not to be outdone, the Navy presentation was equally superb, but took nineteen minutes. Air Force then gave a sterling presentation, which lasted twenty minutes. By now, the principal was irate, and admonished the Marine recruiter that he had only three minutes before the students had to leave for the next class!

During the first two minutes of his shortened time, the Marine didn't say a word, but individually and carefully studied the faces of each student. Finally, he said, "I've looked across this crowd and I see three or four individuals who have what it takes to be a United States Marine. If you think you are one of them, I want to see you down front immediately after the assembly.

Who do you think drew the biggest crowd! This afternoon, as I look out across this distinguished group gathered here, I see more than a few men and women who have what it takes, under God, to lead our country forward "through the night" into the next millennium - individuals who represent civic and governmental authority - as well as doctors, lawyers, clergy, artists and media.

Again, Ruth and I are deeply humbled by this award, and we thank you for all that it represents. We pledge to continue the work that God has called us to do as long as we live. Thank you.

On Monday, January 20, 1997, on Capitol Hill, Washington, D.C., the Reverend Billy Graham delivered the invocation just prior to the second inauguration of President Clinton, who swore into office with his hand upon their family Bible, held by his wife, First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, open to Isaiah 58:12. Dr.

Graham stated:

President Clinton, Mrs. Clinton, Vice President Gore, Mrs. Gore, I'm going to ask that we all bow our heads in prayer.

Our Father and our God, we thank you today for the privilege of coming into your presence on this historic and solemn occasion. We thank you for your gracious hand which has preserved us as a nation. We praise you for the peaceful continuity of government that this inauguration represents.

We recall that the Bible says, "Except the Lord build a house, they labor in vain that build it." He also said that to whom much has been given, much shall be required. We look gratefully to the past and thank you that from the very foundations of America, you granted our forefathers courage and wisdom as they trusted in you.

So we ask today that you would inspire us by their example. Where there's been failure, forgive us; where there's been progress, confirm; where there's been success, give us humility and teach us to follow your instructions more closely as we enter the next century. Give to all those to whom you have entrusted leadership today a desire to seek your will and to do it.

So we ask your blessing on President Clinton and his wife, Hillary, and their daughter, Chelsea, and upon Vice President Gore and his wife, Tipper, and their children. Give to all our leaders the vision of what you desire America to become and the wisdom to accomplish it and the strength to cross the bridges into the 21st century. We pray also for the members of the House and the Senate, for the Supreme Court, and for all who bear responsibility of leadership in this nation, which is blessed with such ethnic diversity.

We have not solved all of the social problems of our time such as drugs and racism. Technology and social engineering have not solved the basic problems of human greed, pride, intolerance and selfishness. We need your insight, we need your compassion, we need your strength. As both President Clinton and Senator Dole urged us in the recent presidential campaign, may this be a time of coming together to help us deal with the problems we face. Oh, Lord, help us to be reconciled first to you and secondly to each other.

May Dr. Martin Luther King's dream finally come true for all of us. Help us to learn our courtesy to our fellow countrymen, that comes from the one who taught us that "whatever you want me to do to you, do also to them." Remind us today that you have shown us what is good and what you require of us: to do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly with our God.

We ask that as a people, we may humble ourselves before you and seek your will for our lives and for this great nation. Help us in our nation to work as never before to strengthen our families and to give our children hope and a moral foundation for the future. So may our desire be to serve you and, in so doing, serve one another. This we pray in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. Amen.

In 1986, Richard Halverson, Chaplain of the U.S. Senate, stated:

American Quotations.txt

When Billy Graham comes to the Capitol, suddenly, the Senate and Congress are unimportant. To me, it's a miracle. Wherever Billy is, there is the gospel of Christ. Everybody knows what he stands for, so he says it without a word...I wish that were true of more of us.

On the National Day of Prayer, May 3, 2001, Billy Graham composed the Prayer for the Nation:

Our Father and Our God, we praise You for Your goodness to our nation, giving us blessings far beyond what we deserve.

Yet we know all is not right with America. We deeply need a moral and spiritual renewal to help us meet the many problems we face. Convict us of sin. Help us to turn to You in repentance and faith. Set our feet on the path of Your righteousness and peace.

We pray today for our nation's leaders. Give them the wisdom to know what is right, and the courage to do it. You have said, "Blessed is the nation whose God is the Lord." May this be a new era for America, as we humble ourselves and acknowledge You alone as our Savior and Lord. This we pray in Your holy name, Amen.

On Tuesday, September 11, 2001, Billy Graham gave the following statement regarding the terrorist attacks against the United States:

Within the last few hours the United States has suffered the most terrible and devastating terrorist attack in its history. Although we do not yet know the full story, these unspeakable acts of brutality strike at the very heart of our free society.

Our heartfelt prayers and sympathy go out to all who have been directly touched by this tragedy, and their families. I call upon all Americans to pray especially for our President and for all who advise him, that they may have divine wisdom as they respond to this insane and horrific act.

In times like this we realize how weak and inadequate we are, and our greatest need is to turn in repentance and faith to the God of all mercy and the Father of all comfort. If ever there was a time for us to turn to God and to pray as a nation, it is now, that this evil will spread no further.

It is also a time for us to remember the words of the Psalmist: "God is our refuge and strength, a very present help in trouble. Therefore we will not fear though the earth be removed, and though the mountains be carried into the midst of the sea ... He maketh wars to cease unto the end of the earth; he breaketh the bow and cutteth the spear in sunder; he burneth the chariot in the fire. Be still and know that I am God ... The Lord of hosts is with us." (Psalm 46:1-2, 9-11)

On Friday, September 14, 2001, on the National Day of Prayer and Remembrance, Billy Graham spoke at the National Cathedral in Washington, D.C.:

President and Mrs. Bush, I want to say a personal word on behalf of many people. Thank you, Mr. President, for calling this Day of Prayer and Remembrance. We needed it at this time.

We come together today to affirm our conviction that God cares for us, whatever our ethnic, religious or political background may be.

The Bible says that He's "the God of all comfort, who comforts us in all our troubles."

No matter how hard we try words simply cannot express the horror, the shock, and the revulsion we all feel over what took place in this nation on Tuesday morning. September 11 will go down in our history as a day to remember.

Today we say to those who masterminded this cruel plot, and to those who carried it out, that the spirit of this nation will not be defeated by their twisted and diabolical schemes. Some day those responsible will be brought to justice, as President Bush and our Congress have so forcefully stated.

But today, we especially come together in this service to confess our need of God. We've always needed God from the very beginning of this nation, but today we need Him especially. We're facing a new kind of enemy. We're involved in a new kind of warfare and we need the help of the Spirit of God.

The Bible's words are our hope: "God is our refuge and strength, an ever present help in trouble. Therefore we will not fear, though the earth give way and the mountains fall into the heart of the sea" (Psalm 46: 1, 2, NIV).

But how do we understand something like this? Why does God allow evil like this to take place? Perhaps that is what you are asking now. You may even be angry at God. I want to assure you that God understands these feelings that you may have.

We've seen so much on our television, heard on our radio, stories that bring tears to our eyes and make us all feel a sense of anger. But God can be trusted, even when life seems at its darkest.

But what are some of the lessons we can learn?

First, we are reminded of the mystery and reality of evil.

I have been asked hundreds of times in my life why God allows tragedy and suffering. I have to confess that I really do not know the answer totally, even to my own satisfaction. I have to accept, by faith, that God is sovereign, and He's a God of love and mercy and compassion in the midst of suffering.

The Bible says that God is not the author of evil. It speaks of evil as a "mystery." In 2 Thessalonians 2:7 it talks about the mystery of iniquity. The Old Testament prophet Jeremiah said, "The heart is deceitful above all things and beyond cure. Who can understand it?" He asked that question, "Who can understand it?" And that's one reason we each need God in our lives.

The lesson of this event is not only about the mystery of iniquity and evil, but secondly, it's a lesson about our need for each other.

What an example New York and Washington have been to the world these past few days! None of us will ever forget the pictures of our courageous firefighters and police, many of whom have lost friends and colleagues, or the hundreds of people attending or standing patiently in line to donate blood.

A tragedy like this could have torn our country apart, but instead it has united us and we've become a family. So those perpetrators who took this on to tear us apart, it has worked the other way. It's backfired, it's backfired. We are more united than ever before. I think this was exemplified in a very moving way when the members of our Congress stood shoulder to shoulder the other day and sang, "God Bless America."

Finally, difficult as it may be for us to see right now -- this event can give a message of hope -- hope for the present, and hope for the future.

Yes, there is hope. There's hope for the present because I believe the stage has already been set for a new spirit in our nation.

One of the things we desperately need is a spiritual renewal in this country. We need a spiritual revival in America. And God has told us in His Word, time after time, that we are to repent of our sins and we're to turn to Him and He will bless us in a new way.

But, there is also hope for the future because of God's promises. As a Christian, I have hope, not just for this life, but for heaven and the life to come. And many of those people who died this past week are in heaven right now, and they wouldn't want to come back. It's so glorious and so wonderful.

And that's the hope for all of us who put our faith in God. I pray that you will have this hope in your heart.

This event reminds us of the brevity and the uncertainty of life. We never know when we too will be called into eternity. I doubt if even one of those people who got on those planes, or walked into the World Trade Center or the Pentagon last Tuesday morning thought it would be the last day of their lives. It didn't occur to them. And that's why each of us needs to face our own spiritual need and commit ourselves to God and His will now.

Here in this majestic National Cathedral we see all around us symbols of the Cross. For the Christian, I'm speaking for the Christian now, the Cross tells us that God understands our sin and our suffering, for He took upon Himself in the person of Jesus Christ our sins and our suffering. And from the Cross, God declares, "I love you. I know the heartaches and the sorrows and the pains that you feel. But I love you."

The story does not end with the Cross, for Easter points us beyond the tragedy of the Cross to the empty tomb. It tells us that there is hope for eternal life, for Christ has conquered evil and death, and hell. Yes, there is hope.

I've become an old man now and I've preached all over the world and the older I get the more I cling to that hope that I started with many years ago and proclaimed it in many languages to many parts of the world.

Several years ago at the National Prayer Breakfast here in Washington, Ambassador Andrew Young (who had just gone through the tragic death of his wife), closed his talk with a quote from the old hymn, "How Firm a Foundation. . . ."

We all watched in horror as planes crashed into the steel and glass of the World Trade Center. Those majestic towers, built on solid foundations, were examples of the prosperity and creativity of America. When damaged, those buildings eventually plummeted to the ground, imploding in upon themselves.

Yet, underneath the debris, is a foundation that was not destroyed. Therein lies the truth of that old hymn that Andrew Young quoted, "How Firm a Foundation. . ." Yes, our nation has been attacked, buildings destroyed, lives lost.

But now we have a choice: whether to implode and disintegrate emotionally and spiritually as a people and a nation -- or, whether we choose to become stronger through all of this struggle -- to rebuild on a solid foundation. And I believe that we are in the process of starting to rebuild on that foundation.

That foundation is our trust in God. That's what this service is all about and in that faith we have the strength to endure something as difficult and horrendous as what we have experienced this week.

This has been a terrible week with many tears but also has been a week of great faith. Churches all across the country have called prayer meetings and today is a day that they are celebrating not only in this country but in many parts of the world.

And in the words of that familiar hymn that Andrew Young quoted -- it says:

American Quotations.txt

"Fear not, I am with thee; O be not dismayed, For I am thy God, and will still give thee aid; I'll strengthen thee, help thee, and cause thee to stand, Upheld by my righteous, omnipotent hand."

My prayer today is that we will feel the loving arms of God wrapped around us, and will know in our hearts that He will never forsake us as we trust in Him.

We also know that God is going to give wisdom and courage and strength to the President and those around him. And this is going to be a day that we will remember as a day of victory.

May God bless you all.

On September 29, 2001, Anne Graham, Billy Graham's daughter, was being interviewed by Jane Clayson on the Early Show regarding the terrorist attack on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, where approximately 7,000 people were killed. When Jane Clayson asked, "how could God let something like this happen?" Anne Graham responded:

I believe that God is deeply saddened by this, just as we are. But for years we've been telling God to get out of our schools, to get out of our government and to get out of our lives, and being the gentleman that he is, I believe that he has calmly backed out. How can we expect God to give us his blessing and his protection if we demand he leave us alone?

Solzhenitsyn, Alexander (b. December 11, 1918), a Russian author. He was imprisoned by Joseph Stalin from 1945-53. He received the Nobel Prize for Literature in 1970, but was not allowed to leave Russia to accept it until the Soviet Government expelled him from the country, February 13, 1974. Alexander Solzhenitsyn proceeded to publish his telling book, The Gulag Archipelago, 1974-79, which won international acclaim.

On June 30, 1975, while speaking in Washington, D. C., Alexander Solzhenitsyn stated:

In pre-revolutionary Russia, during the 80 years before the revolution - years of the revolutionary movement when there were attempts of the Tsar's life, assassination of a Tsar, revolution - during these years about 17 persons a year were executed. The famous Spanish Inquisition, during the decades when it was at the height of its persecution, destroyed perhaps 10 persons a month. In the Archipelago - I cite a book which was published by the Cheka in 1920, proudly reporting on its revolutionary work in 1918 and 1919 and apologizing that its data were not quite complete - in 1918 and 1919 the Cheka executed, without trial, more than a thousand persons a month! This was written by the Cheka itself, before it understood how this would look to history.

At the height of Stalin's terror in 1937-38, if we divide the number of persons executed by the number of months, we get more than 40,000 persons shot per month! Here are the figures: 17 a year, 10 a month, more than 1,000 a month, more than 40,000 a month!...

Roosevelt, in Teheran, during one of his last toasts, said the following: "I do not doubt that the three of us" - meaning Roosevelt, Churchill and Stalin - "lead our peoples in accordance with their desires, in accordance with their aims." How are we to explain this? Let the historians worry about that. At the time, we listened and were astonished. We thought, "when we reach Europe, we will meet the Americans, and we will tell them." I was among the troops that were marching towards the Elbe. A little bit more and I would have reached the Elbe and would have shaken the hands of your American soldiers. But just before that happened, I was taken off to prison and my meeting did not take place.

But now, after all this great delay, the same hand has thrown me out of the country and here I am, instead of the meeting at the Elbe. After a delay of 30 years, my Elbe is here today. I am here to tell you, as a friend of the United States, what, as friends, we wanted to tell you then, but which our soldiers were prevented from telling you on the Elbe.

There is another Russian proverb: "The yes-man is your enemy, but your friend will argue with you." It is precisely because I am the friend of the United States, precisely because my speech is prompted by friendship, that I have come to tell you....

One of your leading newspapers, after the end of Vietnam, had a full headline: "The Blessed Silence." I would not wish that kind of "blessed silence" on my worst enemy. I would not wish that kind of national unity on my worst enemy. I spent 11 years in the Archipelago, and for half of my lifetime I have studied this question....

It is not detente if we here with you today can spend our time agreeably while over there people are groaning and dying and in psychiatric hospitals. Doctors are making their evening rounds, for the third time injecting people with drugs which destroy their brain cells....

You know the words from the Bible: "Build not on sand, but on rock." There has to be a guarantee that this will not be broken overnight....

Lenin's teachings are that anyone is considered to be a fool who doesn't take what's lying in front of him. If you can take it, take it. If you can attack, attack. But if there's a wall, then go back. And the Communist leaders respect only firmness and have contempt and laugh at persons who continually give in to them....

There are tens of thousands of political prisoners in our country...under compulsory psychiatric treatment. Let's take Vladimir Bukovsky as an example. It was proposed to him, "All right, we'll free you. Go to the West and shut up." And this young man, a youth today on the verge of death said: "No, I won't go this way. I have written about the persons whom you have put in insane asylums. You release them and then I'll go West." This is what I mean by that firmness of spirit to stand up against granite and tanks....

I would like to call upon America to be more careful with its trust and prevent those wise persons who are attempting to establish even finer degrees of justice and even finer legal shades of equality - some because of their distorted outlook, others, because of short-sightedness and still others out of self-interest - from falsely using the struggle for peace and for social justice to lead you down a false road. Because they are trying to weaken you; they are trying to disarm your strong and magnificent country in the face of this fearful threat - one that has never been seen before in the history of the world. And I call upon you: ordinary working men of America... do not let yourselves become weak.

In May of 1983, as he received the Templeton Prize for Progress in Religion, Solzhenitsyn expressed:

Instead of the ill-advised hopes of the last two centuries, which have reduced us to insignificance and brought us to the brink of nuclear and non-nuclear death, we can only reach with determination for the warm hand of God, which we have so rashly and self-confidently pushed away.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn, in commenting on the forces precipitating our culture's decay, stated laconically:

Man has forgotten God, that is why this has happened.

Alexander Solzhenitsyn stated:

If we don't know our own history, we will simply have to endure all the same mistakes, sacrifices, and absurdities all over again.

Pope John Paul II (b. May 18, 1920), whose given name was Karol Wojtyla, has held the position of Pope since 1978. Arriving at Stapleton International Airport in Denver, Colorado, on August 12, 1993, Pope John Paul stated:

The best tradition of your love presumes respect for those who cannot defend themselves.

Later that day, at Regis University, in the presence of President Bill Clinton, Pope John Paul II addressed the crowd:

The inalienable dignity of every human being and the rights which flow from that dignity - in the first place the right to life and the defense of life - as well as the well-being and full human development of individuals and peoples, are at the heart of the church's message and action in the world... No country, not even the most powerful, can endure if it deprives its own children of this essential good.

It is he, Jesus Christ, the true life who gives hope and purpose to our earthly existence, opens our minds and hearts to the goodness and beauty of the world around us.

I greet each one with sincere friendship, in spite of divisions among Christians, 'all those justified by faith through baptism are incorporated into Christ...brothers and sisters in the Lord.'

Following his address on the "moral crisis," the Pontiff gave President Clinton a Gutenberg Bible.

On Thursday night, August 12, 1993, in an address to 90,000 young people in Denver's Mile High Stadium, Pope John Paul II declared:

Jesus has called each of you to Denver for a purpose. You must live these days in such a way that, when the time comes to return home, each of you will have a clearer idea of what Christ expects of you.

During the Saturday night prayer vigil, August 14, 1993, at Cherry Creek State Park, the Pope spoke to nearly a quarter of a million people, warning:

There is spreading an anti-life mentality - an attitude of hostility to life in the womb and life in its last stages. Precisely when science and medicine are achieving a greater capacity to safeguard health and life, the threats against life are becoming more insidious. Abortion and euthanasia - the actual killing of another human being - are hailed as 'rights' and solutions to 'problems' - an individual's or society's.

On Sunday, August 15, 1993, Pope John Paul II addressed a crowd of over 375,000 people from 70 different countries in a Mass celebrated at Cherry Creek State Park, Colorado, as a part of "World Youth Day." With Vice-President Al Gore in attendance, the Pope exclaimed:

A 'culture of death' seeks to impose itself on our desire to live, and live to the full....In our own century, as at no other time in history, the 'culture of death' has assumed a social and institutional form of legality to justify the most horrible crimes against humanity: genocide, 'final solutions,' 'ethnic cleansings' and massive taking of lives of human beings even before they are born, or before they reach the natural point of death....

In much of contemporary thinking, any reference to a 'law' guaranteed by the Creator is absent. There remains only each individual's choice of this or that objective as convenient or useful in a given set of circumstances. No longer is anything considered intrinsically 'good' and 'universally binding.'...

Vast sectors of society are confused about what is right and what is wrong and are at the mercy of those with the power to 'create' opinion and impose it on others....

The family especially is under attack. And the sacred character of Human Life is denied. Naturally, the weakest members of society are the most at risk. The unborn, children, the sick, the handicapped, the old, the poor and unemployed, the immigrant and refugee....

Do not be afraid to go out on the streets and into public places....This is no time to be ashamed of the Gospel. It is a time to preach it from the rooftops....

You must feel the full urgency of the task. Woe to you if you do not succeed in defending life. The church needs your energies, your enthusiasm, your youthful ideas, in order to make the Gospel of Life penetrate the fabric of society, transforming people's hearts and the structures of society in order to create a civilization of true justice and love.

On August 15, 1993, in his farewell address from Stapleton International Airport, Denver, Colorado, Pope John Paul II reiterated:

The 'culture of life' means respect for nature and protection of God's work of creation. . . . In a special way, it means respect for Human Life from the first moment of conception until its natural end.

In his 11th papal encyclical, entitled "Evangelium Vitae" - "Gospel of Life," issued April of 1995, Pope John Paul II stated:

Broad sectors of public opinion justify certain crimes against life in the name of individual freedom, and on this basis they claim not only exemption from punishment but even authorization by the state. . . .

The fact that legislation in many countries, perhaps even departing from basic principles of their constitutions, has determined not to punish these practices against life, and even to make them altogether legal, is both a disturbing symptom and a significant cause of grave moral decline. . . .

Pope John Paul II continued his papal letter of April 1995, expressing:

The mere possibility of harming, attacking or actually denying life in these circumstances is completely foreign to the religious and cultural way of thinking of the people of God. . . .
Whoever attacks human life in some way attacks God himself. . . .

[The unborn] would never be made human if it were not human already. . . .

Politicians cannot separate the realm of private conscience from that of public conduct.

Evangelist Billy Graham lauded the Pope's letter as:

A forceful and thoughtful defense of the sacredness of human life in the face of the modern world's reckless march toward violence and needless death.

On Sunday, October 8, 1995, to a crowd of nearly 50,000 people at Oriole Park in Camden Yards, Baltimore, Maryland, Pope John Paul II stated:

Democracy cannot be sustained without a shared commitment to certain moral truths about the human person and the human community. . . . Every generation of Americans needs to know that freedom consists not in doing what we like, but in having the right to do as we ought. . . .

Every moment is our opportunity to model ourselves on Jesus Christ - to allow the power of the Gospel to transform our personal lives and our service to others, according to the spirit of the Beatitudes...

Always be guided by the truth - by the truth about God who created and redeemed us, and by the truth about the human person, made in the image and likeness of God and destined for a glorious fulfillment in the Kingdom to come. Always be convincing witnesses to the truth.

On Sunday, October 8, 1995, at the Baltimore-Washington International Airport with Vice-President Al Gore, Pope John Paul admonished America once more before his departure:

At the center of the moral vision of your founding documents is the recognition of the rights of the human person and especially respect for the dignity and sanctity of human life in all conditions and at all stages of development. I say to you again, America, in the light of your own tradition: love life, cherish life, defend life, from conception to natural death.

Glenn, John Herschel, Jr. (b. July 18, 1921), a U.S. Senator from Ohio, was elected 1975. He was an astronaut and the first American to orbit in space. Colonel John H. Glenn, Jr. stated:

Freedom, devotion to God and country are not things of the past. They will never become old-fashioned.

Unknown Soldier, Tomb of the (November 11, 1921), was originated three years after the end of World War I. The records disclose how six soldiers were sent back to France for a special assignment. Outside the chapel at Chalons-sur-Marne, an officer met them with the instructions, "Men, it is my task to choose one of you to perform a great and sacred duty." Handing a rose to Sgt. Edward Younger, the officer continued, "In this church are four caskets. In them lie the bodies of four nameless American soldiers. Go into the chapel and place a rose on one of the caskets."

After the casket was chosen, it was brought back to America and placed in the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier in Arlington Cemetery, Virginia, to represent all of those brave men who died so our country could remain free. The inscription reads:

Here rests in honored glory an American soldier known only to God.

On Memorial Day, 1958, two more unknown soldiers, from World War II and the Korean War, were buried there as well. During his administration, President Ronald Reagan, along with citizens of the United States, laid the fourth soldier to rest in the tomb.

United Soviet Socialist Republic, Constitution of the (1922-1991), stated:

Article 124. In order to ensure to citizens freedom of conscience, the church in the U.S.S.R. is separated from the State, and the school from the church.

Hatfield, Mark Odom (b. July 12, 1922), a U.S. Senator from Oregon, was elected 1967. He was Governor of Oregon, 1959-67; Secretary of State of Oregon, 1957-59; Oregon State Senator, 1955-57; and Oregon State Representative, 1951-55.

American Quotations.txt

While a member of the 100th Congress, he supported President Ronald Reagan's signing of Public Law 100-307, January 25, 1988, setting aside the first Thursday of each May to celebrate a National Day of Prayer. Senator Mark Hatfield asserted:

For the Christian man to reason that God does not want him involved in politics because there are too many evil men in government is as insensitive as for a Christian doctor to turn his back on an epidemic because there are too many germs there.

Hyde, Henry John (b. April 18, 1924), a U. S. Representative from Illinois, elected 1975, has served in the 94th-103rd Congresses. He was a member of the Illinois General Assembly, 1967-74; received a degree from Georgetown University, Washington, 1946; and his law degree from Loyola University, Chicago, 1949.

In his address after receiving the "Defender of Life" Award at the Constitutional Litigation Conference, July 16, 1993, Congressman Henry Hyde stated:

"That all men are created equal and are endowed by their Creator." Human beings upon creation, not upon birth. That is where our human dignity comes from. It comes from the Creator. It is an endowment, not an achievement.

By membership in the human family, we are endowed by our Creator with "inalienable rights." They can't be voted away by a jury or a court.

"Among which are life" - the first inalienable right, the first endowment from the Creator. That is mainstream America, the predicate for our Constitution, our country's birth certificate. To respect the right to life as an endowment from the Creator....

It is the unborn who are the least of God's creatures. We have been told that whatsoever we do for the least of these we do unto Jesus.

Bush, George Herbert Walker (b. June 12, 1924), was the 41st President of the United States, 1989-93. During his administration the U. S. led the Allies to victory in Persian Gulf War; the Soviet Union was restructured; and the Tiananmen Square demonstration was crushed by Communist Government in Beijing, China. He was the Vice-President under Ronald Reagan, 1981-89; Director of the Central Intelligence Agency, 1976; U. S. Envoy to China, 1974; National Chairman of the Republican Party, 1973; Ambassador to the United Nations, 1971; U. S. Representative, 1967; partner in oil business, Texas, 1948-66; studied at Yale University, 1945-48; married Barbara Pierce, 1945; a Naval Aviator in the Pacific during World War II, 1943-45, receiving the Distinguished Flying Cross; and was the son of Prescott Bush, U. S. Senator from Connecticut.

On Friday, January 20, 1989, in his Inaugural Address, President George Bush stated:

I have just repeated word for word the oath taken by George Washington 200 years ago, and the Bible on which I place my hand is the Bible on which he placed his....

And my first act as President is a prayer. I ask you to bow your heads:

Heavenly Father, we bow our heads and thank You for Your love. Accept our thanks for the peace that yields this day and the shared faith that makes its continuance likely. Make us strong to do Your work, willing to heed and hear Your will, and write on our hearts these words: "Use power to help people." For we are given power not to advance our own purposes, not to make a great show in the world, nor a name. There is but one just use of power, and it is to serve people. Help us to remember it, Lord. Amen....

There is much to do; and tomorrow the work begins. I do not mistrust the future; I do not fear what is ahead. For our problems are large, but our heart is larger. Our challenges are great, but our will is greater. And if our flaws are endless, God's love is truly boundless....

Thank you. God bless you and God bless the United States of America.

On Thursday, February 22, 1990, at the request of Congress, Joint Resolution 164, issued a Presidential Proclamation declaring 1990 the International Year of Bible Reading:

Among the great books produced throughout the history of mankind, the Bible has been prized above all others by generations of men and women around the world - by people of every age, every race, and every walk of life.

The Bible has had a critical impact upon the development of Western civilization. Western literature, art, and music are filled with images and ideas that can be traced to its pages. More important, our moral tradition has been shaped by the laws and teachings it contains. It was a biblical view of man - one affirming the dignity and worth of the human person, made in the image of our Creator - that inspired the principles upon which the United States is founded. President Jackson called the Bible "the Rock on which our Republic rests" because he knew that it shaped the Founding Fathers' concept of individual liberty and their vision of a free and just society.

The Bible has not only influenced the development of our Nation's values and institutions but also enriched the daily lives of millions of men and women who have looked to it for comfort, hope, and guidance. On the American frontier, the Bible was often the only book a family owned. For those pioneers living far from any church or school, it served both as a source of religious instruction and as the primary text from which children learned to read. The historic speeches of Abraham Lincoln and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., provide compelling evidence of the role Scripture played in shaping the struggle against slavery and discrimination. Today the Bible continues to give courage and direction to those who seek truth and righteousness. In recognizing its enduring value, we recall the words of the prophet Isaiah, who declared, "The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand forever."

Containing revelations of God's intervention in human history, the Bible offers moving testimony to His love for mankind. Treasuring the Bible as a source of knowledge and inspiration. President Abraham Lincoln call this Great Book "the best gift God has given to man." President Lincoln believed that the Bible not only reveals the infinite goodness of our Creator, but also reminds us of our worth as individuals and our responsibilities toward one another.

President Woodrow Wilson likewise recognized the importance of the Bible to its readers. "The Bible is the word of life," he once said. Describing its contents, he added:

"You will find it full of real men and women not only but also of the things you have wondered about and been troubled about all your life, as men have been always; and the more you will read it the more it will become plain to you what things are worth while and what are not, what things make men happy - loyalty, right dealing, speaking the truth...and the things that are guaranteed to make men unhappy - selfishness, cowardice, greed, and everything that is low and mean. When you have read the Bible you will know that it is the Word of God, because you will have found it the key to your own heart, your own happiness, and your own duty."

President Wilson believed that the Bible helps its readers find answers to the mysteries and sorrows that often trouble the souls of men.

Cherished for centuries by men and women around the world, the Bible's value is timeless. Its significance transcends the boundaries between nations and languages because it carries a universal message to every human heart. This year numerous individuals and associations around the world will join in a campaign to encourage voluntary study of the Bible. Their efforts are worthy of recognition and support.

In acknowledgement of the inestimable value and timeless appeal of the Bible, the Congress, by Senate Joint Resolution 164, has designated the year 1990 as the "International Year of Bible Reading" and has authorized and requested the President to issue a proclamation in observance of this year.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE BUSH, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim the year 1990 as the International Year of Bible Reading. I invite all Americans to discover the great inspiration and knowledge that can be obtained through thoughtful reading of the Bible.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this twenty-second day of February, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ninety, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and fourteenth.

George Bush

On Thursday, May 3, 1990, President George Bush declared a National Day of Prayer:

The great faith that led our Nation's Founding Fathers to pursue this bold experiment in self-government has sustained us in uncertain and perilous times; it has given us strength and inspiration to this very day.

Like them, we do very well to recall our "firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence," to give thanks for the freedom and prosperity this Nation enjoys, and to pray for continued help and guidance from our wise and loving Creator.

President George Bush, in his 1992 National Day of Prayer Proclamation, declared:

Whatever our individual religious convictions may be, each of us is invited to join in this National Day of Prayer. Indeed, although we may find our own words to express it, each of us can echo this timeless prayer of Solomon, the ancient king who prayed for, and received, the gift of wisdom:

The Lord our God be with us, as He was with our fathers; may He not leave us or forsake us; so that He may incline our hearts to Him, to walk in all His ways... that all the peoples of the earth may know that the Lord is God; there is no other.

Carter, James Earl "Jimmy," Jr. (b. October 1, 1924), was the 39th President of the United States, 1977-81; Governor of Georgia, 1970-75; Georgia State Senator, 1962-66; managed family peanut farm and warehouse, Plains, Georgia, 1953-70; served in the U.S. Navy, 1947-53, electronics instructor and engineering officer aboard atomic-powered submarines; married Rosalynn Smith, 1947; and graduated from the U.S. Naval Academy, 1947.

On Tuesday, March 16, 1976, in an interview with Robert L. Turner, Jimmy Carter explained:

We believe that the first time we're born, as children, it's human life given to us; and when we accept Jesus as our Savior, it's a new life. That's what "born again" means.

On Thursday, July 15, 1976, Jimmy Carter delivered his Democratic acceptance speech in Madison Square Garden, New York City:

We have been shaken by a tragic war abroad and by scandals and broken promises at home... Guided by lasting and simple moral values, we have emerged idealists without illusions, realists who still know the old dreams of justice and liberty... We feel that moral decay has weakened our country... Our country has lived through a time of torment. It is now a time for healing. We want to have faith again!...

I have spoken many times about love, but love must be aggressively translated into simple justice. The test of any government is not how popular it is with the powerful, but how honestly and fairly it deals with the many who must depend on it.

It is time for a complete overhaul of our tax system. It is a disgrace to the human race...

Peace is the unceasing effort to preserve human rights. Peace is a combined demonstration of strength and good will. We will pray for peace and we will work for peace...

Ours was the first nation to dedicate itself so clearly to basic moral and philosophical principles: That all people are created equal and endowed with inalienable rights to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness; and that the power of government is derived from the consent of the governed.

On Thursday, January 20, 1977, in his Inaugural Address, President Jimmy Carter stated:

As my high school teacher, Miss Julia Coleman, used to say: "We must adjust to changing times and still hold to unchanging principles."...

Here before me is the Bible used in the inauguration of our first President in 1789, and I have just taken the oath of office on the Bible my mother gave me just a few years ago, opened to the timeless admonition from the ancient prophet Micah:

"He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what does the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God" (Micah 6:2)....

Ours was the first society openly to define itself in terms of both spirituality and of human liberty. It is that unique self-definition which has given us an exceptional appeal, but it also imposes on us a special obligation, to take on those moral duties which, when assumed, seem invariably to be in our own best interests....

Within us, the people of the United States, there is evident a serious and purposeful rekindling of confidence. And I join in the hope that when my time as your President has ended, people might say this about our Nation: that we had remembered the words of Micah and renewed our search for humility, mercy, and justice.

In regards to his inauguration, Jimmy Carter stated in his book, Keeping the Faith - Memoirs of a President (published 1982):

Shortly after noon, a few minutes before our walk began, I had tried to express in my inaugural address as simply and clearly as possible my ambitions for America. Over a period of several weeks I had done a great deal of work on these few words, and in the process had read the inaugural addresses of the Presidents who served before me. I was touched most of all by Woodrow Wilson's. Like him, I felt I was taking office at a time when Americans desired a return to first principles by their government. His call for national repentance also seemed appropriate, although I feared that a modern audience might not understand a similar call from me.

With Rosalynn I had discussed which of two Bible verses to cite. I had known them both since childhood, and they were an integral part our religious beliefs. At first, I intended to use II Chronicles 7:14 ("If my people, which are called by my name, shall humble themselves, and pray, and seek my face, and turn from their wicked ways; then will I hear from heaven, and will forgive their sins, and will heal their land"), but after some second thoughts about how those who did not share my beliefs might misunderstand and react to the words "wicked" and "sin," I chose Micah 6:8.

I kept my address very brief - one of the briefest of all. Its sentiments were compatible with my announcement as a candidate in December 1974 and with my acceptance speech at the Democratic Convention. It foreshadowed the thrust of my administration, and even the farewell address to the nation which I was to give almost four years later.

I stood on the bunting-draped, ornate temporary platform at the east front of the Capitol, strangely calm as I looked out on the beautiful scene. I could pick out only a few personal friends among the upturned faces, but at that time I felt that all of them were my friends; I knew they did not want me to fail. I was eager to tell them what was in my heart, although I realized it was a time more of pageantry than sober thought for most of them. It was just the opposite for me.

I had been cautioned to speak slowly and distinctly in order to minimize the distortion of the amplifiers and loudspeakers in the tremendous outdoor arena. (Later, when I watched a television replay, I thought my words had come too slowly.) I had labored over my talk and, at least to me, it was important.

"I have just taken the oath of office on the Bible my mother gave me just a few years ago, opened to a timeless admonition from the ancient prophet Micah: 'He hath showed thee, O man, what is good; and what doth the Lord require of thee, but to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God.'"

These words did not seem overly critical of our nation, but still held the reminder of the need to seek God's help and guidance as we sought to improve our commitment to justice and mercy.

In regards to his first days in office, Jimmy Carter stated in his book, Keeping the Faith - Memoirs of a President (published 1982):

During those first days we shook hands with literally thousands of people. In a series of receptions we welcomed governors, mayors, and county officials, designated Cabinet members, business executives, labor officials, Georgians, members of Congress, the diplomatic corps, military personnel, and many others. We wanted to thank some of them for their friendship and help; in other cases, we were eager to meet for the first time the political, diplomatic, and military leaders with whom I would be working in Washington.

I was particularly impressed when the officers and enlisted leaders of the armed forces visited. We noticed that, more than any other group, they were likely to make some reference to their prayers for us or to say, "God be with you." Somehow, this emphasis on their religious faith gave me a good feeling. I experienced a sense of brotherhood with them, and remembered from my own eleven years in the Navy that it was members of the military services who most wanted to maintain peace based on a strong America.

In regards to Presidential decisions, Jimmy Carter stated in his book, Keeping the Faith - Memoirs of a President (published 1982):

Although I was surrounded by people eager to help me, my most vivid impression of the Presidency remains the loneliness in which the most difficult decisions had to be made... And I prayed a lot - more than ever before in my life - asking God to give me a clear mind, sound judgement, and wisdom in dealing with affairs that could affect the lives of so many people in our own country and around the world. Although I cannot claim that my decisions were always the best ones, prayer was a great help to me. At least, it removed any possibility of timidity or despair as I faced my daily responsibilities.

In his book, Keeping the Faith - Memoirs of a President (published 1982), Jimmy Carter stated:

On the morning of the first hearing, we met in my small inner office and had a brief prayer together.

In regards to the country, Jimmy Carter stated in his book, Keeping the Faith - Memoirs of a President (published 1982):

Our country has been strongest and most effective when morality and a commitment to freedom and democracy have been most clearly emphasized in our foreign policy.

I had pointed out in my speech accepting the Democratic nomination for President in July 1976 that "Ours was the first nation to dedicate itself clearly to basic moral and philosophical principles... a singular act of wisdom and courage... a revolutionary development that captured the imagination of mankind." It was time for us to capture the imagination of the world again.

In regards to Israel, Jimmy Carter stated in his book, Keeping the Faith - Memoirs of a President (published 1982):

The Judeo-Christian ethic and study of the Bible were bonds between Jews and Christians which had always been part of my life. I also believed very deeply that the Jews who had survived the Holocaust deserved their own nation, and that they had a right to live in peace among their neighbors. I considered this homeland for the Jews to be compatible with the teachings of the Bible, hence ordained by God. These moral and religious beliefs made my commitment to the security of Israel unshakable.

Jimmy Carter, in his book Sources of Strength - Meditations on Scripture for a Living Faith, published 1997, stated:

"God doesn't want us to hide our weaknesses and needs but is eager to satisfy them. Remember the end of the story of the bleeding woman: Jesus sought her out in the crowd, told her "Your faith has healed you," and urged her, "Go in peace." Because she'd found within herself the courage to reach out to Jesus in her need, she was renewed and made whole, not only in body but in spirit, forgiven and freed from her sins, her subterfuge, and her shame. Christ is ready to do the same for us."

Jimmy Carter, in his book Sources of Strength - Meditations
Page 1136

American Quotations.txt
on Scripture for a Living Faith, published 1997, stated:

"Niebuhr urged Bonhoeffer to remain in America, for his own safety. Bonhoeffer refused. He felt he had to be among the other Christians who he knew were being persecuted in Germany. So he returned home, and for the rest of his life he played the role in the resistance to Hitler. He preached publicly against Nazism, racism, and anti-Semitism.... Bonhoeffer was finally arrested and imprisoned, and in 1945, just a few days before the allied armies liberated Germany, he was executed on the orders of Heinrich Himmler. He died a disciple and a martyr.... The same Holy Spirit that energized and encouraged the first disciples, and that gave Dietrich Bonhoeffer the strength to stand up against Nazi tyranny, is available to us today."

Rehnquist, William Hubbs (b. October 1, 1924), Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, 1986; was an Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, 1972-86; and U.S. Attorney General, 1969-72. He stated in his dissenting opinion in the case of Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 92, 99, 107 (1984):

It is impossible to build sound constitutional doctrine upon a mistaken understanding of Constitutional history.... The establishment clause had been expressly freighted with Jefferson's misleading metaphor for nearly forty years....

There is simply no historical foundation for the proposition that the framers intended to build a wall of separation [between church and state].... The recent court decisions are in no way based on either the language or intent of the framers....

But the greatest injury of the "wall" notion is its mischievous diversion of judges from the actual intentions of the drafters of the Bill of Rights.... The "wall of separation between church and State" is a metaphor based on bad history, a metaphor which has proved useless as a guide to judging. It should be frankly and explicitly abandoned.

In a dissenting opinion on the U.S. Supreme Court's refusal to hear a case regarding a Ten Commandment display in Elkhart, Indiana, Chief Justice Rehnquist stated:

The text of the Ten Commandments no doubt has played a role in the secular development of our society and can no doubt be presented by the government as playing such a role in our civic order.... A carving of Moses holding the Ten Commandments, surrounded by representations of other historical legal figures, adorns the frieze on the south wall of our courtroom, and we have said that the carving signals respect not for great proselytizers but for great lawgivers.

CITY OF ELKHART v. WILLIAM A. BOOKS ET AL., No. 00-1407, May 29, 2001, DISSENT BY REHNQUIST:

CHIEF JUSTICE REHNQUIST, with whom JUSTICE SCALIA and JUSTICE THOMAS join, dissenting from denial of certiorari.

Since 1958, a 6-foot granite monument inscribed with the Ten Commandments has stood in front of the city of Elkhart's Municipal Building, on the northeast corner of a lawn shared with two commemorative structures. The specific text was developed by representatives of the Jewish, Catholic, and Protestant faiths who sought to create a nonsectarian version [*5] of the Commandments.

In addition to the text, the monument depicts an eye within a pyramid similar to the one displayed on the one-dollar bill, an American eagle grasping the American flag, two small Stars of David and a similarly sized symbol representing Christ: two Greek letters, Chi and Rho, superimposed on each other.

A juvenile court judge, seeking to provide troubled youth with a common code of conduct, was the original impetus behind the project. The Fraternal Order of Eagles, a service organization "dedicated to promoting liberty, truth, and justice," financed the monument, and although it stands on public property, the city contributes no time, effort, or money to its maintenance. 235 F.3d 292, 294-295 (CA7 2000).

In a recent resolution, responding to a request that the monument be removed and to threat of litigation, the Elkhart Common Council recognized that the Ten Commandments "'reflect one of the earliest codes of human conduct.'" Id. at 297.

The resolution stated that the monument's symbols represent the "'cross cultural and historical significance'" of the Commandments, which have had a "'significant impact on the development of the [*6] fundamental legal principles of Western Civilization.'" Id. at 312, n. 1 (opinion concurring in part and dissenting in part). It also noted that Elkhart's Municipal Building is home to numerous other historical and cultural objects. Ibid.

Nonetheless, in 1998, 40 years after the monument's erection, respondents, residents of Elkhart County, filed suit against the city under Rev. Stat. ? 1979, 42 U.S.C. ? 1983, alleging that the monument's presence violated the Establishment Clause. The District Court granted summary judgment for the city, and a divided panel of the Court of Appeals for the Seventh Circuit reversed.

That court, applying the oft-criticized framework set out in Lemon v. Kurtzman, 403 U.S. 602, 29 L. Ed. 2d 745, 91 S. Ct. 2105 (1971), first considered whether the city's display of the monument had a secular purpose. The court found that it did not. 235 F.3d at 301 (citing Lemon, supra, at 612-613).

The court relied in part on Stone v. Graham, 449 U.S. 39, 66 L. Ed. 2d 199, 101 S. Ct. 192 (1980) (per curiam), where we struck down a state statute requiring the posting of the Ten Commandments in public schoolrooms, on the ground [*7] that the statute had no secular purpose. Stone's finding of an impermissible purpose is hardly controlling here.

In Stone, the posting effectively induced school children to meditate upon the Commandments during the school day. Id. at 42. We have been "particularly vigilant" in monitoring compliance with the Establishment Clause in that context, where the State exerts "great authority and coercive power" over students through mandatory attendance requirements.

Edwards v. Aguillard, 482 U.S. 578, 583-584, 96 L. Ed. 2d 510, 107 S. Ct. 2573 (1987); County of Allegheny v. American Civil Liberties Union, Greater Pittsburgh Chapter, 492 U.S. 573, 620, n. 69, 106 L. Ed. 2d 472, 109 S. Ct. 3086 (1989). Those concerns are absent here, where the Ten Commandments monument stands outside the city's Municipal Building.

Stone's unique setting may explain our reluctance to accept in that case the State's view that its display of the Commandments had a secular purpose. But we have never determined, in Stone or elsewhere, that the Commandments lack a secular application.

To be sure, the Ten Commandments are a "sacred text in the Jewish and Christian faiths," concerning, in part, "the religious[*8] duties of believers." 449 U.S. at 41-42.

Undeniably, however, the Commandments have secular significance as well, because they have made a substantial contribution to our secular legal codes. Even Stone noted that "integrated into the school curriculum" the Commandments "may constitutionally be used in an appropriate study of history, civilization, [or] ethics." Id. at 42.

And as the Court of Appeals recognized, "the text of the Ten Commandments no doubt has played a role in the secular development of our society and can no doubt be presented by the government as playing such a role in our civic order." 235 F.3d at 302.

The council's resolution stated the city's intent to display the Commandments in precisely that way -- to reflect their cultural, historical, and legal significance. We are "normally deferential" to "articulations of a secular purpose," so long as they are "sincere and not a sham." Aguillard, supra, at 586-587.

There is no evidence of insincerity here, and thus no justification for the Court of Appeals' refusal to credit the city's stated purpose. That the city only recently articulated its aims for [*9] displaying the monument is of no moment, for it is only recently in its 40-year history that the monument has come under attack.

That the monument bears religious symbols as well as secular ones, and that speeches by religious leaders accompanied its dedication, do not alter the analysis. Even assuming that these aspects of the monument's appearance and history indicate that it has some religious meaning, the city is not bound to display only symbols that are wholly secular, or to convey solely secular messages.

In determining whether a secular purpose exists, we have simply required that the displays not be "motivated wholly by religious considerations." Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 680, 79 L. Ed. 2d 604, 104 S. Ct. 1355 (1984). The fact that the monument conveys some religious meaning does not cast doubt on the city's valid secular purposes for its display.

Turning to the second prong of Lemon, the Court of Appeals concluded that "even if we were to ignore the primary purpose behind displaying the Ten Commandments monument, we would have to conclude that this particular display has the primary or principal effect of advancing religion." 235 F.3d at 304 (citing Allegheny, [*10] supra, at 592).

In Allegheny, and in Lynch, we recognized the importance of context in evaluating whether displays of symbols with religious meaning send an "unmistakable message" of government support for, or endorsement of, religion. Allegheny, supra, at 598-600; Lynch, supra, at 680.

Considering the Ten Commandments monument in the context in which it appears, it sends no such message. The city has displayed the monument outside the Municipal Building, which houses the local courts and local prosecutor's office.

This location emphasizes the foundational role of the Ten Commandments in secular, legal matters. Indeed, a carving of Moses holding the Ten Commandments, surrounded by representations of other historical legal figures, adorns the frieze on the south wall of our courtroom, and we have said that the carving "signals respect not for great proselytizers but for great lawgivers." Allegheny, supra, at 652-653 (STEVENS, J., concurring in part and dissenting in part).

Similarly, the Ten Commandments monument and the surrounding structures convey that the monument is part of the city's celebration of its cultural and [*11] historical roots, not a promotion of religious faith.

To that end, the monument shares the lawn outside the Municipal Building with the Revolutionary War Monument, which honors the Revolutionary War soldiers buried in Elkhart County, and a structure called the "Freedom Monument." 235 F.3d at 296. Above the entrance to the building is a bas-relief of an Elk's head, and the words "DEDICATUM JUSTITIAM." Id. at 295.

Considered in that setting, the monument does not express the city's preference for particular religions or religious belief in general. It simply reflects the Ten Commandments' role in the development of our legal system, just as the war memorial and Freedom Monument reflect the history and culture of the city of Elkhart. Perhaps that is why, for four decades, no person has challenged the monument as an unconstitutional endorsement of religion.

I would grant certiorari to decide whether a monument which has stood for more than 40 years, and has at least as much civic significance as it does religious, must be physically removed from its place in front of the city's Municipal Building.

United States Supreme Court (1925), in the case of Pierce v. Society of Sisters, 268 U.S. 510 (1925), stated:

The fundamental theory upon which all governments in this Union repose excludes any general power of the state to standardize its children.

The child is not the mere creature of the state.

O' Connor, (Mary) Flannery (March 25, 1925-August 3, 1964), born in Savannah, Georgia, was an American author, whose published works include: Wise Blood, 1952; A Good Man is Hard to Find, 1955; The Violent Bear It Away, 1960; Everything That Rises Must Converge, 1965; and Mystery and Manners, 1969. Her work, Complete Stories, was awarded the National Book Award for fiction in 1972.

Flannery O'Connor stated in a talk at Notre Dame University in the spring of 1957:

Southern culture has fostered a type of imagination that has been influenced by Christianity of a not too unorthodox kind and by a strong devotion to the Bible, which has kept our minds attached to the concrete and the living symbol.

In Granville Hick's symposium The Living Novel, Flannery O'Connor wrote:

For I am no disbeliever in the spiritual purpose and no vague believer. I see from the standpoint of Christian orthodoxy. This means that for me the meaning of life is centered in our Redemption by Christ and what I see in the world in relation to that.

Thatcher, Margaret Hilda (b. October 13, 1925), became the first woman Prime Minister of the United Kingdom, 1979; after succeeding Robert Heath as the Conservative leader, 1975. She had worked as a research chemist before becoming a barrister and entering Parliament in 1959. She had served as minister of pensions and national insurance, 1961; opposition spokesman on education, 1969; and secretary of state for education and science, 1970. In her administration as Prime Minister, she instituted cuts in government spending, and regained control of the Falkland Islands, 1982. On February 5, 1996, Margaret Thatcher stated:

We have to remember that the Jewish people never, ever lost their faith in the face of all the persecution and as a result have come to have their own promised land and to have Jerusalem as a capital city again.

Biblical basis affects one's whole view, attitude and outlook when you think that the notion of human rights comes from the sanctity on the individual. Each person matters in the faiths that start off with this sanctity of the individual. The Decalogue [Ten Commandments] are addressed to each and every person. This is the origin of our common humanity and of the sanctity of the individual. Each one has a duty to try to carry out those commandments. You don't get that in any other political creed. It isn't merely about democracy and liberty as such. It is personal liberty with personal responsibility. Responsibility to your parents, to your children, to your God. This really binds us together in a way that nothing else does. If you accept freedom, you've got to have principles about the responsibility. You can't do this without a biblical foundation. Your Founding Fathers came over with that. They came over with the doctrines of the New Testament as well as the Old. They looked after one another, not only as a matter of necessity, but as a matter of duty to their God. There is no other country in the world which started that way.

Today, people are trying democracy. But they look at it as a philosophy or political pattern, without understanding its roots. I'm afraid democracy's fundamental religious roots are weakening. There are some countries, fortunately, kept alive by faithful people. But even they are tending to weaken. In the British system, children are taught Christianity. They are taught a faith in school. It is a compulsory subject. In my day, the schools were places where children learned the great hymns which stayed them the rest of their lives. Hymns, Prayers, Bible readings. It is really all locked together. These things pass into our bloodstreams. Even if your parents are not practicing Christians, or Jews, or what have you.

It is important that people realize that history is an enormous, great and wonderful story of the fantastic efforts of man in the face of great diversity. By looking at history this way, you see that man never lost faith, no matter how terrible things were.

Today, I am particularly concerned about the number of marriages that break up. And about the numbers of children that are born to single mothers. This is the greatest threat of all. Those numbers have gone up from 1950, both in your country and in mine. For centuries before that it stayed about the same. These things did happen to single mothers, but it was only about 5% of births. In the post-war period, mothers were provided with houses, or flats and incomes. We hoped that would help the children. But what we have done by this is not to relieve the problem, but to multiply it. Today, 30% of children in your country and mine are born to single mothers. We also find that the criminality factor is much higher in children with single mothers, for the reason that they've never been brought up against a stable background with a supportive environment. If there is one thing I cannot stand, it is any suggestion of cruelty or abuse of children. It is the worst crime. It was in the New Testament that our Lord said, "Anyone who harms these little ones shall have a millstone around his neck and sunk in the deepest sea."

Winston Churchill...was a great traditionalist. I remember the last time he left the House of Commons. We were rising to go to the election, and knew he would not come back to the House. He couldn't walk unaided. He got up from his seat and two members supported him. He turned around and bowed for the last time to the speaker. The significance of that is that he was not only bowing to the speaker. When we bow, we are bowing because the first Parliament sat in the Palace of Westminster in a student's chapel. The speaker's chair and the table in front were where the altar was. And so when it became the House of Commons, you would bow also toward the altar. And of course, we have prayers every day. So he was bowing for the last time. He was a man of great faith.

Kennedy, Robert Francis (November 20, 1925-June 6, 1968), was the U.S. Attorney General 1961-64, during the presidency of his brother, John F. Kennedy, and a U.S. Senator from New York, 1965-68. He was assassinated in 1968 while campaigning for the Presidency.

In August of 1965, in a speech to the graduating class of the International Police Academy in Washington, Robert F. Kennedy stated:

Education is always vital - not just for the cities, not even only for children, but for every peasant who can learn to read, or drive a tractor, or even use a hoe instead of a forked stick. For what we must build, after all, is a nation - a nation in which, as in the Scriptures, "Your only men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions." And where there is no vision, life shall perish from the earth....

I think you will meet that obligation - that you will have the fortitude and wisdom and patience to "bear the burden," as President Kennedy said, of the "long twilight struggle, year in and year out, 'rejoicing in hope, patient in tribulation'" - and I am proud, as much as I can, to share that burden with you.

Elizabeth II (b. April 21, 1926), Elizabeth Alexandra Mary ascended to queen of Great Britain and Northern Ireland in February 6, 1952, upon the death of her father King George VI. In 1944, she served as a councillor of state during World War II; she married Philip, Duke of Edinburgh on November 20, 1947, and bore him four children: Prince Charles Philip Arthur George, November 14, 1948; Princess Anne Elizabeth Alice Louise, August 15, 1950; Prince Andrew Albert Christian Edward, February 19, 1960; and Prince Edward Anthony Richard Louis, March 10, 1964.

On February 16, 1954, in a speech from the throne opening a session of the Australian Parliament, Melbourne, Queen Elizabeth II stated:

It is my resolve that under God I shall not only rule but serve. That is not only the tradition of my family. It describes, I believe, the modern character of the British Crown.

Minnesota State Court (1927), in the case of Kaplan v. Independent School District of Virginia, 214 N.W. 18 (Minn. 1927), stated:

The legislature has, however, seen the need of moral training and of instruction in the care of body and mind. What is more natural than turning to that book for moral precepts which for ages has been regarded by the majority of the peoples of the most civilized nations as the fountain of moral teachings? [Quoting Vidal v. Girard's Executor's].... It may be truthfully asserted that no more exacting rules of obedience to constituted civil authority and of right living conducive to good will among men exists anywhere than those found in the New Testament of the Bible - rules to which neither Jew nor atheist can reasonably take exception.

We shall not stop to discuss whether or not this is a Christian nation; it is enough to refer to such discussion in the decisions hereinafter cited. However, we think it cannot be successfully controverted that this government was founded on the principles of Christianity by men either dominated by or reared amidst its influence.

But we do feel that the intolerance which drove so many to seek an asylum in America has gradually abated and is not now so intense. This intolerance touching religion, the Bible, or certain scientific lines of study is not confined to the Christian or the orthodox Jew, but it seems to grip the atheist and the disbeliever as intensely. Speaking for myself only, I think that instead of fostering this spirit of intolerance by a strained construction of the Constitution so as to exclude from use by public schools of any book proclaiming great moral precepts, it is more desirable that a liberal construction be adopted to the end that even in the public school the pupils perceive that there is that in our principles of government which recognizes the religious element of man and guarantees protection to its free exercise and culture, and that divergent views of others concerning religion and worship should be tolerated and respected so long as there is no effort made to teach or induce any pupil to adopt them.

Colorado State Court (1927), in the case of Vollmar v. Stanley, 255 Pac. 610 (Col. 1927), stated:

Some of it is sectarian in the sense that it is relied on by this or that sect to prove its peculiar doctrines, but that does not make its reading the teaching of a sectarian tenet or doctrine. If all religious instruction were prohibited, no history could be taught. Hume was an unbeliever and writes as such; Macaulay is accused of partiality to dissenters; Motely of injustice to Roman Catholics. Nearly all histories of New England and indeed of the United States, are bound up with religion, religious inferences, implications, and often prejudices. Modern New England histories take pains to correct some of these things, and some people object to the corrections. Even religious toleration cannot be taught without teaching religion. . . .

Further, if we are to take the argument of plaintiff that sectarian means more than the sects of religion and say that it means religious, as we are asked to do, we must push it to its logical limit, and say that believers are a sect, and that, in deference to atheists no reference to God may be made (unless to deny Him, which we suppose would not be regarded as sectarian) and this would bar the singing of America and the Star Spangled Banner; and if we should say that sectarian means religious, we would bar not only the greatest of our poets, including Shakespeare and Milton, whose most inspiring passages have a religious basis, but the greatest of our orators, including Webster, Clay and Lincoln.

For the eighth point it is said that reading the Bible is intolerant and a form of religious persecution; but, if those who do not like it can stay away and yet say to those who do like it, "you shall not read it here," who is intolerant? Are those who stay away persecuted?

It is urged that to absent themselves for a religious reason "subjects the pupils to a religious stigma and places them at a disadvantage." We cannot agree to that. The shoe is on the other foot. We have known many boys to be ridiculed for complying with religious regulations but never one for neglecting them or absenting himself from them.

Borman, Frank (b. March 14, 1928), was the Commander of the Apollo VIII spacecraft, which was the first manned ship to orbit the moon. He served as a U. S. Air Force Officer; NASA director for space stations, 1969-70; vice-president of Eastern Airlines, 1970-75, president 1975-86.

He shared this message on December 24, 1968, by remote television up-link as he looked at the earth from 240,000 miles away:

For all the people of earth, we have a message we would like to send you: In the beginning God created the heaven and the earth. And the earth was without form, and void; and darkness was upon the face of the deep. And the Spirit of God moved upon the face of the waters. And God said, Let there be light; and there was light... And God saw that it was good.

In December of 1968, from aboard the Apollo VIII, Astronaut Frank Borman gave the prayer:

Give us, O God, the vision which can see love in the world in spite of human failure. Give us the faith to trust Thy goodness in spite of our ignorance and weakness. Give us the knowledge that we may continue to pray with understanding hearts, and show us what each one of us can do to set forward the coming of the day of universal peace.

Frank, Anne (1929-late February 1945), was a Dutch Jewish diarist. She wrote a telling narrative of her life in Holland during the Nazi occupation before dying in a concentration camp.

In The Diary of a Young Girl, dated March 7, 1944, Anne Frank wrote:

Whoever is happy will make others happy too. He who has courage and faith will never perish in misery!

King, Martin Luther, Jr. (January 15, 1929-April 4, 1968), was a prominent black American civil rights leader. In his address at Montgomery, Alabama, December 31, 1955, Martin Luther King, Jr., declared:

If you will protest courageously, and yet with dignity and Christian love, when the history books are written in future generations, the historians will have to pause and say, "There lived a great people - a black people - who injected new meaning and dignity into the veins of civilization."

On April 16, 1963, written from his jail cell in Birmingham, Alabama, Martin Luther King, Jr. stated:

I have the honor of serving as president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, an organization operating in every Southern state, with headquarters in Atlanta, Georgia. We have some eighty-five affiliate organizations across the South, and one of them is the Alabama Christian Movement for Human Rights....

I am in Birmingham because injustice exists here. Just as the prophets of the 8th century B.C. left their villages and carried their "thus saith the Lord" far afield, and just as the Apostle Paul left his village of Tarsus and carried the gospel of Jesus Christ to the far corners of the Greco-Roman world, so am I compelled to carry the gospel of freedom beyond my own hometown. Like Paul, I must constantly respond to the Macedonian call for aid....

We have waited for more than 340 years for our constitutional and God-given rights.... One may well ask, "How can you advocate breaking some laws and obeying others?" The answer lies in the fact that there are two types of laws: just and unjust. I agree with St. Augustine that "an unjust law is no law at all."...

Sometimes a law is just on its face and unjust in its application. For instance, I have been arrested on a charge of parading without a permit. Now there is nothing wrong in having an ordinance which requires a permit for a parade, but such an ordinance becomes unjust when it is used to maintain segregation and to deny citizens the First Amendment privilege of peaceful assembly and protest....

I must make two honest confessions to you, my Christian and Jewish brothers. First, I must confess that over the past few years I have been gravely disappointed with the white moderate... who is more devoted to "order" than justice....

I began thinking about the fact that I stand in the middle of two opposing forces in the Negro community. One is a force of complacency made up of Negroes who, as a result of long years of oppression, are so completely drained of self-respect and a sense of "somebodiness" that they have adjusted to segregation, and of a few middle-class Negroes who, because of a degree of academic and economic security and because in some ways they profit by segregation, have consciously become insensitive to the problem of the masses.

The other force is one of bitterness and hatred, and it comes perilously close to advocating violence. It is expressed in the various black nationalist groups that are springing up across the nation, the largest and best-known being Elijah Muhammad's Muslim movement. Nourished by the Negro's frustration over the continued existence of racial discrimination, this movement is made up of people who have lost faith in America, who have absolutely repudiated Christianity, and who have concluded that the white man is an incorrigible "devil."

I have tried to stand between these two forces, saying that we need emulate neither the "do-nothingism" of the complacent nor the hatred of the black nationalist. For there is the more excellent way of love and non-violent protest. I am grateful to God that, through the influence of the Negro church, the way of nonviolence became an integral part of our struggle....

I am further convinced that if our white brothers dismiss as "rabble-rousers" and "outside agitators" those of us who employ nonviolent direct action and if they refuse to support our nonviolent efforts, millions of Negroes will, out of frustration and despair, seek solace and security in black nationalist ideologies - a development that would inevitably lead to a frightening racial nightmare....

Let me take note of my other major disappointment. Though there are some notable exceptions, I have also been disappointed with the white church and its leadership. I do not say this as one of those negative critics who can always find something wrong with the church. I say this as a minister of the Gospel, who loves the church; who was nurtured in its bosom; who has been sustained by its spiritual blessings and who will remain true to it as long as the cord of life shall lengthen....

In the midst of a mighty struggle to rid our nation of racial and economic injustice I have heard many ministers say, "Those are social issues with which the gospel has no real concern," and I have watched many churches commit themselves to a completely otherworldly religion which makes a strange, unbiblical distinction between body and soul, between the sacred and the secular....

I am thankful to God that some noble souls from the ranks of organized religion have broken loose from the paralyzing chains of conformity and joined us as active partners in the struggle for freedom.... Yes, they have gone to jail with us. Some have been kicked out of their churches, have lost the support of their bishops and fellow ministers. But they have acted in the faith that right defeated is stronger than evil triumphant. Their witness has been the spiritual salt that has preserved the true meaning of the gospel in these troubled times. They have carved a tunnel of hope through the dark mountain of disappointment. I hope the church as a whole will meet the challenge of this decisive hour....

One day the South will know that when these disinherited children of God sat down at lunch counters they were in reality standing up for what is best in the American dream and for the most sacred values in our Judeo-Christian heritage, thereby bringing our nation back to those great wells of democracy which were dug deep by the founding fathers in their formulation of the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence.

On August 28, 1963, on the occasion of the Civil Rights March on Washington, Martin Luther King, Jr., declared:

Now is the time to open the doors of opportunity to all of God's children. Now is the time to lift our nation from the quicksands of racial injustice to the solid rock of brotherhood....

In the process of gaining our rightful place we must not be guilty of wrongful deeds. Let us not seek to satisfy our thirst for freedom by drinking from the cup of bitterness and hatred. We must forever conduct our struggle on the high plane of dignity and discipline. We must not allow our creative protest to degenerate into physical violence. . . . New militancy which has engulfed the Negro community must not lead us to a distrust of all white people, for many of our white brothers, as evidenced by their presence here today, have come to realize that their destiny is tied up with our destiny and their freedom is inextricably bound to our freedom. We cannot walk alone. . . .

I still have a dream. It is a dream deeply rooted in the American dream. I have a dream that one day this nation will rise up and live out the true meaning of its creed: "We hold these truths to be self-evident; that all men are created equal."

I have a dream that one day on the red hills of Georgia the sons of former slaves and the sons of former slaveowners will be able to sit down together at the table of brotherhood. . . .

I have a dream that my four little children will one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin, but by the content of their character. . . .

I have a dream. . . . where little black boys and black girls will be able to join hands with little white boys and white girls and walk together as sisters and brothers.

I have a dream today. I have a dream that one day every valley shall be exalted, every hill and mountain shall be made low, the rough places will be made plain, and the crooked places will be made straight, and the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together. . . .

With this faith we will be able to work together, to pray together, to struggle together, to go to jail together, to stand up for freedom together, knowing that we will be free one day.

This will be the day when all of God's children will be able to sing with new meaning, "My country 'tis of thee, sweet land of liberty, of thee I sing. Land where my fathers died, land of the Pilgrims' pride, from every mountainside, let freedom ring. . . .

When we let freedom ring, when we let it ring from every village and every hamlet, from every state and every city, we will be able to speed up that day when all of God's children, black men and white men, Jews and Gentiles, Protestants and Catholics, will be able to join hands and sing in the words of the old Negro spiritual, "Free at last! Free at last! Thank God Almighty, we are free at last!"

In accepting the Nobel Peace Prize on December 11, 1964, Martin Luther King, Jr., admonished:

Nonviolence is the answer to the crucial political and moral questions of our time; the need for man to overcome oppression and violence without resorting to oppression and violence.

Man must evolve for all human conflict a method which rejects revenge, aggression and retaliation. The foundation of such a method is love.

In The Trumpet of Conscience, Martin Luther King, Jr., explains:

The limitation of riots...is that they cannot win...and their participants know it. Hence, rioting is not revolutionary but reactionary because it invites defeat. It involves an emotional catharsis, but it must be followed by a sense of futility.

Martin Luther King, Jr. remarked:

If a man is called to be a streetsweeper, he should sweep streets as Michelangelo painted, or Beethoven composed music, or Shakespeare wrote poetry. He should sweep streets so well that all the hosts of heaven and earth will pause to say, here lived a great streetsweeper who did his job well.

In April of 1968, in an article shortly before his death, entitled "Showdown for Nonviolence," Martin Luther King, Jr. stated:

For us in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, violence is not only morally repugnant, it is pragmatically barren....

We know from past experience that Congress and the President won't do anything until you develop a movement around which people of goodwill can find a way to put pressure on them....This really means making the movement powerful enough, dramatic enough, morally appealing enough, so that people of good-will, the churches, labor, liberals, intellectuals, students, poor people themselves begin to put pressure on congressmen to the point that they can no longer elude our demands....

We really feel that riots tend to intensify the fears of the white majority while relieving its guilt, and so open the door to greater repression....We are not going to tolerate violence. And we are making it very clear that the demonstrators who are not prepared to be nonviolent should not participate in this....

We need this movement. We need it to bring about a new kind of togetherness between blacks and whites. We need it to bring allies together and to bring the coalition of conscience together....I am committed to nonviolence absolutely....I will continue to preach it and teach it, and we at the Southern Christian Leadership Conference will still do this. I plan to stand by nonviolence because I have found it to be a philosophy of life that regulates not only my dealings in the struggle for racial justice but also my dealings with people, with my own self....

There is an Old Testament prophecy of the "sins of the fathers being visited upon the third and fourth generations." Nothing could be more applicable to our situation....

We can write another luminous moral chapter in American history. All of us are on trial in this troubled hour, but time still permits us to meet the future with a clear conscience.

On April 3, 1968, the evening before his assassination, Martin Luther King, Jr. gave an address in Birmingham, Alabama:

I just want to do God's will. And He's allowed me to go to the mountain. And I've looked over, and I've seen the promised land...

Kennedy, Dr. D. James (b.1930), an author, lecturer and pastor of Coral Ridge Presbyterian Church in Florida, was quoted in Dr. Tim LaHaye's book, Faith of Our Founding Fathers, 1987. In his message entitled "Church and State," Dr. D. James Kennedy stated:

In reading over the Constitutions of all fifty of our states, I discovered something which some of you may not know: there is in all fifty, without exception, an appeal or a prayer to the Almighty God of the universe....

Through all fifty state Constitutions, without exception, there runs this same appeal and reference to God who is the Creator of our liberties and the preserver of our freedoms.

In his work, "The Bible and the Constitution," Dr. D. James Kennedy referred to an article in the December 1982, issue of Newsweek magazine, entitled, "How the Bible made America":

New historians are discovering that the Bible, perhaps more than the Constitution, is our founding document.

On October 12, 1999, Dr. D. James Kennedy was honored on the floor of the United States Congress as Representative Walter B. Jones of North Carolina read the following, which was entered into the Congressional Record:

TRIBUTE TO DR. D. JAMES KENNEDY, A TRUE CHRISTIAN STATESMAN -- HON. WALTER B. JONES (Extensions of Remarks - October 12, 1999), [Page: E2071] GPO's PDF, HON. WALTER B. JONES OF NORTH CAROLINA IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES, TUESDAY, OCTOBER 12, 1999:

Mr. JONES of North Carolina. Mr. Speaker, it is clear when reading both the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States, that our Founding Fathers recognized the important role that God and the Bible would play in guiding our Nation's leaders who governed the world. Today, it is becoming clear that the Judeo-Christian principles this nation was founded upon are as critical to the future progress and stability of this nation as they have been in the past. In fact, the 18th President of the United States, Ulysses S. Grant, emphasized the important relationship between the Bible and the freedom that you and I enjoy today. He said, (and I quote) "Hold fast to the Bible as the sheet anchor of your liberties; write its precepts on your heart and practice them in your lives. To the influence of this Book we are indebted for the progress made, and to this we must look as our guide in the future."

Mr. Speaker, there is a man of Christian faith, a leader within our society today who is working to remind you and I to keep this same spirit of faith and freedom alive. That man is Dr. D. James Kennedy, a true Christian statesman. Mr. Speaker, when I was elected in 1994 to represent the citizens of Eastern North Carolina, Dr. Kennedy presented every newly elected Member with a copy of the New Geneva study Bible. In the front cover is a note stating his hope that we would read and apply the messages we found in the scripture to our work and our daily lives--just as Ulysses Grant proposed. Mr. Speaker, I begin and end each day on my knees in prayer. I pray for guidance in the decisions I make that affect the American people. In the last 5 years, I have often reached for the Bible that Dr. Kennedy gave to me for inspiration, encouragement, and a sense of hope.

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Kennedy embodies the ideal of Christian statesmanship. In fact, he has dedicated his life to celebrate and share God's word. In 1959, he became the founding pastor of the Coral Ridge Presbyterian Church in Florida. This year, as the church celebrates its 40th anniversary, Dr. Kennedy is the most widely listened-to Presbyterian minister in the world. His broadcast messages are televised to 35,000 cities and towns across the United States. But Dr. Kennedy's commitment to evangelism and strengthening our nation's communities extends well beyond his role as senior minister to Coral Ridge Church. In 1962, he created a lay-witnessing program called Evangelism Explosion International, which is used in every nation to encourage growth in congregations around the world.

Dr. Kennedy also founded the Westminster Academy in 1971 to provide quality Christian education for the citizens of Fort Lauderdale, Florida. In addition, he started Knox Theological Seminary in 1990, which now offers courses in the United States as well as in Seoul, Korea. Mr. Speaker, last fall I had the unique opportunity to participate and see first hand, Dr. Kennedy's efforts to encourage and motivate people of faith. Coral Ridge Ministries is the television and radio outreach of Dr. Kennedy's word, which this year celebrates its 25th anniversary. One of the television programs his ministry airs is called "The Power of One." The program recognizes individuals in our Nation's communities who are working to promote Christian values. One such person is Rebecca Mason, a 10-year old girl from the Third District of North Carolina, which I am proud to represent. Rebecca became frustrated with the state of our country after learning some frightening facts about the rate of crime and violence in our Nation's neighborhoods. Rebecca could not understand why more people of faith were not taking action, so she decided to do something about it. She created a petition for Christian values, calling upon all Americans to stand up and take action to promote and preserve the morals and values we learn from the Bible. Rebecca's efforts were featured on Dr. Kennedy's "Power of One" program. As a man of strong religious conviction myself and as Rebecca's Congressman, I was asked to participate in the program. It was an honor for me to be part of a television program that recognizes the citizens who are taking action to make their communities and their nation stronger. In fact, it reminded me of one of my favorite Bible verses from Isaiah book 6, verse 8. It says, "Also I heard the voice of the Lord, saying Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? Then said I, Here am I; send me."

Mr. Speaker, Dr. Kennedy, like Rebecca Mason, has answered God's call, and he has devoted his life to serving as a messenger of God's word. Today, I am proud to recognize his efforts during this exciting year of celebration to show my respect for his devotion and his commitment to spread the message of hope to all America. Thank you Dr. Kennedy, for reminding those of us who serve the American people--and all citizens--that faith and freedom go hand in hand. Happy anniversary. May God continue to Bless you and give you the strength to continue sharing His message with the world.

Robertson, Marion Gordon "Pat" (b. March 22, 1930), is an internationally renowned broadcaster and founder of: The Christian Broadcasting Network, Inc., airing in over 70 countries; The 700 Club, reaching an average of one million households daily; International Family Entertainment, Inc., a publicly held company on the New York Stock Exchange, producing The Family Channel, a commercial cable television network reaching 95% of all cable households and 62% of all households in the U.S.; Regent University, offering master's and doctoral degrees, accredited by the Commission of Colleges of the Southern Association of Colleges and Schools, with an enrollment of nearly 1400 students; and Operation Blessing International Relief and Development Corporation, a nonprofit humanitarian organization, providing over $440 million in relief to nearly 114 million people in 50 states and 71 foreign countries since 1978. He was the recipient of the 1994 Omega Fellowship Award; Defender of Israel Award, 1994; and was selected by Newsweek as one of America's 100 Cultural Elite. He graduated magna cum laude from Washington and Lee University; earned his juris doctor degree from Yale University Law School; and his master's degree from New York Theological Seminary. In 1988, Pat Robertson was a candidate for the U.S. Presidency; and he is the author of nine books, including: Turning the Tide; The New Millennium; The New World Order; The Secret Kingdom, which was on the New York best-seller list, 1983, and America's Dates with Destiny, in which he wrote:

On September 17, 1787, the day our Constitution was signed, the absolute monarch Ch'ien Lung, emperor of the Manchu (or Ch'ing) Dynasty, reigned supreme over the people of China. To guard against revolt, Chinese officials could not hold office in their home provinces, and... revolts were put down by ruthless military force.

In Japan the shogun (warriors) of the corrupt Tokugawa chamberlain Tanuma Okitsugu exercised corrupt and totalitarian authority over the Japanese.

In India, Warren Hastings, the British Governor of Bengal, had successfully defeated the influence of the fragmented Mogul dynasties that ruled India since 1600.

Catherine II was the enlightened despot of all the Russias.

Joseph II was the emperor of Austria, Bohemia and Hungary.

For almost half a century, Frederick the Great had ruled Prussia.

Louis XVI sat uneasily on his throne in France just years away from revolution, a bloody experiment in democracy, and the new tyranny of Napoleon Bonaparte.

A kind of a constitutional government had been created in the Netherlands in 1579 by the Protestant Union of Utrecht, but that constitution was really a loose federation of the northern provinces for a defense against Catholic Spain...

What was happening in America had no real precedent, even as far back as the city-states of Greece. The only real precedent was established thousands of years before by the tribes of Israel in the covenant with God and with each other.

Armstrong, Neil Alden (b. August 5, 1930), a U.S. astronaut, was the first man to walk on the moon. He worked for the National Aeronautics and Space Administration (NASA), 1955-71; Commander of the Apollo 11 Spacecraft, 1969; flew the Gemini 7 Spacecraft, 1966; became an astronaut in 1962; and was a U.S. Navy pilot during the Korean War.

On July 20, 1969, Commander Neil Alden Armstrong, along with Col. Edwin E. Aldrin, Jr., landed their lunar module, nicknamed the "Eagle," on the moon. They spent a total of 21 hours and 37 minutes on the surface, before launching the lunar module back into orbit to dock with the command ship "Columbia," piloted by Lieut. Col. Michael Collins. Commander Neil A. Armstrong's first words as he stepped on the moon were:

That's one small step for a man, one giant leap for mankind.

On September 16, 1969, in addressing a joint session of Congress, Commander Neil A. Armstrong stated:

To those of you who have advocated looking high we owe our sincere gratitude, for you have granted us the opportunity to see some of the grandest views of the Creator.

Baker, James Addison, III (b. April 28, 1930), was Secretary of State under President George Bush, 1989-92. He stated in a speech at the National Prayer Breakfast, in Washington, D.C., February 1, 1990:

Power does not bring inner security and fulfillment. That comes only by developing a personal relationship with God, which for me is personified by Jesus Christ. Inner security and real fulfillment comes by faith - not by wielding power in the town where power is king...

When I think back over the hills and valleys of my life, the consistent theme is the one in that 91st Psalm - "I will say unto the Lord, Thou art my hope and my stronghold; my God, in Thee will I trust."

United States Supreme Court (1931), in the case of United States v. Macintosh, 283 U.S. 605, 625 (1931), Justice George Sutherland delivered the Court's decision regarding a Canadian seeking naturalization by reiterating the Court's decision of 1892:

We are a Christian people... according to one another the equal right of religious freedom, and acknowledge with reverence the duty of obedience to the will of God.

United States Congress (March 3, 1931), the 71st Congress adopted The Star Spangled Banner as our National Anthem, 36 U. S. C. Sec. 170, (H. R. 14; Public, No. 823; Session III, Chap. 436.):

1508 Seventy-First Congress. Sess. III. Chs. 436, 437. 1931.

Chap. 436. - An Act To make The Star-Spangled Banner the national anthem of the United States of America.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the composition consisting of the words and music known as The Star-Spangled Banner is designated the national anthem of the United States of America.

Approved March 3, 1931.

This anthem was written by Francis Scott Key, September 14, 1814, at the Battle of Fort McHenry during the War of 1812. The fourth verse is as follows:

O! thus be it ever when free men shall stand
Between their loved home and the war's desolation;
Blest with vict'ry and peace, may the Heav'n-rescued Land
Praise the Pow'r that hath made and preserved us a nation!
Then conquer we must, when our cause it is just;
And this be our motto, "In God is our trust!"
And the star spangled banner in triumph shall wave
O'er the land of the free and the home of the brave!

Colson, Charles "Chuck" Wendell (b. October 16, 1931), was special counsel to the President of the United States, 1969-72; administrative assistant to U. S. Senator Saltonstall, 1956-61; assistant to Assistant Secretary of the Navy, 1955-56; and served as a captain, USMCR, Korea. The founder of Prison Fellowship, 1976, Chuck Colson is a nationally known speaker and author, whose works include: Born Again, 1975; Life Sentence, 1979; Crime and the Responsible Community, 1980; Loving God, 1983; Who Speaks for God?, 1985; Kingdoms in Conflict, 1987; Against the Night, 1989; The God of Stones and Spiders, 1990; Why America Doesn't Work, 1991; The Body, 1992; A Dance with Deception, 1993; A Dangerous Grace, 1994; and Gideon's Torch, 1995. He received the Templeton Prize for progress in Religion in 1993.

In 1981, Chuck Colson stated:

Imprisonment as a primary means of criminal punishment is a relatively modern concept. It was turned to as a humane alternative to the older patterns of harsh physical penalties for nearly all crimes. Quakers introduced the concept in Pennsylvania.

The first American prison was established in Philadelphia when the Walnut Street Jail was converted into a series of solitary cells where offenders were kept in solitary confinement. The theory was that they would become "penitents," confessing their crimes before God and thereby gaining a spiritual rehabilitation. Hence, the name "penitentiary" - as a place for penitents.

On September 2, 1993, in his speech entitled "The Enduring Revolution," delivered upon his acceptance of the Templeton Prize, at the University of Chicago, Chuck Colson stated:
Page 1154

On this, at least, we must agree: the right... to state faith without fear - is the first human right. Religious liberty is the essence of human dignity.... It is a sad fact that religious oppression is often practiced by religious groups. Sad - and inexcusable. A believer may risk prison for his own religious beliefs, but he may never build prisons for those of other beliefs. It is our obligation, to bring back a renewed passion for religious liberty to every nation from which we came. It is our duty to create a cultural environment where conscience can flourish.

Fordice, Daniel Kirkwood "Kirk", Jr. (b. February 10, 1934), Governor of Mississippi, elected 1992. In November of 1992, he stated:

America is a Christian nation.

As quoted in The New York Times, November 18, 1992, Governor Kirk Fordice stated:

The less we emphasize the Christian religion the further we fall into the abyss of poor character and chaos in the United States of America.

Schwarzkopf, H. Norman (b. August 22, 1934), was Commander in Chief of the Coalition Forces in Operation Desert Storm, 1991. He served as Commander in Chief, U. S. Central Command, MacDill Air Force Base, Florida, 1988-91; received the U. S. Congressional Gold Medal, 1991; and was knighted into the Hon. Order of the Bath by Queen Elizabeth II, 1991.

Having acknowledged during an interview, in 1991, that he kept a Bible by his bed, General Schwarzkopf was asked if he had a favorite verse. He replied:

Actually, it's a prayer of St. Francis: "Lord, make me an instrument of Thy peace."

One of the key decisions of General Schwarzkopf's was an extreme flanking maneuver of the 101st Airborne, nicknamed Hail Mary, which cut off the retreat of the Iraqi Republican Guard. He commented:

I began to believe that, when my forward commander radioed that they had reached the Euphrates River ahead of schedule. I waited for the other shoe to fall. "General," he said, "I've got to tell you about the casualties." I braced myself. "One man was slightly wounded." That's when I knew God was with us.

James, Forrest Hood "Fob", Jr. (b. September 15, 1934), Governor of Alabama, 1978-82; reelected 1994. He graduated from Auburn University, 1955; served as lieutenant in the U. S. Army, 1957-58; founder and chairman of Diversified Products Corporation, 1962-78; is active in the Cystic Fibrosis Foundation, Boy Scouts of America, Alabama Safety Council, Junior Achievement, Future Farmers of America, Young President's Organization; Alabama Road

Builders Association, American Legion, Spade Honor Society; and Alpha Sigma Epsilon.

On Wednesday, February 5, 1997, Governor Fob James threatened to call out the National Guard to prevent those who were endeavoring to remove the Ten Commandments display from a Gadsden courtroom and prohibit the opening of court sessions with traditional invocations:

The only way those Ten Commandments and prayer would be stripped from that courtroom is with the force of arms.

New York State Court (1935), in the case of Lewis v. Board of Education of City of New York, 157 Misc. 520, 285 N.Y.S. 164 (Sup.Ct. 1935), aff'd per curiam, 247 App.Div. 106, 286, N.Y.S. 174 (App.Div 1936), stated:

The plaintiff alleged that the board of education illegally allowed the use of school buildings to a large number of distinctively sectarian religious denominations, societies and groups. Held -

The manifest vice of the plaintiff's position is that he has confused the racial and religious affiliations of the users of the school buildings with the purpose for which the buildings are used. The restrictions relate to the use. In this land where all races and creeds are equal before the law, regardless of color or religion, the doors of the schools should not be shut in the faces of those who by birth or otherwise belong to a particular race or adhere to a particular religion. Indeed, by opening the doors to all, the school authorities more honestly and faithfully cling to the enduring principles of our free institutions, and more sincerely and indiscriminately sustain the constitutional guarantees, than do those who would deny admission to certain persons because of creed or racial solidarity. The sanctified principle of freedom of religious belief does not distinguish between believers and nonbelievers. It embraces both, and accords one as much protection and freedom as the other. A sect or tenet which is intolerant of those of a different sect or tenet is the precise antithesis of religious liberty. Freedom is negated if it does not comprehend freedom for those who believe as well as those who disbelieve. The law is astute and zealous in seeing to it that all religious beliefs or disbeliefs be given unfettered expression. Authentic free thinking involves the indubitable right to believe in God as well as the unfettered license not to believe or to disbelieve in a Deity.

To examine into the sectarianism of those seeking access to public school buildings would make a travesty of our glorified liberty of conscience. Liberty for nonbelievers in God, but denial to believers in a Deity, would be a mock liberty.

Rather than inimical to the educational policy of the state, or subversive of legitimate use, it is a wholesome thing to have the school buildings, which are maintained at large expense by the taxpayers, used for the purposes and by the groups whose exclusion is here sought. [The plaintiff sought to exclude racial and religious groups, including the YMCA, Hi-Y clubs, Hebrew Menorah and Junior Hadassah Clubs from the use of public schools for assembly and conducting ethical, cultural, and educational discourses with the students.]

It is the use to which the school buildings are put, and not the identity of the users that is decisive of the lawfulness of the use.

Manifestly, therefore, the defense set forth in paragraph X of the answers, to the effect that the school buildings are being used for the purpose of giving and receiving instruction in education learning, and the arts is legally sufficient.

Carlson, R. Paul (b. June 17, 1935) is history professor at Maine Township High School (East) in Park Ridge, Illinois, having taught in the township 45 years. He has a B.A. from Monmouth College, M.A. from Northwestern, M.E.D. from College of William and Mary, and L.H.D. from Ripon College.

Dr. R. Paul Carlson stated:

Those failing to understand the chess game of politics and history eventually become the pawns of others.

A list of quotations from his lectures include:

An American kneels only to his God - Colonel William Crittenden

Remember the Alamo! - Colonel Sidney Sherman

The greatest glory of a freeborn people is to transmit that freedom to their children. - William Harvard

I have not yet begun to fight. - John Paul Jones

We have met the enemy, and they are ours. - Commander Oliver Perry

Hold the fort, for I am coming! - General Sherman

The fate of unborn millions will now depend, under God, on the courage and conduct of this Army. - General George Washington

No one can replace him, sir; I am only his successor. - Jefferson (on Franklin)

Let us raise a standard to which the wise and honest can repair; the rest is in the hands of God. - George Washington

Pride costs us more than hunger, thirst, and cold. - Jefferson

Lost time is never found again. - Franklin

There's a time to wink as well as to see. - Franklin

American Quotations.txt

God helps them that help themselves. - Franklin

Half a truth is often a great lie. - Franklin

Damn the torpedoes...Full speed ahead! - Admiral Farragut

Face the other way, boys; We're going back! -
General Sheridan

We ask no quarter and shall give none. - Colonel Christopher Greene

Don't fire until you see the whites of their eyes!
- General Putnam

No, this is a service for my country, and it doesn't matter whether I do it as an officer or as a plainsman. The big thing is to do it. - Kit Carson

Fifty-four, forty, or fight. - William Allen

Duke, Charles M. Jr. (b. October 3, 1935) explored the rugged highlands of the moon's Descartes region with John Young during the Apollo 16 mission in April 1972. Born in Charlotte, North Carolina, he received a Bachelor of Science degree in naval sciences from the U.S. Naval Academy in 1957 and a Master of Science in aeronautics from the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in 1964.

Following his graduation and commission from the Naval Academy, Duke entered the U.S. Air Force and received flying training at Spence Air Base, Georgia, and Webb Air Force Base, Texas. He completed advanced training in F-86L aircraft at Moody Air Force Base, Georgia. He served three years with the 526th Fighter Interceptor Squadron at Ramstein Air Base, Germany, before transferring to the Aerospace Research Pilot School. Upon graduation from the school he remained on as an instructor, teaching control systems and flying in F-101, F-104 and T-33 aircraft.

Duke was among 19 new astronauts selected by NASA in April 1996. After serving as a member of the astronaut support crew for Apollo 13, he was named Lunar Module pilot for Apollo 16, along with Commander John Young and Command Module pilot T.K. Mattingly. They were launched April 16, 1972, and reached the moon three days later. While Mattingly orbited the moon in the command ship Casper, Young and Duke landed their lunar ship Orion on the Cayley Plain in the Descartes highlands. During three outside excursions over three days, they drove a Lunar Rover 16 miles and collected 213 pounds of lunar rock and soil.

In 1975, Duke retired from NASA to enter private business. He is president of Charlie Duke Enterprises, Inc., and is an active speaker and Christian lay witness. He is also a brigadier general in the U.S. Air Force Reserve. Charlie Duke was inducted into the Astronaut Hall of Fame on October 4, 1997.

On June 22, 1996, at the Texas State Republican Convention in San Antonio, Texas, Astronaut Charles Duke stated:

I used to say I could live ten thousand years and never have an experience as thrilling as walking on the moon. But the excitement and satisfaction of that walk doesn't begin to compare with my walk with Jesus, a walk that lasts forever.

Dobson, Dr. James C. (b.1936), is the founder and president of Focus on the Family, which produces a nationally syndicated radio program heard daily on over 5,300 radio facilities, in approximately 100 countries worldwide, by more than 200 million people. He served for 14 years as an Associate Clinical Professor of Pediatrics at the University of Southern California School of Medicine and for 17 years on the Attending Staff of Children's Hospital of Los Angeles.

Dr. James Dobson's books include: Hide and Seek, Self-Esteem for the Child 1974; What Wives Wish Their Husbands Knew About Women, 1975; Preparing for Adolescence, 1978; The Strong-Willed Child, 1978; Love Must Be Tough, 1983; and the best seller Dare to Discipline, 1970, which has sold over 2 million copies. His film series, "Focus on the Family," has been seen by over 70 million people, being rivaled in success by his later series, "Turn Your Heart Toward Home."

In 1980, Dr. James Dobson was commended by President Carter for having served on the Task Force for the White House Conferences on the Family. In 1982 he was appointed by President Reagan to the National Advisory Commission for Juvenile Justice and Delinquency Prevention. He served as chairman of the U.S. Army Task Force on Families, was appointed to Attorney General Edwin Meese's Commission on Pornography in 1985, and served on the Attorney General's Advisory Board on Missing and Exploited Children in 1987.

In his January 1994 "Focus on the Family" newsletter, Dr. James Dobson concluded:

Can there be any doubt, hearing these echoes from the culture, that a great Civil War of Values is being waged in the Western nations, or that radical anti-family forces are making dramatic alterations in the way we think and act?

I've seen that upheaval coming for almost a decade, but it is now evident to anyone who watches the evening television. The family is not simply disintegrating from natural forces and pressures. Its demise is being orchestrated at the highest levels of government, and by radical special-interest groups.

Am I concerned by these recent trends? Yes, the pattern of events reveals a society in dramatic decline. Indeed, the value system that has served us so well for 217 years may not survive the next decade.

But before we throw in the towel, we need to look at numerous encouraging developments taking place simultaneously. There have been some exciting occurrences in the past year that may eventually lead to a better day. Let me share a few of those bright spots in what is otherwise a dismal scene:

High on the list of good news from 1993 is the prayer movement that is spreading across North America. What Marshall Foster calls "a quiet revolution" is occurring in thousands of churches and denominations. Evangelists Luis Palau and Greg Laurie each have reported record attendance at their crusades, with thousands accepting Christ as their personal Savior. David Bryant, founder of Concerts of Prayer, reports that his organization held more than 40 citywide rallies in 1992, twice as many as in 1990. He also estimated that local churches hold perhaps 1,000 concerts of prayer every month. Dick Eastman's "Schools of Prayer" are experiencing similar enthusiastic acceptance.

Yet another burgeoning prayer effort is spearheaded by Dr. Joe Aldrich of Northwest Renewal Ministries. Christianity Today said this: "[They have] tapped into a thirst for prayer in a region known for its high proportion of unchurched citizens. Over the past several years, the group has sponsored over 100 four-day 'Prayer Summits,' involving more than 3,000 pastors and church leaders from the Pacific Northwest." Associate Jerry Dirks said, "We are seeing an amazing, divinely implanted hunger for God unlike anything we've seen."

The National Day of Prayer, headed by my wife, Shirley, is also experiencing an unprecedented response. Forty-nine of the 50 state governors issued prayer proclamations last year (Gov. Lowell Weicker of Connecticut was the lone exception). Celebrations were held in cities and communities all across America. So far this year, the requests for materials and advice are running far ahead of last season. "There is obviously a new awareness," said Shirley, "that prayer is the only answer to our terrible social problems."

Undoubtedly reflecting the same spiritual hunger, the Promise Keepers phenomenon has become one of the most exciting developments in the history of Christendom. Never has there been anything quite like it. When I was conducting family conferences 20 years ago, husbands typically attended because their wives asked (or insisted) that they do so. But last summer in Boulder, Colo., 50,000 men jammed Folsom Field to worship, sing, learn and share in Christian fellowship.

They came from every continent on earth, investing their vacations and often limited resources to draw nearer to God. And this was only the beginning. Similar events are scheduled next summer in Portland, Los Angeles, Boise, Boulder, Dallas and Indianapolis. (For information, write Promise Keepers, P.O. Box 18376, Boulder, CO 80308.)

Equally encouraging is the spiritual revival occurring within today's generation of students. Genuine faith is alive and well among these courageous kids who dare to defend their beliefs in a godless and often hostile environment. Huge numbers gathered around their school flags to pray last September in a program called "See You at the Pole." George Barna, of Barna Research Group, estimated that more than a million students participated nationwide.

There is more good news to share. In a scientific poll commissioned by the Family Research Council, Americans were asked if they would rather live in a community "that strongly upholds traditional family values" or a community "that is very tolerant of non-traditional lifestyles." The findings were released in December, showing that citizens favored traditional values by a margin of 76 percent to 19 percent. Common sense is still alive and well in the population at large.

So what is going on here? How can such wholesome developments occur in the midst of almost unprecedented wickedness? Isn't that what the Scripture teaches us? Romans 5:20 says, "But where sin abounded, grace did much more abundant." It is true today. As culture moves away from its Judeo-Christian roots, more and more people appear to recognize the devastation of sin and are turning to the Good News of the gospel.

This means as the long night of paganism descends on Western nations, we as believers are afforded an even greater opportunity to share the faith that burns within us. Therefore, we must not yield to discouragement, even when everything we cherish appears to be eroding. God is in control, and He can bring triumph out of tragedy.

On February 16, 2002, Dr. James Dobson addressed approximately 3,500 people at the National Religious Broadcaster's annual convention in Nashville, Tenn. He spoke on the topic of his new book, "Bringing Up Boys." After discussing the disintegration of the family and the implications of that issue for boys, Dr. James Dobson stated:

The world into which children are born now has become a very dangerous place. It's changed tremendously. When you and I were kids? and certainly when I was a child because I'm older than most of you here? the culture reinforced positive values and attempted to help parents raise those kids properly.

And now, the culture is at war with parents and it is very, very difficult to try to get these kids through the minefield of adolescence without major concerns. And there is an attack on childhood. There are many people out there? and I don't want to overstate this, but I don't think I can overstate it? there are many people out there today who see in children an opportunity to change the culture.

And they hate? for the most part? they hate the Judeo-Christian value system. And children are the vulnerable ones. And if they can get control of children and if they can influence children, they can change the whole culture in one generation. And there is now a tsunami coming our way. It is breathtaking to me what's taking place. I hope you're seeing it.

I sit there at my desk in Colorado Springs and I hear it every day and I wonder if you're hearing it. I wonder if anybody else is concerned about it because the children are the ones who are at risk and boys especially are in the bull's eye. They're in the cross-hairs.

I can't go back with the time that I have and give you the history of this attack on children. I'll tell you what I want to do. Let's talk about February. Let's go back to February 1st, two weeks and two days. I said this is coming like a tidal wave. What am I talking about?

Well, eight days ago, one week and one day ago, the National Education Association announced its policy, that they're disseminating to school districts all over the country, that every child in every school and every classroom in the nation should be taught homosexual? what I would call? propaganda. A child is in school for? public schools? for 13 years and we're going to start in kindergarten. You think that wouldn't happen and can't happen. California's legislature has already mandated that, and, as of September when the kids came back to school, this is what happened. Every classroom of every school of every year is being taught homosexual propaganda.

So they're teaching them that bisexuality is normal and that homosexuality and heterosexuality are morally equivalent. And they're teaching them many, many other concepts. They're bringing gays and lesbians into the school to teach them what a normal thing this is and answer their questions.

Of course, Christians can't come in and counter that. That's California. That's every school in California. Where in the world are the parents who are holding still for that? Imagine sending your little 5-year-old off to school. He's wet behind the ears. He is, to use the vernacular, "He knows nothing about nothing." He doesn't have the defenses to deal with this. And he carries his little lunch pail and he gets to school.

And can you imagine these children, 5-years old, sitting in a circle around the teacher who's telling them about adult perverse behavior? And we're not concerned about that? We shouldn't discuss that? Why are we not talking about that? That's just one aspect of this. By the way, 42 percent of the fourth-grade boys in this entire country can't read, and yet, we're going to teach them that? Well, that was eight days ago that this occurred.

On February 4th, 12 days ago, the American Academy of Pediatrics announced that gay and lesbian parents, so-called, can raise children and do raise children as effectively as stable marriages where husbands and wives are committed to each other. This is the American Academy of Pediatrics?

February 14th, two nights ago, you may have heard that Secretary of State Colin Powell went on MTV, broadcast internationally, and recommended that kids use condoms. And I'll quote for you. Listen carefully to the words he used: "Forget about taboos." Guess whose taboos are we going to forget about? "Forget about conservative ideas." Guess whose conservative ideas? "With respect to what you should tell young people about, it's lives of young people that are being put at risk by unsafe sex, and therefore, protect yourself."

What he didn't tell them is that the Centers for Disease Control, an arm of the federal government, last year issued a report that the press wouldn't report on that said, "Condoms do not protect against syphilis, gonorrhea, human papilloma virus, herpes, and most of the other sexually-transmitted diseases." And yet, here is the secretary of state on MTV, not the secretary of health and human services, the secretary of state making a statement like that. But on and on it goes.

The FDA ? Food and Drug administration ? issued a statement saying that the morning-after pill, that that ought to be distributed to kids without parental knowledge or approval. And two days ago, 60 women's groups and health groups endorsed that position by the FDA.

All these things are coming to your school. You don't live in California. You've got kids who go to school in Texas and Oklahoma and the mid-West and the Bible Belt and up in the Northeast. It's coming there, too, because there is a concerted effort to manipulate the minds of kids.

Now, what's going on? What's behind this? I'm sure you've heard the debate on stem-cell research. Do you understand what a stem cell is? A stem cell is a cell ? in the human being at least ? that in the very early stages of development it is undifferentiated. In other words, it's not yet other kinds of tissue, but it can go any direction depending on the environment that it's in.

The stem cell, if it's in the brain, develops into a nerve cell or into the substances between the nerves. Or if it's in the heart, it becomes a heart cell, or if it's in the eye, it becomes an eyeball cell. Wherever it is, it takes on the characteristic of the surrounding area.

Do you understand that children are the stem cells for the culture? The environment that you put them in is what they grow up to be. And if you can control what they hear, if you could control what they're told, if you have access to their minds ? you can make them into just about whatever you want them to be.

I saw a video the other day of children in Afghanistan and they were teaching these children how they could slit the throats of Israelis. If you teach that to 6-year-old boys, you will have violent men when they grow up. That's why there is this effort to control the minds of kids.

It's what's behind the attack on the Boy Scouts. Wherever children reside, there will be a battle over the control of those kids. The Girls Scouts have already been co-opted and the Boy Scouts have resisted, but that's what's going on there.

You may be aware that there is an effort now to lower the age of accountability sexually in the various countries. Here in the United States, it's 16. That's awfully early to be allowing a full-grown man to take advantage of a 16-year-old boy. In Canada, it's 14. In Portugal, it's 14. In the U.K., it's 16. In Spain, it's 12. Is that shocking to you?

You see, there is now an effort to kind of demystify incest and the sexual abuse of children. And the American Psychological Association put an incredible article in its bulletin about 18 months ago that said sex between adults and children is not all that bad. It might even be beneficial. Children are in the crosshairs, and there is reason to be concerned about it.

We also know, and you know, there is almost a total disregard for the value of human life in some post-modern circles. Dr. Peter Singer is a bioethicist ? of all things ? at Princeton University. He is a tenured professor. Let me read you what he wrote. "Very often, it is not wrong at all to kill a child once it has left the womb." He said, and watch the words now, "Simply killing an infant is never equivalent to killing a person."

That is a bioethicist at Princeton University. He was granted tenure after he made these statements. Do you know that it is a $25,000 fine to kill an eagle's egg and there's no law at all against killing a child in the latter stages of development in utero?

Have you contemplated actually witnessing a partial-birth abortion? Can you imagine being invited into a women's clinic somewhere near your home ? because there's probably one near you ? where a 16-year-old girl comes in and she is eight-and-a-half months pregnant? You've been invited to watch the procedure, and the doctor delivers this little baby right to the top of his head.

And that baby's about three minutes from delivery and he is brimming with life. He is pink. His little hands and arms and legs are kicking. And the doctor rolls him over and inserts a canula, a tube, into the back of the head without an anesthetic and sucks the brains out of that baby and collapses that head and delivers a dead baby. And it's not illegal to do that? But you cannot kill an eagle's egg. Have we gone absolutely crazy? And yet, the procedure continues. To call that kind of outrage political, is itself an outrage.

Audience: (Applause)

Thank you everyone. Thank you everybody. Thank you everybody. This burns in my heart. You may remember that Barbara Boxer, the senator from California, on the floor of the Senate in debating partial-birth abortion, said that a baby is not a baby until that child is taken home from the hospital. In other words, you can kill that baby in the hospital. This is where we are headed, a complete disregard for human life.

Those of you who do feel that the church has no responsibility in the cultural area and you have tended to feel our job is to preach the Gospel and all the rest of these things will kind of fall into place, and you haven't felt it is something that you should devote yourself to because that's something somebody else is called to, let me argue with you for just a moment.

Suppose it were 1858 and you were a pastor and you lived in Raleigh, N.C., or Richmond, Va. ? somewhere in the South. Would it be satisfactory for you to say about slavery, "Well, I'm not called to deal with that issue. I'm called to minister to the people in my church. Slavery is not something I have to deal with," when you know that men and women are being subjected to involuntary servitude? They can be killed. Their families can be separated. Their children can be taken away and sold like cattle. And you don't say anything? Is your argument tenable under those circumstances?

The year is 1963, and Martin Luther King is sitting in a Birmingham jail and he is released. And he goes to a church ? yes, a church. And from that church, he comes out into the streets of Birmingham and marches for civil rights. Do you oppose that? Is that a violation of the separation of church and state?

What if it were 1943 and you were in Nazi Germany and you knew what Hitler was doing to the Jews and the Poles and the Gypsies and the homosexuals and to many other undesirables? You knew they were being gassed, you knew little children were lined up in the rain naked all day for their chance to go into the gas chambers. Would you say, "We're not political? That's somebody else's problem. I'm not called to address this?"

I thank God that Dietrich Bonhoeffer did not give that answer, and he was arrested by the Nazis and he was hanged in 1945, naked and alone because he said, "This is not right."

John the Baptist said the same thing to Herod. He said, "It is not lawful for you to have your brother's wife." And it cost him his head. Since when have we become timid about addressing the moral issues of our day?

Audience: (Applause)

In 1983, I was invited to Washington, D.C., for a banquet that featured Dr. Francis Schaeffer. Thank God for Francis Schaeffer. He saw everything we're going through today. He laid it all out. He said there was a connection between abortion and infanticide and euthanasia. And on this occasion, he was talking to a very small group that was there about the Christian's involvement in the military, and especially when it involved war.

And he said, "It really comes down to this." I'll never forget this. I was a young man. I was just beginning to try to understand what was going on in the culture at large. He said, "Suppose you were walking down the right side of a street and coming down the other side of the street is a very cute little 6-year-old girl, and she's skipping along and she's alone and it's night time. And just as you got parallel to her, a big man, a six-foot man, jumped out of the bushes and grabbed her and began assaulting her and abusing her. What is your obligation to that child? Do you have any responsibility?"

He said, "I submit that you do. You should cross that street and put your life at risk, if necessary, to save that little girl. That would be your moral responsibility." And he said, "That is what we were doing in World War II. We were trying to save the little girls, the Jews, the Gypsies, the Poles, the others, and to rescue those that were living in tyranny."

I submit to you all that there are little girls in our culture. Who are the little girls that we're called to defend? The unborn child? Would Jesus' words, "Inasmuch as you do it unto the least of these, my brethren, you do it unto me," would it apply to that little helpless child who can't even speak for himself? He doesn't have a voice. Can you say, "That's political? I won't get involved. I've got to take care of my church. I'm not going to take care of that. That's not my responsibility. Others are called to that." I don't believe so.

How about the newborn? How about that little girl who's left to die on a porcelain table somewhere? What about the elementary school child who's going to be taught about homosexuality and has no one to defend him or her? What about the teenagers that Colin Powell was talking about who are going to be told, "Go ahead and have lots of really good sex, just do it in a safe way"? And more and more we see now that euthanasia is coming and as it is in Holland, involuntary euthanasia may be right around the corner. Do we have a responsibility to those little girls? I think that we do.

And this last thing. Dr. John Corts with the Billy Graham organization told a story about himself and it really grabbed me by the throat. He said when he was 16 years of age, he went to a farm with about eight of his little cousins and they couldn't wait to get there. And when they arrived, there was such excitement among all the kids. He was the eldest of them and they couldn't wait to get in the field. They wanted to go pitch hay and they thought it'd be fun to ride on the tractor and they couldn't wait to get out there.

But the grandfather wouldn't let them go. He was very reluctant to let them go and they whined and cried and begged and finally, he went to John and he said, "John, you can take those kids to the field, but don't bring them back early. You keep them out there until the end of the day. I'm telling you, I don't want you to bring them in early." And he said, "I will do that, Grandfather," and so, they all got on the hay wagon and the tractor pulled them out to the field and they began working out there.

And very, very quickly, the kids got tired and they started complaining. It was hot and it was miserable and they wanted to come back. And he said, "No, Grandfather told me to keep you out here," and they cried and they complained, but they stayed there.

And at lunch time, they were really exhausted and most of them were crying. They were very upset and they wanted to come back in. It was very hot. The sun was overhead and the hay was down their backs and it itched and they wanted to come back. And he said, "No, Grandfather told me to keep you here."

And about 3:00 in the afternoon, a big storm cloud came over, big black clouds, and the kids got scared. They really wanted to return, but he kept them there. He kept the order of the grandfather.

At about 5:00, he said, "All right, it's time to go." He got them all on the hay wagon and they went back to the house. And after they had had their baths and they got something to eat and they rested a little bit, they were all very proud of themselves for what they did.

And then, the grandfather told John why he wanted them to stay in the field. He said, "This farm has been successful for one reason. Through the years, we have stayed in the field when we felt like coming in. We've stayed out there and done what we needed to do, and I wanted those kids to have the experience of staying with something through the day."

And John made his own application for that, but you can see what it means to me. We're in that situation now. It's tough. It's hard speaking against the tide of public opinion, the media, the entertainment industry, the Congress, the libraries, the professions? all of those forces that are making fun of us. Yes, you're right. You're right. They're calling us "religious right" and "far right" and "religious extremists" and it hurts.

I can tell you at Focus on the Family, we've had bloody animal parts brought to the front door. We've had our building spray-painted. We've had lies told about us in Denver and in Colorado Springs. That's not fun. And we've been called "extremists." And the easiest thing to do would be to quit.

But God has called us to stay in the field and we will do that as long as we have breath in our bodies. And I beg those of you who are here to do the same. Thank you everybody.

Scalia, Antonin (b. March 11, 1936), is a U.S. Supreme Court Justice, nominated in 1986 by President Ronald Reagan. He graduated from Harvard, 1960, and began practicing with a Cleveland law firm. In 1967, he began teaching at the University of Virginia Law School. He served in both the Nixon and Ford administrations, being the Assistant Attorney General, 1971-77. He taught at the University of Chicago Law School, 1977-82; and was served as judge of the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, 1982-86.

On April 9, 1996, in an address that gained national attention, Antonin Scalia spoke at the Mississippi College Law School. Pointing out that the word "cretin," or "fool" is derived from the French word for "Christian," he continued:

Devout Christians are destined to be regarded as fools in modern society.... We are fools for Christ's sake.... We must pray for courage to endure the scorn of the sophisticated world....

The "wise" do not investigate such silliness.... They do not believe....

One can be sophisticated and believe in God. Reason and intellect are not to be laid aside where matters of religion are concerned.

To be honest about it, that is the view of Christians taken by modern society.... Surely those who adhere to all or most of these traditional Christian beliefs are to be regarded as simpleminded.

The "worldly wise" just will not have anything to do with miracles... [assuming] everything from the Easter morning to the Ascension had to be made up by the groveling enthusiasts as part of their plan to get themselves martyred.

In the 1992 case of Lee v. Weisman; 120 L. Ed. 2d 467, 509 (1992), Scalia, J. (dissenting), Justice Antonin Scalia stated:

The Court lays waste a longstanding American tradition of nonsectarian prayer to God at public celebrations....

There is simply no support for the proposition that the officially sponsored nondenominational invocation and benediction read by Rabbi Gutterman - with no one legally coerced to recite them - violated the Constitution of the United States.

To the contrary, they are so characteristically American they could have come from the pen of George Washington or Abraham Lincoln himself....

That obvious fact recited the graduates and their parents may proceed to thank God, as Americans have always done, for the blessings He has generously bestowed on them and their country.

Our Nation's protection, that fortress which is our Constitution, cannot possibly rest upon the changeable philosophical predilections of the Justices of this Court, but must have deep foundations in the historic practices of our people.

C. I. O. , 307 U. S. 496, 515 (1939), stated:

Wherever the title of streets and parks may rest, they have immemorially been held in trust for the use of the public, and time out of mind, have been used for the purposes of assembly, communicating thoughts between citizens, and discussing public questions.

Hall, Tony P. (b. January 16, 1942), a U. S. Representative from Ohio, 96th-103rd Congresses; was an Ohio State Senator, 1973-78; an Ohio State Representative, 1969-72; and a volunteer with the Peace Corps in Thailand, 1966-67.

As a member of the 100th Congress, he supported President Ronald Reagan's signing of Public Law 100-307, January 25, 1988, setting aside the first Thursday of each May to celebrate a National Day of Prayer. He stated:

The National Day of Prayer offers a tremendous opportunity for our entire nation to be humbly united in communication with God. Prayer is a "toll-free-lifeline" to our most important Friend. I can't imagine facing the many challenges of service in Congress without prayer. Prayer truly is a two-way exchange with God. In some way, often unexpected, I discover that my concerns are answered through new insights to peaceful understanding that I could never have obtained without spiritual assistance. I urge everyone to discover the powerful potential of prayer.

Ashcroft, John (b. May 9, 1942) Calling him "a man of great integrity, a man of great judgment and a man who knows the law," President George W. Bush announced his decision to nominate John Ashcroft to serve as Attorney General of the United States on December 22, 2000. Upon confirmation by the Senate, Ashcroft pledged to renew the war on drugs, reduce the incidence of gun violence and combat discrimination so no American feels outside the protection of the law.

Ashcroft was born in Chicago, Illinois, and was raised in Springfield, Missouri, where he attended public schools until enrolling at Yale University, where he graduated with honors in 1964. He received his J. D. from the University of Chicago in 1967. He began his career of public service in 1973 as Missouri Auditor and was later elected to two terms as the state's Attorney General. His ability to work with leaders of both political parties prompted his colleagues in the non-partisan National Association of Attorneys General to choose him as Chairman.

Ashcroft was elected Governor of Missouri in 1984 and held that post until 1993. During his tenure, he balanced eight consecutive budgets and served as Chairman of the Education Commission of the States. Fortune magazine rated him one of the top ten education governors in the country, while Financial World and City and State magazines credited him with making Missouri one of the best financially managed states in the country. He also spearheaded the state's efforts to reduce the use of illegal drugs. In 1991, the non-partisan National Governors Association elected him Chairman.

He was elected to the Senate in 1994 and maintained a near-perfect voting attendance record while working to combat illegal drugs, increase the quality of public education, reduce crime and safeguard the rights of crime victims. Ashcroft worked closely with Missouri law enforcement officers, developing strategies to counter the state's methamphetamine problems. He co-sponsored the reauthorization of the Violence Against Women Act. He fought to toughen the penalties for gun crimes by substantially increasing mandatory minimum prison sentences for the criminal misuse of firearms. During his time in the Senate, Ashcroft was a member of the Senate Judiciary Committee and Chairman of the Constitution Subcommittee.

Prior to entering public service, Ashcroft taught business law at Southwest Missouri State University in Springfield. He authored the book Lessons from a Father to His Son, a tribute to his father, and co-authored multiple editions of two college law textbooks with his wife, Janet. John and Janet Ashcroft have three children: Martha, John and Andrew, and one grandchild, Jimmy Patterson.

Attorney General Ashcroft is committed to confronting injustice by leading a professional Justice Department free from politics, defined by integrity and dedicated to upholding the rule of law. He will make certain that the Justice Department fulfills its promise and honors its heritage-not only by enforcing the rule of law, but by guaranteeing rights for the advancement of all Americans.

In an address at Washington D.C., September 1996, during a Christian Coalition Convention, Senator John Ashcroft stated:

One hundred years ago in Chicago, William Borden, heir to the Borden dairy fortune, graduated from high school. His father wanted his son to see the world so he sent William off with a servant, with money, and with a new Bible.

After a month of traveling across Africa, Asia and the Middle East, William had seen a world of pain, a world of need, a world of suffering. In a letter home he reported that he intended to give his life to begin to prepare to serve hurting people on the mission field. He suffered from no delusion. He knew the challenges he would face, but the calling of Christ was more pressing than the lure of the world, and he reflected on that thought as he wrote in the back of his Bible two words: "NO RESERVES."

Returning to the U.S., William enrolled in Yale University where he pursued his calling. Graduating with honors, he was inundated with offers. Wall Street courted him; the family business needed him; law school beckoned him. But William Borden's soul had been captured by Christ and the Holy Spirit would not let him waver.

When he applied and was accepted into Princeton Seminary, he wrote in the back of his Bible two more words: "NO RETREATS." Three years later upon graduating from the seminary and accepting a mission assignment to China, William set out to fulfill his calling to serve those in need. In route to China he stopped in Egypt to further prepare and became ill. A month later he died. Dead at 25 - the flame of life extinguished before it had fully flourished.

While going through his son's possessions, William's father thumbed through the now worn Bible that he had given his son years before. In the back of the book the senior Borden found two additional words written by William on his deathbed: "NO REGRETS."

No reserves, no retreats, no regrets. Six words written in a Bible given by a father to a son. Six words that encompass three principles of our faith. Six words that signal three opportunities for our hope and our future.

No reserves, no retreat, no regrets. Six words that are nothing less than the call of our faith and the challenge of our time.

No reserves. We are called to live a life of total commitment. I believe that this is true not only as it relates to our faith but in every aspect of our existence. God's word makes it clear that God abhors the tepid and the middling: "I know your deeds, that you are lukewarm, so I am about to spew you out of my mouth." (Revelation 3: 15, 16) No half measures, no reserves.

The world our children are inheriting demands repair so desperately that we can hold no reserve. I do not seek from government and from politics any type of national salvation, nor do I desire to impose my religion on anyone.

God respects the dignity of our freedom so profoundly that He allows us even to choose against Him.

As Christians, we are involved in the political realm because we seek to counteract a governmental system that actively mocks and undermines our values; the values of our heritage. Values like honesty and responsibility, courage and dignity, hard work and perseverance, dedication to country, to life and to faith in God.

As involved Christians we simply share a common vision and serve an uncommon Savior. While we do not seek national salvation, we do demand a return of national sanity. This is one of the great challenges of our times. To achieve it in the face of the odds that we have encountered requires that we give our all, that we have: no reserves.

No reserves, no retreats.

America needs leadership that calls her to her highest and best rather than accommodate her in her lowest and least. America needs leadership that demands that America defend itself on the front line, rather than satisfy itself in the back seat. If we retreat from that which we know to be true, if we retreat from our faith and our principles, we will have gained nothing. With our culture under siege today there are many so-called leaders who believe that discussing cultural issues is too politically divisive. I believe that confronting our culture is the true test of courage, and a true measure of our leadership.

From absolute truths such as the inalienable right to life, from its earliest stages in the womb to its final shimmering days, there is no retreat. From the belief that the family originated by God should be honored by public policy and guarded as our most vital social institution, there is no retreat. From the conviction that the family is where the basic rules of civilization are taught and nurtured - from this truth there can be no retreat. We do not yield to the state the responsibility to teach our children right from wrong. From these truths: no retreats.

We believe that God calls us to minister to the poor among us. The Bible is as clear about our responsibility to care for the poor as it is on any other matter. I do not believe however, that the best care for the poor comes from government. We have learned that, when government becomes the keeper of the poor, it keeps them poor.

We stand in peril because such principles as this have been compromised. We cannot expect to rescue ourselves by retreating from fundamental truths and principles: no retreats.

No reserves, no retreats, no regrets. We must be totally committed to the task at hand. We must never retreat from that which we know to be true.

Finally, this point of "no regrets." If we want to experience no regrets, we must remember that we could achieve political victory and still find ourselves having lost the battle, "For what is a man profited, if he shall gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" (Matthew 16:26)

What we seek cannot be measured in terms of political victories, be they electoral or legislative. As Christian citizens we must be as humble in spirit as we are noble in aspirations.

The way we love our neighbors and the fact that we love our enemies must be two hallmarks of our existence. Then: no regrets.

A hundred years after William Borden's father gave him his Bible another father accompanied his newly elected son to Washington where he was to be sworn in as a United States Senator. The father was eager that his son serve with no reserves, work with no retreats and live with no regrets. In a prayerful time of dedication, consecration, commitment and devotion on the morning of the swearing-in ceremony, the elderly father told his son that "the spirit of Washington is the spirit of arrogance, but the spirit of Christ is the spirit of humility."

He looked his son directly in the eye and admonished him with a clarity which went beyond speaking: "Nothing of lasting value in the world has ever been accomplished in the spirit of arrogance."

As the group of friends and family assembled around the son to pray, the newly-elected senator noticed his frail father struggling to get out of the sofa to join with the group in prayer. Noticing the father's struggle the son turned to his dad and said "Dad, you don't have to struggle to stand." His father with weakness but clarity said, "Son, I'm not struggling to stand, I'm struggling to kneel."

And he knelt by his son and prayed that the Spirit of Christ would be a mantle which would cover his son in humility so that he would have no regrets. That day was the last day of my father's life. He died on his way returning home to Missouri.

If you can freeze that frame for a moment - an ailing, aged father not struggling to stand, but struggling to kneel and pray beside his kneeling son - you can observe a picture of what will help save America.

We need fathers and mothers praying with their children, willing to consume their last ounce of energy: no reserves.

We need clear-eyed statesmen who will admonish with ungarnished truth: no retreats.

The spirit of the world is arrogance. The spirit of Christ is humility. We need as families and congregations, and public servants and private citizens to give our all to defend and communicate our values with humility: no regrets.

William Borden's challenge and my father's direction are the same for us all. It is the challenge to meet our obstacles with total commitment: no reserves. To stand firm on those Creator-endowed truths that we find to be self-evident, the foundations of our culture: no retreats. And to do both in a way that honors and glorifies our Savior, that shows regard for our neighbors and, yes, love for our enemies: no regrets.

No Reserves, no retreats and no regrets.
God Bless You.

In May of 2001, Attorney General John Ashcroft spoke at the Family Research Council's 2001 Washington Briefing, stating:

When it come to illegal exploitative material that would undermine our children and the values of this culture, there needs to be a crackdown. And we need to make sure that our children have the opportunity to escape childhood without the imposition of the worst that adults should have to endure...

The pornographers contaminate and otherwise interrupt what should be the innocence of childhood, and I think it is wrong to steal that wonderful God-given gift of childhood and impose upon children the kinds of things that most of us, as adults, would choose not to inflict upon ourselves.

Gramm, William Philip (b. July 8, 1942), a U.S. Senator from Texas, elected 1985, was a candidate for the Republican Presidential nomination, 1996. He served as a U.S. Representative from Texas, 96th-98th Congresses; and taught economics at Texas A&M University, 1967-78.

On October 18, 1994, commenting on America's Founding Fathers, Senator Phil Gramm stated:

The problems they faced were overwhelming as compared to ours. But they had two things, it seems to me that we don't have enough of today. They had faith and they had will. They had faith that God did not raise America as a beacon of hope for the world, only to let us fail. And they had the will to act, the will to risk everything in order to build a country that would be a model for the world. I believe this creed is as true today as it was then. And if we have faith, if we are willing to act on that faith, I believe we can remake America.

Bush, George Walker (b. July 6, 1946) is the 43rd President of the United States. Formerly the 46th Governor of the State of Texas, Bush has earned a reputation as a compassionate conservative who shapes policy based on the principles of limited government, personal responsibility, strong families, and local control.

George W. Bush grew up in Midland and Houston, Texas. He received a bachelor's degree from Yale University and a Master of Business Administration from Harvard Business School. He served as an F-102 pilot for the Texas Air National Guard before beginning his career in the oil and gas business in Midland in 1975, working in the energy industry until 1986. After working on his father's successful 1988 presidential campaign, he assembled the group of partners that purchased the Texas Rangers baseball franchise in 1989.

He served as managing general partner of the Texas Rangers until he was elected Governor on November 8, 1994, with 53.5 percent of the vote. In an historic re-election victory, he became the first Texas Governor to be elected to consecutive four-year terms on November 3, 1998, winning 68.6 percent of the vote.

As President, Bush will pursue the same common-sense approach and bipartisan spirit as he has in Texas. He has proposed bold initiatives to ensure that America's prosperity has a purpose. He has also addressed improving our nation's public schools by strengthening local control and insisting on accountability; reducing taxes on all taxpayers, especially for those Americans on the fringes of poverty; strengthening the military with better pay, better planning, and better equipment; saving and strengthening Social Security and Medicare by providing seniors with more options; and ushering in the responsibility era in America.

President Bush is married to Laura Welch Bush, a former teacher and librarian, and they have 19-year-old twin daughters, Barbara and Jenna. The Bush family also includes their two dogs, Spot and Barney, and a cat, India.

On January, 20, 2001, President George W. Bush stated in his Inaugural Address:

This peaceful transfer of authority is rare in history, yet common in our country. With a simple oath, we affirm old traditions, and make new beginnings. As I begin, I thank President Clinton for his service to our nation. And I thank Vice President Gore for a contest conducted with spirit, and ended with grace.

I am honored and humbled to stand here, where so many of America's leaders have come before me, and so many will follow.

We have a place, all of us, in a long story; a story we continue, but whose end we will not see. It is the story of a new world that became a friend and liberator of the old. The story of a slave-holding society that became a servant of freedom. The story of a power that went into world to protect but not possess, to defend but not to conquer. It is the American story; a story of flawed and fallible people, united across the generations by grand and enduring ideals.

The grandest of these ideals is an unfolding American promise: that everyone belongs, that everyone deserves a chance, that no insignificant person was ever born. Americans are called to enact this promise in our lives and in our laws. And though our nation has sometimes halted, and sometimes delayed, we must follow no other course.

Through much of the last century, America's faith in freedom and democracy was a rock in a raging sea. Now it is a seed upon the wind, taking root in many nations. Our democratic faith is more than the creed of our country, it is the inborn hope of our humanity; an ideal we carry but do not own, a trust we bear and pass along. And even after nearly 225 years, we have a long way yet to travel.

While many of our citizens prosper, others doubt the promise - even the justice - of our own country. The ambitions of some Americans are limited by failing schools, and hidden prejudice, and the circumstances of their birth. And sometimes our differences run so deep, it seems we share a continent, but not a country.

We do not accept this, and will not allow it. Our unity, our union, is the serious work of leaders and citizens in every generation. And this is my solemn pledge: I will work to build a single nation of justice and opportunity.

I know this is within our reach, because we are guided by a power larger than ourselves, Who creates us equal in His image. And we are confident in principles that unite and lead us onward.

America has never been united by blood or birth or soil. We are bound by ideals that move us beyond our backgrounds, lift us above our interests, and teach us what it means to be citizens. Every child must be taught these principles. Every citizen must uphold them. And every immigrant, by embracing these ideals, makes our country more, not less, American.

Today we affirm a new commitment to live out our nation's promise through civility, courage, compassion and character. America, at its best, matches a commitment to principle with a concern for civility. A civil society demands from each of us good will and respect, fair dealing and forgiveness. Some seem to believe that our politics can afford to be petty because, in a time of peace, the stakes of our debates appear small. But the stakes, for America, are never small. If our country does not lead the cause of freedom, it will not be led. If we do not turn the hearts of children toward knowledge and character, we will lose their gifts and undermine their idealism. If we permit our economy to drift and decline, the vulnerable will suffer most.

We must live up to the calling we share. Civility is not a tactic or a sentiment. It is the determined choice of trust over cynicism, of community over chaos. And this commitment, if we keep it, is a way to shared accomplishment.

America, at its best, is also courageous. Or national courage has been clear in times of depression and war, when defeating common dangers defined our common good. Now we must choose if the example of our fathers and mothers will inspire us or condemn us. We must show courage in a time of blessing, by confronting problems instead of passing them on to future generations.

Together we will reclaim America's schools, before ignorance and apathy claim more young lives. We will reform Social Security and Medicare, sparing our children from struggles we have the power to prevent. We will reduce taxes, to recover the momentum of our economy and reward the effort and enterprise of working Americans. We will build our defenses beyond challenge, lest weakness invite challenge. We will confront weapons of mass destruction, so that a new century is spared new horrors.

The enemies of liberty and our country should make no mistake. America remains engaged in the world, by history and by choice, shaping a balance of power that favors freedom. We will defend our allies and our interests. We will show purpose without arrogance. We will meet aggression and bad faith with resolve and strength. And to all nations, we will speak for the values that gave our nation birth.

America, at its best, is compassionate. In the quiet of American conscience, we know that deep, persistent poverty is unworthy of our nation's promise. And whatever our views of its cause, we can agree that children at risk are not at fault. Abandonment and abuse are not acts of God, they are failures of love. And the proliferation of prisons, however necessary, is no substitute for hope and order in our souls.

Where there is suffering, there is duty. Americans in need are not strangers, they are citizens; not problems, but priorities; and all of us are diminished when any are hopeless.

Government has great responsibilities, for public safety and public health, for civil rights and common schools. Yet compassion is the work of a nation, not just a government. And some needs and hurts are so deep they will only respond to a mentor's touch or a pastor's prayer. Church and charity, synagogue and mosque, lend our communities their humanity, and they will have an honored place in our plans and laws.

Many in our country do not know the pain of poverty. But we can listen to those who do. And I can pledge our nation to a goal: When we see that wounded traveler on the road to Jericho, we will not pass to the other side.

America, at its best, is a place where personal responsibility is valued and expected. Encouraging responsibility is not a search for scapegoats, it is a call to conscience. And though it requires sacrifice, it brings a deeper fulfillment. We find the fullness of life, not only in options, but in commitments. And we find that children and community are the commitments that set us free.

Our public interest depends on private character; on civic duty and family bonds and basic fairness; on uncounted, unhonored acts of decency which give direction to our freedom. Sometimes in life we are called to do great things. But as a saint of our times has said, every day we are called to do small things with great love. The most important tasks of a democracy are done by everyone.

I will live and lead by these principles: to advance my convictions with civility; to pursue the public interest with courage; to speak for greater justice and compassion; to call for responsibility, and try to live it as well. In all these ways, I will bring the values of our history to the care of our times.

What you do is as important as anything government does. I ask you to seek a common good beyond your comfort; to defend needed reforms against easy attacks; to serve your nation, beginning with your neighbor. I ask you to be citizens. Citizens, not spectators. Citizens, not subjects. Responsible citizens, building communities of service and a nation of character.

Americans are generous and strong and decent, not because we believe in ourselves, but because we hold beliefs beyond ourselves. When this spirit of citizenship is missing, no government program can replace it. When this spirit is present, no wrong can stand against it.

After the Declaration of Independence was signed, Virginia statesman John Page wrote to Thomas Jefferson:

' 'We know the Race is not to the swift nor the Battle to the Strong. Do you not think an Angel rides in the Whirlwind and directs this Storm?'

Much time has passed since Jefferson arrived for his inaugural. The years and changes accumulate. But the themes of this day he would know: our nation's grand story of courage, and its simple dream of dignity.

We are not this story's Author, Who fills time and eternity with His purpose. Yet His purpose is achieved in our duty; and duty is fulfilled in service to one another.

Never tiring, never yielding, never finishing, we renew that purpose today, to make our country more just and generous; to affirm the dignity of our lives and every life.

This work continues. This story goes on. And an angel still rides in the whirlwind and directs this storm.

God bless you, and God bless America.

Forty-eight hours after assuming the presidency, President Bush addressed the tens of thousands gathered in Washington, D.C., for the annual January 22nd March for Life:

We share a great goal to work toward a day when every child is welcomed in life and protected in law. We know this will not come easily, or all at once. But the goal leads us onward to build a culture of life, affirming that every person, at every stage and season of life, is created in God's image. "

That same day President Bush reinstated the "Mexico City" policy of President Reagan and George H. Bush, which cuts off U.S. tax dollars from organizations which campaign to legalize abortion in less developed nations and promote abortion overseas. President Bush stated:

It is my conviction that taxpayer funds should not be used to pay for abortions or advocate or actively promote abortion, either here or abroad. It is therefore my belief that the Mexico City Policy should be restored.

On February 27, 2001, President George W. Bush addressed a Joint Session of Congress, being introduced by Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert (R-IL):

Thank you very much. Thank you very much. Thank you.

Mr. Speaker, Mr. Vice President, members of Congress, it's a great privilege to be here to outline a new budget and a new approach for governing our great country.

I thank you for your invitation to speak here tonight. I know Congress had to formally invite me, and it could have been a close vote.

(LAUGHTER)

So, Mr. Vice President, I appreciate you being here to break the tie.

(LAUGHTER)

I want to thank so many of you who have accepted my invitation to come to the White House to discuss important issues. We're off to a good start.

I will continue to meet with you and ask for your input. You have been kind and candid, and I thank you for making a new president feel welcome.

The last time I visited the Capitol, I came to take an oath. On the steps of this building, I pledged to honor our Constitution and laws.

And I asked you to join me in setting a tone of civility and respect in Washington.

I hope America is noticing the difference, because we are making progress. Together we are changing the tone in the nation's capital. And this spirit of respect and cooperation is vital, because, in the end, we will be judged not only by what we say or how we say it, we will be judged by what we are able to accomplish.

America today is a nation with great challenges, but greater resources. An artist using statistics as a brush could paint two very different pictures of our country. One would have warning signs: increasing layoffs, rising energy prices, too many failing schools, persistent poverty, the stubborn vestiges of racism.

Another picture would be full of blessings: a balanced budget, big surpluses, a military that is second to none, a country at peace with its neighbors, technology that is revolutionizing the world, and our greatest strength: concerned citizens who care for our country and care for each other.

Neither picture is complete in and of itself. And tonight I challenge and invite Congress to work with me to use the resources of one picture or repaint the other, to direct the advantages of our time to solve the problems of our people.

Some of these resources will come from government-some, but not all. Year after year in Washington, budget debates seem to come down to an old, tired argument: on one side, those who want more government, regardless of the cost; on the other, those who want less government, regardless of the need.

We should leave those arguments to the last century and chart a different course.

Government has a role and an important role. Yet too much government crowds out initiative and hard work, private charity and the private economy. Our new governing vision says government should be active, but limited; engaged, but not overbearing.

And my budget is based on that philosophy. It is reasonable, and it is responsible. It meets our obligations, and funds our growing needs.

We increase spending next year for Social Security and Medicare and other entitlement programs by $81 billion. We have increased spending for discretionary programs by a very responsible 4 percent above the rate of inflation. My plan pays down an unprecedented amount of our national debt. And then when money is still left over, my plan returns it to the people who earned it in the first place.

A budget's impact is counted in dollars but measured in lives. Excellent schools, quality health care, a secure retirement, a cleaner environment, a stronger defense--these are all important needs, and we fund them.

The highest percentage increase in our budget should go to our children's education. Education is my top priority.

Education is my top priority, and by supporting this budget, you will make it yours as well.

Reading is the foundation of all learning, so during the next five years, we triple spending, adding $5 billion to help every child in America learn to read. Values are important, so we've tripled funding for character education to teach our children not only reading and writing, but right from wrong.

We've increased funding to train and recruit teachers, because we know a good education starts with a good teacher. And I have a wonderful partner in this effort.

I like teachers so much I married one.

Laura has begun a new effort to recruit Americans to the profession that will shape our future: teaching. She will travel across America to promote sound teaching practices and early reading skills in our schools and in programs such as Head Start.

When it comes to our schools, dollars alone do not always make the difference. Funding is important and so is reform, so we must tie funding to higher standards and accountability, for results.

I believe in local control of schools. We should not and we will not run public schools from Washington, D. C.

Yet when the federal government spends tax dollars, we must insist on results. Children should be tested on basic reading and math skills every year between grades three and eight. Measuring is the only way to know whether all our children are learning. And I want to know, because I refuse to leave any child behind in America.

Critics of testing contend it distracts from learning. They talk about ``teaching to the test.'' But let's put that logic to the test. If you test a child on basic math and reading skills, and you are ``teaching to the test,'' you are teaching math and reading. And that's the whole idea.

As standards rise, local schools will need more flexibility to meet them. So we must streamline the dozens of federal education programs into five and let states spend money in those categories as they see fit.

Schools will be given a reasonable chance to improve and the support to do so. Yet if they don't, if they continue to fail, we must give parents and students different options: a better public school, a private school, tutoring or a charter school.

In the end, every child in a bad situation must be given a better choice, because when it comes to our children, failure is simply not an option.

Another priority in my budget is to keep the vital promises of Medicare and Social Security, and together we will do so. To meet the health care needs of all America's seniors, we double the Medicare budget over the next 10 years.

My budget dedicates $238 billion to Medicare next year alone, enough to fund all current programs and to begin a new prescription drug benefit for low-income seniors.

No senior in America should have to choose between buying food and buying prescriptions.

To make sure the retirement savings of America's seniors are not diverted to any other program, my budget protects all $2.6 trillion of the Social Security surplus for Social Security and for Social Security alone.

My budget puts a priority on access to health care without telling Americans what doctor they have to see or what coverage they must choose.

Many working Americans do not have health care coverage, so we will help them buy their own insurance with refundable tax credits.

And to provide quality care in low-income neighborhoods, over the next five years we will double the number of people served at community health care centers.

And we will address the concerns of those who have health coverage yet worry their insurance company doesn't care and will not pay.

Together, this Congress and this president will find common ground to make sure doctors make medical decisions and patients get the health care they deserve with a patients' bill of rights.

When it comes to their health, people want to get the medical care they need, not be forced to go to court because they didn't get it. We will ensure access to the courts for those with legitimate claims. But first, let's put in place a strong, independent review so we promote quality health care, not frivolous lawsuits.

My budget also increases funding for medical research, which gives hope to many who struggle with serious disease.

Our prayers tonight are with one of your own who is engaged in his own fight against cancer, a fine representative and a good man, Congressman Joe Moakley.

God bless you, Joe.

And I can think of no more appropriate tribute to Joe than to have the Congress finish the job of doubling the budget for the National Institutes of Health.

My New Freedom Initiative for Americans with disabilities funds new technologies, expands opportunities to work and makes our society more welcoming. For the more than 50 million Americans with disabilities, we must continue to break down barriers to equality.

The budget I propose to you also supports the people who keep our country strong and free, the men and women who serve in the United States military.

I am requesting $5.7 billion in increased military pay and benefits and health care and housing. Our men and women in uniform give America their best, and we owe them our support.

America's veterans honored their commitment to our country through their military service. I will honor our commitment to them with a billion dollar increase to ensure better access to quality care and faster decisions on benefit claims.

My budget will improve our environment by accelerating the cleanup of toxic brownfields. And I propose we make a major investment in conservation by fully funding the Land and Water Conservation Fund.

Our national parks have a special place in our country's life. Our parks are places of great natural beauty and history. As good stewards, we must leave them better than we found them, so I propose providing $4.9 billion over five years for the upkeep of these national treasures.

And my budget adopts a hopeful new approach to help the poor and the disadvantaged. We must encourage and support the work of charities and faith-based and community groups that offer help and love one person at a time.

These groups are working in every neighborhood in America to fight homelessness and addiction and domestic violence, to provide a hot meal or a mentor or a safe haven for our children. Government should welcome these groups to apply for funds, not discriminate against them.

Government cannot be replaced by charities or volunteers. Government should not fund religious activities.

But our nation should support the good works of these good people who are helping their neighbors in need.

So I propose allowing all taxpayers, whether they itemize or not, to deduct their charitable contributions. Estimates show this could encourage as much as $14 billion a year in new charitable giving, money that will save and change lives.

Our budget provides more than $700 million over the next 10 years for a Federal Compassion Capital Fund with a focused and noble mission: to provide a mentor to the more than 1 million children with a parent in prison and to support other local efforts to fight illiteracy, teen pregnancy, drug addiction and other difficult problems.

With us tonight is the mayor of Philadelphia. Please help me welcome Mayor John Street.

Mayor Street has encouraged faith-based and community organizations to make a significant difference in Philadelphia. He's invited me to his city this summer to see compassion in action.

I'm personally aware of just how effective the mayor is. Mayor Street's a Democrat.

Let the record show...

Let the record show, I lost his city, big time.

(LAUGHTER)

But some things are bigger than politics, so I look forward to coming to your city to see your faith-based programs in action.

As government promotes compassion, it also must promote justice. Too many of our citizens have cause to doubt our nation's justice when the law points a finger of suspicion at groups instead of individuals. All our citizens are created equal and must be treated equally.

Earlier today, I asked John Ashcroft, the attorney general, to develop specific recommendations to end racial profiling. It is wrong, and we will end it in America.

In so doing, we will not hinder the work of our nation's brave police officers. They protect us every day, often at great risk.

But by stopping the abuses of a few, we will add to the public confidence our police officers earn and deserve.

My budget has funded a responsible increase in our ongoing operations. It has funded our nation's important priorities. It has protected Social Security and Medicare. And our surpluses are big enough that there is still money left over.

Many of you have talked about the need to pay down our national debt. I listened, and I agree.

We owe it to our children and grandchildren to act now, and I hope you will join me to pay down $2 trillion in debt during the next 10 years.

At the end of those 10 years, we will have paid down all of the debt that is available to retire.

And so my budget sets aside almost a trillion dollars over 10 years for additional needs. That is one trillion additional reasons you can feel comfortable supporting this budget.

We have increased our budget at a responsible 4 percent. We have funded our priorities. We paid down all the available debt. We have prepared for contingencies. And we still have money left over.

Yogi Berra once said, "When you come to a fork in the road, take it."

(LAUGHTER)

Now we come to a fork in the road. We have two choices. Even though we have already met our needs, we could spend the money on more and bigger government. That's the road our nation has traveled in recent years.

Last year, government spending shot up 8 percent. That's far more than our economy grew, far more than personal income grew and far more than the rate of inflation. If you continue on that road, you will spend the surplus and have to dip into Social Security to pay other bills. Unrestrained government spending is a dangerous road to deficits, so we must take a different path.

The other choice is to let the American people spend their own money to meet their own needs.

I hope you'll join me in standing firmly on the side of the people. You see, the growing surplus exists because taxes are too high, and government is charging more than it needs. The people of America have been overcharged, and, on their behalf, I am here to ask for a refund.

Some say my tax plan is too big.

Others say it is too small.

I respectfully disagree.

(LAUGHTER)

This plan is just right.

(LAUGHTER)

I didn't throw darts at a board to come up with a number for tax relief. I didn't take a poll or develop an arbitrary formula that might sound good. I looked at problems in the tax code and calculated the cost to fix them.

A tax rate of 15 percent is too high for those who earned low wages, so we must lower the rate to 10 percent.

No one should pay more than a third of the money they earn in federal income taxes, so we lowered the top rate to 33 percent.

This reform will be welcome relief for America's small businesses, which often pay taxes at the highest rate. And help for small business means jobs for Americans.

We simplified the tax code by reducing the number of tax rates from the current five rates to four lower ones: 10 percent, 15, 25 and 33 percent. In my plan, no one is targeted in or targeted out. Everyone who pays income taxes will get tax relief.

Our government should not tax and thereby discourage marriage, so we reduced the marriage penalty.

I want to help families rear and support their children, so we doubled the child credit to $1,000 per child.

It's not fair to tax the same earnings twice, once when you earn them and again when you die, so we must repeal the death tax.

These changes add up to significant help. A typical family with two children will save $1,600 a year on their federal income taxes.

Now, $1,600 may not sound like a lot to some, but it means a lot to many families. $1,600 buys gas for two cars for an entire year. It pays tuition for a year at a community college. It pays the average family grocery bill for three months. That's real money.

With us tonight, representing many American families, are Steven and Josephina Ramos.

They are from Pennsylvania, but they could be from any one of your districts. Steven is a network administrator for a school district. Josephina is a Spanish teacher at a charter school. And they have a 2-year-old daughter.

Steven and Josephina tell me they pay almost $8,000 a year in federal income taxes. My plan will save them more than $2,000.

Let me tell you what Steven says: "$2,000 a year means a lot to my family. If we had this money, it would help us reach our goal of paying off our personal debt in two years' time." After that, Steven and Josephina want to start saving for Lianna's college education.

My attitude is, government should never stand in the way of families achieving their dreams.

And as we debate this issue, always remember: The surplus is not the government's money; the surplus is the people's money.

For lower-income families, my tax plan restores basic fairness. Right now, complicated tax rules punish hard work.

A waitress supporting two children on $25,000 a year can lose nearly half of every additional dollar she earns above the $25,000. Her overtime, her hardest hours, are taxed at nearly 50 percent. This sends a terrible message: You will never get ahead.

But America's message must be different. We must honor hard work, never punish it.

With tax relief, overtime will no longer be overtax time for the waitress.

People with the smallest incomes will get the highest percentage of reductions, and millions of additional American families will be removed from the income tax rolls entirely.

Tax relief is right, and tax relief is urgent. The long economic expansion that began almost 10 years ago is faltering.

Lower interest rates will eventually help, but we cannot assume they will do the job all by themselves.

Forty years ago, and then 20 years ago, two presidents, one Democrat, one Republican, John F. Kennedy and Ronald Reagan, advocated tax cuts to, in President Kennedy's words, "get this country moving again."

They knew then what we must do now: To create economic growth and opportunity, we must put money back into the hands of the people who buy goods and create jobs.

We must act quickly. The chairman of the Federal Reserve has testified before Congress that tax cuts often come too late to stimulate economic recovery. So I want to work with you to give our economy an important jump start by making tax relief retroactive.

We must act now because it is the right thing to do. We must also act now because we have other things to do. We must show courage to confront and resolve tough challenges: to restructure our nation's defenses, to meet our growing need for energy, and to reform Medicare and Social Security.

America has a window of opportunity to extend and secure our present peace by promoting a distinctly American internationalism. We will work with our allies and friends to be a force for good and a champion of freedom. We will work for free markets, free trade and freedom from oppression. Nations making progress toward freedom will find America is their friend.

We will promote our values. We'll promote the peace. And we need a strong military to keep the peace.

But our military was shaped to confront the challenges of the past, so I have asked the secretary of defense to review America's armed forces and prepare to transform them to meet emerging threats.

My budget makes a down payment on the research and development that will be required. Yet, in our broader transformation effort, we must put strategy first, then spending. Our defense vision will drive our defense budget, not the other way around.

Our nation also needs a clear strategy to confront the threats of the 21st century, threats that are more widespread and less certain. They range from terrorists who threaten with bombs to tyrants and rogue nations intent on developing weapons of mass destruction.

To protect our own people, our allies and friends, we must develop and we must deploy effective missile defenses.

And as we transform our military, we can discard Cold War relics and reduce our own nuclear forces to reflect today's needs.

A strong America is the world's best hope for peace and freedom.

Yet the cause of freedom rests on more than our ability to defend ourselves and our allies.

Freedom is exported every day as we ship goods and products that improve the lives of millions of people.

Free trade brings greater political and personal freedom.

Each of the previous five presidents has had the ability to negotiate far-reaching trade agreements. Tonight, I ask you to give me the strong hand of presidential trade promotion authority and to do so quickly.

As we meet tonight, many citizens are struggling with the high cost of energy. We have a serious energy problem that demands a national energy policy.

The West is confronting a major energy shortage that has resulted in high prices and uncertainty. I have asked federal agencies to work with California officials to help speed construction of new energy sources. And I have directed Vice President Cheney, Commerce Secretary Evans, Energy Secretary Abraham and other senior members of my administration to develop a national energy policy.

Our energy demand outstrips our supply. We can produce more energy at home while protecting our environment, and we must.

We can produce more electricity to meet demand, and we must.

We can promote alternative energy sources and conservation, and we must.

America must become more energy independent, and we will.

Perhaps the biggest test of our foresight and courage will be reforming Medicare and Social Security.

Medicare's finances are strained and its coverage is outdated. Ninety-nine percent of employer-provided health plans offer some form of prescription drug coverage. Medicare does not.

The framework for reform has been developed by Senators Frist and Breaux and Congressman Thomas, and now is the time to act.

Medicare must be modernized, and we must make sure that every senior on Medicare can choose a health care plan that offers prescription drugs.

Seven years from now, the baby boom generation will begin to claim Social Security benefits. Everyone in this chamber knows that Social Security is not prepared to fully fund their retirement, and we only have a couple of years to get prepared.

Without reform, this country will one day awaken to a stark choice: either a drastic rise in payroll taxes, or a radical cut in retirement benefits. There is a better way.

This spring I will form a presidential commission to reform Social Security. The commission will make its recommendations by next fall. Reform should be based on these principles: It must preserve the benefits of all current retirees and those nearing retirement. It must return Social Security to sound financial footing. And it must offer personal savings accounts to younger workers who want them.

Social Security now offers workers a return of less than 2 percent on the money they pay into the system. To save the system, we must increase that by allowing younger workers to make safe, sound investments that yield a higher rate of return.

Ownership, access to wealth and independence should not be the privilege of a few. They are the hope of every American, and we must make them the foundation of Social Security.

By confronting the tough challenge of reform, by being responsible with our budget, we can earn the trust of the American people. And we can add to that trust by enacting fair and balanced election and campaign finance reforms.

The agenda I have set before you tonight is worthy of a great nation. America is a nation at peace, but not a nation at rest. Much has been given to us and much is expected.

Let us agree to bridge old divides. But let us also agree that our good will must be dedicated to great goals. Bipartisanship is more than minding our manners, it is doing our duty.

No one can speak in this Capitol and not be awed by its history.

At so many turning points, debates in these chambers have reflected the collected or divided conscience of our country. And when we walk through Statuary Hall and see those men and women of marble, we are reminded of their courage and achievement.

Yet America's purpose is never found only in statues or history. America's purpose always stands before us.

Our generation must show courage in a time of blessing as our nation has always shown in times of crisis. And our courage, issue by issue, can gather to greatness and serve our country.

This is the privilege and responsibility we share. And if we work together, we can prove that public service is noble.

We all came here for a reason. We all have things we want to accomplish and promises to keep. Juntos podemos, together we can.

We can make Americans proud of their government. Together, we can share in the credit of making our country more prosperous and generous and just and earn from our conscience and from our fellow citizens, the highest possible praise, "Well done, good and faithful servants."

Thank you all. Good night, and God bless.

On January 29, 2001, President George W. Bush issued an Executive Order entitled: Agency Responsibilities With Respect to Faith-Based and Community Initiatives:

By the authority vested in me as President by the Constitution and the laws of the United States of America, and in order to help the Federal Government coordinate a national effort to expand opportunities for faith-based and other community organizations and to strengthen their capacity to better meet social needs in America's communities, it is hereby ordered as follows:

Section 1. Establishment of Executive Department Centers for Faith-Based and Community Initiatives.

(a) The Attorney General, the Secretary of Education, the Secretary of Labor, the Secretary of Health and Human Services, and the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall each establish within their respective departments a Center for Faith-Based and Community Initiatives (Center).

(b) Each executive department Center shall be supervised by a Director, appointed by the department head in consultation with the White House Office of Faith-Based and Community Initiatives (White House OFBCI).

(c) Each department shall provide its Center with appropriate staff, administrative support, and other resources to meet its responsibilities under this order.

(d) Each department's Center shall begin operations no later than 45 days from the date of this order.

Sec. 2. Purpose of Executive Department Centers for Faith-Based and Community Initiatives. The purpose of the executive department Centers will be to coordinate department efforts to eliminate regulatory, contracting, and other programmatic obstacles to the participation of faith-based and other community organizations in the provision of social services.

Sec. 3. Responsibilities of Executive Department Centers for Faith-Based and Community Initiatives. Each Center shall, to the extent permitted by law:

(a) conduct, in coordination with the White House OFBCI, a department-wide audit to identify all existing barriers to the participation of faith-based and other community organizations in the delivery of social services by the department, including but not limited to regulations, rules, orders, procurement, and other internal policies and practices, and outreach activities that either facially discriminate against or otherwise discourage or disadvantage the participation of faith-based and other community organizations in Federal programs;

(b) coordinate a comprehensive departmental effort to incorporate faith-based and other community organizations in department programs and initiatives to the greatest extent possible;

(c) propose initiatives to remove barriers identified pursuant to section 3(a) of this order, including but not limited to reform of regulations, procurement, and other internal policies and practices, and outreach activities;

(d) propose the development of innovative pilot and demonstration programs to increase the participation of faith-based and other community organizations in Federal as well as State and local initiatives; and

(e) develop and coordinate department outreach efforts to disseminate information more effectively to faith-based and other community organizations with respect to programming changes, contracting opportunities, and other department initiatives, including but not limited to Web and Internet resources.

Sec. 4. Additional Responsibilities of the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Labor Centers.

In addition to those responsibilities described in section 3 of this order, the Department of Health and Human Services and the Department of Labor Centers shall, to the extent permitted by law:

(a) conduct a comprehensive review of policies and practices affecting existing funding streams governed by so-called "Charitable Choice" legislation to assess the department's compliance with the requirements of Charitable Choice; and

(b) promote and ensure compliance with existing Charitable Choice legislation by the department, as well as its partners in State and local government, and their contractors.

Sec. 5. Reporting Requirements.

(a) Report. Not later than 180 days after the date of this order and annually thereafter, each of the five executive department Centers described in section 1 of this order shall prepare and submit a report to the White House OFBCI.

(b) Contents. The report shall include a description of the department's efforts in carrying out its responsibilities under this order, including but not limited to:

(1) a comprehensive analysis of the barriers to the full participation of faith-based and other community organizations in the delivery of social services identified pursuant to section 3(a) of this order and the proposed strategies to eliminate those barriers; and

(2) a summary of the technical assistance and other information that will be available to faith-based and other community organizations regarding the program activities of the department and the preparation of applications or proposals for grants, cooperative agreements, contracts, and procurement.

(c) Performance Indicators. The first report, filed 180 days after the date of this order, shall include annual performance indicators and measurable objectives for department action. Each report filed thereafter shall measure the department's performance against the objectives set forth in the initial report.

Sec. 6. Responsibilities of All Executive Departments and Agencies. All executive departments and agencies (agencies) shall:

(a) designate an agency employee to serve as the liaison and point of contact with the White House OFBCI; and

(b) Cooperate with the White House OFBCI and provide such information, support, and assistance to the White House OFBCI as it may request, to the extent permitted by law.

Sec. 7. Administration and Judicial Review.

(a) The agencies actions directed by this Executive Order shall be carried out subject to the availability of appropriations and to the extent permitted by law.

(b) This order does not create any right or benefit, substantive or procedural, enforceable at law or equity against the United States, its agencies or instrumentalities, its officers or employees, or any other person.

In an address entitled "A Charge to Keep," delivered during his 2000 Presidential Campaign, George W. Bush stated:

Actually, the seeds of my decision had been planted the year before by the Reverend Billy Graham. He visited my family for a summer weekend in Maine. I saw him preach at the small summer church, St. Ann's by the Sea. We all had lunch on the patio overlooking the ocean.

One evening my dad asked Bill to answer questions from a big group of family gathered for the weekend. He sat by the fire and talked. And what he said sparked a change in my heart. I don't remember the exact words. It was more the power of his example. The Lord was so clearly reflected in his gentle and loving demeanor.

The next day we walked and talked at Walker's Point, and I knew I was in the presence of a great man. He was like a magnet; I felt drawn to seek something different. He didn't lecture or admonish; he shared warmth and concern.

Billy Graham didn't make you feel guilty; he made you feel loved.

Over the course of that weekend, Reverend Graham planted a mustard seed in my soul, a seed that grew over the next year. He led me to the path, and I began walking. And it was the beginning of a change in my life.

I had always been a religious person, had regularly attended church, even taught Sunday school and served as an altar boy. But that weekend my faith took on a new meaning.

It was the beginning of a new walk where I would recommit my heart to Jesus Christ. I was humbled to learn that God sent His Son to die for a sinner like me. I was comforted to know that through the Son, I could find God's amazing grace, a grace that crosses every border, every barrier and is open to everyone. Through the love of Christ's life, I could understand the life-changing powers of faith.

When I returned to Midland, I began reading the Bible regularly. Don Evans talked me into joining him and another friend, Don Jones, at a men's community Bible study.

The group had first assembled the year before in spring on 1984, at the beginning of the downturn in the energy industry. Midland was hurting. A lot of people were looking for comfort and strength and direction. A couple of men started the Bible study as a support group, and it grew. By the time I began attending, in the fall of 1985, almost 120 men would gather. We met in small discussion groups of ten or twelve, then joined the larger group for full meetings.

Don Jones picked me up every week for the meetings. I remember looking forward to them. My interest in reading the Bible grew stronger and stronger, and the words became clearer and more meaningful.

We studied Acts, the story of the Apostles building the Christian Church and next year the Gospel of Luke. The preparation for each meeting took several hours reading the Scripture passages and thinking through responses to discussion questions. I took it seriously, with my usual touch of humor...

Laura and I were active members of the First Methodist Church of Midland, and we participated in many family programs, including James Dobson's Focus on the Family series on raising children. As I studied and learned, Scripture took on greater meaning, and I gained confidence and understanding in my faith. I read the Bible regularly.

Don Evans gave me the "One-Year" Bible, a Bible divided into 356 daily readings, each one including a section from the New Testament, the Old Testament, Psalms and Proverbs. I read through that Bible every other year. During the years in between, I picked different chapters to study at different times.

I have also learned the power of prayer. I pray for guidance. I do not pray for earthly things, but for heavenly things, for wisdom and patience and understanding. My faith gives me focus and perspective. It teaches humility.

But I also recognize that faith can be misinterpreted in the political process. Faith is an important part of my life. I believe it is important to live my faith, not flaunt it.

America is a great country because of our religious freedoms. It is important for any leader to respect the faith of others. That point was driven home when Laura and I visited Israel in 1998. We traveled to Rome to spend Thanksgiving with our daughter, who was attending a school program there, and spend three days in Israel on the way home. It was an incredible experience.

I remember walking up at the Jerusalem Hilton and opening the curtains and seeing the Old City before us, the Jerusalem stone glowing gold. We visited the Western Wall and the Church of the Holy Sepulcher. And we went to the Sea of Galilee and stood atop the hill where Jesus delivered the Sermon on the Mount.

It was an overwhelming feeling to stand in the spot where the most famous speech in the history of the world was delivered, the spot where Jesus outlined the character and conduct of a believer and gave his disciples and the world the beatitudes, the golden rule and the Lord's Prayer.

Our delegation included four gentile governors—one Methodist, two Catholics, and a Mormon, and several Jewish-American friends. Someone suggested we read Scripture.

I chose to read "Amazing Grace," my favorite hymn. Later that night we all gathered at a restaurant in Tel Aviv for dinner before we boarded our middle-of-the-night flight back to America. We talked about the wonderful experiences and thanked the guides and government officials who had introduced us to their country.

And toward the end of the meal, one of our friends rose to share a story, to tell us how he, a gentile, and his friend, a Jew, had (unbeknownst to the rest of us) walked down to the Sea of Galilee, joined hands underwater, and prayed together, on bended knee. Then out of his mouth came a hymn he had known as a child, a hymn he hadn't thought about in years. He got every word right:

"Now is the time approaching, by the prophets long foretold, when all shall dwell together, One Shepherd and one fold.

"Now Jew and gentile, meeting, from many a distant shore, around an altar kneeling, one common Lord adore."

Faith changes lives. I know, because faith has changed mine.

I could not be governor if I did not believe in a Divine plan that supersedes all human plans. Politics is a fickle business. Polls change. Today's friend is tomorrow's adversary. People lavish praise and attention. Many times genuine; sometimes it is not.

Yet I build my life on a foundation that will not shift. My faith frees me. Frees me to put the problem of the moment in proper perspective. Frees me to make decisions that others might not like. Frees me to try to do the right thing, even though it may not poll well...."

The death penalty is a difficult issue for supporters as well as its opponents. I have a reverence for life, my faith teaches that life is a gift from our Creator. In a perfect world, life is given by God and only taken by God. I hope someday our society will respect life, the full spectrum of life from the unborn to the elderly. I hope someday unborn children will be protected by law and welcomed in life. I support the death penalty because I believe, if administered swiftly and justly, capital punishment is a deterrent against future violence and will save other innocent lives.

Some advocates of life will challenge why I oppose abortion yet support the death penalty; to me it's the difference between innocence and guilt....

Today, two weeks after Jeb's inauguration, in the church in downtown Austin, the pastor Mark Craig was telling me that my reelection as the first Governor to win back-to-back four-year terms in the history of the state of Texas was a beginning, not an end....

People are starved for faithfulness. He talked of the need for honesty in government; he warned that leaders who cheat on their wives will cheat on their country, will cheat on their colleagues, will cheat themselves. The minister said that America is starved for honest leaders.

He told the story of Moses, asked by God to lead his people to a land of milk and honey. Moses had a lot of reasons to shirk the task. As the pastor told it, Moses' basic reaction was, "Sorry, God, I'm busy. I've got a family. I've got sheep to tend. I've got a life."

"Who am I that I should go to Pharaoh, and bring the sons of Israel out of Egypt?" "The people won't believe me," he protested. "I'm not a very good speaker. Oh Lord, send, I pray, some other person," Moses pleaded.

But God did not, and Moses ultimately did his bidding, leading his people through forty years of wilderness and wandering, relying on God for strength and direction and inspiration.

People are "starving for leadership," Pastor Craig said, "starved for leaders who have ethical and moral courage."

"It is not enough to have an ethical compass to know right from wrong," he argued, "America needs leaders who have the moral courage to do what is right for the right reason. It's not always easy or convenient for leaders to step forward," he acknowledged, "remember even Moses had doubts."

"He was talking to you," my mother later said. The pastor was, of course, talking to all of us, challenging each one of us to make the most of our lives, to assume the mantle of leadership and responsibility wherever we find it. He was calling on us to use whatever power we have, in business, in politics, in our communities, and in our families, to do good for the right reason. And the sermon spoke directly to my heart and my life...

There was no magic moment of decision. After talking with my family during the Christmas holidays, then hearing the rousing sermon to make the most of every moment during my inaugural church service, I gradually felt more comfortable with the prospect of a presidential campaign. My family would love me, my faith would sustain me, no matter what.

During the more than a half century of my life, we have seen an unprecedented decay in our American culture, a decay that has eroded the foundations of our collective values and moral standards of conduct. Our sense of personal responsibility has declined dramatically, just as the role and responsibility of the federal government have increased. The changing culture blurred the sharp contrast between right and wrong and created a new standard of conduct.

"If it feels good, do it." and "If you've got a problem, blame somebody else." Individuals are not responsible for their actions, the new culture said, we are all victims of forces beyond our control. We went from a culture of sacrifice and saving to a culture obsessed with grabbing all the gusto.

We went from accepting responsibility to assigning blame. As government did more and more, individuals were required to do less and less. The new culture said if people were poor, the government should feed them. If someone had no house, the government should provide one. If criminals are not responsible for their acts, then the answers are not prisons, but social programs... For culture to change, it must change one heart, one soul, and one conscience at a time. Government can spend money, but it cannot put hope in our hearts or a sense of purpose in our lives...

But government should welcome the active involvement of people who are following a religious imperative to love their neighbors through after school programs, child care, drug treatment, maternity group homes, and a range of other services. Supporting these men and women - soldiers in the armies of compassion - is the next bold step of welfare reform, because I know that changing hearts will change our entire society.

During the opening months of my presidential campaign, I have traveled our country and my heart has been warmed. My experiences have reinvigorated my faith in the greatness of Americans. They have reminded me that societies are renewed from the bottom up, not the top down. Everywhere I go, I see people of love and faith, taking time to help a neighbor in need...

These people and thousands like them are the heart and soul and greatness of America. And I want to do my part. I am running for President because I believe America must seize this moment, America must lead. We must give our prosperity a greater purpose, a purpose of peace and freedom and hope.

We are a great nation of good loving people. And together, we have a charge to keep.

Catholic University of America in northeast Washington D.C., for the dedication of the Pope John Paul II Cultural Center. After cutting the ribbon with Cardinal Adam J. Maida, President Bush, a Methodist, commented to the Archbishop of Washington, Theodore McCarrick:

I may be just passing through and I may not be a parishioner, but I'm proud to live in your archdiocese.

President Bush continued:

When Cardinal Wojtyla spoke here at Catholic University in 1976, few imagined the course his life would take, or the history his life would shape.

In 1978, most of the world knew him only as the Polish Pope. There were signs of something different and deeper.

One journalist, after hearing the new Pope's first blessing in St. Peter's Square wired back to his editors: "This is not a Pope from Poland, this is a Pope from Galilee."

From that day to this, the Pope's life was written one of the great inspiring stories of our time.

We remember the Pope's first visit to Poland in 1979 when faith turned into resistance and began to swift collapse of imperial communism. The gentle, young priest, once ordered into forced labor by Nazis, became the foe of tyranny and a witness to hope.

The last leader of the Soviet Union would call him "the highest moral authority on earth." We remember his visit to a prison comforting the man who shot him. By answering violence with forgiveness, the Pope became a symbol of reconciliation.

We remember the Pope's visit to Manila in 1995, speaking to one of the largest crowds in history, more than 5 million men and women and children. We remember that as a priest 50 years ago, he traveled by horse-cart to teach the children of small villages. Now he's kissed the ground of 123 countries and leads a flock of 1 billion into the third millennium.

We remember the Pope's visit to Israel and his mission of reconciliation and mutual respect between Christians and Jews. He is the first modern Pope to enter a synagogue always or visit an Islamic country. He has always combined the practice of tolerance with a passion for truth.

John Paul, himself, has often said, "In the designs of Providence, there are no mere coincidences." And maybe the reason this man became Pope is that he bears the message our world needs to hear. To the poor, sick and dying, he carries a message of dignity and solidarity with their suffering. Even when they are forgotten by men, he reminds them they are never forgotten by God.

"Do not give in to despair," he said in the South Bronx. "God has your lives and his care goes with you, calls you to better things, calls you to overcome."

To the wealthy, this Pope carries the message that wealth alone is a false comfort. The goods of the world, he teaches, are nothing without goodness. We are called, each and every one of us, not only to make our own way, but to ease the path of others.

To those with power, the Pope carries a message of justice and human rights. And that message has caused dictators to fear and to fall. His is not the power of armies or technology or wealth. It is the unexpected power of a baby in a stable, of a man on a cross, of a simple fisherman who carried a message to Rome.

Pope John Paul II brings that message of liberation to every corner of the world. When he arrived in Cuba in 1998, he was greeted by signs that read, "Fidel is the Revolution!" But as the Pope's biographer put it, "In the next four days Cuba belonged to another revolutionary." We are confident that the revolution of hope the Pope began in that nation will bear fruit in our time.

And we're responsible to stand for human dignity and religious freedom wherever they are denied, from Cuba to China to southern Sudan. And we, in our country, must not ignore the words the Pope addresses to us. On his four pilgrimages to America, he has spoken with wisdom and feeling about our strength and our flaws, our successes and our needs.

The Pope reminds us that while freedom defines our nation, responsibility must define our lives. He challenges us to live up to our aspirations, to be a fair and just society where all are welcomed, all are valued, and all are protected. And he is never more eloquent than when he speaks for a culture of life. The culture of life is a welcoming culture, never excluding, never dividing, never despairing and always affirming the goodness of life in all its seasons.

In the culture of life we must make room for the stranger. We must comfort the sick. We must care for the aged. We must welcome the immigrant. We must teach our children to be gentle with one another. We must defend in love the innocent child waiting to be born.

The center we dedicate today celebrates the Pope's message, its comfort and its challenge. This place stands for the dignity of the human person, the value of every life and the splendor of truth. And, above all, it stands, in the Pope's words, for the "joy of faith in a troubled world."

I'm grateful that Pope John Paul II chose Washington as the site of this center. It brings honor and it fills a need. We are thankful for the message. We are also thankful for the messenger, for his personal warmth and prophetic strength; for his good humor and his bracing honesty; for his spiritual and intellectual gifts; for his moral courage, tested against tyranny and against our own complacency.

Always, the Pope points us to the things that last and the love that saves. We thank God for this rare man, a servant of God and a hero of history. And I thank all of you for building this center of conscience and reflection in our nation's capital.

God bless.

On July 22, 2001, President George W. Bush proclaimed:

PARENTS' DAY 2001

BY THE PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA
A PROCLAMATION

Being a parent is the most important job in the world. As we hold a newborn in our arms or embrace an older adopted child, the promise we make in our hearts to love, protect, and nurture our children stays with us and with them forever. We are eternally linked to the children whom we are blessed to parent and to the generations before us who helped shape our lives.

Both mothers and fathers play a vital role in giving children the best possible start in life. As parents, we provide our children with the love and support they need to grow up to be caring individuals and responsible citizens. The care we express and the values we instill help our children achieve their greatest potential and ultimately will determine the future of our Nation.

Unfortunately, children who lack a strong parental presence in their lives can suffer over both the short and the long term. Study after study has demonstrated that children who grow up without both parents in their home are more likely to end up in poverty, drop out of school, become addicted to drugs, have a child out of wedlock, or go to prison.

Single-parented children who avoid these unfortunate outcomes will nevertheless miss out on the balance, unity, and stability that a two-parent family can bring.

Recognizing that strong families make a strong America, I have committed my Administration to help parents do better by encouraging the formation and maintenance of loving families. We have proposed several major initiatives designed to promote responsible fatherhood, strengthen families, and make adoption easier and more affordable, so that every child has a better chance of living in a stable and loving home.

We also have achieved widespread support for the historic reform of our public education system that will significantly improve our schools. This improvement is founded on the core principles of my education reform agenda, which include: accountability; flexibility; local control; and more choices for parents.

Government bears an important responsibility to provide excellent schools and educational programs that leave no child behind; but Government cannot replace the love and nurturing of committed parents that are essential for a child's well-being. Many community organizations, centers of faith, and schools offer services and programs to help parents improve their child-rearing skills.

As we observe Parents' Day, I encourage all Americans to join me in honoring the millions of mothers and fathers, biological and adoptive, foster parents, and stepparents, whose selfless love and hard-working efforts are building better lives for their children and our Nation.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE W. BUSH, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and Laws of the United States and consistent with Public Law 103-362, do hereby proclaim Sunday, July 22, 2001, as Parents' Day. I urge all Americans to express their love, respect, support, and appreciation to their parents, and I call upon citizens to observe this day with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this twenty-first day of July, in the year of our Lord two thousand one, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and twenty-sixth.

GEORGE W. BUSH

On September 11, 2001, Terrorists crashed jets into the World Trade Center and the Pentagon. Associated Press reporters David Crary and Jerry Schwartz wrote:

NEW YORK (Sept. 11) - In the most devastating terrorist onslaught ever waged against the United States, knife-wielding hijackers crashed two airliners into the World Trade Center on Tuesday, toppling its twin 110-story towers. The deadly calamity was witnessed on televisions across the world as another plane slammed into the Pentagon, and a fourth crashed outside Pittsburgh.

"Today, our nation saw evil," President Bush said in an address to the nation Tuesday night. He said thousands of lives were "suddenly ended by evil, despicable acts of terror."

Said Adm. Robert J. Natter, commander of the U.S. Atlantic Fleet: "We have been attacked like we haven't since Pearl Harbor."

Establishing the U.S. death toll could take weeks. The four airliners alone had 266 people aboard and there were no known survivors. At the Pentagon, about 100 people were believed dead.

In addition, a firefighters union official said he feared half of the 400 firefighters who first reached the scene had died in rescue efforts at the trade center - where 50,000 people worked - and dozens of police officers were believed missing.

"The number of casualties will be more than most of us can bear," a visibly distraught Mayor Rudolph Giuliani said.

"We have entire companies that are just missing," said firefighters union vice president Mike Carter. "We lost chiefs. ... We're going to have to bury a lot of people."

A police source said some people trapped in the twin towers managed to call authorities or family members, but it was not clear how many people or when all the calls were made. In one of the calls, which took place in the afternoon, a businessman called his family to say he was trapped with police officers, whom he named, the source said.

No one took responsibility for the attacks that rocked the seats of finance and government. But federal authorities identified Osama bin Laden, who has been given asylum by Afghanistan's Taliban rulers, as the prime suspect.

Aided by an intercept of communications between his supporters and harrowing cell phone calls from at least one flight attendant and two passengers aboard the jetliners before they crashed, U.S. officials began assembling a case linking bin Laden to the devastation.

U.S. intelligence intercepted communications between bin Laden supporters discussing the attacks on the World Trade Center and Pentagon, according to Utah Sen. Orrin Hatch, the top Republican on the Senate Judiciary Committee.

The people aboard planes who managed to make cell phone calls each described similar circumstances: They indicated the hijackers were armed with knives, in some cases stabbing flight attendants. The hijackers then took control of the planes.

At the World Trade Center, the dead and the doomed plummeted from the skyscrapers, among them a man and woman holding hands.

Shortly after 7 p.m., crews began heading into ground zero of the attack to search for survivors and recover bodies. All that remained of the twin towers by then was a pile of rubble and twisted steel that stood barely two stories high, leaving a huge gap in the New York City skyline.

"Freedom itself was attacked this morning and I assure you freedom will be defended," said Bush, who was in Florida at the time of the catastrophe. As a security measure, he was shuttled to a Strategic Air Command bunker in Nebraska before leaving for Washington.

"Make no mistake," he said. The United States will hunt down and pursue those responsible for these cowardly actions."

More than nine hours after the U.S. attacks began, explosions could be heard north of the Afghan capital of Kabul, but American officials said the United States was not responsible.

"It isn't us. I don't know who's doing it," Pentagon spokesman Craig Quigley said.

Officials across the world condemned the attacks but in the West Bank city of Nablus, thousands of Palestinians celebrated, chanting "God is Great" and handing out candy. The United States has become increasingly unpopular in the Mideast in the past year of Israeli-Palestinian fighting, with Washington widely seen as siding with Israel against the Arab world.

At the Pentagon, the symbol and command center for the nation's military force, one side of the building collapsed as smoke billowed over the Potomac River. Rep. Ike Skelton, briefed by Pentagon officials, said, "There appear to be about 100 casualties" in the building.

The first airstrike - on the trade center - occurred shortly before 8:45 a.m. EDT. A burning, 47-story part of the trade center complex, long since evacuated, collapsed in flames just before nightfall.

Emergency Medical Service worker Louis Garcia said initial reports indicated that bodies were buried beneath the two feet of soot on streets around the trade center.

"A lot of the vehicles are running over bodies because they are all over the place," he said.

Said National Guard member Angelo Otchy of Maplewood, N. J., "I must have come across body parts by the thousands. I came across a lady, she didn't remember her name. Her face was covered in blood."

For the first time, the nation's aviation system was completely shut down as officials considered the frightening flaws that had been exposed in security procedures. Financial markets were closed, too.

Top leaders of Congress were led to an undisclosed location, as were key officials of the Bush administration. Guards armed with automatic weapons patrolled the White House grounds and military aircraft secured the skies above the capital city. National Guard troops appeared on some street corners in the nation's capital.

Evacuations were ordered at the tallest skyscrapers in several cities, and high-profile tourist attractions closed - Walt Disney World, Mount Rushmore, Seattle's Space Needle, the Gateway Arch in St. Louis.

The Federal Reserve, seeking to provide assurances that the nation's banking system would be protected, said it would provide additional money to banks if needed.

In Afghanistan, where bin Laden has been given asylum, the nation's hardline Taliban rulers rejected suggestions he was responsible.

Bin Laden came to prominence fighting alongside the U.S.-backed Afghan mujahedeen - holy warriors - in their war against Soviet troops in the 1980s. But former followers say he turned against the United States during the 1991 Gulf War, seething at the deployment of U.S. troops in Saudi Arabia during the Gulf War campaign to oust Iraq from Kuwait. He has repeatedly called on Muslims worldwide to join in a jihad, or holy war, against the United States.

Abdel-Bari Atwan, editor of the Al-Quds al-Arabi newspaper, said he received a warning from Islamic fundamentalists close to bin Laden, but had not taken the threat seriously. "They said it would be a huge and unprecedented attack, but they did not specify," Atwan said in a telephone interview in London.

Eight years ago, the World Trade Center was a terrorist target when a truck bomb killed six people and wounded about 1,000 others. Just the death toll on the planes alone could surpass the 168 people killed in the 1995 bombing of the federal building in Oklahoma City.

This is how Tuesday's mayhem unfolded:

At about 8:45 a.m., a hijacked airliner crashed into the north tower of the trade center, the 25-year-old, glass-and-steel complex that was once the world's tallest.

Clyde Ebanks, an insurance company vice president, was at a meeting on the 103rd floor of the south tower when his boss said, "Look at that!" He turned to see a plane slam into the other tower.

"I just heard the building rock," said Peter Dicerbo, a bank employee on the 47th floor. "It knocked me on the floor. It sounded like a big roar, then the building started swaying. That's what really scared me."

The enormity of the disaster was just sinking in when 18 minutes later, the south tower also was hit by a plane.

"All this stuff started falling and all this smoke was coming through. People were screaming, falling, and jumping out of the windows," said Jennifer Brickhouse, 34, from Union, N. J.

The chaos was just beginning. Workers stumbled down scores of flights, their clothing torn and their lungs filled with smoke and dust.

John Axisa said he ran outside and watched people jump out of the first building; then there was a second explosion, and he felt the heat on the back of his neck.

Donald Burns, 34, was being evacuated from the 82nd floor when he saw four people in the stairwell. "I tried to help them but they didn't want anyone to touch them. The fire had melted their skin. Their clothes were tattered," he said.

Worse was to come. At 9:50, one tower collapsed, sending debris and dust cascading to the ground. At 10:30, the other tower crumbled.

Glass doors shattered, police and firefighters ushered people into subway stations and buildings. The air was black, from the pavement to the sky. The dust and ash were inches deep along the streets.

Bridges and tunnels were closed to all but pedestrians. Subways were shut down for much of the day; many commuter trains were not running.

Meanwhile, at about 9:30 a.m., an airliner hit the Pentagon - the five-sided headquarters of the American military. "There was screaming and pandemonium," said Terry Yonkers, an Air Force civilian employee at work inside the building.

The military boosted security across the country to the highest levels, sending Navy ships to New York and Washington to assist with air defense and medical needs.

A half-hour after the Pentagon attack, a United Airlines Flight 93, a Boeing 757 jetliner en route from Newark, N. J., to San Francisco, crashed about 80 miles southeast of Pittsburgh.

Airline officials said the other three planes that crashed were American Airlines Flight 11, a Boeing 767 from Boston to Los Angeles, apparently the first to hit the trade center; United Airlines Flight 175, also a Boeing 767 from Boston to Los Angeles, which an eyewitness said was the second to hit the skyscrapers; and American Airlines Flight 77, a Boeing 757 en route from Washington-Dulles to Los Angeles that a source said hit the Pentagon.

"We're at war," said Gaillard Pinckney, an employee at the Housing and Urban Development office in Columbia, S. C. "We just don't know with who."

Giuliani said it was believed the aftereffects of the plane crashes eventually brought the buildings down, not planted explosive devices.

Hyman Brown, a University of Colorado civil engineering professor and the construction manager for the World Trade Center, speculated that flames fueled by thousands of gallons of aviation fuel melted steel supports.

"This building would have stood had a plane or a force caused by a plane smashed into it," he said. "But steel melts, and 24,000 gallons of aviation fluid melted the steel. Nothing is designed or will be designed to withstand that fire."

At mid-afternoon, Giuliani said 1,500 "walking wounded" had been shipped to Liberty State Park in New Jersey by ferry and tugboat, and 750 others were taken to New York City hospitals, among them 150 in critical condition.

Well into the night, a steady stream of boats continued to arrive in the park. "Every 10 minutes another boat with 100 to 150 people on it pulls up," said Mayor Glenn Cunningham. "I have a feeling this is going to go on for several days."

Felix Novelli, who lives in Southampton, N.Y., was in Nashville with his wife for a World War II reunion. He was trying to fly home to New York when the attacks occurred

"I feel like going to war again. No mercy," he said. "This is Dec. 7th happening all over again. We have to come together like '41, go after them."

The attack on Pearl Harbor claimed the lives of 2,390 Americans, most of them servicemen.

Associated Press reporter Sandra Sobieraj wrote: "Bush Addresses Nation on Attacks":

WASHINGTON (Sept. 11) - A grim-faced President Bush mourned the deaths of thousands of Americans in Tuesday's atrocities and vowed to avenge their killings. "Today, our nation saw evil," he said.

In his first prime-time Oval Office address, Bush said the United States would find and punish "those behind these evil acts," and any country that harbors them.

Bush spoke from the Oval Office just hours after bouncing between Florida and air bases in Louisiana and Nebraska for security reasons. Fighter jets and decoy helicopters accompanied his evening flight to Washington and the White House, where his Marine One helicopter briefly stood vigil on the South Lawn in the event of another evacuation. The helicopter took off about 10 p.m. EDT.

With smoke still pouring out of rubble in Washington and New York, Bush declared: "These acts shattered steel, but they cannot dent the steel of American resolve."

He spoke for less than five minutes from the desk that Bill Clinton and John F. Kennedy used before him. Beside the door, a TelePrompTer operator fed Bush the words that he and his speechwriters hastened to pen just an hour earlier.

He stumbled a couple of times even as he strove to maintain a commanding air. Aides pushed an American flag and one with the presidential seal behind him for the somber occasion.

Immediately afterward, Bush joined a late-night meeting of his National Security Council and planned to remain overnight at the White House.

Bush said the government offices deserted after the bombings Tuesday would open on Wednesday

He asked the nation to pray for the families of the victims and quoted the Book of Psalms, "And I pray they will be comforted by a power greater than any of us spoken through the ages in Psalm 23. Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I fear no evil for you are with me."

The United States received no warning of the attacks on the Pentagon and New York's World Trade Center towers, White House press secretary Ari Fleischer said.

U.S. officials privately said they suspected terrorism Osama bin Laden, protected by Afghan government, was behind the tragedies. The Afghan government has rejected the accusations.

"We will make no distinction between the terrorists who committed these acts and those who harbor them," Bush said.

"Today, our fellow citizens, our way of life, our very freedom, came under attack in a series of deliberate and deadly terrorist acts."

"Thousands of lives were suddenly ended by evil, despicable acts of terror," Bush said.

The Oval Office address was his third statement on the tragedy that, being unaware of any hijackings, he first took as a single plane "that went off course," Fleischer said.

He began his day in Sarasota, Fla., where he intended to talk about education. The remarks were scrapped, Bush headed to Louisiana's Barksdale Air Force Base and, in mid-flight, authorized Vice President Dick Cheney to put the U.S. military on high alert worldwide.

Bush made a brief statement from a Barksdale conference room, assuring Americans that he was in regular contact with his command post in Washington: Cheney, Defense Secretary Donald H. Rumsfeld and the White House national security team. On the line held open all day between Bush and Cheney, the president told his No. 2 at one point, "It's the faceless coward that attacks."

Shuttled across the base in a camouflaged Humvee vehicle, Bush boarded Air Force One at 1:30 p.m. EDT for a secret destination that turned out to be Nebraska's Offutt Air Force Base, home to the U.S. Strategic Command, which controls the nation's nuclear weapons. Until three years ago, the Strategic Command also housed the so-called doomsday plane that had been specially equipped to serve as a flying White House in the event of nuclear war.

Before his return to the White House at dusk, Bush advisers were sensitive to any appearance that he was not at the helm.

Fleischer said Bush wanted to be in Washington, where Cheney led the crisis operations center at the White House, but "he understands that at a time like this, caution must be taken" with his location.

At the first reports of attacks on New York's World Trade Center, Bush told his Sarasota elementary school audience that he was hastening back to Washington. All of that immediately changed - and he was diverted to Louisiana - when a plane slammed into the Pentagon, and Washington, too, was under attack.

On Capitol Hill, first lady Laura Bush, who was to have made her debut testifying before the Senate on education, tried to soothe a horrified nation.

"Parents need to reassure their children everywhere in our country that they're safe," she said, grim-faced, as she and Sen. Edward Kennedy, D-Mass., announced their hearing was postponed.

Mrs. Bush and a handful of aides were whisked by motorcade to a secret location away from the White House, which had been evacuated but for the small corps of foreign policy advisers who staffed the basement Situation Room.

Fleischer said the 19-year-old girls, Barbara at Yale University and Jenna at the University of Texas, were also moved to secure locations.

On September 11, 2001, shortly after 9 a.m. EDT, President Bush responded to the World Trade Center attacks of the morning:

Ladies and gentlemen, this is a difficult moment for America. I unfortunately will be going back to Washington after my remarks.

Secretary Rod Paige and the lieutenant governor will take the podium and discuss education.

I do want to thank the folks here at the Booker Elementary School for their hospitality.

Today we've had a national tragedy. Two airplanes have crashed into the World Trade Center in an apparent terrorist attack on our country. I have spoken to the vice president, to the governor of New York, to the director of the FBI, and I've ordered that the full resources of the federal government go to help the victims and their families and to conduct a full-scale investigation to hunt down and to find those folks who committed this act.

Terrorism against our nation will not stand.

And now if you join me in a moment of silence.

May God bless the victims, their families and America. Thank you very much.

On September 11, 2001 1:30pm EDT, President Bush issued a statement from Barksdale Air Force Base in Louisiana:

Freedom itself was attacked this morning by a faceless coward, and freedom will be defended.

I want to reassure the American people that the full resources of the federal government are working to assist local authorities to save lives and to help the victims of these attacks.

Make no mistake: The United States will hunt down and punish those responsible for these cowardly acts.

I've been in regular contact with the vice president, secretary of defense, the national security team and my Cabinet. We have taken all appropriate security precautions to protect the American people.

Our military at home and around the world is on high-alert status and we have taken the necessary security precautions to continue the functions of your government. We have been in touch with the leaders of Congress and with world leaders to assure them that we will do whatever is necessary to protect America and Americans.

I ask the American people to join me in saying a thanks for all the folks who have been fighting hard to rescue our fellow citizens and to join me in saying a prayer for the victims and their families.

The resolve of our great nation is being tested.

But make no mistake: We will show the world that we will pass this test. God bless.

On Tuesday evening, September 11, 2001, President Bush addressed the nation from the Oval Office:

Good evening.

Today, our fellow citizens, our way of life, our very freedom came under attack in a series of deliberate and deadly terrorist acts. The victims were in airplanes or in their offices: secretaries, business men and women, military and federal workers, moms and dads, friends and neighbors.

Thousands of lives were suddenly ended by evil, despicable acts of terror.

The pictures of airplanes flying into buildings, fires burning, huge structures collapsing have filled us with disbelief, terrible sadness and a quiet, unyielding anger.

These acts of mass murder were intended to frighten our nation into chaos and retreat. But they have failed. Our country is strong. A great people has been moved to defend a great nation.

Terrorist attacks can shake the foundations of our biggest buildings, but they cannot touch the foundation of America. These acts shatter steel, but they cannot dent the steel of American resolve.

America was targeted for attack because we're the brightest beacon for freedom and opportunity in the world.

I appreciate so very much the members of Congress who have joined me in strongly condemning these attacks. And on behalf of the American people, I thank the many world leaders who have called to offer their condolences and assistance.

America and our friends and allies join with all those who want peace and security in the world and we stand together to win the war against terrorism.

Tonight I ask for your prayers for all those who grieve, for the children whose worlds have been shattered, for all whose sense of safety and security has been threatened. And I pray they will be comforted by a power greater than any of us spoken through the ages in Psalm 23: "Even though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I fear no evil for you are with me."

This is a day when all Americans from every walk of life unite in our resolve for justice and peace. America has stood down enemies before, and we will do so this time.

None of us will ever forget this day, yet we go forward to defend freedom and all that is good and just in our world.

Thank you. Good night and God bless America.

On Wednesday morning, September 12, 2001, President addressed the nation regarding the terrorist attacks:

I just completed a meeting with our national security team, and we've received the latest intelligence updates.

The deliberate and deadly attacks, which were carried out yesterday against our country, were more than acts of terror. They were acts of war. This will require our country to unite in steadfast determination and resolve. Freedom and democracy are under attack.

The American people need to know we're facing a different enemy than we have ever faced. This enemy hides in shadows and has no regard for human life. This is an enemy who preys on innocent and unsuspecting people, then runs for cover, but it won't be able to run for cover forever. This is an enemy that tries to hide, but it won't be able to hide forever. This is an enemy that thinks its harbors are safe, but they won't be safe forever. This enemy attacked not just our people but all freedom-loving people everywhere in the world.

The United States of America will use all our resources to conquer this enemy. We will rally the world. We will be patient. We'll be focused, and we will be steadfast in our determination. This battle will take time and resolve, but make no mistake about it, we will win.

The federal government and all our agencies are conducting business, but it is not business as usual. We are operating on heightened security alert. America is going forward, and as we do so, we must remain keenly aware of the threats to our country.

Those in authority should take appropriate precautions to protect our citizens. But we will not allow this enemy to win the war by changing our way of life or restricting our freedoms.

This morning, I am sending to Congress a request for emergency funding authority so that we are prepared to spend whatever it takes to rescue victims, to help the citizens of New York City and Washington, D. C., respond to this tragedy, and to protect our national security.

I want to thank the members of Congress for their unity and support. America is united. The freedom-loving nations of the world stand by our side.

This will be a monumental struggle of good versus evil, but good will prevail.

Thank you very much.

On September 13, 2001, President George W. Bush proclaimed a National Day of Prayer and Remembrance for the Victims Of the Terrorist Attacks on September 11, 2001:

A Proclamation by the President of the United States of America.

On Tuesday morning, September 11, 2001, terrorists attacked America in a series of despicable acts of war. They hijacked four passenger jets, crashed two of them into the World Trade Center's twin towers and a third into the Headquarters of the U.S. Department of Defense at the Pentagon, causing great loss of life and tremendous damage. The fourth plane crashed in the Pennsylvania countryside, killing all on board but falling well short of its intended target apparently because of the heroic efforts of passengers on board. This carnage, which caused the collapse of both Trade Center towers and the destruction of part of the Pentagon, killed more than 250 airplane passengers and thousands more on the ground.

Civilized people around the world denounce the evildoers who devised and executed these terrible attacks. Justice demands that those who helped or harbored the terrorists be punished -- and punished severely. The enormity of their evil demands it. We will use all the resources of the United States and our cooperating friends and allies to pursue those responsible for this evil, until justice is done.

We mourn with those who have suffered great and disastrous loss. All our hearts have been seared by the sudden and sense-less taking of innocent lives. We pray for healing and for the strength to serve and encourage one another in hope and faith.

Scripture says: "Blessed are those who mourn for they shall be comforted." I call on every American family and the family of America to observe a National Day of Prayer and Remembrance, honoring the memory of the thousands of victims of these brutal attacks and comforting those who lost loved ones. We will persevere through this national tragedy and personal loss. In time, we will find healing and recovery; and, in the face of all this evil, we remain strong and united, "one Nation under God."

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE W. BUSH, President of the United States of America, by virtue of the authority vested in me by the Constitution and laws of the United States, do hereby proclaim Friday, September 14, 2001, as a National Day of Prayer and Remembrance for the Victims of the Terrorist Attacks on September 11, 2001. I ask that the people of the United States and places of worship mark this National Day of Prayer and Remembrance with noontime memorial services, the ringing of bells at that hour, and evening candlelight remembrance vigils. I encourage employers to permit their workers time off during the lunch hour to attend the noontime services to pray for our land. I invite the people of the world who share our grief to join us in these solemn observances.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this thirteenth day of September, in the year of our Lord two thousand one, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and twenty-sixth. GEORGE W. BUSH

On September 20, 2001, in an unprecedented show of unity amongst Democrats and Republicans, President George Bush, addressed a Joint Session of Congress:

Mr. Speaker, Mr. President Pro Tempore, members of Congress, and fellow Americans, in the normal course of events, presidents come to this chamber to report on the state of the union. Tonight, no such report is needed; it has already been delivered by the American people.

We have seen it in the courage of passengers who rushed terrorists to save others on the ground. Passengers like an exceptional man named Todd Beamer. And would you please help me welcome his wife Lisa Beamer here tonight?

We have seen the state of our union in the endurance of rescuers working past exhaustion.

We've seen the unfurling of flags, the lighting of candles, the giving of blood, the saying of prayers in English, Hebrew and Arabic.

American Quotations.txt

We have seen the decency of a loving and giving people who have made the grief of strangers their own.

My fellow citizens, for the last nine days, the entire world has seen for itself the state of union, and it is strong.

Tonight, we are a country awakened to danger and called to defend freedom. Our grief has turned to anger and anger to resolution. Whether we bring our enemies to justice or bring justice to our enemies, justice will be done.

I thank the Congress for its leadership at such an important time.

All of America was touched on the evening of the tragedy to see Republicans and Democrats joined together on the steps of this Capitol singing "God Bless America."

And you did more than sing. You acted, by delivering $40 billion to rebuild our communities and meet the needs of our military. Speaker Hastert, Minority Leader Gephardt, Majority Leader Daschle and Senator Lott, I thank you for your friendship, for your leadership and for your service to our country.

And on behalf of the American people, I thank the world for its outpouring of support.

America will never forget the sounds of our national anthem playing at Buckingham Palace, on the streets of Paris and at Berlin's Brandenburg Gate.

We will not forget South Korean children gathering to pray outside our embassy in Seoul, or the prayers of sympathy offered at a mosque in Cairo.

We will not forget moments of silence and days of mourning in Australia and Africa and Latin America.

Nor will we forget the citizens of 80 other nations who died with our own. Dozens of Pakistanis, more than 130 Israelis, more than 250 citizens of India, men and women from El Salvador, Iran, Mexico and Japan, and hundreds of British citizens.

America has no truer friend than Great Britain.

Once again, we are joined together in a great cause.

I'm so honored the British prime minister had crossed an ocean to show his unity with America.

Thank you for coming, friend.

On September the 11th, enemies of freedom committed an act of war against our country. Americans have known wars, but for the past 136 years they have been wars on foreign soil, except for one Sunday in 1941. Americans have known the casualties of war, but not at the center of a great city on a peaceful morning.

Americans have known surprise attacks, but never before on thousands of civilians.

All of this was brought upon us in a single day, and night fell on a different world, a world where freedom itself is under attack.

Americans have many questions tonight. Americans are asking, "Who attacked our country?"

The evidence we have gathered all points to a collection of loosely affiliated terrorist organizations known as al Qaeda. They are some of the murderers indicted for bombing American embassies in Tanzania and Kenya and responsible for bombing the USS Cole.

Al Qaeda is to terror what the Mafia is to crime. But its goal is not making money, its goal is remaking the world and imposing its radical beliefs on people everywhere.

The terrorists practice a fringe form of Islamic extremism that has been rejected by Muslim scholars and the vast majority of Muslim clerics; a fringe movement that perverts the peaceful teachings of Islam.

The terrorists' directive commands them to kill Christians and Jews, to kill all Americans and make no distinctions among military and civilians, including women and children.

This group and its leader, a person named Osama bin Laden, are linked to many other organizations in different countries, including the Egyptian Islamic Jihad, the Islamic Movement of Uzbekistan.

There are thousands of these terrorists in more than 60 countries.

They are recruited from their own nations and neighborhoods and brought to camps in places like Afghanistan where they are trained in the tactics of terror. They are sent back to their homes or sent to hide in countries around the world to plot evil and destruction.

The leadership of Al Qaeda has great influence in Afghanistan and supports the Taliban regime in controlling most of that country. In Afghanistan we see al Qaeda's vision for the world. Afghanistan's people have been brutalized, many are starving and many have fled.

Women are not allowed to attend school. You can be jailed for owning a television. Religion can be practiced only as their leaders dictate. A man can be jailed in Afghanistan if his beard is not long enough.

The United States respects the people of Afghanistan -- after all, we are currently its largest source of humanitarian aid -- but we condemn the Taliban regime.

It is not only repressing its own people, it is threatening people everywhere by sponsoring and sheltering and supplying terrorists.

By aiding and abetting murder, the Taliban regime is committing murder. And tonight the United States of America makes the following demands on the Taliban.

Deliver to United States authorities all of the leaders of al Qaeda who hide in your land.

Release all foreign nationals, including American citizens you have unjustly imprisoned. Protect foreign journalists, diplomats and aid workers in your country. Close immediately and permanently every terrorist training camp in Afghanistan. And hand over every terrorist and every person and their support structure to appropriate authorities.

Give the United States full access to terrorist training camps, so we can make sure they are no longer operating.

These demands are not open to negotiation or discussion.

The Taliban must act and act immediately.

They will hand over the terrorists or they will share in their fate.

I also want to speak tonight directly to Muslims throughout the world. We respect your faith. It's practiced freely by many millions of Americans and by millions more in countries that America counts as friends. Its teachings are good and peaceful, and those who commit evil in the name of Allah blaspheme the name of Allah.

The terrorists are traitors to their own faith, trying, in effect, to hijack Islam itself.

The enemy of America is not our many Muslim friends. It is not our many Arab friends. Our enemy is a radical network of terrorists and every government that supports them.

Our war on terror begins with Al Qaeda, but it does not end there.

It will not end until every terrorist group of global reach has been found, stopped and defeated.

Americans are asking "Why do they hate us?"

They hate what they see right here in this chamber: a democratically elected government. Their leaders are self-appointed. They hate our freedoms: our freedom of religion, our freedom of speech, our freedom to vote and assemble and disagree with each other.

They want to overthrow existing governments in many Muslim countries such as Egypt, Saudi Arabia and Jordan. They want to drive Israel out of the Middle East. They want to drive Christians and Jews out of vast regions of Asia and Africa.

These terrorists kill not merely to end lives, but to disrupt and end a way of life. With every atrocity, they hope that America grows fearful, retreating from the world and forsaking our friends. They stand against us because we stand in their way.

We're not deceived by their pretenses to piety.

We have seen their kind before. They are the heirs of all the murderous ideologies of the 20th century. By sacrificing human life to serve their radical visions, by abandoning every value except the will to power, they follow in the path of fascism, Nazism and totalitarianism. And they will follow that path all the way to where it ends in history's unmarked grave of discarded lies.

Americans are asking, "How will we fight and win this war?"

We will direct every resource at our command -- every means of diplomacy, every tool of intelligence, every instrument of law enforcement, every financial influence, and every necessary weapon of war -- to the destruction and to the defeat of the global terror network.

Now, this war will not be like the war against Iraq a decade ago, with a decisive liberation of territory and a swift conclusion. It will not look like the air war above Kosovo two years ago, where no ground troops were used and not a single American was lost in combat.

Our response involves far more than instant retaliation and isolated strikes. Americans should not expect one battle, but a lengthy campaign unlike any other we have ever seen. It may include dramatic strikes visible on TV and covert operations secret even in success.

We will starve terrorists of funding, turn them one against another, drive them from place to place until there is no refuge or no rest.

American Quotations.txt

And we will pursue nations that provide aid or safe haven to terrorism. Every nation in every region now has a decision to make: Either you are with us or you are with the terrorists.

From this day forward, any nation that continues to harbor or support terrorism will be regarded by the United States as a hostile regime. Our nation has been put on notice, we're not immune from attack. We will take defensive measures against terrorism to protect Americans.

Today, dozens of federal departments and agencies, as well as state and local governments, have responsibilities affecting homeland security.

These efforts must be coordinated at the highest level. So tonight, I announce the creation of a Cabinet-level position reporting directly to me, the Office of Homeland Security.

And tonight, I also announce a distinguished American to lead this effort, to strengthen American security: a military veteran, an effective governor, a true patriot, a trusted friend, Pennsylvania's Tom Ridge.

He will lead, oversee and coordinate a comprehensive national strategy to safeguard our country against terrorism and respond to any attacks that may come.

These measures are essential. The only way to defeat terrorism as a threat to our way of life is to stop it, eliminate it and destroy it where it grows.

Many will be involved in this effort, from FBI agents, to intelligence operatives, to the reservists we have called to active duty. All deserve our thanks, and all have our prayers.

And tonight a few miles from the damaged Pentagon, I have a message for our military: Be ready. I have called the armed forces to alert and there is a reason.

The hour is coming when America will act and you will make us proud.

This is not, however, just America's fight. And what is at stake is not just America's freedom.

This is the world's fight. This is civilization's fight. This is the fight of all who believe in progress and pluralism, tolerance and freedom.

We ask every nation to join us.

We will ask and we will need the help of police forces, intelligence service and banking systems around the world. The United States is grateful that many nations and many international organizations have already responded with sympathy and with support -- nations from Latin America to Asia to Africa to Europe to the Islamic world.

Perhaps the NATO charter reflects best the attitude of the world: An attack on one is an attack on all. The civilized world is rallying to America's side.

They understand that if this terror goes unpunished, their own cities, their own citizens may be next. Terror unanswered can not only bring down buildings, it can threaten the stability of legitimate governments.

And you know what? We're not going to allow it. Americans are asking, "What is expected of us?" I ask you to live your lives and hug your children.

American Quotations.txt

I know many citizens have fears tonight and I ask you to be calm and resolute, even in the face of a continuing threat. I ask you to uphold the values of America and remember why so many have come here.

We're in a fight for our principles and our first responsibility is to live by them. No one should be singled out for unfair treatment or unkind words because of their ethnic background or religious faith.

I ask you to continue to support the victims of this tragedy with your contributions. Those who want to give can go to a central source of information, Libertyunites.org, to find the names of groups providing direct help in New York, Pennsylvania and Virginia.

The thousands of FBI agents who are now at work in this investigation may need your cooperation and I ask you to give it. I ask for your patience with the delays and inconveniences that may accompany tighter security and for your patience in what will be a long struggle.

I ask your continued participation and confidence in the American economy. Terrorists attacked a symbol of American prosperity; they did not touch its source.

America is successful because of the hard work and creativity and enterprise of our people. These were the true strengths of our economy before September 11. and they are our strengths today.

And finally, please continue praying for the victims of terror and their families, for those in uniform and for our great country. Prayer has comforted us in sorrow and will help strengthen us for the journey ahead.

Tonight I thank my fellow Americans for what you have already done and for what you will do.

And ladies and gentlemen of the Congress, I thank you, their representatives, for what you have already done and for what we will do together.

Tonight we face new and sudden national challenges.

We will come together to improve air safety, to dramatically expand the number of air marshals on domestic flights and take new measures to prevent hijacking.

We will come together to promote stability and keep our airlines flying with direct assistance during this emergency.

We will come together to give law enforcement the additional tools it needs to track down terror here at home.

We will come together to strengthen our intelligence capabilities to know the plans of terrorists before they act and to find them before they strike.

We will come together to take active steps that strengthen America's economy and put our people back to work.

Tonight, we welcome two leaders who embody the extraordinary spirit of all New Yorkers, Governor George Pataki and Mayor Rudolf Giuliani.

As a symbol of America's resolve, my administration will work with Congress and these two leaders to show the world that we will rebuild New York City.

After all that has just passed, all the lives taken and all the possibilities and hopes that died with them, it is natural to wonder if America's future is one of fear.

Some speak of an age of terror. I know there are struggles ahead and dangers to face. But this country will define our times, not be defined by them.

As long as the United States of America is determined and strong, this will not be an age of terror. This will be an age of liberty here and across the world.

Great harm has been done to us. We have suffered great loss. And in our grief and anger we have found our mission and our moment.

Freedom and fear are at war. The advance of human freedom, the great achievement of our time and the great hope of every time, now depends on us.

Our nation, this generation, will lift the dark threat of violence from our people and our future. We will rally the world to this cause by our efforts, by our courage. We will not tire, we will not falter and we will not fail.

It is my hope that in the months and years ahead life will return almost to normal. We'll go back to our lives and routines and that is good.

Even grief recedes with time and grace.

But our resolve must not pass. Each of us will remember what happened that day and to whom it happened. We will remember the moment the news came, where we were and what we were doing.

Some will remember an image of a fire or story or rescue.

Some will carry memories of a face and a voice gone forever.

And I will carry this. It is the police shield of a man named George Howard who died at the World Trade Center trying to save others.

It was given to me by his mom, Arlene, as a proud memorial to her son. It is my reminder of lives that ended and a task that does not end.

I will not forget the wound to our country and those who inflicted it. I will not yield, I will not rest, I will not relent in waging this struggle for freedom and security for the American people.

The course of this conflict is not known, yet its outcome is certain. Freedom and fear, justice and cruelty, have always been at war, and we know that God is not neutral between them.

Fellow citizens, we'll meet violence with patient justice, assured of the rightness of our cause and confident of the victories to come.

In all that lies before us, may God grant us wisdom and may he watch over the United States of America.

Thank you.

Charisam Online News Service, www.charismanews.com, Friday, September 28, 2001, "Father Says President's 'Faith Is Real'":

The father of President Bush says he is glad Americans have been able to see his son's genuine beliefs - albeit in the aftermath of the Sept. 11 crisis. "This thing about faith - I mean this is real for him," former President George Bush told "NBC Nightly News" anchor Tom Brokaw this week. "Here's a man that's read the Bible through twice, and it's not to make it holier-than-thou or not to make a political point. It's something that is in his heart. And we see it all the time."

Hours after the terrorist assault on the World Trade Center and the Pentagon, George W. Bush tried to comfort the nation by quoting Psalm 23. In his widely acclaimed address to the joint session of Congress last week, the lay Methodist asked Americans to continue to unite and pray.

Best-selling author Max Lucado, one of several religious leaders who met with Bush in the White House the day he spoke to Congress, was impressed by the president's faith. "His first words to us was, 'I have never felt better in my life, and it's because of the prayers of the American people,'" Lucado told Charisma News Service in a conference call yesterday from Oak Hills Church of Christ, a 3,000-member congregation he pastors in San Antonio.

On Saturday, November 10, 2001, President Bush addressed the United Nations General Assembly:

Mr. Secretary General, Mr. President, distinguished delegates and ladies and gentlemen, we meet in a hall devoted to peace in a city scarred by violence, in a nation awakened to danger, in a world uniting for a long struggle.

Every civilized nation here today is resolved to keep the most basic commitment of civilization. We will defend ourselves and our future against terror and lawless violence. The United Nations was founded in this cause. In the Second World War, we learned there is no isolation from evil. We affirmed that some crimes are so terrible, they offend humanity itself. And we resolved that the aggressions and ambitions of the wicked must be opposed early, decisively and collectively before they threaten us all.

That evil has returned, and that cause is renewed. A few miles from here, many thousands still lie in a tomb of rubble. Tomorrow the secretary general, the president of the General Assembly and I will visit that site, where the names of every nation and region that lost citizens will be read aloud. If we were to read the names of every person who died, it would take more than three hours. Those names include a citizen of Gambia, whose wife spent their fourth anniversary, September the 12th, searching in vain for her husband. Those names include a man who supported his wife in Mexico, sending home money every week. Those names include a young Pakistani who prayed toward Mecca five times a day and died that day trying to save others.

The suffering of September the 11th was inflicted on people of many faiths and many nations. All of the victims, including Muslims, were killed with equal indifference and equal satisfaction by the terrorist leaders. The terrorists are violating the tenets of every religion, including the one they invoke.

Last week the sheik of Al Azhar University, the world's oldest Islamic institution of higher learning, declared that terrorism is a disease and that Islam prohibits killing innocent civilians. The terrorists call their cause holy, yet they fund it with drug-dealing. They encourage murder and suicide in the name of a great faith that forbids both. They dare to ask God's blessing as they set out to kill innocent men, women and children. But the God of Isaac and Ishmael would never answer such a prayer. And a murderer is not a martyr. He is just a murderer.

Time is passing. Yet for the United States of America, there will be no forgetting September the 11th. We will remember every rescuer who died in honor. We will remember every family that lives in grief. We will remember the fire and ash, the last phone calls, the funerals of the children.

And the people of my country will remember those who have plotted against us. We are learning their names. We are coming to know their faces. There is no corner of the earth distant or dark enough to protect them. However long it takes, their hour of justice will come.

Every nation has a stake in this cause. As we meet, the terrorists are planning more murder, perhaps in my country or perhaps in yours. They kill because they aspire to dominate. They seek to overthrow governments and destabilize entire regions.

Last week, anticipating this meeting of the General Assembly, they denounced the United Nations. They called our secretary general a criminal and condemned all Arab nations here as traitors to Islam. Few countries meet their exacting standards of brutality and oppression. Every other country is a potential target.

And all the world faces the most horrifying prospect of all. These same terrorists are searching for weapons of mass destruction, the tools to turn their hatred into holocaust. They can be expected to use chemical, biological and nuclear weapons the moment they are capable of doing so. No hint of conscience would prevent it.

This threat cannot be ignored. This threat cannot be appeased. Civilization itself, the civilization we share, is threatened. History will record our response and judge or justify every nation in this hall. The civilized world is now responding. We act to defend ourselves and deliver our children from a future of fear.

We choose the dignity of life over a culture of death. We choose lawful change and civil disagreement over coercion, subversion and chaos. These commitments -- hope and order, law and life -- unite people across cultures and continents. Upon these commitments depend all peace and progress. For these commitments we are determined to fight.

The United Nations has risen to this responsibility. On the 12th of September, these buildings opened for emergency meetings of the General Assembly and the Security Council. Before the sun had set, these attacks on the world stood condemned by the world. And I want to thank you for this strong and principled stand.

I also thank the Arab and Islamic countries that have condemned terrorist murder. Many of you have seen the destruction of terror in your own lands. The terrorists are increasingly isolated by their own hatred and extremism. They cannot hide behind Islam. The authors of mass murder and their allies have no place in any culture and no home in any faith. The conspiracies of terror are being answered by an expanding global coalition.

Not every nation will be a part of every action against the enemy, but every nation in our coalition has duties. These duties can be demanding, as we in America are learning. We have already made adjustments in our laws and in our daily lives. We're taking new measures to investigate terror and to protect against threats.

The leaders of all nations must now carefully consider their responsibilities and their future. Terrorist groups like al Qaida depend upon the aid or indifference of government. They need the support of a financial infrastructure and safe havens to train and plan and hide.

Some nations want to play their part in the fight against terror but tell us they lack the means to enforce their laws and control their borders. We stand ready to help. Some governments still turn a blind eye to the terrorists, hoping the threat will pass them by. They are mistaken.

And some governments, while pledging to uphold the principles of the U.N., have cast their lot with the terrorists. They support them and harbor them, and they will find that their welcomed guests are parasites that will weaken them and eventually consume them. For every regime that sponsors terror, there is a price to be paid, and it will be paid. The allies of terror are equally guilty of murder and equally accountable to justice.

The Taliban are now learning this lesson. That regime and the terrorists who support it are now virtually indistinguishable. Together they promote terror abroad and impose a reign of terror on the Afghan people. Women are executed in Kabul's soccer stadium. They can be beaten for wearing socks that are too thin. Men are jailed for missing prayer meetings.

The United States, supported by many nations, is bringing justice to the terrorists in Afghanistan. We're making progress against military targets, and that is our objective. Unlike the enemy, we seek to minimize, not maximize, the loss of innocent life. I'm proud of the honorable conduct of the American military.

And my country grieves for all the suffering the Taliban have brought upon Afghanistan, including the terrible burden of war. The Afghan people do not deserve their present rulers. Years of Taliban misrule have brought nothing but misery and starvation. Even before this current crisis, 4 million Afghans depended on food from the United States and other nations, and millions of Afghans were refugees from Taliban oppression.

I make this promise to all the victims of that regime: The Taliban's days of harboring terrorists and dealing in heroin and brutalizing women are drawing to a close. And when that regime is gone, the people of Afghanistan will say, with the rest of the world, "Good riddance."

I can promise, too, that America will join the world in helping the people of Afghanistan rebuild their country. Many nations, including mine, are sending food and medicine to help Afghans through the winter. America has air-dropped over 1.3 million packages of rations into Afghanistan. Just this week, we airlifted 20,000 blankets and over 200 tons of provisions into the region. We continue to provide humanitarian aid, even while the Taliban try to steal the food we send.

More help eventually will be needed. The United States will work closely with the United Nations and development banks to reconstruct Afghanistan after hostilities there have ceased and the Taliban are no longer in control. And the United States will work with the U.N. to support a post-Taliban government that represents all of the Afghan people.

In this war of terror, each of us must answer for what we have done or what we have left undone. After tragedy, there is a time for sympathy and condolence. And my country has been very grateful for both. The memorials and vigils around the world will not be forgotten. But the time for sympathy has now passed. The time for action has now arrived.

The most basic obligations in this new conflict have already been defined by the United Nations. On September the 28th, the Security Council adopted Resolution 1373. Its requirements are clear: Every United Nations member has a responsibility to crack down on terrorist financing. We must pass all necessary laws in our own countries to allow the confiscation of terrorist assets. We must apply those laws to every financial institution in every nation.

We have a responsibility to share intelligence and coordinate the efforts of law enforcement. If you know something, tell us. If we know something, we'll tell you. And when we find the terrorists, we must work together to bring them to justice.

We have a responsibility to deny any sanctuary, safe haven or transit to terrorists. Every known terrorist camp must be shut down, its operators apprehended, and evidence of their arrest presented to the United Nations. We have a responsibility to deny weapons to terrorists and to actively prevent private citizens from providing them.

These obligations are urgent and they are binding on every nation with a place in this chamber. Many governments are taking these obligations seriously, and my country appreciates it. Yet even beyond Resolution 1373, more is required and more is expected of our coalition against terror. We're asking for a comprehensive commitment to this fight. We must unite in opposing all terrorists, not just some of them.

In this world there are good causes and bad causes, and we may disagree on where that line is drawn. Yet there is no such thing as a good terrorist. No national aspiration, no remembered wrong, can ever justify the deliberate murder of the innocent. Any government that rejects this principle trying to pick and choose its terrorist friends will know the consequences.

We must speak the truth about terror. Let us never tolerate outrageous conspiracy theories concerning the attacks of September the 11th, malicious lies that attempt to shift the blame away from the terrorists themselves, away from the guilty. To inflame ethnic hatred is to advance the cause of terror.

The war against terror must not serve as an excuse to persecute ethnic and religious minorities in any country. Innocent people must be allowed to live their own lives, by their own customs, under their own religion. And every nation must have avenues for the peaceful expression of opinion and dissent. When these avenues are closed, the temptation to speak through violence grows.

We must press on with our agenda for peace and prosperity in every land. My country is pledged to encouraging development and expanding trade. My country is pledged to investing in education in combating AIDS and other infectious diseases around the world. Following September 11th, these pledges are even more important. In our struggle against hateful groups that exploit poverty and despair, we must offer an alternative of opportunity and hope.

The American government also stands by its commitment to a just peace in the Middle East. We are working toward a day when two states, Israel and Palestine, live peacefully together within secure and recognized borders, as called for by the Security Council resolutions. We will do all in our power to bring both parties back into negotiations. But peace will only come when all have sworn off forever incitement, violence and terror.

And finally, this struggle is a defining moment for the United Nations itself, and the world needs its principled leadership. It undermines the credibility of this great institution, for example, when the Commission on Human Rights offers seats to the world's most persistent violators of human rights. The United Nations depends above all on its moral authority, and that authority must be preserved.

The steps I've described will not be easy. For all nations they will require effort. For some nations they will require great courage. Yet the cost of inaction is far greater. The only alternative to victory is a nightmare world where every city is a potential killing field.

As I've told the American people, freedom and fear are at war. We face enemies that hate not our policies but our existence, the tolerance of openness and creative culture that defines us. But the outcome of this conflict is certain. There is a current in history, and it runs toward freedom. Our enemies resent it and dismiss it, but the dreams of mankind are defined by liberty, the natural right to create and build and worship and live in dignity.

When men and women are released from oppression and isolation, they find fulfillment and hope, and they leave poverty by the millions. These aspirations are lifting up the peoples of Europe, Asia, Africa and the Americas, and they can lift up all of the Islamic world.

We stand for the permanent hopes of humanity, and those hopes will not be denied. We are confident, too, that history has an author who fills time and eternity with his purpose. We know that evil is real, but good will prevail against it. This is the teaching of many faiths. And in that assurance, we gain strength for a long journey.

It is our task, the task of this generation, to provide the response to aggression and terror. We have no other choice, because there is no other peace. We did not ask for this mission, yet there is honor in history's call. We have a chance to write the story of our times, a story of courage defeating cruelty and light overcoming darkness. This calling is worthy of any life and worthy of every nation. So let us go forward, confident, determined and unafraid.

Thank you very much.

On December 6, 2001, at the Ellipse in Washington, D.C., President Bush remarked at the Lighting of the National Christmas Tree during the "Pageant of Peace" Ceremony:

Be seated, please -- except for you all.

I want to thank you very much, and welcome you all to this year's Christmas Pageant of Peace. During this time of conflict and challenge, we once again celebrate the season of hope and the season of joy. We give thanks to our nation and to our families, and to our friends.

The First Lady and I are so honored to be here. I want to thank Peter Nostrand and the committee for putting this together, and I particularly want to thank the entertainment committee -- the person in charge of getting these fantastic entertainers to come tonight. Thank you from the bottom of our hearts.

I want to thank all the employees and sponsors who put on this magnificent event. I want to thank Fran Minella, the Director of the National Park Service, and all the Park Service employees who have worked hard to put this event on.

I want to thank Santa Clause for being here tonight. I've been looking for you, Santa. (Laughter)

In a moment, we will light the National Christmas Tree, a tradition Americans have been celebrating since 1923. The history of this event has included some memorable moments, including 60 years ago, less than three weeks after the attack on Pearl Harbor, when Prime Minister Winston Churchill made an appearance with President Franklin Roosevelt to light the tree.

Now, once again, we celebrate Christmas in a time of testing, with American troops far from home. This season finds our country with losses to mourn and great tasks to complete. In all those tasks, it is worth recalling the words from a beautiful Christmas hymn -- in the third verse of "Oh Holy Night" we sing, "His law is love, and His gospel is peace. Chains ye shall break, for the slave is our brother. And in His name all oppression shall cease."

America seeks peace, and believes in justice. We fight only when necessary. We fight so that oppression may cease. And even in the midst of war, we pray for peace on Earth and goodwill to men. (Applause.)

This is a time of the year for families and friends to gather together. Not simply to celebrate the season, but to renew the bonds of love and affection that give fulfillment to our lives. And this is a year we will not forget those who lost loved ones in the attacks on September the 11th and on the battlefield. They will remain in our prayers.

American Quotations.txt

It is now my honor to invite Leon Patterson and Faith Elseth and Laura to join me up here as we light the National Christmas Tree. (Applause.)

Leon and Faith's fathers, Major Clifford Patterson, and Lt. Commander Robert Elseth served in the United States military. Both of these good men were lost in the attack on the Pentagon.

Leon and Faith, we thank you for helping us celebrate Christmas. You remind us of the comfort of Christmas that hope never fails, and love never ends.

And now, would you please help Laura light up our beautiful tree. (The tree is lit.) (Applause.)

On December 10, 2001, President George Bush remarked at the White House Lighting of the Menorah:

Tonight, for the first time in American history, the Hanukkah menorah will be lit at the White House residence. It's a symbol that this house may be a temporary home for Laura and me, but it's the people's house, and it belongs to people of all faiths.

The magnificent menorah before us was crafted over a century ago in the city of Lvov, which was an important center of Jewish life and culture. The Jews of Lvov fell victim to the horror of the Nazi Holocaust, but their great menorah survived. And as God promised Abraham, the people of Israel still live.

This has been a year of much sadness in the United States, and for our friends in Israel. America and Israel have been through much together. This year we have grieved together. But as we watch the lighting of this second candle of Hanukkah, we're reminded of the ancient story of Israel's courage and of the power of faith to make the darkness bright. We can see the heroic spirit of the Macabees lives on in Israel today, and we trust that a better day is coming, when this Festival of Freedom will be celebrated in a world free from terror.

Laura and I wish all the people of Jewish faith in America and Israel and around the world many joyous Hanukkahs in the years ahead.

All right, now we call on young Talia to help us light the candles. Thank you so much for being here.

(The menorah is lit.)

It's nice to see everybody. Thank you for coming.

Q. Sir, on this occasion of peace and celebration, can you tell us how you were struck by this bin Laden videotape?

THE PRESIDENT: It just reminded me of what a murderer he is and how right and just our cause is.

I couldn't imagine somebody like Osama bin Laden understanding the joy of Hanukkah, or the joy of Christmas, or celebrating peace and hope. This man wants to destroy any semblance of civilization for his own power and his own good. He's so evil that he's willing to send young men to commit suicide while he hides in caves.

And while we celebrate peace and lightness, I fully understand in order to make sure peace and lightness exists in the future, we must bring him to justice. And we will.

But for those who see this tape, they'll realize that not only is he guilty of incredible murder, he has no conscience and no soul, that he represents the worst of civilization.

On April 10, 2002, 1:18 P.M. EDT, from the East Room of the White House, President George W. Bush called on the U.S. Senate to ban human cloning:

Well, thank you all so very much for coming to the White House. It's my honor to welcome you to the people's house.

I particularly want to honor three folks who I had the honor of meeting earlier: Joni Tada, Jim Kelly and Steve McDonald. I want to thank you for your courage, I want to thank you for your wisdom, I want to thank you for your extraordinary perseverance and faith. They have triumphed in the face of physical disability and share a deep commitment to medicine that is practiced ethically and humanely.

All of us here today believe in the promise of modern medicine. We're hopeful about where science may take us. And we're also here because we believe in the principles of ethical medicine.

As we seek to improve human life, we must always preserve human dignity. (Applause.) And therefore, we must prevent human cloning by stopping it before it starts. (Applause.)

I want to welcome Tommy Thompson, who is the Secretary of Health and Human Services, a man who is doing a fine job for America. (Applause.) I want to thank members from the United States Congress, members from both political parties who are here. I particularly want to thank Senator Brownback and Senator Landrieu for sponsoring a bill about which I'm going to speak. (Applause.)

As well, we've got Senator Frist and Senator Bond and Senator Hutchinson and Senator Santorum and Congressman Weldon, Stupak, and eventually Smith and Kerns. They just don't realize -- (applause) -- thank you all for coming -- they seem to have forgotten we start things on time here in the White House. (Laughter.)

We live in a time of tremendous medical progress. A little more than a year ago, scientists first cracked the human genetic code -- one of the most important advances in scientific history. Already, scientists are developing new diagnostic tools so that each of us can know our risk of disease and act to prevent them.

One day soon, precise therapies will be custom made for our own genetic makeup. We're on the threshold of historic breakthroughs against AIDS and Alzheimer's Disease and cancer and diabetes and heart disease and Parkinson's Disease. And that's incredibly positive.

Our age may be known to history as the age of genetic medicine, a time when many of the most feared illnesses were overcome.

Our age must also be defined by the care and restraint and responsibility with which we take up these new scientific powers.

Advances in biomedical technology must never come at the expense of human conscience. (Applause.) As we seek what is possible, we must always ask what is right, and we must not forget that even the most noble ends do not justify any means. (Applause.)

Science has set before us decisions of immense consequence. We can pursue medical research with a clear sense of moral purpose or we can travel without an ethical compass into a world we could live to regret. Science now presses forward the issue of human cloning. How we answer the question of human cloning will place us on one path or the other.

Human cloning is the laboratory production of individuals who are genetically identical to another human being. Cloning is achieved by putting the genetic material from a donor into a woman's egg, which has had its nucleus removed. As a result, the new or cloned embryo is an identical copy of only the donor. Human cloning has moved from science fiction into science.

One biotech company has already begun producing embryonic human clones for research purposes. Chinese scientists have derived stem cells from cloned embryos created by combining human DNA and rabbit eggs. Others have announced plans to produce cloned children, despite the fact that laboratory cloning of animals has led to spontaneous abortions and terrible, terrible abnormalities.

Human cloning is deeply troubling to me, and to most Americans. Life is a creation, not a commodity. (Applause.) Our children are gifts to be loved and protected, not products to be designed and manufactured. Allowing cloning would be taking a significant step toward a society in which human beings are grown for spare body parts, and children are engineered to custom specifications; and that's not acceptable.

In the current debate over human cloning, two terms are being used: reproductive cloning and research cloning. Reproductive cloning involves creating a cloned embryo and implanting it into a woman with the goal of creating a child. Fortunately, nearly every American agrees that this practice should be banned. Research cloning, on the other hand, involves the creation of cloned human embryos which are then destroyed to derive stem cells.

I believe all human cloning is wrong, and both forms of cloning ought to be banned, for the following reasons. First, anything other than a total ban on human cloning would be unethical. Research cloning would contradict the most fundamental principle of medical ethics, that no human life should be exploited or extinguished for the benefit of another. (Applause.)

Yet a law permitting research cloning, while forbidding the birth of a cloned child, would require the destruction of nascent human life. Secondly, anything other than a total ban on human cloning would be virtually impossible to enforce. Cloned human embryos created for research would be widely available in laboratories and embryo farms. Once cloned embryos were available, implantation would take place. Even the tightest regulations and strict policing would not prevent or detect the birth of cloned babies.

Third, the benefits of research cloning are highly speculative. Advocates of research cloning argue that stem cells obtained from cloned embryos would be injected into a genetically identical individual without risk of tissue rejection. But there is evidence, based on animal studies, that cells derived from cloned embryos may indeed be rejected.

Yet even if research cloning were medically effective, every person who wanted to benefit would need an embryonic clone of his or her own, to provide the designer tissues. This would create a massive national market for eggs and egg donors, and exploitation of women's bodies that we cannot and must not allow. (Applause.)

I stand firm in my opposition to human cloning. And at the same time, we will pursue other promising and ethical ways to relieve suffering through biotechnology. This year for the first time, federal dollars will go towards supporting human embryonic stem cell research consistent with the ethical guidelines I announced last August.

The National Institutes of Health is also funding a broad range of animal and human adult stem cell research. Adult stem cells which do not require the destruction of human embryos and which yield tissues which can be transplanted without rejection are more versatile than originally thought.

We're making progress. We're learning more about them. And therapies developed from adult stem cells are already helping suffering people.

I support increasing the research budget of the NIH, and I ask Congress to join me in that support. And at the same time, I strongly support a comprehensive law against all human cloning. And I endorse the bill - wholeheartedly endorse the bill -- sponsored by Senator Brownback and Senator Mary Landrieu. (Applause.)

This carefully drafted bill would ban all human cloning in the United States, including the cloning of embryos for research. It is nearly identical to the bipartisan legislation that last year passed the House of Representatives by more than a 100-vote margin. It has wide support across the political spectrum, liberals and conservatives support it, religious people and nonreligious people support it. Those who are pro-choice and those who are pro-life support the bill.

This is a diverse coalition, united by a commitment to prevent the cloning and exploitation of human beings. (Applause.) It would be a mistake for the United States Senate to allow any kind of human cloning to come out of that chamber. (Applause.)

I'm an incurable optimist about the future of our country. I know we can achieve great things. We can make the world more peaceful, we can become a more compassionate nation. We can push the limits of medical science. I truly believe that we're going to bring hope and healing to countless lives across the country. And as we do, I will insist that we always maintain the highest of ethical standards.

Thank you all for coming. (Applause.) God bless.

Clinton, William Jefferson "Bill" (b. August 19, 1946), the 42nd President of the United States, 1993-97; Governor of Arkansas, 1982-92, 1978-80; Arkansas Attorney General, 1976-78; married Hillary Rodham; law instructor at University of Arkansas; attended Yale Law School; studied at Oxford University, England; and graduated from Georgetown University, Washington, D.C.

On Wednesday, January 20, 1993, in his Inaugural Address, President Bill Clinton stated:

When our Founders boldly declared America's Independence to the world and our purposes to the Almighty, they knew that America, to endure, would have to change....

And so, my fellow Americans, at the edge of the 21st century, let us begin with energy and hope, with faith and discipline, and let us work until our work is done. The Scripture says, "And let us not be weary in well-doing, for in due season, we shall reap, if we faint not."

From this joyful mountaintop of celebration, we hear a call to service in the valley. We have heard the trumpets. We have changed the guard. And now, each in our way, and with God's help, we must answer the call.

Thank you and God bless you all.

On Wednesday, July 12, 1995, in an address at James Madison High School in Vienna, Virginia, President Bill Clinton stated:

The First Amendment does not require students to leave their religion at the schoolhouse door....It is especially important that parents feel confident that their children can practice religion....

We need to make it easier and more acceptable for people to express and to celebrate their faith....

If students can wear T-shirts advertising sports teams, rock groups or politicians, they can also wear T-shirts that promote religion....

Religion is too important to our history and our heritage for us to keep it out of our schools....It shouldn't be demanded, but as long as it is not sponsored by school officials and doesn't interfere with other children's rights it mustn't be denied....

Nothing in the First Amendment converts our public schools into religion-free zones or requires all religious expression to be left behind at the schoolhouse door....

While the government may not use schools to coerce the consciences of our students, or to convey official endorsement of religion, the government's schools also may not discriminate against private religious expression during the school day.

On Monday, January 20, 1997, 12:05 p.m. EST, President Bill Clinton swore into office for his second term with his hand upon their family Bible, held by his wife, First Lady Hillary Rodham Clinton, open to Isaiah 58:12. Earlier in the day, which happened to be Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday, they had attended a prayer service at the Metropolitan African Methodist Episcopal Church, a church that once served as a stop on the Underground Railroad for runaway slaves during the Civil War. Frederick Douglass, who often spoke there, had his funeral service there in 1895. The ministers at the Pre-Inaugural Prayer service included: Reverend Bill Hybels of the Willow Creek Community Church of South Barrington, IL; Reverend Anthony Compolo and Reverend Jesse Jackson.

The Reverend Billy Graham delivered the invocation just prior to President Clinton's second inauguration before the crowd assembled atop Capitol Hill:

Gore, Mrs. Gore, I'm going to ask that we all bow our heads in prayer.

Our Father and our God, we thank you today for the privilege of coming into your presence on this historic and solemn occasion. We thank you for your gracious hand which has preserved us as a nation. We praise you for the peaceful continuity of government that this inauguration represents.

We recall that the Bible says, "Except the Lord build a house, they labor in vain that build it." He also said that to whom much has been given, much shall be required. We look gratefully to the past and thank you that from the very foundations of America, you granted our forefathers courage and wisdom as they trusted in you.

So we ask today that you would inspire us by their example. Where there's been failure, forgive us; where there's been progress, confirm; where there's been success, give us humility and teach us to follow your instructions more closely as we enter the next century. Give to all those to whom you have entrusted leadership today a desire to seek your will and to do it.

So we ask your blessing on President Clinton and his wife, Hillary, and their daughter, Chelsea, and upon Vice President Gore and his wife, Tipper, and their children. Give to all our leaders the vision of what you desire America to become and the wisdom to accomplish it and the strength to cross the bridges into the 21st century. We pray also for the members of the House and the Senate, for the Supreme Court, and for all who bear responsibility of leadership in this nation, which is blessed with such ethnic diversity.

We have not solved all of the social problems of our time such as drugs and racism. Technology and social engineering have not solved the basic problems of human greed, pride, intolerance and selfishness. We need your insight, we need your compassion, we need your strength. As both President Clinton and Senator Dole urged us in the recent presidential campaign, may this be a time of coming together to help us deal with the problems we face. Oh, Lord, help us to be reconciled first to you and secondly to each other.

May Dr. Martin Luther King's dream finally come true for all of us. Help us to learn our courtesy to our fellow countrymen, that comes from the one who taught us that "whatever you want me to do to you, do also to them." Remind us today that you have shown us what is good and what you require of us: to do justly, to love mercy and to walk humbly with our God.

We ask that as a people, we may humble ourselves before you and seek your will for our lives and for this great nation. Help us in our nation to work as never before to strengthen our families and to give our children hope and a moral foundation for the future. So may our desire be to serve you and, in so doing, serve one another. This we pray in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. Amen.

On Monday, January 20, 1997, in his Second Inaugural Address, delivered on Capitol Hill, Washington, D.C., President William Jefferson Clinton stated:

My fellow citizens:

At this last Presidential inauguration of the 20th Century, let us lift our eyes toward the challenges that await us in the next century. It is our great good fortune that time and chance have put us not only at the edge of a new century, in a new millennium, but on the edge of a bright new prospect in human affairs. A moment that will define our course, and our character, for decades to come. We must keep our old democracy forever young. Guided by the ancient vision of a Promised Land, let us set our sights upon a Land of New Promise.

The promise of America was born in the 18th century out of the bold conviction that we are all created equal. It was extended and preserved in the 19th century, when our nation spread across the continent, saved the union, and abolished the awful scourge of slavery. Then, in turmoil and triumph, that promise exploded onto the world stage to make this the American Century....

Our rich texture of racial, religious and political diversity will be a Godsend in the 21st Century. Great rewards will come to those who can live together, learn together, work together, forge new ties that bind together....

Let us never forget: The greatest progress we have made, and the greatest progress we have yet to make, is in the human heart. In the end, all the world's wealth and a thousand armies are no match for the strength and decency of the human spirit....

Thirty-four years ago, the man whose life we celebrate today spoke to us - down there - at the other end of this mall, in the words that moved the conscience of a nation. Like a prophet of old, he told of his dream, that one day America would rise up and treat all its citizens as equals before the law and in the heart. Martin Luther King's dream was the American Dream. His quest is our quest: the ceaseless striving to live out our true creed. Our history has been built on such dreams and labours. And, by our dreams and labours we will redeem the promise of America in the 21st Century.

To that effort, I pledge all my strength and every power of my office. I ask the members of Congress here to join in that pledge. The American people returned to office a President of one party and a Congress of another... They call on us to be repairers of the breach, and to move on with America's mission. America demands and deserves big things from us - and nothing big ever came from being small. Let us remember the timeless wisdom of Cardinal Bernadin, when facing the end of his own life. He said, "It is wrong to waste the precious gift of time... on acrimony and division."...

And so, my fellow Americans, we must be strong, for there is much to dare. The demands of our time are great, and they are different. Let us meet them with faith and courage, with patience and a grateful, happy heart. Let us shape the hope of this day into the noblest chapter in our history. Yes, let us build our bridge, a bridge wide enough and strong enough for every American to cross over to a blessed Land of New Promise....

From the height of this place and the summit of this century, let us go forth. May God strengthen our hands for the good work ahead - and always, always bless our America.

On Tuesday, February 4, 1997, in his State of the Union Address, the first such address broadcast live over the internet, President William Jefferson Clinton concluded:

Americans speak every language, know every country. People on every continent can look to us and see the reflection of their own great potential, and they always will, as long as we strive to give all our citizens, whatever their background, an opportunity to achieve their own greatness....

Just a few days before my second inauguration, one of the country's best-known pastors, Reverend Robert Schuller, suggested that I read Isaiah 58:12. Here's what it says: "Thou shalt raise up the foundations of many generations, and thou shalt be called the repairer of the breach, the restorer of the paths to dwell in." I placed my hand on that verse when I took the oath of office, on behalf of all American, for no matter what our differences in our faiths, our backgrounds, our politics, we must all be repairers of the breach....

We may not share a common past, but we surely do share a common future. Building one America is our most important mission, the foundation for many generations of every other strength we must build for this new century. Money cannot buy it, power cannot compel it, technology cannot create it. It can only come from the human spirit....

Tomorrow there will be just over 1,000 days until the year 2000. One thousand days to prepare our people. One thousand days to work together. One thousand days to build a bridge to a land of new promise. My fellow Americans, we have work to do. Let us seize those days and the century. Thank you. God bless you. And God bless America.

On Saturday, December 20, 1997, in his Annual Hanukkah Message, President William Jefferson "Bill" Clinton stated:

Warm greetings to everyone celebrating Hanukkah. The Festival of Lights is a powerful reminder each year that the age-old struggle for religious freedom is not yet over. From the days of the ancient Maccabees down to our present time, tyrants have sought to deny people the free expression of their faith and the right to live according to their own conscience and convictions. Hanukkah symbolizes the heroic struggle of all who seek to defeat such oppression and the miracles that come to those full of faith and courage.

This holiday holds special meaning for us in America, where freedom of religion is one of the cornerstones of our democracy.

The coming year will mark the 50th anniversary of the State of Israel, where the story of the first Hanukkah took place so many centuries ago. As families come together in prayer for the eight nights of Hanukkah, to reaffirm their hope in God and their gratitude for his faithfulness to his people, may the candles of the menorah light our way to a true and lasting peace for the people of the Middle East.

Hillary and I extend our warmest wishes to all those celebrating Hanukkah, all those who work for religious freedom, and all those who devote themselves to the cause of peace.

United States Corp of Cadets (1947), contained in their regulations:

Attendance at chapel is part of a cadet's training; no cadet will be exempted. Each cadet will receive religious training in one of the three particular faiths: Protestant, Catholic or Jewish.

The U. S. Naval Academy required:

All Midshipmen, except those on authorized outside church parties, shall attend Sunday services in the chapel.

Dallas High Schools (September 1946), published a Bible Study Course - New Testament, Bulletin No. 170. It was authorized by the Board of Education, April 23, 1946, and printed in The Dallas Public Schools Printshop, Dallas, Texas:

Foreword. . . . the Dallas public schools allowed one-half credit toward high-school graduation for the successful completion of a general survey course in the Bible, given in the churches and Sunday schools of the city. In 1939, it was decided to provide separate courses in the Old and the New Testaments, each course carrying one-half unit of credit toward high-school graduation.

E. B. Comstock,
Assistant Superintendent in Charge of High Schools

INTRODUCTION
REGULATIONS GOVERNING
NEW TESTAMENT STUDY COURSE

1. Classes may be organized by any Sunday school or church or any other religious organization for the purpose of studying the Bible in their respective organizations with a view to obtaining high-school credit. Successful completion of the course gives one-half unit credit toward high-school graduation.

2. An application blank, giving necessary information about the class, must be filled out and filed with the Assistant Superintendent in charge of Dallas High Schools.

3. There must be a minimum of forty class periods of 90 minutes net teaching time; or sixty 60-minute periods, net time; or eighty 45-minute periods, net time. In no case will fewer than forty different class sessions be accepted.

4. The text used is the NEW TESTAMENT STUDY COURSE, a syllabus published by the authority of the Dallas Board of Education for use in Bible Study credit classes.

5. . . . 9.

MINIMUM REQUIREMENTS

(NEW TESTAMENT)

The course is itself a "minimum course," since teachers are expected to supplement rather than subtract from the topics included. The following summary requirements are listed for purpose of emphasis and review:

1. Ability to name and classify the books of the Bible (common classifications).
2. General knowledge of the New Testament as outlined in the course of study. Reading of the entire New Testament is required.
3. Ability to reproduce the memory passages indicated in connection with the lessons and given in full in the appendix.
4. . . . 10.

APPENDIX

REQUIRED MEMORY VERSES

(for review purposes)

(Pupils should be able to reproduce from memory each of the following quotations when given the accompanying lead, the book, chapter, and verse reference.)

LESSON I.

1. The pre-existence of Christ:

In the beginning was the Word, and the Word was with God, and the Word was God. . . . All things were made by him; and without him was not anything made that was made. . . . And the Word was made flesh, and dwelt among us, (and we beheld his glory, the glory as of the only begotten of the Father,) full of grace and truth. (John 1: 1, 3, 14)

LESSON II.

2. Jesus to the devil in the wilderness:

It is written, Man shall not live by bread alone, but by every word that proceedeth out of the mouth of God. . . . It is written again, Thou shalt not tempt the Lord thy God. . . . Get thee hence, Satan: for it is written, Thou shalt worship the Lord thy God, and him only shalt thou serve. (Matthew 4: 4, 7, 10)

LESSON III.

3. The purpose of Christ's coming:

For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have eternal life. (John 3: 16)

LESSON IV. . . . LESSON XLV.

Quayle, James Danforth (b. February 4, 1947), was the Vice-President of the United States under President George Bush, 1989-93. He had served as a U. S. Representative from Indiana, 1977-81, and a U. S. Senator, 1981-89.

Vice-President Dan Quayle stated:

So I think the time has come to renew our public commitment to our Judeo-Christian values - in our churches and synagogues, our civic organizations and our schools. We are, as our children recite each morning, "one nation under God." That's a useful framework for acknowledging a duty and an authority higher than our own pleasures and personal ambitions.

United States Supreme Court (1948), in the case of McCollum v. Board of Education of School District Number 71, 333 U.S. 203, 236 (1948), Justice Felix Frankfurter rendered the Court's opinion:

Traditionally, organized education in the Western world was Church education. It could hardly be otherwise when the education of children was primarily study of the Word and the ways of God. Even in the Protestant countries, where there was a less close identification of Church and State, the basis of education was largely the Bible, and its chief purpose inculcation of piety.

Justice Robert Houghwout Jackson concurred:

I think it remains to be demonstrated whether it is possible, even desirable, . . . to isolate and cast out of secular education all that some people may reasonably regard as religious instruction. . . . It would not seem practical to teach either practice or appreciation of the arts if we are to forbid exposure of youth to any religious influences. Music without sacred music, architecture minus the cathedral, or painting without the Scriptural themes would be eccentric and incomplete, even from a secular point of view. . . . Even such a 'science' as biology raises the issue between evolution and creation as an explanation of our presence on this planet. Certainly a course on English literature that omitted the Bible and other powerful uses of our mother tongue for religious ends would be pretty barren. And I suppose it is a proper, if not indispensable, part of the preparation for a worldly life to know the roles that religion and religions have played in the tragic story of mankind. The fact is that, for good or ill, nearly everything in our culture worth transmitting, everything which gives meaning to life, is saturated with the influences derived from paganism, Judaism, Christianity - both Catholic and Protestant - and other faiths accepted by a large part of the world's people. . . . One can hardly respect a system of education that would leave a student wholly ignorant of the currents of religious thought that moved the world society for a part in which he is being prepared.

New Jersey State Court (1950), in the case of Doremus v. Board of Education of Borough of Hawthorne, 5 N.J. 435, 75 A. 880 (N.J. 1950), stated:

We consider that the Old Testament, because of its antiquity, its contents, and its wide acceptance, is not a sectarian book when read without comment. Cf. Vidal v. Girard's Executors.

The adherents of those religions [Jew, Catholic, Protestant] constitute the great bulk of our population. There are [other] religious groups. . . but in this country they are numerically small and, in point of impact upon our national life, negligible. . . . And it is not to say that because a religious group is small, it thereby loses its constitutional rights or that it is not entitled to the protection of those rights. The application is that some of our national incidents are developments from the almost universal belief in God which so strongly shaped and nurtured our people during the colonial period and the formative years of our constitutional government, with the result that we accept as a commendable part of our public life certain conditions and practices which in a country of different origins would be rejected....

Again, take the instance of an atheist: - he has all the protection of the Constitution...but he lives in a country where theism is in the warp and woof of the social and governmental fabric and he has no authority to eradicate from governmental activities every vestige of the existence of God.

With reference to saying the Lord's Prayer, this court found "nothing in the Lord's Prayer that is controversial, ritualistic or dogmatic. It is a prayer to "God, our Father." It does not contain Christ's name and makes no reference to Him. It is, in our opinion, in the same position as is the Bible reading."

While it is necessary that there be a separation between church and state, it is not necessary that the state should be stripped of religious sentiment...The American people are and always have been to our origins and the direction which it has given to our progress are beyond calculation. It may be of the theistic,... that belief in God shall abide....The day the children should pause to hear a few words from the wisdom of the ages [Scriptures] and to bow the head in humility before the Supreme Power. No rights, no ceremony, no doctrinal teachings; just a brief moment with eternity.

But it is clear, we think that the sense of the [First] Amendment does not serve to prohibit government from recognizing the existence and sovereignty of God and that the motives which inspired the amendment and the interpretation given by the several departments of the Federal Government concurrently with and subsequent to the submission and adoption of the amendment are inconsistent with any other conclusion...The fact is that the First Amendment does not say, and so far as we are able to determine was not intended to say, that God shall not be acknowledged by our government as God.

Limbaugh, Rush Hudson, III (b.1951), an American radio talk show and television host. His radio program reaches approximately 20 million listeners a week and his syndicated TV show covers nearly 99 % of America. He is the author of The Way Things Ought to Be, 1992, and See, I Told You So, 1993, and the publisher of The Limbaugh Letter. Born in Cape Girardeau, Missouri, Rush Limbaugh ascended from being a Top-40 deejay, to a successful radio talk-show host at KFBK in Sacramento, California, to being heard in over 616 markets across the country.

In regard to our national heritage, Rush Limbaugh stated:

Well, folks, let's allow our real, undoctored-American-history lesson to unfold further. If our schools and the media have twisted the historical record when it comes to Columbus, they have obliterated the contributions of America's earliest permanent settlers - the Pilgrims. Why? Because they were a people inspired by profound religious beliefs to overcome incredible odds.

Today, public schools are simply not teaching how important the religious dimension was in shaping our history and our nation's character. Whether teachers are just uncomfortable with this material, or whether there has been a concerted effort to cover up the truth, the result is the same. Kids are no longer learning enough to understand and appreciate how and why America was created.

The story of the Pilgrims begins in the early part of the seventeenth century (that's the 1600's for those of you in Rio Linda, California). The Church of England under King James I was persecuting anyone and everyone who did not recognize its absolute civil and spiritual authority. Those who challenged ecclesiastical authority and those who believed strongly in freedom of worship were hunted down, imprisoned, and sometimes executed for their beliefs.

A group of separatists first fled to Holland and established a community. After eleven years, about forty of them agreed to make a perilous journey to the New World, where they would certainly face hardships, but could live and worship God according to the dictates of their own consciences.

On August 1, 1620, the Mayflower set sail. It carried a total of 102 passengers, including forty Pilgrims led by William Bradford. On the journey, Bradford set up an agreement, a contract, that established just and equal laws for all members of their new community, irrespective of their religious beliefs. Where did the revolutionary ideas expressed in the Mayflower Compact come from? From the Bible.

The Pilgrims were a people completely steeped in the lessons of the Old and New Testaments. They looked to the ancient Israelites for their example. And, because of the biblical precedents set forth in Scripture, they never doubted that their experiment would work.

But this was no pleasure cruise friends. The journey to the New World was a long and arduous one. And when the Pilgrims landed in New England in November, they found, according to Bradford's detailed journal, a cold, barren, desolate wilderness. There were no friends to greet them, he wrote. There were no houses to shelter them. There were no inns where they could refresh themselves.

And the sacrifice they made for freedom was just beginning. During the first winter, half the Pilgrims - including Bradford's wife - died of either starvation, sickness, or exposure. When spring finally came, Indians taught the settlers how to plant corn, fish for cod, and skin beavers for coats. Life improved for the Pilgrims, but they did not yet prosper!

This is important to understand because this is where modern American history lessons often end. Thanksgiving is actually explained in some textbooks as a holiday for which the Pilgrims gave thanks to the Indians for saving their lives, rather than as a devout expression of gratitude grounded in the tradition of both the Old and New Testaments.

Here is the part that has been omitted: The original contract the Pilgrims had entered into with their merchant-sponsors in London called for everything they produced to go into a common store, and each member of the community was entitled to one common share. All of the land they cleared and the houses they built belonged to the community as well.

Bradford, who had become the new governor of the colony, recognized that this form of collectivism was as costly and destructive to the Pilgrims as that first harsh winter, which had taken so many lives. He decided to take bold action. Bradford assigned a plot of land to each family to work and manage, thus turning loose the power of the marketplace...

"This had very good success," wrote Bradford, "for it made all hands industrious, so as much more corn was planted than otherwise would have been." Bradford doesn't sound like much of a Clintonite, does he? Is it possible that supply-side economics could have existed before the 1980's? Yes. Read the story of Joseph and Pharaoh in Genesis 41. Following Joseph's suggestion (Gen. 41:34), Pharaoh reduced the tax on Egyptians to 20 percent during the "seven years of plenty" and the "Earth brought forth in heaps." (Gen. 41:47). In no time, the Pilgrims found they had more food than they could eat themselves. So they set up trading posts and exchanged goods with the Indians. The profits allowed them to pay off their debts to the merchants in London. And the success and prosperity of the Plymouth settlement attracted more Europeans and began what came to be known as the "Great Puritan Migration."

Now, let me ask you: Have you read this history before?

But guess what? There's even more that is being deliberately withheld from our modern textbooks. For example, one of those attracted to the New World by the success of Plymouth was Thomas Hooker, who established his own community in Connecticut - the first full-fledged constitutional community and perhaps the most free society the world had ever known. Hooker's community was governed by the Fundamental Orders of Connecticut, which established strict limits on the powers of government.

So revolutionary and successful was this idea that Massachusetts was inspired to adopt its Body of Liberties, which included ninety-eight separate protections of individual rights, including: "no taxation without representation," "due process of law," "trial by a jury of peers," and prohibitions against "cruel and unusual punishment."

Does all that sound familiar? It should. These are ideas and concepts that led directly to the U.S. Constitution and Bill of Rights. Nevertheless, the Pilgrims and Puritans of early New England are often vilified today as witch-burners and portrayed as simpletons. To the contrary, it was their commitment to pluralism and free worship that led to these ideals being incorporated into American life. Our history books purposely conceal the fact that these notions were developed by communities of devout Christians who studied the Bible and found it prescribes limited, representative government and free enterprise as the best political and economic systems.

There's only one word for this, folks: censorship.

This brings us to our Founding Fathers - the geniuses who crafted the Declaration of Independence and the U.S. Constitution. These were men who shook up the entire world by proclaiming the idea that people had certain God-given freedoms and rights and that the government's only raison d'etre was to protect those freedoms and rights from both internal and external forces. That simple yet brilliant insight has been all but lost today in liberalism's relentless march toward bigger, more powerful, more intrusive government.

Don't believe the conventional wisdom of our day that claims these men were anything but orthodox, Bible-believing Christians. They were. And they were quite adamant in stating that the Constitution - as brilliant a document as it is - would work only in the context of a moral society.

"Our Constitution was made for a moral and religious people," stated second president John Adams. "It is wholly inadequate for the governance of any other."

George Washington, the father of our country, was of like mind. He said: "Of all the dispositions and habits that lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports."

James Madison, primary author of the Constitution, agreed: "We have staked the whole future of the American civilization, not upon the power of government, far from it. We have staked the future... upon the capacity of each and all of us to govern ourselves, to control ourselves, to sustain ourselves, according to the Ten Commandments of God."

The eighteenth-century Irish statesman and orator Edmund Burke, some of whose precepts formed the core of conservatism, eloquently stated in his 1791 "A Letter to a Member of the National Assembly":

"Men are qualified for civil liberty, in exact proportion to their disposition to put moral chains upon their own appetites... Society cannot exist unless a controlling power upon will and appetite be placed somewhere, and the less of it there is within, the more there must be without. It is ordained in the eternal constitution of things, that men of intemperate minds cannot be free. Their passions forge their fetters."

...As Alexis de Tocqueville wrote at the time of our Constitution's fiftieth anniversary in his masterpiece, Democracy in America:

"In New England every citizen receives the elementary notion of human knowledge; he is taught, moreover, the doctrines and the evidences of his religion, the history of his country, and the leading features of its Constitution..."

United States Supreme Court (1952), in the case of Zorach v. Clauson, 343 US 306, 307, 313, 314 (1952), Justice William O. Douglas delivered the Court's decision, stating:

The First Amendment, however, does not say that in every respect there shall be a separation of Church and State. Rather, it studiously defines the manner, the specific ways, in which there shall be no concert or union or dependency one on the other.
Page 1231

That is the common sense of the matter. Otherwise the state and religion would be aliens to each other - hostile, suspicious, and even unfriendly....

Municipalities would not be permitted to render police or fire protection to religious groups. Policemen who helped parishioners into their places of worship would violate the Constitution.

Prayers in our legislative halls; the appeals to the Almighty in the messages of the Chief Executive; the proclamation making Thanksgiving Day a holiday; "so help me God" in our courtroom oaths - these and all other references to the Almighty that run through our laws, our public rituals, our ceremonies, would be flouting the First Amendment.

A fastidious atheist or agnostic could even object to the supplication with which the Court opens each session: God save the United States and this Honorable Court.

We are a religious people and our institutions presuppose a Supreme Being....

When the state encourages religious instruction or cooperates with religious authorities by adjusting the schedule of public events to sectarian needs, it follows the best of our traditions.

For it then respects the religious nature of our people and accommodates the public service to their spiritual needs. To hold that it may not would be to find in the Constitution a requirement that the government show a callous indifference to religious groups. That would be preferring those who believe in no religion over those who do believe....

We find no constitutional requirement makes it necessary for government to be hostile to religion and to throw its weight against the efforts to widen the scope of religious influence. The government must remain neutral when it comes to competition between sects....

We cannot read into the Bill of Rights such a philosophy of hostility to religion.

We agree of course that the state may not establish a "religion of secularism" in the sense of affirmatively opposing or showing hostility to religion, thus preferring those who believe in no religion over those who do believe.

United States Congress (April 17, 1952), passed Public Law 82-324; 66 Stat. 64, to set aside an annual National Day of Prayer:

Joint Resolution to provide for setting aside an appropriate day as a National Day of Prayer.

The U. S. Senate Report No. 1389, April 2, 1952, of the 82nd Congress, 2nd Session, Calendar No. 1324, ordered to be printed the report of Mr. McCarran, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

The Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the resolution (H. J. Res. 382) directing the President to proclaim a suitable day each year, other than a Sunday, as a National Day of Prayer, having considered the same, reports favorably thereon, without amendment, and recommends that the resolution do pass.

PURPOSE

The purpose of the proposed legislation is to direct the President to proclaim a National Day of Prayer each year.

STATEMENT

From its beginning the United States of America has been a nation fully cognizant of the value of prayer. In the early days of colonization, the Pilgrims frequently engaged in prayer. When the delegates to the Constitutional Convention encountered difficulties in the writing and formation of a Constitution for this Nation, prayer was suggested and became an established practice at succeeding sessions. Today, both Houses of the Congress are opened daily with prayer.

Prayer has indeed been a vital force in the growth and development of this Nation. It would certainly be appropriate if, pursuant to this resolution and the proclamation it urges, the people of this country were to unite in a day of prayer each year, each in accordance with his own religious faith, thus reaffirming in a dramatic manner the deep religious convictions which have prevailed throughout the history of the United States.

On June 17, 1952, President Harry S. Truman issued Proclamation 2978, declaring an annual National Day of Prayer:

Whereas from the earliest days of our history our people have been accustomed to turn to Almighty God for help and guidance; and

Whereas in times of national crisis when we are striving to strengthen the foundations of peace and security we stand in special need of divine support; and

Whereas the Congress, by a joint resolution approved on April 17, 1952 (66 Stat. 64), has provided that the President "shall set aside and proclaim a suitable day each year, other than Sunday, as a National Day of Prayer, on which the people of the United States may turn to God in prayer and meditation"; and

Whereas I deem it fitting that this Day of Prayer coincide with the anniversary of the adoption of the Declaration of Independence, which published to the world this Nation's "firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence":

Now, Therefore, I, Harry S. Truman, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim Friday, July 4, 1952, as a National Day of Prayer, on which all of us, in our churches, in our homes, and in our hearts, may beseech God to grant us wisdom to know the course which we should follow, and strength and patience to pursue that course steadfastly. May we also give thanks to Him for His constant watchfulness over us in every hour of national prosperity and national peril.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Seal of the United States of America to be affixed.

Done at the City of Washington this 17th day of June in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and fifty-two, and of the Independence of the United States of America the one hundred and seventy-sixth. Harry S. Truman.

United States Congress (1954), approved in both the Senate and House of Representatives of the 83rd Congress, a joint resolution calling for the establishment of:

A room with facilities for prayer and meditation for the use of Members of the Senate and House of Representatives.

This small room in the Capitol, just off the rotunda, is always open when Congress is in session. It is for the private prayer and meditation of members of Congress, and is not open to the public.

An open Bible is upon an altar, and located above it is the focal point of the room, which is a stained glass window showing George Washington kneeling in prayer. Behind him are etched these words from Psalm 16:1: "Preserve me, O God; for in thee do I put my trust."

Of note is that every session of the House and the Senate begin with prayer, each house has its own chaplain. Presidents also conclude their oath of office, having their hand upon an open Bible, with the words, "So help me God."

Inside the rotunda is the figure of the crucified Christ, as well as a picture of the Pilgrims about to embark from Holland on the sister ship of the Mayflower, the Speedwell. The ship's revered chaplain, Brewster, who later joined the Mayflower, has open on his lap the Bible. On the walls of the Capitol dome very clearly are the words, "The New Testament according to our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ." On the sail is the motto of the Pilgrims, "In God We Trust, God With Us."

The phrase, "In God We Trust," appears opposite the President of the Senate, who is the Vice-President of the U.S.. The same phrase, in large words inscribed in the marble, backdrops the Speaker of the House of Representatives.

On the Great Seal of the United States, the phrase Annuit Coeptis is inscribed, which means, "[God] has smiled on our undertaking." Under the Seal, the phrase from Lincoln's Gettysburg address is engraved, "This Nation under God."

The Dirksen Office Building has the words, "IN GOD WE TRUST" inscribed in a bronze relief.

United States Congress (June 14, 1954), approved the Joint Resolution 243 (Public Law 83-396), which added the words "under God" to the Pledge of Allegiance. (The Pledge was initially adopted by the 79th Congress on December 28, 1945, as Public Law 287.):

Public Law 396; Chapter 297;

Joint Resolution

To amend the pledge of allegiance to the flag of the United States of America.

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 7 of the joint resolution entitled "Joint resolution to codify and emphasize existing rules and customs pertaining to the display and use of the flag of the United States of America," approved June 22, 1942, as amended (36 U.S.C., sec. 172), is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 7. The following is designated as the pledge of allegiance to the flag: 'I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.' Such pledge should be rendered by standing with the right hand over the heart. However, civilians will always show full respect to the flag when the pledge is given by merely standing at attention, men removing the headdress. Persons in uniform shall render the military salute."

Approved June 14, 1954.

The Pledge of Allegiance was written in 1892 by a Baptist minister from Boston named Francis Bellamy, who was ordained in the Baptist Church of Little Falls, New York. He was a member of the staff of The Youth's Companion, which first published the Pledge on September 8, 1892, in Boston, Massachusetts. Public-school children first recited it during the National School Celebration on the 400th anniversary of Columbus' discovery of America, October 12, 1892, at the dedication of the 1892 Chicago World's Fair. The words "under God" were taken from Abraham Lincoln's Gettysburg Address, "...that this nation, under God, shall have a new birth..."

On June 14, 1954, President Eisenhower signed it into law:

I pledge allegiance to the flag of the United States of America and to the Republic for which it stands, one Nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

President Eisenhower gave his support to the Congressional Act, which added the phrase "under God" to the Pledge of Allegiance, saying:

In this way we are reaffirming the transcendence of religious faith in America's heritage and future; in this way we shall constantly strengthen those spiritual weapons which forever will be our country's most powerful resource in peace and war.

President Eisenhower then stood on the steps of the Capitol Building and recited the Pledge of Allegiance for the first time with the phrase, "one Nation under God."

In 1979, a publication approved by and printed under authority of Congress entitled The Capitol - A Pictorial History of the Capitol and of the Congress (Washington, D.C.: U.S. Government Printing Office, 1979), p. 24, rendered the following comments regarding the pledge:

This pledge attests what has been true about America from the beginning. Faith in the transcendent, sovereign God was in the public philosophy - the American consensus. America's story opened with the first words of the Bible, In the beginning God... We are truthfully one nation under God "and our institutions presuppose a Divine Being," wrote Justice William O. Douglas in 1966.

American Quotations.txt

Only a nation founded on theistic pre-supposition would adopt a first amendment to ensure the free exercise of all religions or of none. The government would be neutral among the many denominations and no one church would become the state church. But America and its institutions of government could not be neutral about God.

United States Congress (1955), passed a bill, signed by President Dwight Eisenhower, providing that all United States currency should bear the words:

"In God We Trust."

Federer, William Joseph (b. October 1, 1957), is a nationally known speaker and best-selling author. He is the president of Amerisearch, Inc., a publishing company dedicated to research America's noble heritage. His book America's God and Country Encyclopedia of Quotations has sold nearly a quarter of a million copies. His popular CD-ROM reference American Quotations is an exhaustive resource of American documents, speeches, memoirs and court decisions. His works also include: A Treasury of Presidential Quotations, America's God & Country Inspirational Calendar, 365 Presidential Quotations-A Day to Day Calendar, video documentaries, tapes series, and newsletters. His AMERICAN MINUTE radio feature is aired across the country recalling events of American significance on the date they occurred.

Bill has addressed audiences with Congressmen, Senators, Presidential Candidates, Sports Stars, Military Commanders, Astronaut Charles Duke, etc. Featured on hundreds of radio/television programs, Bill has spoken at political conventions, U.S. Military bases, the Veterans of Foreign Wars, American Assoc. of Retired Persons, U.S. Military Chaplains' conventions, National Day of Prayer events, National Lawyers Assoc., Federalist Society, American Family Assoc., Daughters of the American Revolution, Rotary Clubs, Officer Candidate School graduation, Jaycee Chapters, Kiwanis Clubs, AT&T/Southwestern Bell office fellowships, Zig Zigar Corporation, The 700 Club, Mayor's Breakfasts, Student Leadership Conferences, Businessmen's Luncheons, Colleges, Universities, Institutes, Home-schooling groups & Churches.

Dedicated to continuing Reagan's legacy against an ever-expanding federal government, Bill campaigned for the U.S. Congress in 1998 and 2000 and almost single-handedly kept the U.S. House in the hands of Republicans, as his opponent, Minority Leader Dick Gephardt, was forced to give up plans of raising money and campaigning for liberals around the country. Gephardt had boasted of being the next "Speaker" but instead had his toughest re-election battle ever, spending a record $6 million dollars against Federer's formidable $2.7 million from 35,000 contributors across the nation in what was the 3rd most expensive Congressional race in America. In spite of Gephardt's desperate use of 'the politics of personal destruction' and media manipulation, Federer received the most votes ever against him, over 100,000. This was following the 1998 election, when Bill forced Gephardt to spend $3.3 million, handing him the lowest re-election margin of his career and eighth lowest of any Democrat in Congress. Voter fraud within Gephardt's district resulted in a FBI investigation into the St. Louis City political machine.

With deep roots in St. Louis, Bill works with the Federer Realty Company, founded by his grandfather, William A. Federer, in 1913, and his father Richard L. Federer, both of which served as president of the St. Louis Board of Realtors, building large portions of the city and county. His uncle and namesake taught at St. Louis University, led retreats at the White House Retreat Center and worked with native Americans, seniors and inner-city poor.

Raised in south St. Louis, fifth in a family of eleven children, Bill lettered in wrestling, football and was a state finalist in track, running the high hurdles. He graduated from St. Louis University High School, 1976, studied at University of Dallas, Texas, 1976-1978; in Rome, Italy, 1978, and graduated from Saint Louis University, 1980, with a degree in Accounting/Business Administration. He has worked in real estate, the oil & gas industry (Sante Fe Industries, 1981-1984), and has held positions with community organizations, charity groups and churches - working with youth, elderly, families and disadvantaged minorities. Himself an Eagle Scout, he served as a Scoutmaster, 1978-1981. Bill has gained a nationwide reputation for lecturing and writing, with his articles featured in national publications.

On May 2, 1981, Bill wed his highschool sweetheart, Susan Maria Misko. Sue graduated from Cor Jesu High School, 1976, Fontbonne College, 1980, worked for St. Louis Union Trust Company and is a licensed mortgage & securities specialist. She was presented with the Jefferson Award for outstanding community service by Senator John Danforth in 1980 for her work as spokesperson for the Missouri/Illinois Red Cross Blood Services and her work with the elderly and handicapped. Bill and Sue have four children: Jessica Joy, who produces a radio feature entitled "Our Forgotten Heritage; William Gabriel; Katharine Melody, who sings in patriotic performances; and Richard Michael.

William J. Federer stated:

A true leader is someone who is willing to sacrifice his career for the his country; whereas an ambitious politician will sacrifice his country for his career.

A true leader states what he believes, regardless of opinion polls; whereas an ambitious politician reads the opinion polls to find out what he believes!

A person will be controlled, either voluntarily from the inside, or forcefully from the outside. Our government was designed to govern people who could govern themselves. The less internal restraints a populous has, the more external restraints it will demand! The displacing of traditional morality with the encouragement to experiment and follow one's passions is a precursor to anarchy, then despotic tyranny!

Public opinion polls are an adult version of peer pressure.

Our country is controlled by laws; laws are controlled by politicians; politicians are controlled by voters; voters are controlled by public opinion; and public opinion is controlled by the media & education; - so whoever controls the media & education, controls the country!

This identification and influencing of power is basic to human nature, as in a home a child knows that his father has the power, but he complains to mother to persuade father; or he bothers his elder sister to complain to mother to persuade father; or he bribes younger brother to bother elder sister to complain to mother to persuade father!

If a child can figure out where the power sits and how to get his way, is it that difficult to figure out that in America the power sits with the laws, but to change them one must influence politicians by influencing voters by influencing public opinion by controlling the media & education!

The cyclical nature of history can be observed in the early history of the nation of Israel, as chronicled in the Book of Judges. First, they made a covenant with God and were blessed; then they backslid by worshipping the gods of other nations; then prophets called them to repentance; when they didn't repent, judgement came; then they repented and a deliverer came, i.e. Joshua, Gideon, Samson, . . . ; then they renewed their covenant with God and were blessed, beginning the cycle all over again.

America has had its own cycle, to major and minor degrees. For example, after the social covenant of the Declaration of Independence, which references God four times, our nation was blessed; then "prophets" arose calling us to repent of slavery, such as Benjamin Franklin, who, after signing the Constitution, became the first president of the first anti-slavery society in America. When our nation didn't repent, the judgement of the Civil War came and over a half-million people died; then our nation repented and "deliverers" such as Lincoln and others preserved the Union; then we renewed our covenant with God, establishing an annual National Day of Thanksgiving to God, 1863, and placing "In God We Trust" on our national coinage, 1865; then our country was blessed, and the cycle began all over again. The question is where are we in that cycle today?

One of the definitions of "religion" is "a system of belief." One of the definitions of "belief" is "thoughts upon which one bases their actions." Therefore, anyone who does "actions" has thoughts that precede those actions, which is their "system of belief" or "religion."

As long as the government does "actions" the government has thoughts which precede those actions, which is the government's belief-system or religion. You cannot have a separation of "belief" and State, unless the government ceases to do actions.

There is a "system of belief" taught in public schools called "situation ethics," where children learn that if there are too many people in a life-raft, they need to decide which one to throw overboard. Those same youth leave the classroom, decide there are too many people in their neighborhood and blow one away! How can we get upset at these youth for simply acting out the "system of belief" they learned in school?

If we do not like students actions, maybe we need to change the thoughts that precede their actions, and possibly reconsider the time-tested, old-fashioned Hebrew code: Do not participate in drive-by shootings

American Quotations.txt

(thou shalt not murder); Do not take anything that is not yours (thou shalt not steal); Do not shoot a classmate for his tennis shoes (thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's goods); Do not beat-up your parents (honor your father and mother); Keep your mouth out of the gutter and stop cursing (thou shalt not take God's name in vain); Do not be greedy for things (thou shalt not worship idols); Take one day off a week (keep holy the sabbath); and a revolutionary approach to avoid contracting AIDS while solving the teen-pregnancy problem, wait till marriage (thou shalt not commit adultery)!

Once the Ten Commandments were removed from the school walls, metal-detectors had to be installed at the school doors!

George Wilhelm Fredrich Hegel, called the philosophical dictator of Germany in the early 1800's, made an observation in human behavior that "crises brings change" and that individuals were willing to relinquish their freedoms in order to avert crises. This concept was used by both Marx and Hitler, whose fomenting of unrest and anarchy resulted in power being consolidated into their hands.

I have observed a simultaneous phenomenon, that in the midst of these sinister Machiavellian maneuvers, a by-product occurs, namely, that it is often a crisis that brings men to Christ!

If there were more "family altars," there would be fewer families altered.

God does not need your ability, just your availability!

Watts, J.C., Jr. (b. November 8, 1957), is a U.S. Representative from Oklahoma and Chairman of the House Conference Committee. He graduated from the University of Oklahoma, 1981; played professional football, 1981-86; was a youth minister at the Sunnyside Baptist Church, Del City, 1987-94; member of the Oklahoma Corp. Commission 1990-94, chairman 1993-94; elected to the 104th Congress from the 4th district of Oklahoma, 1995; member of the National Drinking Water Adv. Council; member of the electricity commission; and member of the National Association Regulatory Utility Commissioners.

On Tuesday, February 5, 1997, U.S. Representative J.C. Watts delivered the Republican response to President Clinton's State of the Union Address:

We believe first of all that the state of this union really isn't determined in Washington, D.C. It never has been, and it never will be. For a long time the federal government has been grabbing too much power and too much authority over all of the people....

The strength of America is not in Washington, the strength of America is at home in lives well lived in the land of faith and family. The strength of America is not on Wall Street but on Main Street, not in big business but in small business with local owners and workers. It's not in Congress, it's in the city hall. And I pray Republicans and Democrats both understand this....

First, we can help our country by bringing back the knowledge, the ancient wisdom, that we're nothing without our spiritual, traditional and family values.... I didn't get my values from Washington. I got my values from my parents, from Buddy and Helen Watts, in Eufaula, Oklahoma. I got my values growing up in a poor black neighborhood on the east side of the railroad tracks, where money was scarce but dreams were plentiful and love was all around. I got my values from a strong family, a strong church and a strong neighborhood.

I wasn't raised to be a Republican or Democrat. My parents just taught by example. They taught me and my brothers and sisters that, if you lived under their roof, you were going to work. They taught us, if you made a mistake, as we all do, you've got to own up to it, you call it what it is, and you try to turn it around. They taught us, if you spend more money than you make, you're on a sure road to disaster.

I was taught to respect everyone for the simple reason that we're all God's children. I was taught, in the words of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., and from my uncle, Wade Watts, to judge a man not by the color of his skin, but by the content of his character. And I was taught that character does count, and that character is simply doing what's right when nobody's looking....

For the past 30 years our nation's spent $5 trillion trying to erase poverty, and the result, as you know, is that we didn't get rid of it at all. In fact, we spread it. We destroyed the self-esteem of millions of people, grinding them down in a welfare system that penalizes moms for wanting to marry the father of their children, and penalizes moms for wanting to save money. Friends, that's not right....

A number of my colleagues and I... are working on a package called The American Community Renewal Act. It seeks to return government to the side of the institutions that hold communities together: faith, family, hard work, strong neighborhoods. This will help rebuild low income communities through their own moral renewal and giving them economic opportunity. It also recognizes that faith-based institutions contribute to the healing of our nation's problems. So our first priority is to bring values back and give them pride of place in our moral and economic renewal. And in the next few weeks we will be visiting a number of communities to highlight the accomplishments of active faith-based organizations....

We are more than $5 trillion in debt. This year we will spend $330 billion on interest payments alone on the national debt. And you know what? Not one dime of that $330 billion will go to strengthen Medicare, Medicaid. Not one dime of it will go to find a cure for cancer or fight drugs and crime. And worse yet, not one dime will go toward learning, making the classrooms a centerpiece of our education. Over $5 trillion worth of national debt is more than financially irresponsible. Friends, it's immoral, because someone is going to have to pay the piper. And you know who it's going to be? It's going to be our kids and our grandkids.

The American family is already overtaxed. Right now the average family spends about half of every dollar they earn in some type of government tax or government fee. Consider a 5-year-old child today. If things continue as they are, by the time they're 25 they'll pay about 84 cents of every dollar they make in some government tax or government fee. Friends, that's more than a shame, it's a scandal....

I want to say a few words about the...vision of how we can continue to make this one nation under God, indivisible with liberty and justice for all....Too often when we talk about racial healing, we make the old assumption that government can heal the racial divide....Republicans and Democrats - red, yellow, black and white - have to understand that we must individually, all of us, accept our share of responsibility....

It does not happen by dividing us into racial groups. It does not happen by trying to turn rich against poor or by using the politics of fear. It does not happen by reducing our values to the lowest common denominator. And friends, it does not happen by asking Americans to accept what's immoral and wrong in the name of tolerance....

We must be a people who dare, dare to take responsibility for our hatred and fears and ask God to heal us from within. And we must be a people of prayer, a people who pray as if the strength of our nation depended on it, because it does....

I've often told the story of a boy and his father. The father was trying to get some work done, and the boy wanted the daddy's attention, but the father was busy at his desk with so much to do. To occupy the boy, this father...remembered that he had seen a picture of the world in this magazine. In what he thought was a stroke of genius, the father tore out the picture and tore it into 20 different pieces, and he said, "Here son. Go put the world back together."

And you know what happened? Five minutes later the little Michelangelo was back, saying, "Daddy, look what I've done." The father looked, and he said, "Son, how did you do it so quickly? How did you put the world back together so quickly?" And the little boy answered, "Dad, it was easy. There was a picture of a man on the back of the map, on the back of the world. And once I put the man back together, the world fell into place." And friends, this is our agenda: to put our men and women back together, and, in that way, get our country back together.

I am reminded of the final words of President John Kennedy's inaugural address. He said this: "Let us go forth to lead the land we love, knowing that here on earth, God's work truly must be our own." I say Amen to that.

Thank you for your graciousness in listening to me so late in the evening. God bless you, and God bless our children.

On September 12, 2001, Congressman J.C. Watts, Jr. released the following statement in response to the previous day's terrorist attacks upon the World Trade Center and the Pentagon:

Terrorism invades our borders. The tragedy Americans experienced yesterday was a blemish on our nation's history. It was a day that will be remembered by families in New York City, Washington, D.C. and every town throughout the country.

Unlike momentous days of joy that we remember and tell our grandchildren about, September 11, 2001 will be a day we will recall for years to come with sadness and sorrow. Like Pearl Harbor, like the Oklahoma City bombing, the surprise attack on the people and sites that run this country, economy, military and government will not be the final word.

There can be no justice without peace. And there can be no peace without justice. Over six years ago, I stood on the Floor of the House and condemned the bombing of the federal building in Oklahoma City. Today, like 1995, we should remain strong. We should not succumb to fear. For if we succumb to fear and paranoia, the terrorist has won.

In this time of emergency and mourning, let us open our hearts to those who need our help. If you can, give your blood. If you can, give your time. Fly an American flag at half mast. And take time to pray. Give thanks to those who are helping us through this crisis and give thoughts to those whose suffer because of the will of faceless cowards.

Our nation will get through this upheaval. We will not let the pernicious intentions of an unidentified organization curtail the business of the United States of America. To the families and friends of those who lost their lives, know that you are not alone in your sorrow. I pray for you; we pray for you.

And to the medics, doctors, nurses, firefighters, police, rescue workers, Salvation Army, Red Cross and all of the other emergency personnel on the scene of the incidents, we thank you for your service to the nation and to our sister communities in New York and Washington, D.C. Politics has taken the day off.

Today Congress remembers and recognizes the afflicted and the sorrowing and those who come to the aid of their fellow man. Ralph Waldo Emerson, in 1842, captured what we are thinking as a nation today: "Sorrow makes us all children again, destroys all differences of intellect. The wisest knows nothing."

I thank my colleagues for their service and leadership during this national tragedy.

On October 7, 2001, House Republican Conference Chairman J. C. Watts, Jr. (R.-Okla.) issued the following statement from Washington, D.C., in response to the U.S. air strikes against al-Qaida and Taliban military targets in Afghanistan:

I fully support the air strikes launched by the United States and Great Britain today against al-Qaida and Taliban military targets in Afghanistan. I have full confidence that Congress will remain united in support of President Bush, our leader and commander-in-chief.

While we're one step closer to bringing to justice those that attacked the U.S. on September 11, it's important for the American people to remain patient while this worldwide campaign moves forward. I urge every American to keep America's sons and daughters in uniform in their thoughts and prayers."

New York Supreme Court (1958), in the case of Baer v. Kolmorgen, 181 N.Y.S. 2d. 230, 237 (Sup. Ct. N. Y. 1958), Judge Gallagher stated:

Much has been written in recent years concerning Thomas Jefferson's reference in 1802 to "a wall of separation between church and State." ... Jefferson's figure of speech has received so much attention that one would almost think at times that it is to be found somewhere in our Constitution.

Ohio, Motto of the State of (1959), stated:

With God All Things are Possible.

On March 16, 2001, in a 9-4 decision, the 6th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals ruled that this motto was constitutional. This overturned a previous decision to prohibit the motto by a three-judge panel of the same court April 2000, which decision, as described by Supreme Court Justice William Rehnquist: "bristled with hostility toward religion."

Matthew Peterson, a Presbyterian minister from Cleveland, sued the State of Ohio to remove the motto with the backing of the American Civil Liberties Union and the support of the Americans United for the Separation of Church and State.

Judge David A. Nelson, writing the majority decision approving the motto, stated:

We... would add that, just as the motto does not have as its primary purpose the advancement of religion, it does not have the primary effect of advancing religion either...

For most of our history as an independent nation, the words of the constitutional prohibition against enactment of any law "respecting an establishment of religion" were commonly assumed to mean what they literally said. The provision was not understood as prohibiting the state from merely giving voice, in general terms, to religious sentiments widely shared by those of its citizens who profess a belief in God.

Jay Sekulow of the American Center for Law and Justice, which represented the State of Ohio in the case, stated:

This is an important victory for freedom and a sound defeat for those who want to strip our nation of its religious heritage. The decision comes at a time when there is a national movement underway to remove any mention of "God" from the public arena."

The court decision affirms what we have believed from the beginning - the Ohio motto is constitutional and represents an important recognition that the motto reflects both the cultural and historical importance of our past and should not be banned.

The Ohio motto, "With God All Things are Possible," is used on official stationery, tax forms and on a bronze plate in the sidewalk at an entrance to the Ohio State House in Columbus.

Ohio Governor Bob Taft called the ruling:

A victory for the people of our state and the traditions that bind us together.

Governor Taft continued:

I agree with the majority opinion that our motto serves a secular purpose, instilling confidence and optimism and exhorting the listener or reader not to give up and to continue to strive. Our state motto has overwhelming support, and I'm pleased that we have survived this challenge.

Alaska, State of (January 3, 1959), was the 49th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Alaska, adopted April 24, 1956, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of Alaska, grateful to God and to those who founded our nation and pioneered this great land, in order to secure and transmit to succeeding generations our heritage of political, civil and religious liberty within the Union of States, do ordain and establish this Constitution for the State of Alaska.

Article I, Section 4. Freedom of Religion. No law shall be made respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof.

Article I, Section 19. Right to Keep and Bear Arms. A well-regulated militia being necessary to the security of a free state, the right of the people to keep and bear arms shall not be infringed. The individual right to keep and bear arms shall not be denied or infringed by the State or a political subdivision of the State.

Article II, Section 17. Bills Not Signed. A bill becomes law if, while the legislature is in session, the governor neither signs nor vetoes it within fifteen days, Sundays excepted, after its delivery to him. If the legislature is not in session and the governor neither signs nor vetoes a bill within twenty days, Sundays excepted, after its delivery to him, the bill becomes law.

United States Congress (July 20, 1956), in the 84th Congress, 2nd session, adopted House Joint Resolution 396, introduced by Rep. Charles E. Bennett (FL), providing that the national motto of the United States of America officially be "In God We Trust" :

84th Congress, 2nd Session, H. J. 396;
IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES
April 18 (legislative day, April 9,) 1956
Read twice and referred to the Committee on the Judiciary

Joint Resolution
To establish a national motto of the United States.

American Quotations.txt

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress Assembled, That the national motto of the United States is hereby declared to be "In God We Trust."

Passed the House of Representatives April 16, 1956.

Attest: Ralph R. Roberts, Clerk.

Hawaii, State of (August 21, 1959), was the 50th State admitted to the Union. The Constitution of the State of Hawaii, adopted 1959, stated:

Preamble. We, the people of Hawaii, Grateful for Divine Guidance... establish this Constitution.

Hawaii, Motto of the State of (August 21, 1959), stated:

Ua Mau Ke Ea O Ka Aina I Ka Pono (The Life of the Land is perpetuated in Righteousness.)

United States Supreme Court (1962), in the case of Engle v. Vitale; as quoted in Stone v. Graham, 449 U.S. 39, 46 (1980) and Abington v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 212 (1963), stated:

The history of man is inseparable from the history of religion.

In his dissenting opinion in the case of Engle v. Vitale, 370 U.S. 421, 445-446 (1962), Justice Potter Stewart stated:

I think that the Court's task, in this as in all areas of constitutional adjudication, is not responsibly aided by the uncritical invocation of metaphors like the "wall of separation," a phrase nowhere to be found in the Constitution.

Abington Township, Pennsylvania, School District of (prior to 1963), endorsed the public school policy stating:

Each school... shall be opened by the reading, without comment, of a chapter in the Holy Bible... Participation in the opening exercises... is voluntary. The student reading the verses from the Bible may select the passages and read from any version he chooses... There are no prefatory statements, no questions asked or solicited, no comments or explanations made and no interpretations given at or during the exercises. The students and parents are advised that the student may absent himself from the classroom or, should he elect to remain, not participate in the exercises.

United States Supreme Court (1963), in the case of School District of Abington Township v. Schempp, 374 U.S. 203, 212, 225 (1963), pp. 21, 71; Associate Justice Tom Clark delivered the Court's opinion; Justice William Joseph Brennan, Jr., concurring:

American Quotations.txt

It is true that religion has been closely identified with our history and government. As we said in Engle v. Vitale, "The history of man is inseparable from the history of religion."

Secularism is unconstitutional....preferring those who do not believe over those who do believe....It is the duty of government to deter no-belief religions....Facilities of government cannot offend religious principles....

[T]he State may not establish a 'religion of secularism' in the sense of affirmatively opposing or showing hostility to religion, thus 'preferring those who believe in no religion over those who do believe.

In addition, it might well be said that one's education is not complete without a study of comparative religion or the history of religion and its relationship to the advancement of civilization. It certainly may be said that the Bible is worthy of study for its literary and historic qualities.

Nothing we have said here indicates that such study of the Bible or of religion, when presented objectively as part of a secular program of education, may not be effected consistently with the First Amendment.

The holding of the Court today plainly does not foreclose teaching about the Holy Scriptures or about the differences between religious sects in classes in literature or history. Indeed, whether or not the Bible is involved, it would be impossible to teach meaningfully many subjects in the social sciences or the humanities without some mention of religion....

Any attempt to impose rigid limits upon the mention of God or references to the Bible in the classroom would be fraught with dangers.

Not every involvement of religion in public life is unconstitutional.

United States District Court (1965), Western District of Michigan, in the case of Reed v. van Hoven, 237 F. Supp. 48, 51 (W. D. Mich. 1965), rendered the opinion:

The child is not the mere creature of the state.

DeKalb County, Illinois, Community School District of (prior to 1967), endorsed this poem to be recited in its kindergarten classes:

We thank you for the flowers so sweet; We thank you for the food we eat; We thank you for the birds that sing; We thank you for everything.

United States Supreme Court (1969), in the case of Tinker v. Des Moines Independent School District, 393 U.S. 503, 506, 512, 513 (1969), stated:

It can hardly be argued that either students or teachers shed their constitutional rights to freedom of speech or expression at the schoolhouse gate. [Student's rights exist] in the cafeteria, or on the playing field, or on campus during authorized hours....

School officials do not possess absolute authority over their students.

Netcong, New Jersey, Board of Education of (prior to 1970), endorsed the public school policy:

On each school day before class instruction begins, a period of not more than five minutes shall be available to those teachers and students who may wish to participate voluntarily in the free exercise of religion as guaranteed by the United States Constitution...

United States Supreme Court (1973), in the case of Anderson v. Salt Lake City Corp., 475 F. 2d 29, 33, 34 (10th Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 414 U.S. 879, stated:

But this creed does not include any element of coercion concerning these beliefs unless one considers it coercive to look upon the Ten Commandments. Although they are in plain view, no one is required to read or recite them.

It does not seem reasonable to require removal of a passive monument, involving no compulsion, because its accepted precepts, as a foundation for law, reflect the religious nature of an ancient era.

Tennessee Supreme Court (1975), in the case of Swann v. Pack, 527 S.W. 2d 99, 101 (Sup. Ct. Tn. 1975), asserted:

The scales are always weighted in favor of free exercise of religion, and the State's interest must be compelling, it must be substantial, and the danger must be clear and present and so grave as to endanger paramount public interests before the state can interfere with the free exercise of religion.

Federal Rules of Evidence (December 12, 1975) amended, in Article VIII on Hearsay, declare that records contained in a Family Bible, (i.e. birthdays, marriages, children, etc.), are considered so trustworthy and reliable as to be a formal exception to the Evidence Rule against Hearsay, and are thereby admissible as evidence:

Rule 803 Hearsay Exceptions; Availability of Declarant Immaterial
(13).1 Family Records. Statements of fact concerning personal or family history contained in family Bibles...

United States Congress (1977), ratified Public Law 77-379, in which the President officially proclaims the fourth Thursday of every November:
Page 1247

A National Day of Thanksgiving.

United States Supreme Court (1978), in the case of McDaniel vs. Paty, 435 U.S. 618 at 641 (1978), gave its opinion:

The Establishment Clause does not license government to treat religion, and those who teach or practice it, simply by virtue of their status as such, as subversive of American ideals and therefore subject to unique disabilities. . . .

In short, government may not as a goal promote "safe-thinking" with respect to religion and fence out from political participation those, such as ministers, whom it regards as over-involved in religion. Religionists no less than members of any other group enjoy the full measure of protection afforded speech, association, and political activity generally. The Establishment Clause, properly understood, is a shield against any attempt by government to inhibit religion. . . . It may not be used as a sword to justify repression of religion or its adherents from any aspect of public life.

United States District Court (1979), Eastern District of Tennessee, in the case of Wiley v. Franklin, 468 F.Supp. 133, 149-150 (E.D. Tenn. 1979), stated:

The Bible is replete with writings relevant to such secular subjects and interests as history, both ancient and modern, literature, poetry, music, art, government, social customs and practices, values, behavioral sciences, and, more generally speaking that broad range of subjects, values, interests, and activities encompassed within the generalized phrase "Western Civilization." To ignore the role of the Bible in the vast area of secular subjects such as herein above referred to is to ignore a keystone in the building of an arch, at least in so far as Western history, values and culture are concerned.

Bible study courses can be so designed and taught as not to constitute the teaching of religion and as not to violate the Establishment Clause of the First Amendment when taught in the public schools.

The Constitutional issue presented in teaching the Bible study courses in the public schools is not the Bible itself, but rather the selectivity, emphasis, objectivity, and interpretative manner, or lack thereof, with which the Bible is taught.

None of the foregoing instructions shall limit or restrain the defendant school boards from entering into any arrangement they may elect with any individual or organization, including the Public School Bible Study Committee, for the funding of the. . . Bible study courses.

American Quotations.txt

California Supreme Court (1980), in the case of Devin Walker v. First Orthodox Presbyterian Church, 760-028.9, gave its opinion:

Freedom of religion is so fundamental to American history that it must be preserved even at the expense of other rights which have become institutionalized by the Democratic process.

United States Supreme Court (1980), in the case of Stone v. Graham, 449 U.S. 39, 42, 46 (1980), stated:

Religion has been closely identified with our history and government, Abington School District, 1963, and that the history of man is inseparable from the history of religion. Engle v. Vitale, 1962.

The Bible may constitutionally be used in an appropriate study of history, civilization, ethics, comparative religion, or the like.

United States Court of Appeals - 8th Circuit (1980), in the case of Florey v. Sioux Falls School District, 619 F. 2d 1311, 1314, 1315-1316, 1317 (8th Cir. 1980), stated that the performance and study of religious songs, inclusive of Christmas carols, is constitutional, provided the purpose is the:

Advancement of the students' knowledge of society's cultural and religious heritage, as well as the provision of an opportunity for students to perform a full range of music, poetry, and drama that is likely to be of interest to the students and their audience.

Advanc[ing] the student's knowledge and appreciation of the role that our religious heritage has played in the social, cultural and historical development of civilization.

It would be literally impossible to develop a public school curriculum that did not in some way affect the religious or nonreligious sensibilities of some of the students or their parents.

The study of religion is not forbidden "when presented objectively as a part of a secular program of education"... We view the term "study" to include more than mere classroom instruction; public performance may be a legitimate part of secular study... As the district noted in its discussion of Rule 3, "To allow students only to study and not perform [religious art, music and literature when] such works... have developed an independent secular and artistic significance would give students a truncated view of our culture."

United States Supreme Court (1981), in the case of Widmar v. Vincent, 454 U.S. 263, 269 (1981), stated:

Religious worship and discussion... are forms of speech and association protected by the First Amendment.

United States Supreme Court (1982), in the case of Chambers v. Marsh, 675 F. 2d 228, 233 (8th Cir. 1982); review allowed, 463 U.S. 783 (1982), Chief Justice Warren E. Burger delivered the Court's opinion:

The Legislature by majority vote invites a clergyman to give a prayer, neither the inviting nor the giving nor the hearing of the prayer is making a law. On this basis alone... the sayings of prayers, per se, in the legislative halls at the opening session is not prohibited by the First and Fourteenth Amendments.

The case of Bogen v. Doty... involved a county board's practice of opening each of its public meetings with a prayer offered by a local member of the clergy.... This Court upheld that practice, finding that it advanced a clearly secular purpose of establishing a solemn atmosphere and serious tone for the board meetings.... Establishing solemnity is the primary effect of all invocations at gatherings of persons with differing views on religion.

The men who wrote the First Amendment religion clause did not view paid legislative chaplains and opening prayers as a violation of that amendment.... the practice of opening sessions with prayer has continued without interruption ever since that early session of Congress.

It can hardly be thought that in the same week the members of the first Congress voted to appoint and pay a chaplain for each House and also voted to approve the draft of the First Amendment... (that) they intended to forbid what they had just declared acceptable.

[Prayer and Chaplains] are deeply embedded in the history and tradition of this country.

United States Congress (October 4, 1982), by a Joint Resolution of both the Senate and House of Representatives in the 2nd session of the 97th Congress, declared 1983 the "Year of the Bible":

Public Law 97-280.

WHEREAS the Bible, the Word of God, has made a unique contribution in shaping the United States as a distinctive and blessed nation and people;

WHEREAS deeply held religious convictions springing from the Holy Scriptures led to the early settlement of our Nation;

WHEREAS Biblical teachings inspired concepts of civil government that are contained in our Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States;

WHEREAS many of our great national leaders - among them Presidents Washington, Jackson, Lincoln, and Wilson - paid tribute to the surpassing influence of the Bible in our country's development, as in the words of President Jackson that the Bible is "the Rock on which our Republic rests";

WHEREAS the history of our Nation clearly illustrates the value of voluntarily applying the teachings of the Scriptures in the lives of individuals, families, and societies;

WHEREAS this Nation now faces great challenges that will test this Nation as it has never been tested before; and

WHEREAS that renewing our knowledge of and faith in God through Holy Scripture can strengthen us as a nation and a people: NOW, THEREFORE, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to designate 1983 as a national "Year of the Bible" in recognition of both the formative influence the Bible has been for our Nation, and our national need to study and apply the teachings of the Holy Scriptures.

Thomas P. O'Neill
Speaker of the House

Strom Thurmond
President of the Senate - Pro Tempore

Approved
October 4, 1982
Ronald Reagan

Thomas, Cal (1983), in his published work entitled, Book Burning, exposed the bias embedded in current media trends. A graduate of American University in Washington, D.C., Cal Thomas' background with NBC and numerous other broadcast companies has made him a seasoned veteran with over 32 years of journalism experience in both radio and T.V. His works include: A Freedom Dream, 1977; Public Persons and Private Lives, 1979; Liberals for Lunch, 1985; The Death of Ethics, 1988; Occupied Territory, 1987; Uncommon Sense, 1990; Gays in the Military, 1993; and The Things That Matter Most, 1994. Nationally acclaimed as a reporter, news commentator, author and syndicated columnist, Cal Thomas stated:

All we are asking for is balance. I would like to think that I could walk into a public library and find not only works by Gloria Steinem but also those of Phyllis Schlafly. I would like to think that a teenager could be taught in sex education that a serious alternative to abortion is teenage abstinence, or should pregnancy occur, that adoption might be preferable. I am not trying, as the ad says, to shove religion down anyone's throat. But I do think everyone has a right, and that the Christian voice is being choked off.

United States Supreme Court (1983), in the case of United States v. Grace, 461 U.S. 171, 177 (1983), stated:

Streets, sidewalks, and parks, are considered, without more, to be public forums.

United States District Courts (1983), Southern District of Alabama, in the case of Jaffree v. Board of School Commissioners of Mobile County, 544 F. Supp. 1104 (S. D. Ala. 1983), Judge Brevard Hand quoted from the nineteenth-century U. S. Supreme Court Justice Joseph Story, who succinctly clarified the original meaning of the First Amendment:

The real object of the First Amendment was not to countenance, much less to advance Mohammedanism, or Judaism, or infidelity, by prostrating Christianity, but to exclude all rivalry among Christian sects and to prevent any national ecclesiastical patronage of the national government.

United States District Court (1983), Western District of Virginia, in the case of Crockett v. Sorenson, 568 F. Supp. 1422, 1425-1430 (W. D. Va. 1983), stated:

The First Amendment was never intended to insulate our public institutions from any mention of God, the Bible or religion. When such insulation occurs, another religion, such as secular humanism, is effectively established.

Clearly, the Establishment Clause can be violated in this regard without a showing of outright hostility to traditional theistic religions. Though in the context of the British university, the following quote is instructive for the situation in our public schools:

On the fundamental religious issue, the modern university intends to be, and supposes that it is, neutral, but it is not. Certainly it neither implicates nor expressly repudiates belief in God. But it does what is far more deadly than open rejection; it ignores Him... It is in this sense that the university today is atheistic... It is a fallacy to suppose by omitting a subject you teach nothing about it. On the contrary, you teach that it is to be omitted, and that it is therefore a matter of secondary importance. And you teach this not openly and explicitly, which could invite criticism, you simply take it for granted and thereby insinuate it silently, insidiously, and albeit irresistibly.

Moberly, The Crisis in the University, 55-56 (1949) (quoted in Whitehead and Conlin, The Establishment of Religion of Secular Humanism and Its First Amendment Implications, 10 Tex. Tech. L. Rev. 1, 19 n. 104 (1978)).

In art, one cannot truly appreciate such great works as da Vinci's Last Supper, Michelangelo's work in the Sistine Chapel, or Albrecht Durer's woodcuts without some basic understanding of what the Bible contains. Without some introduction to the book of Isaiah, Handel's Messiah loses much of its force and importance. Literature is replete with biblical allusion. Some of the better known works which rely heavily on allusions from the Bible include Milton's Paradise Lost; the plays of Shakespeare, especially Measure for Measure; Blake's Marriage of Heaven and Hell; Melville's Moby Dick; Faulkner's Absalom, Absalom; T. S. Eliot's The Wasteland; and C. S. Lewis' The Screwtape Letters.

Our language and popular culture are also replete with biblical allusions. The symbol for the American Medical Association, a staff with a serpent on it, is drawn from an episode in the book of Numbers, when Moses, at God's suggestion, raised a bronze serpent on a staff and all the children of Israel who looked upon it were healed of snakebites. The phrase "handwriting on the wall" comes from a passage in the book of Daniel in which handwriting on the wall foretold rough time ahead for Babylonian King Belshazzar. The popular phrase "the apple of my eye" is used in the Old Testament as one of God's descriptions for His people Israel. And, of course, the term "Armageddon" is the site where the battle will take place which will mark the end of the age, as described in the Book of Revelations.

Anglo-American law as we know it today is also heavily indebted to the principles and concepts found in the Bible. William Blackstone, one of the most influential figures in the development of the common law, explained:

"The doctrine thus delivered we call the revealed or divine law and they are to be found only in the Holy Scriptures.... Upon these two foundations, the law of nature and the law of revelation, depend all human laws, that is to say, no human law should be suffered to contradict these." Blackstone posited that the law of nature as well as the law of revelation, was derived from God.

Further, biblical influences pervade many specific areas of the law. The "good Samaritan" laws use a phrase lifted directly out of one of Jesus' parables. The concept of the "fertile octogenarian," applicable to the law of wills and trusts, is in a large part derived from the book of Genesis where we are told that Sarah, the wife of the patriarch Abraham, gave birth to Isaac when she was "past age." In addition, the Ten Commandments have had immeasurable effect on Anglo-American legal development.

Moreover, we as Americans, should especially be aware of the influence that the Bible and its principles have had on the founding and development of our nation. In this regard it is significant that Former President Ronald Reagan, on February 3, 1983, issued a proclamation declaring 1983 the "year of the Bible" in recognition of the Bible's fundamental and enduring influence on our country.

Secular education imposes immediate demands that the student have a good knowledge of the Bible. Two defense exhibits vividly illustrate this point. Defendants Exhibit 14 is a summary of references to the Bible in a 1980 edition of the Scholastic Aptitude Manual, used by high school students to prepare for the Scholastic Aptitude Test (SAT).... Defendants' Exhibit 15, a summary of Bible references found in textbooks used in the Bristol public schools, is based on selected books from elementary, junior high and high school classes....

In light of the above, it becomes obvious that a basic background in the Bible is essential to fully appreciate and understand both Western culture and current events.

Bible, Year of the (1983), was declared on October 4, 1982, by a Joint Resolution of both the Senate and House of Representatives in the second session of the 97th Congress of the United States of America, held at the City of Washington:

Public Law 97-280.

WHEREAS the Bible, the Word of God, has made a unique contribution in shaping the United States as a distinctive and blessed nation and people;

WHEREAS deeply held religious convictions springing from the Holy Scriptures led to the early settlement of our Nation;

WHEREAS Biblical teachings inspired concepts of civil government that are contained in our Declaration of Independence and Constitution of the United States;

WHEREAS many of our great national leaders - among them Presidents Washington, Jackson, Lincoln, and Wilson - paid tribute to the surpassing influence of the Bible in our country's development, as in the words of President Jackson that the Bible is "the Rock on which our Republic rests";

WHEREAS the history of our Nation clearly illustrates the value of voluntarily applying the teachings of the Scriptures in the lives of individuals, families, and societies;

WHEREAS this Nation now faces great challenges that will test this Nation as it has never been tested before; and

WHEREAS that renewing our knowledge of and faith in God through Holy Scripture can strengthen us as a nation and a people: NOW, THEREFORE, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to designate 1983 as a national "Year of the Bible" in recognition of both the formative influence the Bible has been for our Nation, and our national need to study and apply the teachings of the Holy Scriptures.

Thomas P. O'Neill
Speaker of the House

Strom Thurmond
President of the Senate - Pro Tempore

Approved
October 4, 1982
Ronald Reagan

United States Supreme Court (1984), Associate Justice William Hubbs Rehnquist, in his dissenting opinion in the case of Wallace v. Jaffree, 472 U.S. 38, 92, 99, 107 (1984), stated:

It is impossible to build sound constitutional doctrine upon a mistaken understanding of Constitutional history. . . . The establishment clause had been expressly freighted with Jefferson's misleading metaphor for nearly forty years. . . .

There is simply no historical foundation for the proposition that the framers intended to build a wall of separation [between church and state]. . . . The recent court decisions are in no way based on either the language or intent of the framers....

But the greatest injury of the "wall" notion is its mischievous diversion of judges from the actual intentions of the drafters of the Bill of Rights.... The "wall of separation between church and State" is a metaphor based on bad history, a metaphor which has proved useless as a guide to judging. It should be frankly and explicitly abandoned.

Bounoure, Professor Louis (March 8, 1984), was quoted in The Advocate publication. His statement carried considerable credence, as he had been the President of the Biological Society of Strasbourg, Director of the Strasbourg Zoological Museum, and later Director at the French National Centre of Scientific Research. Professor Bounoure declared:

Evolutionism is a fairy tale for grown-ups. This theory has helped nothing in the progress of science. It is useless.

United States Congress (August 11, 1984), by a Senate vote of 88-11 and a House vote of 337-77, voted the Equal Access Act into law. The Supreme Court upheld it by a vote of 8-1 in the Westside Community Schools v. Mergens case in 1990. Section 4071 (20 U.S.C. ?? 4071-74) explains that denial of equal access is prohibited:

Sec. 4071. (a) It shall be unlawful for any public secondary school which receives Federal financial assistance and which has a limited open forum to deny equal access or a fair opportunity to, or discriminate against, any students who wish to conduct a meeting within that limited open forum on the basis of the religious, political, philosophical, or other content of the speech at such meeting.

United States Supreme Court (1985), in the case of Lynch v. Donnelly, 465 U.S. 668, 669-670, 673 (1985), Chief Justice Warren Burger rendered the Court's opinion upholding that the city of Pawtucket, R.I. did not violate the Constitution by displaying a Nativity scene. The decision noted that presidential orders and proclamations from Congress have designated Christmas as a national holiday in religious terms since 1789:

The city of Pawtucket, R.I., annually erects a Christmas display in a park.... The creche display is sponsored by the city to celebrate the Holiday recognized by Congress and national tradition and to depict the origins of that Holiday; these are legitimate secular purposes.... The creche... is no more an advancement or endorsement of religion than the congressional and executive recognition of the origins of Christmas....

It would be ironic if... the creche in the display, as part of a celebration of an event acknowledged in the Western World for 20 centuries, and in this country by the people, the Executive Branch, Congress, and the courts for 2 centuries, would so 'taint' the exhibition as to render it violative of the Establishment Clause. To forbid the use of this one passive symbol... would be an overreaction contrary to this Nation's history.

American Quotations.txt

There is an unbroken history of official acknowledgement by all three branches of government of the role of religion in American life. . . .

The Constitution does not require a complete separation of church and state. It affirmatively mandates accommodation, not merely tolerance, of all religions and forbids hostility towards any.

Anything less would require the "callous indifference" we have said was never intended by the Establishment Clause. Indeed, we have observed, such hostility would bring us into a "war with our national tradition as embodied in the First Amendment's guaranty of the free exercise of religion."

Gallup Poll (1986), indicated that 81% of the American people identify themselves as Christian.

In a more recent Gallup poll, reported by Ari Goldman in the New York Times on February 27, 1993, 96 % of Americans believe in God. Among those polled 82 % identify themselves as Christians, (being 56 % Protestant, 25 % Roman Catholic), and 2 % of Americans identified themselves as Jewish.

United States Supreme Court (1986), in the case of Bowers v. Hardwick, 478 U.S. 186, 92 L Ed 2d 140, 106 S. Ct. 2841, p. 149, Chief Justice Warren E. Burger delivered the Court's decision censuring the act of sodomy:

Condemnation of those practices is firmly rooted in Judeo-Christian moral and ethical standards.

Sodomy was a criminal offense at common law and was forbidden by the laws of the original 13 States when they ratified the Bill of Rights. In 1868, when the Fourteenth Amendment was ratified, all but five of the 37 States in the Union had criminal sodomy laws. In fact, until 1961, all 50 states outlawed sodomy. . . . provid[ing] criminal penalties for sodomy performed in private and between consenting adults.

United States Supreme Court (1987), in the case of Edwards v. Aquillard, 482 U.S. ___, 96 L.Ed.2d 510, 535 (1987), Justice Powell and O'Connor concurring, stated:

The book [Bible] is, in fact, "the world's all-time best seller" with undoubted literary and historic value apart from its religious content.

f.n. - See N.Y. Times, May 10, 1981, Sec. 2, p. 24, col.3; N. McWhirter, 1986 Guinness Book of World Records (the Bible is the world's most widely distributed book).

United States Congress (January 25, 1988), by a Joint Resolution of the 100th Congress, declared the first Thursday of each May to be recognized as a National Day of Prayer.

AT THE SECOND SESSION

Begun and held at the City of Washington on Monday, the twenty-fifth day of January, one thousand nine hundred and eighty-eight

AN ACT

To provide for setting aside the first Thursday in May as the date on which the National Day of Prayer is celebrated.

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the joint resolution entitled "Joint Resolution to provide for setting aside an appropriate day as a National Day of Prayer," approved April 17, 1952 (Public Law 82-324; 66 Stat. 64), is amended by striking "a suitable day each year, other than a Sunday", and inserting in lieu thereof "the first Thursday in May in each year."

Speaker of the House of Representatives
President of the Senate Pro Tempore
APPROVED

May-5 1988
Ronald Reagan

United States Congress (February 22, 1990), in Senate Joint Resolution 164, authorized and requested President George Bush to issue a Presidential Proclamation declaring 1990 the International Year of Bible Reading. In his Proclamation, President Bush stated:

Among the great books produced throughout the history of mankind, the Bible has been prized above all others by generations of men and women around the world - by people of every age, every race, and every walk of life.

The Bible has had a critical impact upon the development of Western civilization. Western literature, art, and music are filled with images and ideas that can be traced to its pages. More important, our moral tradition has been shaped by the laws and teachings it contains. It was a biblical view of man - one affirming the dignity and worth of the human person, made in the Image of our Creator - that inspired the principles upon which the United States is founded. President Jackson called the Bible "the Rock on which our Republic rests" because he knew that it shaped the Founding Fathers' concept of individual liberty and their vision of a free and just society.

The Bible has not only influenced the development of our Nation's values and institutions but also enriched the daily lives of millions of men and women who have looked to it for comfort, hope, and guidance. On the American frontier, the Bible was often the only book a family owned. For those pioneers living far from any church or school, it served both as a source of religious instruction and as the primary text from which children learned to read. The historic speeches of Abraham Lincoln and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., provide compelling evidence of the role Scripture played in shaping the struggle against slavery and discrimination. Today the Bible continues to give courage and direction to those who seek truth and righteousness. In recognizing its enduring value, we recall the words of the prophet Isaiah, who declared,

"The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; but the word of our God shall stand forever."

Containing revelations of God's intervention in human history, the Bible offers moving testimony to His love for mankind. Treasuring the Bible as a source of knowledge and inspiration. President Abraham Lincoln call this Great Book "the best gift God has given to man." President Lincoln believed that the Bible not only reveals the infinite goodness of our Creator, but also reminds us of our worth as individuals and our responsibilities toward one another.

President Woodrow Wilson likewise recognized the importance of the Bible to its readers. "The Bible is the word of life," he once said. Describing its contents, he added:

"You will find it full of real men and women not only but also of the things you have wondered about and been troubled about all your life, as men have been always; and the more you will read it the more it will become plain to you what things are worth while and what are not, what things make men happy - loyalty, right dealing, speaking the truth...and the things that are guaranteed to make men unhappy - selfishness, cowardice, greed, and everything that is low and mean. When you have read the Bible you will know that it is the Word of God, because you will have found it the key to your own heart, your own happiness, and your own duty."

President Wilson believed that the Bible helps its readers find answers to the mysteries and sorrows that often trouble the souls of men.

Cherished for centuries by men and women around the world, the Bible's value is timeless. Its significance transcends the boundaries between nations and languages because it carries a universal message to every human heart. This year numerous individuals and associations around the world will join in a campaign to encourage voluntary study of the Bible. Their efforts are worthy of recognition and support.

In acknowledgement of the inestimable value and timeless appeal of the Bible, the Congress, by Senate Joint Resolution 164, has designated the year 1990 as the "International Year of Bible Reading" and has authorized and requested the President to issue a proclamation in observance of this year.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE BUSH, President of the United States of America, do hereby proclaim the year 1990 as the International Year of Bible Reading. I invite all Americans to discover the great inspiration and knowledge that can be obtained through thoughtful reading of the Bible.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand this twenty-second day of February, in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ninety, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and fourteenth.

George Bush

United States Supreme Court (June 4, 1990), in the case of Westside Community Schools v. Mergens, 496, U.S. 226, 250, (1990), No. 88-1597 Part III was delivered by Justice O'Connor and No. 88-

1597-CONCUR Part II was delivered by Justice Kennedy and Justice Scalia. By this 8 to 1 decision, the Supreme Court ruled to allow the formation of Christian clubs on the campuses of public schools, provided they were student initiated. Students were to be granted identical rights which other non-curricular groups were enjoying:

There is a crucial difference between government speech endorsing religion, which the Establishment Clause forbids, and private speech endorsing religion, which the Free speech and Free Exercise Clauses protect.

If a State refused to let religious groups use facilities open to others, then it would demonstrate not neutrality but hostility toward religion. The Establishment Clause does not license government to treat religion and those who teach or practice it, simply by virtue of their status as such, as subversive of American ideals and therefore subject to unique disabilities.

Indeed, as the Court noted in Widmar, a denial of equal access to religious speech might well create greater entanglement problems in the form of invasive monitoring to prevent religious speech at meetings at which such speech might occur. See Widmar, 454 U.S., at 272, n. 11.

I should think it inevitable that a public high school "endorses" a religious club, in a common-sense use of the term, if the club happens to be one of many activities that the school permits students to choose in order to further the development of their intellect and character in an extracurricular setting.

But no constitutional violation occurs if the school's action is based upon a recognition of the fact that membership in a religious club is one of many permissible ways for a student to further his or her own personal enrichment.

United States Supreme Court (1992), in the case of Lee v. Weisman, 112 S. Ct. 2649 (1992), by only a one-vote majority, Justice Kennedy wrote the decision that a commencement prayer is not to be given by clergy. In a strong dissenting opinion, Lee v. Weisman; 120 L. Ed. 2d 467, 509 (1992), Scalia, J. (dissenting), Justice Antonin Scalia, joined by Chief Justice William Rehnquist, Justice Byron White and Justice Clarence Thomas, stated that invocations and benedictions may continue to be offered, provided a notice is included in the commencement program that participation is voluntary:

That obvious fact recited the graduates and their parents may proceed to thank God, as American have always done, for the blessings He has generously bestowed on them and their country.

From our Nation's origin, prayer has been a prominent part of governmental ceremonies and proclamations. The Declaration of Independence, the document marking our birth as a separate people, "appeal[ed] to the Supreme Judge of the World for the rectitude of our intentions" avowed "a firm reliance on the protection of divine Providence." In his first Inaugural Address, after swearing his oath of office on a Bible, George Washington deliberately made a prayer a part of his first official act as President. . . . Such supplications have been a characteristic feature of Inaugural Addresses ever since. Thomas Jefferson, for example, prayed in his first Inaugural Address. . . . In his second Inaugural Address, Jefferson acknowledged his need for divine guidance and invited his audience to join his prayer. . . . Similarly, James Madison, in his first Inaugural Address, placed his confidence "in the guardianship and guidance of that Almighty Being. . . [with] fervent supplications and best hopes for the future." . . . The other two branches of the Federal Government also have a long-established practice of prayer at public events. . . . There is simply no support for the proposition that the officially sponsored nondenominational invocation and benediction read by Rabbi Gutterman - with no one legally coerced to recite them - violated the Constitution of the United States. To the contrary, they are so characteristically American they could have come from the pen of George Washington or Abraham Lincoln himself.

As its instrument of destruction, the bulldozer of its social engineering, the Court invents a boundless, and boundlessly manipulable, test of psychological coercion. . . . The opinion manifests that the Court itself has not given careful consideration to its test of psychological coercion. For if it had, how could it observe, with no hint of concern of disapproval, that students stood for the pledge of Allegiance, which immediately preceded Rabbi Gutterman's invocation? . . . [S]ince the Pledge of Allegiance. . . included the phrase "under God," recital of the Pledge would appear to raise the same Establishment Clause issue as the invocation and benediction. If students were psychologically coerced to remain standing during the invocation, they must also have been psychologically coerced, moments before, to stand for (and thereby, in the Court's view, take part in or appear to take part in) the Pledge. Must the Pledge therefore be barred from the public schools (both from graduation ceremonies and from the classroom)? Logically, that ought to be the next project for the Court's bulldozer.

[N]othing, absolutely nothing, is so inclined to foster among religious believers of various faiths a toleration - no, an affection - for one another than voluntarily joining in prayer together, to God whom they all worship and seek. . . . The Baptist or Catholic who heard and joined in the simple and inspiring prayers of Rabbi Gutterman on this official and patriotic occasion was inoculated from religious bigotry and prejudice in a manner that can not be replicated. To deprive our society of that important unifying mechanism. . . is as senseless in policy as it is unsupported in law.

The reader has been told much in this case about the personal interest of Mr. Weisman and his daughter, and very little about the personal interests of the other side. They are not inconsequential. Church and state would not be such a difficult subject if religion were, as the Court apparently thinks it to be, some purely personal avocation that can be indulged entirely in secret, like pornography, in the privacy of one's room. For most believers it is not that, and has never been. Religious men and women of almost all denominations have felt it necessary to acknowledge and beseech the blessing of God as a people, and not just as individuals, because they believe in the "protection of divine Providence," as the Declaration of Independence put it, not just for individuals but for societies; because they believe God to be, as Washington's first Thanksgiving Proclamation put it, the "Great Lord and Ruler of Nations." One can believe in the effectiveness of such public worship, or one can deprecate and deride it. But the longstanding American tradition of prayer at official ceremonies displays with unmistakable clarity that the Establishment Clause does not forbid the government to accommodate it. The narrow context of the present case involves a community's celebration of one of the milestones in its young citizen's lives, and it is a bold step for this Court to seek to banish from that occasion, and from thousands of similar celebrations throughout this land, the expression of gratitude to God that a majority of the community wishes to make.

The Court lays waste a longstanding American tradition of nonsectarian prayer to God at public celebrations.

Our Nation's protection, that fortress which is our Constitution, cannot possibly rest upon the changeable philosophical predilections of the Justices of this Court, but must have deep foundations in the historic practices of our people.

United States Court of Appeals - 6th Circuit (1992), in the case of Americans United for Separation of Church and State v. City of Grand Rapids, 980 F.2d 1538, 1555, stated:

What the members of Chabad House seek in this court is fully consistent with, and does not violate, our traditional division between church and state....

They merely ask that they not be spurned because they choose to praise God. Instead of forcing them to remain on our sidelines, our Constitution offers them platform from which to proclaim their message.

In a traditional public forum, as at the ballot box, all citizens are insiders as they seek to influence our civic life.

United States Court of Appeals - 7th Circuit (1992), in the case of Doe v. Small, 964 F.2d 611, 618 (7th Cir. 1992), stated:

The Supreme Court has refused to find the Establishment Clause to be a sufficiently compelling interest to exclude private religious speech even from a limited public forum created by the government.

West Virginia, State of (January 28, 1992), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring March 8 - March 14, 1992, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by the Governor, Gaston Caperton, and the Secretary of State, in the Capitol City of Charleston:

WHEREAS, West Virginia has been richly blessed in natural beauty, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and

WHEREAS, The importance of Christian Heritage to the traditions and values of our state is immeasurable; and

WHEREAS, Religious holidays, festivals and celebrations have brought welcome respite from weary labor, as well as renewed respect and meaning for nature's seasons of change; and

WHEREAS, The community church serves a vital function in binding folk together and providing crucial education and charitable services; and

WHEREAS, Teaching future generations of West Virginians the all important role of Christian Heritage is of crucial concern to West Virginians of all faiths;

NOW, THEREFORE, Be it Resolved that I, Gaston Caperton, Governor of the State of West Virginia, do hereby proclaim March 8, 1992 through March 14, 1992 as:

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in West Virginia.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of West Virginia to be affixed.

Done at the Capitol, City of Charleston, State of West Virginia, this Twenty-eighth day of January, in the year of our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred Ninety-two and in the One Hundred Twenty-ninth year of the State.

Gaston Caperton, Governor
by the Governor, Secretary of State.

Ohio, State of (February 18, 1992), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring May 7, 1992, as A Day of Prayer in Ohio, signed by Governor George V. Voinovich, in the Capitol City of Columbus:

STATE OF OHIO
Executive Department
Office of the Governor
COLUMBUS PROCLAMATION

WHEREAS, the National Day of Prayer is a tradition first proclaimed by the Continental Congress in 1775; and

WHEREAS, In 1988, legislation was unanimously ratified by both Houses of Congress and signed by President Ronald Reagan stating that the National Day of Prayer was to be observed on the first Thursday of every May; and

WHEREAS, President George Bush has set aside May 7, 1992, as the 41st consecutive observance of the National Day of Prayer; and

American Quotations.txt

WHEREAS, it is fitting and proper to give thanks to the Lord by observing this day in Ohio when all may acknowledge our blessings and express gratitude for them, while recognizing the need for strengthening religious and moral values in our state and nation;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, GEORGE V. VOINOVICH, Governor of the State of Ohio, do hereby proclaim May 7, 1992, as throughout the state of Ohio. I urge all citizens to observe this day in ways appropriate to its importance and significance.

A DAY OF PRAYER IN OHIO

In Testimony Whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the Great Seal of the State of Ohio to be affixed at Columbus, this eighteenth day of February in the year of our Lord, one thousand nine hundred and ninety two.

George V. Voinovich, Governor of the State of Ohio
Bob Taft, Secretary of State.

Kentucky, State of (March 17, 1992), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring May 8 - May 14, 1992, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Brereton C. Jones and Secretary of State Robert A. Babbage, in the Capitol City of Frankfort:

WHEREAS, Our state has been richly blessed in natural beauty, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and

WHEREAS, The importance of Christian Heritage to the traditions and values of our state is immeasurable; and

WHEREAS, Religious holidays, festivals, and celebrations have brought welcome respite from weary labor, as well as renewed respect and meaning for nature's seasons of change; and

WHEREAS, The community church serves a vital function in binding folk together and providing crucial education and charitable services; and

WHEREAS, Teaching future generations of our state the all important role of Christian Heritage is of crucial concern to citizens of all faiths:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Brereton C. Jones, Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, do hereby proclaim May 8 - 14, 1992 as in recognition of our religious heritage.

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

Done At The Capitol, in the City of Frankfort, this the 17th day of March, in the year of our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred Ninety-two and in the year of the Commonwealth the Two Hundredth.

Brereton C. Jones, Governor
Robert A. Babbage, Secretary of State.

United States District Court (March 18, 1992), Western District of Texas - Austin Division, W.O.F. v. Attorney General, Civil No. A-92-CA-089, U.S. District Judge Sam Sparks renders the decision:

On January 13, 1992... the Attorney General of Texas sent to the Plaintiffs, by facsimile transmission, a demand for documents... Both the nature and extent of the documents demanded were not reasonable and included documents clearly the Attorney General was not entitled to obtain from any religious organization and/or church.

The church... clearly had First Amendment rights to assert... Now, after the filing of this lawsuit, the Attorney General admits its demand for documents... and its petition in quo warranto were inappropriate...

The Court finds from the evidence that the conduct of the Attorney General and his personnel... was neither professional nor responsible, bordering on the unethical and constitutes "bad faith." This conduct is not what is expected of attorneys charged with the responsibility of being the legal representatives of the State of Texas.

It is beyond dispute freedoms of religious worship and of association are foundation pillars of our country... For generations Americans have died and been persecuted defending these specific rights.

In this particular case, the Attorney General of the State of Texas has utilized its own interpretation of a statute... to publicly accuse a church of fraud and demand documents clearly constitutionally protected.

The accusation and demand for documents and records are enforced by pleading in quo warranto requesting dissolution of the corporate church, appointment of a receiver to manage its affairs, and an Injunction against its ministers from conducting the business of the church which is admitted (by stipulation) to be a bona fide religious organization.

These circumstances satisfy, in this Court's judgment... the conduct of the Attorney General as "bad faith, harassment or any other unusual circumstance that would require equitable relief."

... the Court finds from the evidence that the Plaintiffs have established that their declining to deliver the records and documents demanded by the Attorney General was an exercise of legitimate and valid First Amendment rights, i.e. constitutionally protected.

Contributors to the church do not seek to purchase goods or services. Plaintiffs do not advertise goods or services for sale. Contributors to the church are not required to give donations in order to receive pamphlets, books or other goods. Nor is a donation required before [someone] will pray over a prayer request or perform other acts.

There is nothing to make contributors to the church believe their contributions are in return for requested materials or acts by the church... In fact, not only do members sometimes make "vows" or contributions without requesting any materials or acts to be performed... but the church makes it a practice to inform persons who seek to "purchase" items that the church no longer sells anything... Contributors to the church are not "consumers," and the Attorney General may not bring a DTPA action to protect their interests....

The Attorney General demanded, amongst other things... [a] list of all persons who have sent contributions to the Church... including name, address, telephone number, amount and date of contribution... The scope and substance of these requests are clearly unconstitutional.

The State has no constitutional authority to know a person's membership in or support of any church. The State has no constitutional authority to know what a person believes, how he or she practices religion, or how he or she supports religious activities.

Nor does the State have constitutional authority to probe into the internal operations of a church... The First Amendment right to freedom of religious belief and freedom of association protects this kind of information.

Implicit in these First Amendments freedoms is privacy of belief and association... Disclosure of who belongs to a group or who contributes to a group, and how much, has been vigorously safeguarded by the United States Supreme Court... The Court has recognized that disclosure to the public, or to the State, of a group's members or contributors can harm the group by subjecting them to harassment or causing new members to not join for fear of disclosure or harassment or other reprisal.

In order to withstand attack under the Establishment Clause, three requirements must be met:

First, the statute must have a secular legislative purpose; second its principal or primary effect must be one that neither advances nor inhibits religion; finally, the statute must not foster an excessive government entanglement with religion...

Plaintiffs' pamphlets, advertisements, television broadcasts, sermons, etc., would be subject to inspection and approval by the Attorney General. Certainly this continual monitoring of the Plaintiffs' activities by the Attorney General would constitute an excessive entanglement...

This would also require the Attorney General to make determinations as to which representations are purely religious and which are secular. The Assistant Attorney Generals assure this Court they can distinguish purely religious assertions from secular assertions... Despite the Assistant Attorney Generals' confidence, this Court does not believe they or any other state officials are authorized to make those kind of determinations.

See e.g. Cantwell v. Connecticut, 310 U.S. 296, 305-06, 60 S.Ct. 900, 904 (1940) (state could not give a state official the power to determine if a solicitation was for a religious cause or not); Lemon, 403 U.S. at 618-19, 91 S.Ct. at 2114 ("With the best of intentions such a teacher would find it hard to make a total separation between secular teaching and religious doctrine").

It is simply not the business of courts or the State to "approve, classify, regulate, or in any manner control sermons delivered at religious meetings" or other forms of religious expression. See Fowler v. Rhode Island, 345 U.S. 526, 527, 73 S.Ct. 526, 527 (1953)....

The Attorney General sought forfeiture of [the church's] charter and dissolution of the corporation and appointment of a Receiver to take possession of the affairs of the [church], to rehabilitate, reorganize, conserve or liquidate the affairs of the corporation and sought a permanent Injunction against the [church], its officers, directors, stockholder, agents, employees, and representatives whomsoever from conducting any business of the [church]....

Application of these remedies to the Plaintiffs is clearly unconstitutional.

It is absurd for the Attorney General to think that it can deprive the Plaintiffs of their rights to freely worship as a group altogether as punishment for the Plaintiffs initial assertion of their First Amendment rights to not produce constitutionally protected documents....

A fine for exercising one's First Amendment rights would clearly be unconstitutional.... Imprisonment would also clearly be unconstitutional, both as a punishment for exercising one's constitutional rights and because it would wholly prevent...exercising an important part of their religious beliefs, which is to spread their religious faith to others.

The Attorney General argues that because Section 501(c)(3) of the Internal Revenue Code includes a corporation operated for religious purposes the Church is a charitable entity. This Court disagrees. A church is not organized for a "civic or public purpose." If the Legislature had intended to incorporate any entity described in the Internal Revenue Code...it could have easily done so.

The church is not a charitable trust, and because jurisdiction in the Travis County Probate Court is based on the church being a charitable trust, that jurisdiction is improper....

The Attorney General cannot, in turn, use allegations of fraud as a sword to violate the Plaintiffs' First Amendment rights....

Article 1396-2.23A specifically exempts a religious institution from having to maintain, and make available to the public financial records "with respect to all financial transaction of the corporation"....

The Attorney General of Texas, is permanently enjoined from pursuing further its...demand for documents and investigation.

Texas, State of (April 7, 1992), issued an Executive Proclamation, declaring April 19 - April 25, 1992, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Ann W. Richards, in the Capitol City of Austin:

OUR state has been richly blessed in natural beauty, reflecting God's miracle of creation.

THE importance of Christian Heritage to the traditions and values of our state is immeasurable.

RELIGIOUS holidays, festivals, and celebrations have brought welcome respite from weary labor, as well as renewed respect and meaning for nature's seasons of change.

THE community church serves a vital function in binding folks together and providing crucial education and charitable services.

TEACHING future generations of our state the all-important role of Christian Heritage is of crucial concern to citizens of all faiths.

THEREFORE, I, Ann W. Richards, Governor of Texas, do hereby proclaim the week beginning Easter Sunday, April 19 through April 25, 1992, as:

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in Texas and urge the appropriate recognition thereof.

In official recognition whereof I hereby affix my signature this 7th day of April, 1992.

Ann Richards, Governor of Texas.

Alabama, State of (April 8, 1992), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring May 3 - May 9, 1992, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Guy Hunt in the City of Montgomery:

WHEREAS, Our state has been blessed in natural beauty, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and

WHEREAS, The importance of Christian Heritage to the traditions and values of our state is immeasurable; and

WHEREAS, religious holidays, festivals and celebrations have brought welcome respite from labor, as well as renewed respect and meaning for nature's changing seasons; and

WHEREAS, The community church serves a vital function in bringing people together and providing educational and charitable services; and

WHEREAS, Teaching future generations of our state the important role of Christian Heritage is of crucial concern to people of all faiths:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Gary Hunt, Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby proclaim May 3 through 9, 1992, as in Alabama, in recognition of our religious heritage.

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

Given Under My Hand, and the Great Seal of the Governor's Office at the State House in the City of Montgomery on this the 8th day of April, 1992, Guy Hunt, Governor.

Iowa, State of (May 23, 1992), Governor Terry Edward Branstad joined the thousands in Des Moines and the estimated 600,000 worldwide in the first international March For Jesus. With over 142 U.S. cities participating and 50 other nations, this yearly event has grown to include an estimated 25 million participants globally. At the end of the march, Governor Terry Branstad addressed the crowd, stating:

It is exciting to see people from all over the world marching today in this very special March For Jesus. We all come together with a common belief in God, and we recognize that we are dependent on the Lord for guidance, that we can't do it by ourselves.

Alaska, State of (July 2, 1992), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 22 - November 28, 1992, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Walter J. Hickel:

Alaska has been richly blessed in natural beauty,

American Quotations.txt

reflecting God's miracle of creation. The importance of Christian Heritage to the traditions and values of our state is immeasurable.

Religious holidays, festivals, and celebrations have brought welcome respite from weary labor, as well as renewed respect and meaning for nature's seasons of change.

The community church serves a vital function in binding folks together and providing crucial education and charitable services. Teaching future generations of our state the all important role of Christian Heritage is of concern to citizens of all faiths.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Walter J. Hickel, Governor of the State of Alaska, do hereby proclaim November 22 through 28, 1992, as:

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in Alaska, and urge all Alaskans to reflect upon this foundation of our nation.

DATED: July 2, 1992

Done by

Walter J. Hickel, Governor who has also authorized the Seal of the State of Alaska to be affixed to this proclamation.

Kentucky, State of (July 14, 1992), in the Regular Session of the General Assembly of the Legislature, passed Kentucky Revised Statute, Title XIII, Education, 158.195, regarding conduct of schools, which was signed into law by Governor Brereton Jones:

158.195. Reading and posting in public schools of texts and documents on American history and heritage. - Local school boards may allow any teacher or administrator in a public school district of the Commonwealth to read or post in a public school building, classroom, or event any excerpts or portions of the National Motto, the National Anthem, the Pledge of Allegiance, the Preamble to the Kentucky Constitution, the Declaration of Independence, the Mayflower Pact, the writings, speeches, documents, and proclamations of the founding fathers and presidents of the United States, U.S. Supreme Court decisions, and acts of the U.S. Congress, including the published text of the Congressional Record.

There shall be no content-based censorship of American history or heritage in the Commonwealth based on religious references in these writings, documents, and records. (Enact. Acts 1992, ch. 170, Section 4, effective July 14, 1992.)

South Carolina, State of (July 26, 1992), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring July 26 - August 1, 1992, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Carroll A. Campbell, Jr.:

WHEREAS, Our state has been richly blessed in natural beauty, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and

WHEREAS, The importance of Christian Heritage to the traditions and values of our state is immeasurable; and

American Quotations.txt

WHEREAS, Religious holidays, festivals and celebrations have brought welcome respite from weary labor, as well as renewed respect and meaning for nature's seasons of change; and

WHEREAS, The community church serves a vital function in binding folk together and providing crucial education and charitable services; and

WHEREAS, Teaching future generations of our state the all important role of Christian Heritage is of crucial concern to citizens of all faiths.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Carroll A. Campbell, Jr., Governor of the State of South Carolina, do hereby proclaim July 26- August 1, 1992, as

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in South Carolina in recognition of our religious heritage.

Carroll A. Campbell, Jr., Governor
State of South Carolina, Office of the Governor.

United States Congress (August 11, 1992), U. S. Representative Nick Joe Rahall II introduced legislation in the 102nd Congress to declare November 22 through November 28, 1992, as "America's Christian Heritage Week." (Reintroduce in the 103rd Congress as Christian Heritage Resolution, H.J. 113). As recorded in the Congressional Record, Vol 138, No. 1, Washington, Wednesday, August 12, 1992, the legislation reads:

America's Christian Heritage Week
Hon. Nick Joe Rahall, II of West Virginia in the House of Representatives
Tuesday, August 11, 1992

Mr. Rahall. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce a House joint resolution calling for the designation of Thanksgiving week as "America's Christian Heritage Week." This year, the proclamation would cover the week of November 22 through November 28. It proclaims that America does, indeed, have a Christian heritage.

Mr. Speaker, one of the first things we, our parents before us, and our children after us, learned in school was that the settlement of America came about because of the desire of oppressed peoples to have the freedom to worship as they please.

At this time in history we as Americans - free men and women - are being called upon to witness emerging democracies struggle with the same potentially politically divisive questions as our Founding Fathers struggled with more than 200 years ago. Questions such as: To what extent should public schools recognize and teach religion? How much should the State regulate a church's charitable activities? Should churches be exempt from general laws? To what extent should church and State be separated?

And while we watch and wait for those emerging democracies to turn from the long held atheism of communism to true religious freedoms, we find ourselves, with heavy hearts, watching our own Government succumb to pressures to distant itself from God and religion. All because of a simple constitutional prohibition of a State-sponsored church, our own Government and higher court has allowed it to evolve into bans against the simple freedom as:

First, representation of the Ten Commandments on government buildings;

Second, Christmas manger scenes on public property;

Third, prayer in schools; and Fourth, prayer at public meetings - including high school graduation ceremonies.

We seem to be bowing to pressure to seek a blind standard of legislative amorality, with a total exclusion of the mention of God in the public square, instead of a national morality based on religious principles of which Washington spoke.

Such a standard of religious exclusion is absolutely and unequivocally counter to the intention of those who designed our Government. It was not, in my view, mere chance that placed the freedom to worship according to individual conscience among the first freedoms specified in the Bill of Rights - freedoms that must flourish together or perish separately.

The Founding Fathers understood this country's religious heritage. But as Samuel Adams said: "I thank God that I have lived to see my country independent and free. She may long enjoy her independence and freedom if she will. It depends upon her virtue."

In other words, it depends upon us.

When Abraham Lincoln sat apart a day for national prayer and humiliation, he cried out: "We have grown in numbers, wealth and power as no other nation has ever grown. But we have forgotten God."

At a time of increasing focus on family values by us as individuals, as political parties, as religious groups, as communities, let us set aside an occasion of celebration to help us make our families truly free by teaching them that God holds us all accountable.

It depends upon all of us whether America long enjoys her independence and freedom - and it depends upon our virtue.

As legislators let us each try never to support legislation that sponsors laws contrary to the laws of God.

The freedom we give thanks for daily, and the freedom we especially celebrate on Thanksgiving day, is at stake when we can no longer hear a child's prayer in school, or a benediction at a high school students' graduation ceremony.

Let us all be wise and remember the source of our many blessings, and never be timid or apologetic in sharing this knowledge with others.

There is no better place than this great land of America for people to embrace and declare that our trust is in God, and that we look to His commandments and teachings for values that fortify and give direction to our families.

This resolution I introduce today is like many others we have voted on in this body - in celebration of prayer, of Bible reading, of our trust in God.

We as Members of Congress begin our session in the House Chamber with a prayer and we follow it by a pledge of allegiance which contains the words, "one Nation under God, indivisible..." a change brought about at President Eisenhower's bidding, approved by Congress on June 14, 1956. At that time, President Eisenhower said, "In this way we are reaffirming the transcendence of religious faith in America's heritage and future, in this way we shall constantly strengthen those spiritual weapons which forever will be our country's most powerful resource in peace and in war."

As Members we are deeply familiar with George Washington's Thanksgiving Proclamation, acknowledging the Providence of Almighty God.

In October 1982 President Ronald Reagan signed a joint resolution of Congress proclaiming the year 1983 as the "Year of the Bible."

More recently in 1990, President George Bush proclaimed 1990 as "International Year of Bible Reading." President Bush issued another proclamation in 1991, calling for a National Day of Prayer on February 3, 1991, to keep our fighting men and women safe while they sought the liberation of Kuwait.

My colleagues, we are not strangers to resolutions recognizing, observing, proclaiming this Government's belief in and reliance in Almighty God, and the power of prayer to strengthen us and guide us as a nation in all that we do here and throughout the world.

I invite each of you to cosponsor the resolution I have introduced today, proclaiming the week of November 22 through November 28, 1992, as "America's Christian Heritage Week." I pray that it will be given the support and cosponsorship it deserves and that it will become law in time for our prayerful observances, each in our own ways, at Thanksgiving time this year.

Mississippi, State of (October 5, 1992), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring October 11 - October 17, 1992, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Kirk Fordice and the Secretary of State, in the Capitol City of Jackson:

WHEREAS, The people of the State of Mississippi desire to recognize and commemorate the Christian Heritage of the United States of America; and

WHEREAS, The Christian Heritage of our nation is recognized in the accomplishments of such renowned individuals as Christopher Columbus, William Bradford, George Washington, John Hancock, Abigail Adams, Noah Webster, Abraham Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson; and

WHEREAS, The rights of citizens to be fully educated as to the Christian Heritage of our nation is recognized by the United States as a voluntary exercise of the freedom of educational choice; and

WHEREAS, The Christian faith has been historically documented as a foundational influence on the inception, formation, structure and culture of our nation:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Kirk Fordice, Governor of the State of Mississippi, do hereby proclaim October 11 through October 17, 1992

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in Mississippi and encourage our citizens to join in recognizing the historical Christian Heritage of our nation.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Mississippi to be affixed.

Done at the Capitol, in the City of Jackson, the 5th day of October in the year of our Lord, nineteen hundred and ninety-two, and the Independence of the United States of America, the two hundred and seventeenth.

Kirk Fordice, Governor
D.M., Secretary of State.

United States Supreme Court (1993), in the case of Jayne Bray v. Alexandria Women's Health Clinic, Justice Scalia delivered the majority decision, which held that:

A value judgement favoring childbirth over abortion is proper and reasonable enough to be implemented by the allocation of public funds.

United States Court of Appeals - 9th Circuit (1993), in the case of Kreisner v. City of San Diego, 1 F.3d 775, 785, held:

The Committee [erecting the display], like other citizens of diverse views, has a right to express its views publicly in areas traditionally held open for all manner of speech.

Colorado, State of (January 5, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring April 4 - 11, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Roy Romer in the Capitol City of Denver:

WHEREAS, Christian Heritage has contributed to the traditions and values of our state; and

WHEREAS, religious holidays, festivals and celebrations have brought welcome respite for many Coloradans and have renewed the respect and meaning held for nature's changing seasons; and

WHEREAS, the community church has served an important function in bringing people together and in providing education and charitable services; and

WHEREAS, many Colorado churches are observing Christian Heritage Week in celebration of the role Christianity has held in the lives of their members;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Roy Romer Governor of Colorado, proclaim April 4 - 11, 1993, as in the State of Colorado.

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

Given under my hand and the Executive Seal of the State of Colorado, this fifth day of January, 1993.

Roy Romer, Governor.

California, State of (February 11, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring February 14 - 20, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Pete Wilson and the Secretary of State:

WHEREAS, the Judeo-Christian moral traditions upon which our nation was founded have greatly influenced the lives of generations of Americans and the development of our society; and

WHEREAS, these traditions are bolstered by ideals vital to our individual happiness and collective good; and

WHEREAS, these traditions stress the importance of family, religion, personal and societal responsibility, humane and just values, and brotherhood among all mankind; and

WHEREAS, great men and women throughout U.S. history have turned to their religious beliefs not only for their own comfort, strength, and inspirational guidance, but to embolden them in their efforts to promote liberty, humanity, and opportunity for all people; and

WHEREAS, today's culture makes it difficult for mothers and fathers to impart to their children the moral traditions that will enrich their growing years and help them become responsible, productive adults; and

WHEREAS, we must uphold the Judeo-Christian traditions that have for centuries been our nation's strength, for in remembering and celebrating our religious past we can more faithfully strive for a vibrant spiritual future; and

WHEREAS, once again this year, citizens from coast to coast will be joined in celebration of Christian Heritage Week to rededicate themselves to the tenets of Judeo-Christian teaching that have helped make America the greatest nation in the world;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Pete Wilson, Governor of the State of California, do hereby proclaim February 14-20, 1993, as Christian Heritage Week in California and urge all citizens to appropriately celebrate this observance with reverence for the beliefs they cherish and thanks for the blessings in their lives.

In Witness Whereof I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of California to be affixed this 11th day of February, 1993.

Pete Wilson, Governor of California
M. F., Secretary of State.

West Virginia, State of (March 1, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 21 - November 27, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Gaston Caperton and Secretary of State Ken Hechler, in the Capitol City of Charleston. (A similar Proclamation was also signed February 18, 1994.):

WHEREAS, For many West Virginians, life in the one-room schoolhouse began with a daily Pledge of Allegiance, prayer, and Bible reading; and

WHEREAS, The West Virginia Legislature opens each daily session with a prayer to Almighty God; and

WHEREAS, West Virginia has been richly blessed in natural resources, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and

WHEREAS, the Bill of Rights to the Constitution of West Virginia guarantees religious freedom to all citizens; and

WHEREAS, Thanksgiving week is an appropriate time to center attention on thanks to Almighty God for His great and good Providence and for the Christian faith, which is a foundation of American history;

NOW, THEREFORE, Be it Resolved that I, Gaston Caperton, Governor of the State of West Virginia, do hereby proclaim November 21, 1993, through November 21, 1993, as:

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in West Virginia and encourage our citizens to acknowledge and appreciate the religious heritage of our great state and nation.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of West Virginia to be affixed.

DONE at the Capitol City of Charleston, State of West Virginia, this the first day of March, in the year of our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred Ninety-three and in the One Hundred Thirtieth year of the State.

Gaston Caperton, Governor
By the Governor
Ken Hechler, Secretary of State.

Coppell, Texas, City of (April 27, 1993), passed the following resolution:

RESOLUTION No. 042793.1

A RESOLUTION URGING THAT PRAYER BE RETURNED TO THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS AND THAT CITIES ACROSS THE STATE OF TEXAS JOIN IN AN EFFORT TO REINSTATE PRAYER IN THE PUBLIC SCHOOLS BY PASSING SIMILAR RESOLUTIONS AND UNITING IN A GRASS ROOTS MOVEMENT FOR THAT PURPOSE.

WHEREAS, the Constitution of the United States Article (1) states "Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof..."

WHEREAS, our nation was founded upon the many different religious beliefs and ideals of settlers from other countries; and

WHEREAS, our nation was founded on the freedom OF RELIGION and was not founded on the freedom FROM RELIGION; and

WHEREAS, through time court decisions and certain interest groups have contributed to the deterioration of those religious beliefs and ideals to the extent that prayer has been banned from the public school system; and

WHEREAS, public schools are in a unique position to influence and guide the lives of this nation's youth; and

WHEREAS, the City Council strongly believes that reinstatement of prayer in the public schools will move this nation toward those religious ideals and beliefs upon which this nation was founded; and

WHEREAS, the City Council urges all cities across this State to join in an effort to reinstate prayer in the public schools by passing similar resolutions and uniting in a "grass roots" movement for that purpose;

NOW THEREFORE, BE IT RESOLVED BY THE CITY COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF COPPELL, TEXAS:

Section 1. That the City Council of the City of
Page 1274

Coppell, Texas strongly urges that prayer be returned to the public school systems of this nation and invites all cities across this State to join in an effort to reinstate prayer in the public schools by passing similar resolutions and uniting in a grass roots movement for that purpose.

DULY PASSED AND APPROVED by the City Council of the City of Coppell, Texas on this the 27th day of April, 1993.

THE CITY OF COPPELL, TEXAS
By Mark Wolfe, Mayor

ATTEST:
Linda Grau, Assistant City Secretary
b: \Pub Sch Pra. Res.

Missouri, State of (May 3, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 21 - November 27, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Mel Carnahan and the Secretary of State, in the Capitol City of Jefferson. (A similar Proclamation was also signed May 17, 1994):

WHEREAS, For many Missourians, life in the one-room school house began with a daily Pledge of Allegiance, prayer, and Bible reading; and

WHEREAS, The Missouri Legislature opens each daily session with a prayer to Almighty God; and

WHEREAS, Missouri has been richly blessed in natural resources, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and

WHEREAS, The Bill of Rights to the Constitution of Missouri guarantees religious freedom to all citizens; and

WHEREAS, Thanksgiving week is an appropriate time to center attention on thanks to Almighty God for His great and good Providence and for the Christian faith, which is a foundation of American History:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Mel Carnahan, Governor of the State of Missouri, do hereby proclaim November 21 - 27, 1993, as in Missouri and encourage all citizens to acknowledge and appreciate the religious heritage of our great state and nation.

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Missouri, in the City of Jefferson, this 3rd day of May, 1993.

Mel Carnahan, Governor
Attest:
J.M., Secretary of State.

United States Court of Appeals - 7th Circuit (May 17, 1993), rendered its opinion in the case of Walsh v. Boy Scouts of America. In 1989, Elliott Walsh of Hinsdale, an agnostic, had sued the Boy Scouts on behalf of his 10-year-old son, Mark, claiming religious discrimination against the West Suburban Council Tiger Cub Scout chapter. The Court ruled that the Boy Scouts could keep the phrase "duty to God" in their oath, and as a private organization they had the right to exclude anyone who refused to take the oath.

Judge John Coffey, in delivering the 2-1 majority opinion, stated the Boy Scouts did not violate the 1964 Civil Rights Act, as scouting was an activity and not a facility, a membership organization, rather than a "place of public accommodation":

The leadership of many in our government is a testimonial to the success of Boy Scout activities... In recent years, single-parent families, gang activity, the availability of drugs and other factors have increased the dire need for support structures like the Scouts.

When the government, in this instance, through the courts, seeks to regulate the membership of an organization like the Boy Scouts in a way that scuttles its founding principles, we run the risk of undermining one of the seedbeds of virtue that cultivate the sorts of citizens our nation so desperately needs.

United States Supreme Court (June 7, 1993), in the case of Lamb's Chapel v. Center Moriches Union Free School District, rendered a 9-0 unanimous decision, overturning a ruling by the Second U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals. The case involved a New York school district that had rejected the request for facilities, which are made available for other non-curricular uses, to be used for the showing of Dr. James Dobson's film, Turn Your Heart Toward Home. The Supreme Court allowed the film to be shown, thereby upholding the right of freedom of speech, including religious free speech, within the public arena. Free speech, even involving religious content, cannot be restricted by the New York education law, which permits public school facilities to be rented for the purpose of:

Holding social, civic, and recreational meetings and entertainments, and other uses pertaining to the welfare of the community.

During the proceedings, Supreme Court Justice Scalia questioned the school board's attorney:

Justice Scalia: You are here representing both respondents [the State of New York and the school board]... in this argument, and the Attorney General of New York, in his brief defending... the New York rule says that 'Religious advocacy serves the community only in the eyes of its adherents and yields a benefit only to those who already believe.'

Does New York State - I grew up in New York State, and in those days they - they used to have a tax exemption for religious property. Is that still there?

Counsel: Yes, Your Honor, it still is.

Justice Scalia: But they've changed their view, apparently, that -

Counsel; Well, Your Honor -

Justice Scalia: You see - it used to be thought that - that religion - it didn't matter what religion, but it - some code of morality always went with it and was thought, you know, what was called a God-fearing person might be less likely to mug me and rape my sister. That apparently is not the view of New York anymore.

Counsel: Well I'm not sure that that's - that - Justice Scalia: Has this new regime worked very well?
(Laughter)

Justice White, writing the opinion, stated:

The government violates the First Amendment when it denies access to a speaker solely to suppress the point of view he espouses on an otherwise inculcable subject... [the] First Amendment forbids the government to regulate speech in ways that favor some viewpoints or ideas at the expense of others.

Justice Scalia, in his concurring opinion, wrote:

That was not the view of those who adopted our Constitution, who believed that the public virtues inculcated by religion are a public good.
It suffices to point out that during the summer of 1789, when it was in the process of drafting the First Amendment, Congress enacted the famous Northwest Territory Ordinance of 1789, Article III of which provides, "Religion, morality, and knowledge, being necessary to good government and the happiness of mankind, schools and the means of education shall forever be encouraged."

United States Supreme Court (June 7, 1993), in the case of Jones v. Clear Creek Independent School District, 977 F.2d 963, 972 (5th Cir. 1992), upheld the Fifth Circuit Court of Appeals decision permitting student-initiated prayer at high school graduation ceremonies, providing a majority of the class votes to do so:

A majority of students can do what the State acting on its own cannot do to incorporate prayer in public high school graduation ceremonies.

There is a crucial difference between government speech endorsing religion, which the Establishment Clause forbids, and private speech endorsing religion, which the Free speech and Free Exercise Clauses protect.

On June 26, 1995, the U.S. Supreme Court continued to permit student-led prayer at graduation ceremonies by lifting a temporary ban imposed on nine western states by the San Francisco-based 9th Circuit Court of Appeals. Samuel Harris, a student, had challenged Idaho's Grangeville High School's practice of allowing student-led prayer at graduation ceremonies, but the U.S. Supreme Court dismissed the case as moot, thereby allowing the practice of student-led graduation prayer to continue.

Tennessee, State of (June 21, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring August 29 - September 4, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Ned McWherter and Secretary of State Riley C. Darnell, in the Capitol City of Nashville. (A similar Proclamation was signed November 21, 1994.):

WHEREAS, The Constitution of the State of Tennessee states that "All power is inherent in the people, and all free governments are founded on their authority, and instituted for their peace, safety, and happiness... That all men have a natural and indefeasible right to worship Almighty God according to the dictates of their own conscience; that no man can of right be compelled to attend, erect, or support any place of worship, or to maintain any minister against his consent..."; and

WHEREAS, Benjamin Franklin, at the Constitutional Convention in 1787 stated: "It is impossible to build an empire without our Father's aid. I believe the sacred writings which say that 'Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it' (Psalm 127:1); and

WHEREAS, George Washington enunciated: "animated alone by the pure spirit of Christianity, and conducting ourselves as the faithful subjects of our free government, we may enjoy every temporal and spiritual felicity;" and

WHEREAS, Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, wrote: "Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have removed the conviction that these liberties are the gift of God?" and

WHEREAS, James Madison, father of the U. S. Constitution, advocated "the diffusion of the light of Christianity in our nation" in his Memorial and Remonstrance; and

WHEREAS, Patrick Henry quoted Proverbs 14:34 for our nation: "Righteousness alone can exalt a nation, but sin is a disgrace to any people"; and

WHEREAS, George Mason, in his Virginia Declaration of Rights, forerunner to our U. S. Bill of Rights, affirmed: "that it is the mutual duty of all to practice Christian forbearance, love and charity towards each other"; and

WHEREAS, These, and many other truly great men and women of America, giants in the structuring of American history, were Christian statesmen of calibre and integrity who did not hesitate to express their faith;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Ned McWherter, as Governor of the State of Tennessee do hereby proclaim August 29 through September 4, 1993, as in Tennessee and urge all citizens to join me in this worthy observance.

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Tennessee to be affixed at Nashville on this 21st Day of June, 1993.

Ned McWherter, Governor

Riley C. Darnell, Secretary of State.

Texas Supreme Court (June 30, 1993), in the case of Ex Parte: Reverend Keith Tucci, declared that a proposed 100 foot "speech free zone" around abortion facilities violated the Constitution of the State of Texas. The Supreme Court of Texas issued the opinion:

Today our court continues to favor the growth and enhancement of freedom, not its constraint. The fact that vigorous debate of public issues in our society may produce speech considered obnoxious or offensive by some is a necessary cost of that freedom. Our Constitution calls on this court to maintain a commitment to expression that is strong and uncompromising for friend and foe alike.

United States District Court (July 1993), in the case of Black v. City of Atlanta, ordered the City of Atlanta, Georgia, to adopt procedures respecting the rights of pro-life protestors. The ruling encompassed:

1. The fundamental rights of speech, press and religion includes the freedom to engage in prayer, conversation, oratory, display and/or distribution of literature, display of picket signs, reading of scriptures, singing and chanting.

2. City authorities will not interfere with, restrict, or deny the rights of speech, press, or religion, unless an actual obstruction or impediment occurs. Circumstances where physical passage is possible, but discomfort with the messages of a speaker causes a person to avoid the abortion location, are not considered an obstruction or impediment.

3. Public streets and public sidewalks located adjacent to abortion facilities in Atlanta are public forums. The City of Atlanta and its law enforcement personnel shall respect the exercise of free speech rights on these public forums.

Atlanta's law enforcement personnel must allow the greatest tolerance for political and religious expression by its citizens. The Atlanta Police Department's Field Manual will be revised to include the guidelines set forth in the court order. Copies of the court order will be distributed to all police zone and watch commanders.

United States Court of Appeals - 10th Circuit (July 12, 1993), in the case of Cannon v. City and County of Denver, rendered a unanimous decision in favor of two women who picketed near an abortion clinic, stating:

We are convinced that here the message on the signs did not amount to fighting words under the Supreme Court's standards... Furthermore they played an important role in the exposition of ideas. We hold therefore that the rights of the protestors to picket on the public sidewalks in front of the clinic with signs was a clearly established constitutional right at the time of the 1988 arrests in question.

Oklahoma State Court (July 15, 1993), Tulsa County, in the case of Crowley, Gaines and Ries v. Tltn., District Judge Robert J. Scott granted the defendants summary judgement, stating:

Initially Christianity was taught by Christ. He then taught disciples who went out over the world to teach others. This process has spread to a major world body of believers. Religion should be permitted to use contemporary means to communicate religious messages in the form of TV appeal to mass audiences, follow-up communication by computerized mailing designed to convert and symbolic tokens to cause response to the messages.

The context of the message is belief, and the freedom for belief is absolute. When a minister or a church urges one to take certain actions based upon a representation that God will act toward that person in positive and rewarding ways, they are entitled to absolute protection as a belief.

Wisconsin, State of (September 20, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring October 3 - October 9, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Tommy G. Thompson and Secretary of State Douglas La Follet, in the Capitol City of Madison. (A similar Proclamation was also signed November 1, 1994.):

WHEREAS, The Preamble to the Constitution of the State of Wisconsin states that "We, the people of Wisconsin, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, domestic tranquility and to promote the general welfare, do establish this Constitution"; and

WHEREAS, Benjamin Franklin, at the Constitutional Convention in 1787 stated: "It is impossible to build an empire without our Father's aid. I believe the sacred writings which say that 'Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it,'" (Psalm 127:1); and

WHEREAS, George Washington enunciated: "animated alone by the pure spirit of Christianity, and conducting ourselves as the faithful subjects of our free government, we may enjoy every temporal and spiritual felicity"; and

WHEREAS, Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, wrote: "Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have removed the conviction that these liberties are the gift of God?"; and

WHEREAS, James Madison, father of the U. S. Constitution, advocated "the diffusion of the light of Christianity in our nation" in his Memorial and Remonstrance; and

WHEREAS, Patrick Henry quoted Proverbs 14:34 for our nation: "Righteousness alone can exalt a nation, but sin is a disgrace to any people"; and

WHEREAS, George Mason, in his Virginia Declaration of Rights, forerunner to our U. S. Bill of Rights, affirmed: "That it is the mutual duty of all to practice Christian forbearance, love and charity towards each other"; and

WHEREAS, these, and many other great men and women of America, giants in the structuring of American history, were Christian statesmen of calibre and integrity who did not hesitate to express their faith;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Tommy G. Thompson, Governor of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby proclaim October 3 through October 9, 1993

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in the State of Wisconsin, and I commend this observance to all citizens.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Wisconsin to be affixed. Done at the Capitol in the City of Madison this twentieth day of September in the year one thousand nine hundred ninety-three.

Tommy G. Thompson, Governor

American Quotations.txt
By the Governor
Douglas La Follet, Secretary of State.

United States Court of Appeals - 11th Circuit (October 18, 1993), in the case of Chabad - Lubavitch of Georgia v. Miller, No. 92-8008 stated:

Because the religious speech is communicated in a true public forum... the state, by definition, neither endorses nor disapproves of the speech. By permitting religious speech in a public forum - whether in the heart of a core government building, in the Georgia Governor's mansion, or in the outer reaches of some state-owned pasture - the state simply does not endorse, but rather acts in a strictly neutral manner toward, private speech.

Kentucky, State of (November 1, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 21 - November 27, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Brereton C. Jones and Secretary of State Robert A. Babbage, in the Capitol City of Frankfort:

WHEREAS, All 50 state constitutions contain a statement of faith similar to the Preamble to Kentucky's Constitution which recognizes Almighty God to be the source "for all civil, political and religious liberties we enjoy and invoking the continuance of these blessings;" and

WHEREAS, The Pilgrims fathers, in the Mayflower Compact, America's first written constitution, made a covenant to "form a civil body politic" "for the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith;" and

WHEREAS, Our Founding Fathers recognized the nature of this covenant relationship whereby the success and prosperity of the nation is dependent upon America's respect for the Lord and adherence to His ways; and

WHEREAS, In 1863 President Abraham Lincoln issued a proclamation as requested by the United States Senate which recognized that, "It is the duty of nations to own their dependence on the overruling power of god" and, "That those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord."

WHEREAS, In 1789 both Houses of Congress requested President George Washington to issue the First Thanksgiving Proclamation which states: "Whereas, it is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the Providence of Almighty God, to obey His Will, to be grateful for His benefits, and humbly implore His protection, and favor... and unite in most humbly offering our prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions..."

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Brereton C. Jones, Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, do hereby proclaim November 21 - 27, 1993 as

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in Kentucky, and call on the citizens of the
Page 1281

Commonwealth to acknowledge the Providence of Almighty God, the need to obey His Will, be grateful for His benefits, unite in humbly offering prayers and supplications to the great Lord and Ruler of Nations, and beseech Him to pardon our national and other transgressions.

DONE AT THE CAPITOL, in the City of Frankfort, this the 1st day of November, in the year of our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred Ninety-three and in the 202nd year of the Commonwealth.

Brereton C. Jones, Governor
Bob Babbage, Secretary of State.

Delaware, State of (November 14, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 14 - 20, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Thomas R. Carper, and Lieutenant Governor Ruth Ann Minner:

WHEREAS, our nation was founded on the belief that religious freedom was an inherent right of all citizens; and

WHEREAS, the Constitution of the State of Delaware states that "Through Divine Goodness, all men have by nature the rights of worshipping and serving their Creator according to the dictates of their consciences..."; and

WHEREAS, Benjamin Franklin, at the Constitutional Convention in 1787 stated: "It is impossible to build an empire without our Father's aid. I believe the sacred writings which say that 'Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it'" (Psalm 127:1); and

WHEREAS, George Washington enunciated: "animated alone by the pure spirit of Christianity, and conducting ourselves as the faithful subjects of our free government, we may enjoy every temporal and spiritual felicity"; and

WHEREAS, Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, wrote: "Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have removed the conviction that these liberties are the gift of God?"; and

WHEREAS, James Madison, father of the U. S. Constitution, advocated "the diffusion of the light of Christianity in our nation" in his Memorial and Remonstrance; and

WHEREAS, Patrick Henry quoted Proverbs 14:34 for our nation: "Righteousness alone can exalt a nation, but sin is a disgrace to any people"; and

WHEREAS, George Mason, in his Virginia Declaration of Rights, forerunner to our U. S. Bill of Rights, affirmed: "That it is the mutual duty of all to practice Christian forbearance, love and charity towards each other"; and

WHEREAS, these, and many other truly great men and women of America, giants in the structuring of American history, were Christian statesmen of caliber and integrity who relied on their religious beliefs for guidance, strength and comfort.

NOW, THEREFORE, WE, Thomas R. Carper, Governor, and Ruth Ann Minner, Lieutenant Governor, of the State of Delaware, do hereby declare November 14 - 20, 1993, as

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in the State of Delaware, and urge all citizens to recognize the importance of this event.

Ohio, State of (November 17, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 21 - November 27, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor George V. Voinovich, in the Capitol City of Columbus:

In the Name and by the Authority of the State of Ohio
George V. Voinovich
Governor of said State hereby officially designates
November 21 - 27, 1993
as
"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"
throughout the State of Ohio.

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the Great Seal of the State of Ohio to be affixed, at Columbus, this seventeenth day of November,
One Thousand Nine Hundred and Ninety Three.
George V. Voinovich, Governor.

Rhode Island, State of (November 17, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 21 - November 27, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Bruce Sundlun and Secretary of State Barbara M. Leonard:

WHEREAS, On behalf of the citizens of the State of Rhode Island, I am pleased to join with The Concord Christian Connection in recognizing Christian Heritage Week, November 21 - 27, 1993; and

WHEREAS, the Rhode Island Legislature begins each daily session with a prayer to Almighty God; and

WHEREAS, the Bill of Rights to the Constitution of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations guarantees religious freedom to all citizens; and

WHEREAS, As Governor, I am pleased to recognize this Thanksgiving Week as Christian Heritage Week; and

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Bruce Sundlun, Governor of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, do hereby proclaim,

November 21 - 27, 1993
"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in the State Rhode Island.

In recognition whereof I have hereby set my hand and caused the Seal of the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations to be hereunto affixed this 17th day of November, 1993.

Bruce Sundlun, Governor
Barbara M. Leonard, Secretary of State.

Hawaii, State of (December 30, 1993), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring February 12 - 22, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor John Waihee, in the Capitol City of Honolulu:

WHEREAS, the Preamble of the Constitution of the State of Hawaii states, "We, the people of Hawaii, Grateful for Divine Guidance..."; and

WHEREAS, the State Motto, "Ua mau ke ea o ka 'aina i ka pono" - The Life of the Land is Perpetuated in Righteousness - was first uttered by Queen Ke'opuolani as she was baptized into the Christian faith before her death in 1825; and

WHEREAS, King Kamehameha III reiterated his mother's dying words, "Ua mau ke ea o ka 'aina i ka pono," as he gave thanks to God at Kawaiaha'o Church for the return of his kingdom in 1843; and

WHEREAS, the first Hawaiian Christian, Henry Opukahai'a's zeal for Christ and love for the Hawaiian people inspired the first American Board mission to Hawaii in 1820; and

WHEREAS, amid much solemnity and rejoicing the remains of Henry Opukahai'a were returned to Hawaii in 1993, 175 years after his death in Connecticut, and were reinterred at Napo'opo'o, Kona, Hawaii; and

WHEREAS, the influence of Christianity helped to bring about medical aid, public health policies, public education, law and order, political stability and the principles of democracy to the Hawaiian Kingdom; and

WHEREAS, the founding fathers of the United States and many of the leaders who shaped the modern history of Hawaii readily acknowledge their Christian religious heritage as a guiding force in their daily lives and in the conduct of their professional and personal pursuits; and

WHEREAS, the Hawaii Association of Evangelicals has set aside a period in February, 1994, for activities and events to educate the public about the Christian roots of our country and our state; and

WHEREAS, this period - designated as Christian Heritage Week - has been chosen because it is between the birthdays of Presidents Lincoln and Washington, deeply religious leaders who drew great strength and inspiration from their Christian beliefs, and within this period also falls the anniversary of the death of Henry Opukahai'a, recognized as one of the pivotal persons in Hawaii's history;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, John Waihee, Governor of the State of Hawaii, do hereby proclaim the period February 12 through February 22, 1994, to be

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK IN HAWAII"

Done at the State Capitol, in the Executive Chambers, Honolulu, State of Hawaii, this Thirtieth day of December, 1993.

John Waihee, Governor

New York Supreme Court (December 30, 1993), in the Appellate Division, stated in the case of Alfonso v. Fernandez, that the public schools in New York City are:

Prohibited from dispensing condoms to unemancipated minor students without the prior consent of their parents or guardians, or without an opt-out provision....

[The condom distribution plan] is tantamount to condoning promiscuity and sexual permissiveness, and that the exposure to condoms and their ready availability may encourage sexual relations among adolescents at an earlier age and/or with more frequency, thereby weakening their moral and religious values....

[The court agrees that] supplying condoms to students upon request has absolutely nothing to do with education, [but is a] health service....

[Parents should not be] compelled by state authority to send their children into an environment where they will be permitted, even encouraged, to obtain a contraceptive device, which the parents disfavor as a matter of private belief....

The amici miss the point. The primary purpose of the Board of Education is not to serve as a health provider. Its reason for being is education. No judicial or legislative authority directs or permits teachers and other public school educators to dispense condoms to minor, unemancipated students without the knowledge or consent of their parents. Nor do we believe that they have any inherent authority to do so....

[Parents] enjoy a well-recognized liberty interest in rearing and educating their children to accord with their own views, [citing U.S. Supreme Court cases from the 1920's, Pierce v. Society of Sisters and Meyer v. Nebraska] The Constitution gives parents the right to regulate their children's sexual behavior as best they can, [a contraceptive decision] is clearly within the purview of the petitioners' constitutionally protected right to rear their children....

[The AIDS problem cannot force parents] to surrender a parenting right - specifically, to influence and guide the sexual activity of their children without state interference....

The threat of AIDS cannot summarily obliterate this Nation's fundamental values.... We conclude that the condom availability component of the program violates the petitioners' constitutional due process rights to direct the upbringing of their children.

West Virginia, State of (March 12, 1994), passed into law Senate Bill No. 42, signed by Governor Gaston Caperton, which prevents censorship of historical documents because of religious content. Sponsored by West Virginia State Senators Tony Whitlow, Anderson, Miller, Claypole, Ross and Hemlick, this bill was also endorsed by the West Virginia chapter of the National Society of Colonial Dames of America:

Enrolled Committee Substitute for Senate Bill No. 42
Senators Whitlow, Anderson, Miller, Claypole, Ross, and Hemlick)

[Passed March 12, 1994; in effect ninety days from passage.]

AN ACT to amend Article 5, chapter eighteen of the code of West Virginia, one thousand nine hundred thirty-one, as amended, by adding thereto a new section, designated section forty-one, relating to county boards of education; prohibiting the prohibition by county school boards of certain documents based solely on religious references; definitions; and criteria.

Be it enacted by the Legislature of West Virginia:

That Article V, chapter eighteen of the code of West Virginia, one thousand nine hundred thirty-one, as amended, be amended by adding thereto a new section, designated section forty-one, to read as follows:

Article V. County Board of Education.

Section 18-5-41. Content based censorship of American history prohibited.

(a) No county board of education shall prohibit the use as an educational resource or teaching device any historical document related to the founding of the United States of America or any government publication solely because the document contains a religious reference or references: Provided, That the use of such material must serve a bona fide secular educational purpose which does not advance or inhibit a religion or particular religious belief.

(b) (1) As used in subsection (a) of this section, the term "historical document related to the founding of the United States of America" shall include, but not be limited to, such documents as the Declaration of Independence and the United States Constitution.

(2) As used in subsection (a) of this section, the term "government publication" shall include, but not be limited to, such documents as decisions of the United States Supreme Court and Acts of Congress.

(c) In determining the purpose of the use of a document containing a reference to a deity or a religion, consideration shall be given to the overall context of the document's use.

At the signing of the bill into law, Governor Gaston Caperton declared:

This bill prevents censorship of historical documents based of religious references. Educational devices such as the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution of the United States will remain in West Virginia classrooms. Students in our state should have the opportunity...and the privilege...to study those documents that led to the foundation and tradition of our country.

Virginia, State of (March 13, 1994), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring March 13 - March 19, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor George Allen and the Secretary of State Betsy Davis Beamer:

WHEREAS, The Constitution of the Commonwealth of Virginia states "That religion or the duty which we owe to our creator, and the manner of discharging it, can be directed only by reason and conviction; not by force or violence; and, therefore, all men are equally entitled to the free exercise of religion, according to the dictates of conscience; and that it is the mutual duty of all to practice Christian forbearance, love, and charity towards each other;" and

WHEREAS, Benjamin Franklin, at the Constitutional Convention in 1787 stated: "It is impossible to build an empire without our Father's aid. I believe the sacred writings which say that 'Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it,'" (Psalm 127:1); and

WHEREAS, George Washington enunciated "animated alone by the pure spirit of Christianity, and conducting ourselves as the faithful subjects of our free government, we may enjoy every temporal and spiritual felicity;" and

WHEREAS, Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, wrote: "Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have removed the conviction that these liberties are the gift of God?" and

WHEREAS, James Madison, father of the U.S. Constitution, advocated "the diffusion of the light of Christianity in our nation" in his Memorial and Remonstrance; and

WHEREAS, Patrick Henry quoted Proverbs 14:34 for our nation: "Righteousness alone can exalt a nation, but sin is a disgrace to any people;" and

WHEREAS, George Mason, in his Virginia Declaration of Rights, forerunner to our U.S. Bill of Rights, affirmed: "That it is the mutual duty of all to practice Christian forbearance, love and charity towards each other;" and

WHEREAS, these, and many other truly great men and women of America, giants in the structuring of American history, were Christian statesmen of calibre and integrity who did not hesitate to express their faith;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, George Allen, Governor, do hereby recognize March 13 - 19, 1994 as CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK, in the Commonwealth of Virginia, and I call this observance to the attention of all our citizens.

George Allen, Governor

Betsy Davis Beamer, Secretary of the Commonwealth.

Indiana, State of (April 18, 1994) issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 20 - 26, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Evan Bayh and Secretary of State Joseph H. Hogsett, in the Capitol City of Indianapolis. (A similar Proclamation was also signed October 12, 1993):

WHEREAS, Religious holidays, festivals and celebrations add to the cultural mosaic of our state; and

WHEREAS, Churches are a functional part of the many communities in our state, often providing charitable assistance to those in need;

WHEREAS, Thanksgiving week is a fitting time to center attention on the religious heritage of our state;

THEREFORE, I, Evan Bayh, Governor of the State of Indiana, do hereby proclaim November 20 - 26, 1994, as

American Quotations.txt
"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in the state of Indiana.
In Testimony Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Indiana at the Capitol in Indianapolis on this 18th day of April, 1994.

Evan Bayh
By The Governor: Evan Bayh
Governor of Indiana
Attest: Joseph H. Hogsett
Secretary of State.

California Supreme Court (May 16, 1994), delivered a landmark 6-1 decision giving California one of the toughest fetal murder laws in the nation. In the majority opinion, Chief Justice Malcolm Lucas stated:

The third-party killing of a fetus with malice aforethought is murder...as long as the state can show that the fetus has progressed beyond the embryonic stage of seven to eight weeks.

Alaska, State of (August 3, 1994), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 20 - November 26, 1994, as
"Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Walter J. Hickel:

Alaska has been richly blessed in natural beauty, reflecting God's miracle of creation. The importance of our Christian heritage to the traditions and values of our state is immeasurable. Religious holidays, festivals, and celebrations add to the cultural and spiritual mosaic of our state and nation.

The Christian faith has been historically documented as a foundational influence on the inception, formation, structure, and culture of our nation. It is important that our children learn the complete history of our nation, including the historical Christian heritage, from the establishment of our nation to the present date. It is recorded in the accomplishments of such renowned individuals as Christopher Columbus, William Bradford, George Washington, John Hancock, Abigail Adams, Noah Webster, Abraham Lincoln, and Woodrow Wilson.

The community Christian church also serves a vital function in binding folks together and providing crucial education and charitable services. Teaching future generations of our state the all important role of Christian heritage is of concern to citizens of all faiths.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Walter J. Hickel, Governor of the State of Alaska, do hereby proclaim November 20-26, 1994, as:

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

and encourage all Alaskans to reflect upon this foundation of our nation.

Dated: August 3, 1994
Done by Walter J. Hickel, Governor, who has also authorized the seal of the State of Alaska to be affixed to this proclamation.

New Mexico, State of (August 4, 1994), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring October 16 - October 22, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Bruce King and Secretary of State Stephanie Gonzales. (Similar Proclamations were signed August 31, 1993 and September 25, 1991.):

WHEREAS, The Governor of the State of New Mexico desires to recognize and commemorate the Christian Heritage of the United States of America; and

WHEREAS, The Christian Heritage of our nation is recognized in the accomplishments of such renowned individuals as Christopher Columbus, William Bradford, George Washington, John Hancock, Abigail Adams, Noah Webster, Abraham Lincoln, and Woodrow Wilson; and

WHEREAS, It is important that our children learn the complete history of our nation, including the historical Christian Heritage, from the establishment of our nation to the present date; and

WHEREAS, The citizens of our great state and nation may be fully educated about the Christian Heritage of our nation through the voluntary exercise of their constitutional right to the freedom of educational choice; and

WHEREAS, The Christian faith has been historically documented as a foundational influence on the inception, formation, structure and culture of our nation;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Bruce King, Governor of the State of New Mexico, do hereby proclaim October 16 through 22, 1994, as:

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

In New Mexico, Attest
Stephanie Gonzales, Secretary of State
Done at the Executive office this 4th day of August, 1994.

Witness my hand and the Great Seal
Of the State of New Mexico.
Bruce King, Governor.

Mississippi, State of (August 24, 1994), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 20 - November 26, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Kirk Fordice and the Secretary of State, in the Capitol City of Jackson. (A similar Proclamation was also signed August 23, 1993.):

WHEREAS, In 1994, we again reflect on the goals set forth in past years to understand and recapture our Christian Heritage and to reestablish our original freedom of religious concepts; and

WHEREAS, We are reminded of the words of James Madison who in 1778 said, "We have staked the whole future of American civilization, not upon the power of government, far from it. We have staked the future... upon the capacity of each and all of us to govern ourselves, to sustain ourselves, according to the Ten Commandments of God"; and

WHEREAS, James Madison also advocated, "The diffusion of the light of Christianity in our nation" in his Memorial and Remonstrance; and

WHEREAS, Let us now refrain from excluding from our teachings, our textbooks and our thoughts the importance of religious values and activities in America's private, public and political life; and

WHEREAS, May we also remember the words in the Declaration of Independence when the Framers noted, "And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes and our sacred Honor":

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Kirk Fordice, Governor of the State of Mississippi, hereby proclaim November 20 through November 26, 1994,

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in the State of Mississippi and encourage our citizens to join in remembering that individual faith is the power that inspires men of goodwill to lay foundations and to pursue noble goals for themselves and their country.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Mississippi to be affixed.

DONE at the Capitol, in the City of Jackson, August 24, 1994, in the two hundred and nineteenth year of the United States of America.

Kirk Fordice, Governor

By the Governor, D.M., Secretary of State.

Alabama, State of (September 28, 1994), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 20 - November 26, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Jim Folsom, in the City of Montgomery. (Similar Proclamations were also signed by Governor Jim Folsom on August 13, 1993; and by Governor Guy Hunt on December 23, 1992):

WHEREAS, the Preamble to the state Constitution says "We, the people of the State of Alabama, in order to establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and to our posterity, invoking the favor and guidance of Almighty God, do ordain and establish the following Constitution and form of government for the State of Alabama"; and

WHEREAS, Benjamin Franklin, at the Constitutional Convention in 1787 said, "It is impossible to build an empire without our Father's aid. I believe the sacred writings which say that 'Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it'" (Psalm 127:1); and

WHEREAS, George Washington enunciated "animated alone by the pure spirit of Christianity, and conducting ourselves as the faithful subjects of our free government, we may enjoy every temporal and spiritual felicity"; and

WHEREAS, Thomas Jefferson, author of the Declaration of Independence, wrote: "Can the liberties of a nation be secure when we have removed the conviction that these liberties are the gift of God?"; and

American Quotations.txt

WHEREAS, James Madison, father of the U. S. Constitution, advocated "the diffusion of the light of Christianity in our nation" in his memorial and remonstrance; and

WHEREAS, Patrick Henry quoted Proverbs 14: 34 for our nation: "Righteousness alone can exalt a nation, but sin is a disgrace to any people"; and

WHEREAS, George Mason, in his Virginia Declaration of Rights, forerunner to our U.S. Bill of Rights, affirmed: "That it is the mutual duty of all to practice Christian forbearance, love and charity toward each other"; and

WHEREAS, these and many other great men and women of America, giants in the structuring of American history, were Christian statesmen of caliber and integrity who did not hesitate to express their faith:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Jim Folsom, Governor of the State of Alabama, do hereby proclaim November 20-26, 1994, as in Alabama.

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

Given Under My Hand, and the Great Seal of the Governor's Office at the State Capitol in the City of Montgomery on this the 28th day of September, 1994.

Jim Folsom, Governor.

Iowa, State of (October 4, 1994), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 20 - November 26, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Terry E. Branstad and Secretary of State Elaine Baxter, in the Capitol City of Des Moines. (A similar Proclamation was also signed on March 31, 1992):

WHEREAS, Our state has been richly blessed in natural beauty, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and

WHEREAS, The importance of Christian Heritage to the traditions and values of our state is immeasurable; and

WHEREAS, Religious holidays, festivals and celebrations have brought welcome respite from weary labor, as well as renewed respect and meaning for nature's seasons of change; and

WHEREAS, The community church serves a vital function in binding folk together and providing crucial education and charitable services; and

WHEREAS, Teaching future generations of our state the all important role of Christian Heritage is of crucial concern to citizens of all faiths:

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Terry E. Branstad, Governor of the State of Iowa, do hereby proclaim November 20 - November 26, 1994, as in Iowa, in recognition of our religious heritage,

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

In Testimony Whereof, I have hereunto subscribed my name and caused the Great Seal of the State of Iowa to be affixed. Done at Des Moines this 4th day of October in the Year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred ninety-four.

American Quotations.txt
Terry E. Branstad, Governor
Attest Elaine Baxter, Secretary of State

Idaho, State of (October 16, 1994), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring October 16 - 22, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Cecil D. Andrus and Secretary of State Pete T. Cenarrusa, in the Capitol City of Boise. (A similar Proclamation was also signed March 23, 1992.):

WHEREAS, the Preamble to the Constitution of the State of Idaho declares that "We, the people of the State of Idaho, grateful to Almighty God for our freedom, to secure its blessings and promote our common welfare do establish this Constitution."; and

WHEREAS, Idaho has been richly blessed in natural beauty, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and the importance of our Christian Heritage to the traditions and values of Idaho is immeasurable; and

WHEREAS, the Christian Heritage of our nation is recognized in the writings and accomplishments of our citizens and in public documents and utterances made by many prominent Americans including Benjamin Franklin, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison, and Patrick Henry; and

WHEREAS, the history of Christian faith and traditions of our people is reflected in practices in our public institutions and by our government officials; and

WHEREAS, the importance of our Christian Heritage to our institutions' values and vision is invaluable, and teaching future generations the all-important role of Christian Heritage is meaningful to peoples of all faiths, with our community churches serving a vital function in binding citizens together and providing crucial education and charitable services; and

WHEREAS, it is appropriate to set aside a specific time for celebrating our Christian Heritage;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Cecil D. Andrus, Governor of the State of Idaho, do hereby proclaim October 16 through 22, 1994, to be in Idaho, and I encourage our citizens to acknowledge and appreciate the religious heritage of our great state and nation and to observe this week with appropriate ceremonies, activities and programs.

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Idaho at the Capitol of Boise.

Cecil D. Andrus, Governor
Pete T. Cenarrusa, Secretary of State

Kentucky, State of (November 18, 1994), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 20 - November 26, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Brereton C. Jones and Secretary of State Robert A. Babbage, in the Capitol City of Frankfort:

WHEREAS, The Pilgrim fathers, in the Mayflower Compact, America's first written constitution, made a Covenant with Almighty God to "form a civil body politic" "for the glory of God and the advancement of the Christian faith;" and

WHEREAS, Our Founding Fathers recognized that obedience to our Sovereign Lord was the key to national prosperity, and security, and

WHEREAS, The Lord of Glory is recognized in all fifty state constitutions as the Chief Cornerstone of civil government and of all other American institutions, and

WHEREAS, Abraham Lincoln in his great prayer proclamation said, "it is the duty of nations to own their dependence on the overruling power of God" and, "That those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord," and

WHEREAS, George Washington in the first Thanksgiving proclamation said, "It is the duty of all nations to acknowledge this Providence of Almighty God, to obey His Will, to be grateful for His benefits, and humbly implore His protection, and favor..." and

WHEREAS, We reckon time in the Western World and in the United States from the birth of the Son of God (ANNO DOMINI - IN THE YEAR OF OUR LORD), and

WHEREAS, The Commonwealth of Kentucky has made notable contributions to the preserving of our Christian heritage and our constitutional republic,

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Brereton C. Jones, Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, do hereby proclaim November 20 - 26, in the Year of our Lord 1994 as in Kentucky, and call on the citizens of the Commonwealth, in the words of Samuel Adams, "To Restore The Sovereign," to acknowledge His Providence and to make supplication to the Great Ruler of nations for forgiveness of our transgressions and to declare that the LORD IS GOD, and commanded in the Holy Scriptures, and to affirm with Patrick Henry, that we must be "faithful to the Majesty on High which (we) revere above all earthly kings."

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

DONE AT THE CAPITOL, in the City of Frankfort, this Thanksgiving Day, the 18th day of November, in the year of our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred Ninety-four and in the Two Hundred and Third of the Commonwealth.

Brereton C. Jones, Governor
Bob Babbage, Secretary of State.

South Carolina, State of (November 20, 1994), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 20 - November 26, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Carroll A. Campbell, Jr. (A similar Proclamation was signed November 21, 1993.):

WHEREAS, We each have been richly blessed by The Almighty whose divine providence our founding fathers sought as they established these United States of America as a free and independent nation; and

WHEREAS, the contributions of faith and traditions of our people are often reflected in the prayers offered preceding each day's opening of Congress and the General Assembly of this state; and

WHEREAS, The importance of our Christian Heritage to the institutions, values and vision of our nation is immeasurable; and

WHEREAS, Our Christian Heritage is further reflected by our people and our leaders, past and present, in our individual and collective efforts as a nation of peacekeepers and peacemakers to provide for other people, both in America and abroad, by providing humanitarian assistance to our fellow men, women and children; and

WHEREAS, It is appropriate to recognize the Pilgrims' first Thanksgiving for God's providence as a special time and reason for celebrating our nation's Christian heritage.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Carroll A. Campbell, Jr., Governor of the State of South Carolina, do hereby proclaim November 20 - 26, 1994, as

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in South Carolina.

Carroll A. Campbell, Jr., Governor
State of South Carolina, Office of the Governor.

Illinois, State of (February 1, 1995) issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 19-25, 1995, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Jim Edgar and Secretary of State George H. Ryan. (Similar Proclamations were also signed April 5, 1994; June 24, 1993):

WHEREAS, religious holidays, festivals, and celebrations add to the cultural mosaic of our state; and

WHEREAS, churches are a functional part of the communities in our state, often providing charitable assistance to our citizens; and

WHEREAS, Thanksgiving week is an appropriate time to center attention on the religious heritage of our state and nation;

THEREFORE, I, Jim Edgar, Governor of the State of Illinois, proclaim November 19-25, 1995, as CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK in Illinois.

In Witness Whereof, I hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Illinois to be affixed. Done at the Capital, in the City of Springfield, this first day of February, in the Year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and ninety-five, and of the State of Illinois, the one hundred and seventy-seventh.

Jim Edgar, Governor
George H. Ryan, Secretary of State.

West Virginia, State of (February 10, 1995), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 19 - November 25, 1993, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Gaston Caperton and Secretary of State Ken Hechler, in the Capitol City of Charleston:

WHEREAS, West Virginia is richly blessed in natural beauty and natural resources, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and,

WHEREAS, the Bill of Rights to the Constitution of West Virginia and the United States guarantees freedom of religious speech and worship to all citizens of the Mountain State; and

WHEREAS, for many West Virginians, life in the one-room schoolhouse began with a daily Pledge of Allegiance, prayer, and Bible reading; and

WHEREAS, Psalm 127:1 warns, Except the Lord build the house, they labour in vain that build it: except the Lord keep the city, the watchman waketh but in vain; and

WHEREAS, Thanksgiving week is an appropriate time to center attention on thanks to Almighty God for His great and good Providence and for the Christian faith, which is a foundation of American history;

NOW, THEREFORE, Be it Resolved that I, Gaston Caperton, Governor of the State of West Virginia, do hereby proclaim November 19, 1995, through November 25, 1995, as:

"CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK"

in West Virginia and encourage our citizens to acknowledge and appreciate the religious heritage of our great state and nation.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of West Virginia to be affixed.

DONE at the Capitol City of Charleston, State of West Virginia, this the tenth day of February, in the year of our Lord, One Thousand Nine Hundred Ninety-five and in the One Hundred Thirty-second year of the State.

Gaston Caperton, Governor
By the Governor
Ken Hechler, Secretary of State.

Louisiana, State of (March 20, 1995), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 19 - November 25, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Edwin W. Edwards and the Secretary of State, in the Capitol City of Baton Rouge. (Similar Proclamations were also signed March 23, 1994; June 30, 1993):

WHEREAS, throughout the history of our country, prayer has been recognized by our leaders in times of war and peace as a vital part of maintaining a strong national character, and necessary to procure the blessings of a just and benevolent God upon our government and people; and

WHEREAS, the first national Thanksgiving Proclamation was put forth by Samuel Adams as a "National Day of Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer" and was observed by Washington's army in the snowy fields of Valley Forge; and

WHEREAS, the observance of prayer encourages Americans to affirm our nation's spiritual roots, to acknowledge dependence on God and to enlist prayer for local, state and national leaders; and

WHEREAS, it is certainly fitting and proper that we in Louisiana observe a time where all in our communities may acknowledge our many blessings and express gratitude to God for them while recognizing the need for strengthening religious and moral values in our land; and

WHEREAS, it is important that we remember the need to stand in the grace of God every day and we should acknowledge the need to pray for our leaders in government; and

WHEREAS, a time should be set aside to focus on the wisdom of God in the heritage of the United States and the intention of our founding fathers that the counsel of God be always deeply rooted in our makeup and progress as a nation; and

NOW THEREFORE, I, Edwin W. Edwards, Governor of the State of Louisiana, do hereby proclaim November 19-25, 1994 as in the State of Louisiana, and encourage all citizens to acknowledge and appreciate the religious heritage of our great state and nation.

CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand officially and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of the State of Louisiana at the Capital in the City of Baton Rouge, on this the 20rd day of March A.D. 1995.

Edwin W. Edwards, Governor of Louisiana
Attest By The Governor, J.K., Secretary of State.

Wisconsin, State of (June 12, 1995), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 19 - November 25, 1995, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Tommy G. Thompson and Secretary of State Douglas La Follette, in the Capitol City of Madison:

WHEREAS, our state has been richly blessed in natural beauty, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and

WHEREAS, Christian Heritage is important to our state's traditions and values; and

WHEREAS, religious holidays, festivals, and celebrations have brought welcome respite from labor, as well as renewed respect and meaning for nature's seasons of change; and

WHEREAS, the community church serves a vital function in binding folk together and providing crucial education and charitable services; and

WHEREAS, teaching future generations of our state the all important role of Christian heritage is of concern to citizens of all faiths;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Tommy G. Thompson, Governor of the State of Wisconsin, do hereby proclaim November 19 through November 25, 1995
Christian Heritage Week

in the State of Wisconsin, and I commend this observance to all citizens.

In testimony whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Wisconsin to be affixed. Done at the Capitol in the City of Madison this twelfth day of June in the year one thousand nine hundred ninety-five.

Tommy G. Thompson, Governor
Douglas La Follette, Secretary of State.

North Carolina, State of (August 14, 1995), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 19-26, 1995, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor James B. Hunt, Jr.:

WHEREAS, the Governor of the State of North Carolina desires to recognize and commemorate the Christian Heritage of the United States of America; and

WHEREAS, the Christian Heritage of our nation is recognized in the accomplishments of such renowned individuals as Christopher Columbus, William Bradford, George Washington, John Hancock, Abigail Adams, Noah Webster, Abraham Lincoln and Woodrow Wilson, and

WHEREAS, it is important that our children learn the complete history of our nation, including the historical Christian Heritage, from the establishment of our nation to the present date; and

WHEREAS, the citizens of our great state and nation may be fully educated about the Christian Heritage of our nation through the voluntary exercise of their constitutional right to the freedom of educational choice; and

WHEREAS, the Christian faith has been historically documented as a foundational influence on the inception, formation, structure and culture of our nation;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, James B. Hunt, Governor of the State of North Carolina, do hereby proclaim November 19-26, 1995, as "Christian Heritage Week" in North Carolina and commend this observance to all our citizens.

James B. Hunt, Jr., Governor

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and affixed the Great Seal of the State of North Carolina at the Capital of Raleigh this fourteenth day of August in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and ninety-five, and of the independence of the United States of America the two hundred and nineteenth.

New Jersey, State of (October 31, 1995), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 19 - November 25, 1995, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Christine Todd Whitman and Secretary of State Lonna R. Hooks:

WHEREAS, during 1995, we reflect on the goals set forth in past years to understand and recapture our Christian Heritage and to reestablish our original freedom of religious concepts; and

WHEREAS, we are reminded of the words of James Madison, who in 1778 stated, "We have staked the whole future of American civilization, not upon the power of government, far from it. We have staked the future... upon the capacity of each and all of us to govern ourselves, to sustain ourselves, according to the Ten Commandments of God"; and

WHEREAS, George Washington stated, "It is the duty of all nations to acknowledge the providence of Almighty God, to obey His will, to be grateful for His benefits, and humbly to implore His protection, aid, and favors"; and

WHEREAS, we also remember the words in the Declaration of Independence, when the Framers noted, "And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes, and our sacred Honor";

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Christine Todd Whitman, Governor of the State of New Jersey, do hereby proclaim Thanksgiving Week

November 19 to November 25, 1995

as

Christian Heritage Week

in New Jersey, and encourage our citizens to join in remembering that individual faith is in the power that inspires men of goodwill to lay foundations and to pursue noble goals for themselves and for their country.

Given, under my hand and the Great Seal of the State of New Jersey, this thirty-first day of October in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and ninety-five and of the Independence of the United States, the two hundred and nineteenth.

Christine Todd Whitman, Governor

By the Governor, Lonna R. Hooks, Secretary of State.

Tennessee, State of (November 15, 1995), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 19 - November 25, 1995, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Don Sundquist and Secretary of State Riley C. Darnell, in the Capitol City of Nashville:

WHEREAS, the Pilgrims, in the Mayflower Compact (1620), stated their purpose as, "...having undertaken, for the glorie of God, and advancemente of the Christian faith, ... in the presence of God, and one another, covenant & combine our selves together into a civill body politick, for our better ordering & preservation & furtherance of the ends aforesaid;..."; and

WHEREAS, on June 21, 1776, John Adams wrote, "Statesmen, my dear Sir, may plan and speculate for liberty, but it is religion and morality alone, which can establish the principles upon which freedom can securely stand."; and

WHEREAS, our Declaration of Independence declares, "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness."; and

WHEREAS, on June 28, 1787, at the Constitutional Convention, Benjamin Franklin, quoting from Psalm 127:1, warned, "We have been assured, Sir, in the Sacred Writings, that 'except the Lord build the House they labour in vain that build it.'"; and

WHEREAS, the Constitution of the United States of America, in Article 1, Section 7, recognizes Sunday as a day of rest and worship; and is dated "the Seventeenth Day of September in the Year of Our Lord one thousand seven hundred and Eighty seven," thus measuring time from the birth of Jesus Christ (Anno Domini).; and

WHEREAS, Thomas Jefferson, while President of the United States, was also made president of the school board for Washington, D.C. public schools and authored its original plan of education in which he placed the Bible and Watt's Hymnal as two primary reading text.; and

WHEREAS, Thanksgiving week is an appropriate time to center attention on thanks to Almighty God for the "Blessings of Liberty", to ask His help in reinsuring "domestic Tranquility", and to recognize our national need to reaffirm our "reliance on the protection of divine Providence" in keeping America a free and independent Nation,

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Don Sundquist, Governor of the State of Tennessee, do hereby proclaim November 19 through November 25, 1995, as America's Christian Heritage Week in Tennessee, and do urge all Tennesseans to acknowledge, appreciate, and celebrate, each in their own way, America's Christian heritage.

IN WITNESS WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the official seal of the State of Tennessee to be affixed at Nashville on this 15th day of November, 1995.

Don Sundquist, Governor
Riley C. Darnell, Secretary of State.

Connecticut, State of (November 19, 1995), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 19 - November 25, 1995, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor John G. Rowland:

WHEREAS, this nation has been richly blessed by The Lord God Whose Divine Providence our founding fathers sought as they established these United States of America as a free and independent nation; and

WHEREAS, as John Quincy Adams stated, "The highest glory of the American Revolution was that it connected in one indissoluble bond, the principles of civil government with the principles of Christianity"; and

WHEREAS, the Christian heritage of our nation is recognized in the writing and accomplishments of such renowned individuals as Christopher Columbus, William Bradford, George Washington, John and Abigail Adams, James Madison, Patrick Henry, Andrew Jackson, Abraham Lincoln, Woodrow Wilson, Harry S. Truman, Dwight D. Eisenhower, and countless others, and in the Constitution of the several sovereign States, and innumerable public documents and utterances; and

WHEREAS, the history of Christian faith and traditions of our people is reflected in countless practices of the institutions and officials of our government, such as prayer and Scripture reading preceding each and every session of Congress, from its inception until this day; and

WHEREAS, the importance of our Christian heritage to the institutions, values and vision of our nation is immeasurable, and teaching our children about the wisdom and spiritual values of our historical Christian heritage is vital to the preservation of the Republic and the longevity of the nation; and

WHEREAS, it is entirely appropriate to recognize the Pilgrims' First Thanksgiving for God's Providence as a special time and reason for celebrating our nation's Christian heritage; now

American Quotations.txt

THEREFORE, I, John G. Rowland, Governor of the State of Connecticut, do hereby officially designate November 19-25 as Christian Heritage Week in the State of Connecticut.

John G. Rowland, Governor.

New York, State of (November 19, 1995), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 19 - November 25, 1995, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor George E. Pataki:

The Christian heritage of our nation is recognized in the writings and accomplishments of our citizens and in public documents and utterances made by many prominent Americans, including Benjamin Franklin, George Washington, Thomas Jefferson, James Madison and Patrick Henry.

The history of the Christian faith and traditions of our people is reflected in practices in our public institutions and by our government officials.

The importance of our Christian heritage to our institutions' values and vision is invaluable and teaching future generations the all-important role of Christian heritage is meaningful to peoples of all faiths, with our churches serving a vital function in binding citizens together and providing crucial education and charitable services.

Thanksgiving week, traditionally a time to give thanks for our many blessings, has been designated as a time to celebrate Christian heritage.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, George E. Pataki, Governor of the State of New York, do hereby recognize November 19-25, 1995 as

Christian Heritage Week

George E. Pataki, Governor.

Michigan, State of (July 1, 1996), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 24 - November 30, 1996, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor John Engler (A similar Proclamation was issued April 7, 1994):

WHEREAS, The State of Michigan has been blessed with beautiful rivers, lakes, fields, forests, and a people who - through hard work and intellectual effort and toil - have made cultural, industrial, agricultural, and educational advancements for the enrichment of life for our citizens; and

WHEREAS, in addition to having many blessings for which to be thankful, our society is also faced with difficult challenges, international unrest, and uncertain and changing times which test our working people and challenge their beliefs; and

WHEREAS, CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK provides us with the opportunity to contemplate the numerous challenges that we, as a society and a nation, face here at home and throughout the world, and to rededicate ourselves to eradicating the tragedies of homelessness, poverty, violence, war and international conflicts; and

WHEREAS, the observance of Christian Heritage Week encourages Americans to affirm our nation's spiritual roots and is a time to renew and inspire the joy we find in our faith, friends, family, and community members

WHEREAS, It is eminently fitting and proper that we observe CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK as a special time to acknowledge our many blessings and express gratitude to God, while recognizing the need for strengthening religious and moral values in our land;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, John Engler, Governor of the State of Michigan, do hereby declare November 24 - 30, 1996, as CHRISTIAN HERITAGE WEEK in Michigan, and I encourage the citizens of the Great Lakes States to recognize the importance of Christian beliefs and values to the life and culture of our state and nation.

Given under my hand on this first day of July in the year of Our Lord one thousand nine hundred and ninety-six and of the Commonwealth one hundred and fifty-nine.

John Engler
Governor.

Mississippi, State of (July 23, 1996), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 24 - November 30, 1996, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Kirk Fordice, in the Capitol City of Jackson. (A similar Proclamation was also signed November 16, 1995.):

WHEREAS, the State of Mississippi is richly blessed in natural beauty and superb resources, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and

WHEREAS, the writings of the Founding Fathers of this nation, as well as the writings and speeches of those who have led our nation in times of war and peace, clearly demonstrate a consistent and fervent belief in God and the blessings that accrue from Christian beliefs and ideals; and

WHEREAS, the Declaration of Independence declares: "We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable Rights, that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness": and the Declaration of Independence closes: "And for the support of this Declaration, with a firm reliance on the Protection of Divine Providence, we mutually pledge to each other our Lives, our Fortunes, and our sacred Honor"; and

WHEREAS, it has been noted that in his farewell address, George Washington advised: "Of all the dispositions and habits which lead to political prosperity, religion and morality are indispensable supports." And, John Quincy Adams observed, "The highest glory of the American Revolution was this: It connected, in one indissoluble bond, the principles of civil government with the principles of Christianity" (Letter from Plymouth Rock, September 1990); and

WHEREAS, the Bible tells us, "If My people who are called by My name will humble themselves, and pray and seek My face, and turn from their wicked ways, then I will hear from heaven, and will forgive their sin and heal their land" (I Chronicles 7:14):

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Kirk Fordice, Governor of the State of Mississippi, hereby proclaim the week of Thanksgiving, November 24 through November 30, 1996, America's Christian Heritage Week in the State of Mississippi and encourage our citizens to partake of and participate in this time of joy with appropriate celebrations, ceremonies, and prayer. May God bless this state, and may God bless the United States of America.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Mississippi to be affixed.

Done in the City of Jackson, July 23, 1996, in the two hundred and twenty-first year of the United States of America.

Kirk Fordice, Governor.

Kentucky, State of (August 1, 1996), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 24 - November 30, 1996, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Paul E. Patton and Secretary of State John Y. Brown, in the Capitol City of Frankfort:

WHEREAS, We the people of the Commonwealth of Kentucky are grateful to Almighty God for the civil, political, and religious liberties, we enjoy; and

WHEREAS, Our Christian heritage provides an important context for understanding our past which is the key to planning our future; and

WHEREAS, Abraham Lincoln in his great prayer proclamation said, "It is the duty of nations to own their dependence on the overruling power of God" and, "That those nations only are blessed whose God is the Lord"; and

WHEREAS, The birth of Christian camp meetings is believed to have started in 1799 in the Commonwealth of Kentucky; and

WHEREAS, Celebrations of Thanksgiving from the earliest times signified the centrality to Christian society of perseverance in the face of adversity; and

WHEREAS, The Commonwealth of Kentucky has made notable contributions to the preserving of our Christian heritage and our constitutional republic.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Paul E. Patton, Governor of the Commonwealth of Kentucky, do hereby proclaim November 24-30, 1996 as

America's Christian Heritage Week
in Kentucky.

Done at the Capitol, in the City of Frankfort, this the 1st day of August, in the year of Our Lord One Thousand Nine Hundred Ninety-six and in the 205th year of the Commonwealth.

Paul E. Patton, Governor

John Y. Brown, Secretary of State.

Arkansas, State of (August 21, 1996), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 24 - November 30, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Mike Huckabee and Secretary of State Sharon Priest:

WHEREAS, Arkansas is richly blessed in natural beauty and natural resources, reflecting God's miracle of creation; and

WHEREAS, for many Arkansans, life in the one-room school house began with a daily Pledge of Allegiance, prayer and Bible reading; and

WHEREAS, the Preamble to the Constitution of Arkansas declares, "We, the people of the State of Arkansas, grateful to Almighty God for the privilege of choosing our own form of government, for our civil and religious liberty, . . . do ordain and establish this Constitution"; and

WHEREAS, our Christian heritage is seen daily in the character and lives of our citizens and by the many churches throughout the Natural State; and

WHEREAS, steadfast faith sustained our forefathers' survival through years of hardship, isolation and suffering; and

WHEREAS, Thanksgiving week is an appropriate time to center attention on thanks to Almighty God for His great and good Providence and for the Christian faith, which is a foundation of American history;

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Mike Huckabee, acting under the authority vested in me as Governor of the State of Arkansas, do hereby proclaim November 24-30, 1996 as in the State of Arkansas and encourage all citizens to acknowledge and appreciate the heritage of our great state and nation.

"America's Christian Heritage Week"

IN TESTIMONY WHEREOF, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of Arkansas to be affixed this 21st day of August, in the year of our Lord 1996.

Mike Huckabee, Governor
Sharon Priest, Secretary of State.

Maryland, State of (November 24, 1996), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 24 - November 30, 1994, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Parris N. Glendening and Secretary of State John J. Willis:

WHEREAS, The United States has a glorious history of religious freedom, extending from our founding fathers to modern times. . . and, Christians have been a strong influence in our nation and our government ever since the start; and

WHEREAS, Steadfast faith sustained our forefathers' survival through years of hardship, isolation and suffering; and

WHEREAS, On June 21, 1776, John Adams wrote, "Statesmen, my dear Sir, may plan and speculate for liberty, but it is religion and morality alone, which can establish the principles upon which freedom can securely stand"; and

WHEREAS, Thanksgiving week is an appropriate time to center attention on thanks for the blessings our nation has received and remember how much Christians have helped our nation reach its current majestic status.

NOW, THEREFORE, I, Parris N. Glendening, Governor of the State of Maryland, do hereby proclaim November 24-30, 1996 as America's Christian Heritage Week in Maryland, and do commend this observance to all of our citizens.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the
Page 1303

State of Maryland this 24th day of November One Thousand Nine Hundred and Ninety-six.

Parris N. Glendening, Governor
John J. Willis, Secretary of State.

Mississippi, State of (March 23, 2001) Governor Ronnie Musgrove signed a bill into law requiring public schools to display the U.S. National Motto "In God We Trust," which was approved by Congress in 1956 and appears on U.S. currency. In spite of threats by the ACLU, Governor Ronnie Musgrove signed the bill, stating:

Our nation was founded as a godly nation and we put it on our money, "In God We Trust."

West Virginia, State of (June 6, 2001), issued an Executive Proclamation declaring November 18-24, 2001, as "Christian Heritage Week," signed by Governor Bob Wise and Secretary of State Joe Manchin III:

Whereas, the Preamble to the Constitution of West Virginia declares, "Since through Divine Providence we enjoy the blessings of civil, political and religious liberty, we, the people of West Virginia...reaffirm our faith in and constant reliance upon God..."; and,

Whereas, the Bill of Rights to the Constitution of West Virginia guarantees freedom of religious speech and worship to all citizens, and Article 7 Chapter 14 recognizes Sunday as a day of rest and worship; and,

Whereas, for many West Virginians, public school days began with a daily Pledge of Allegiance, prayer and Bible reading; and,

Whereas, the state song, The West Virginia Hills, contains the lyrics, "With their summits bathed in glory, Like our Prince Immanuel's Land!"; and,

Whereas, our Christian heritage is seen daily in the character and lives of our citizens and by the many churches throughout the Mountain State; and,

Whereas, Thanksgiving week is an appropriate time to center attention on our thanks to Almighty God for His great and good Providence and for the Christian faith, which is part of West Virginia's and America's history;

Now, Therefore, Be it resolved that I, Bob Wise, Governor of the State of West Virginia, do hereby proclaim November 18-24, 2001, as:

Christian Heritage Week

in the Mountain State and encourage all citizens to acknowledge, appreciate and celebrate each in their own way the heritage of our great state where our motto is Mountaineers Are Always Free.

In Witness Whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused the Great Seal of the State of West Virginia to be affixed.
Page 1304

Done in the Capitol City of Charleston, State of West Virginia, this Sixth day of June, in the year of our Lord, Two Thousand One, and in the One Hundred Thirty-eighth year of the State.

Bob Wise, Governor
By the Governor:
Joe Manchin III, Secretary of State

United States Congress (September 13, 2001), House Majority Leader Dick Armey issued the following statement regarding a House joint resolution condemning the terrorist attacks against the United States:

America was attacked by an evil, cowardly act of war against the lovers of freedom across this globe.

And it is because of the goodness of the American people that we find it impossible to understand these acts of barbarism.

But we do understand some things - the heartbreak of the families of the victims who lost their lives. And we come together as a nation with empathy. Our hearts cry out against the loss, the injustice, and the mindlessness.

As a nation, we understand the dramatic heroism of the firemen and policemen who rushed in to help. We understand freedom, justice, and most of all security.

And we say to those who committed these crimes, you will be found, and you will be made to pay. We will stand together with the great nations in this world who love civilization, democracy, and we know they'll stand with us.

We will stand against tyranny, as we've done in the past. Do not underestimate our resolve. We are a country who loved freedom so much we risked its peace to defend the freedom of others. We will be vindicated by a world where people are allowed to be free.

United States Congress (October 16, 2001), the U.S. Congress passed House Resolution 248 by a margin of 404-0, urging public schools to display the expression of "God Bless America" as a show of support for the nation. This was in response to several cases around the country where people have objected to displaying the words at schools, saying that religion and patriotism should not be intermixed.

The resolution's sponsor, freshman Rep. Henry Brown, R-S.C., recalled standing on the steps of the evacuated Capitol building on the evening of Sept. 11, and joining Rep. Dana Rohrabacher (CA-45th) and other lawmakers in singing "God Bless America."

Rep. Henry Brown stated:

To threaten a public school for showing the same type of patriotism that we all showed on the Capitol steps is the opposite of what this country is all about.

According to the Associated Press, Brown mentioned a dispute in Rocklin, CA., northeast of Sacramento, where the northern California chapter of the American Civil Liberties Union, on behalf of the parent of a student, asked an elementary school to substitute the American flag for a sign saying "God Bless America." The ACLU, in a statement, said the child felt upset and excluded by the religious tenor of the message. The Rocklin school district refused the request, citing a California Supreme Court decision that found the phrase to be a traditional, patriotic phrase that did not violate constitutional separations of church and state. The national ACLU did not comment on the House vote.

House Congressional Resolution 248 states:

107th CONGRESS, 1st Session, H. CON. RES. 248, CONCURRENT RESOLUTION, Expressing the sense of the Congress that public schools may display the words "God Bless America" as an expression of support for the Nation.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress that public schools may display the words "God Bless America" as an expression of support for the Nation.

Passed the House of Representatives October 16, 2001.

Attest:
Clerk.

United States Congress (November 16, 2001), both Houses of Congress passed Senate Congressional Resolution 83:

One Hundred Seventh Congress of the United States of America

AT THE FIRST SESSION

Begun and held at the City of Washington on Wednesday, the third day of January, two thousand and one Concurrent Resolution, Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring),

SECTION 1. USE OF ROTUNDA OF THE CAPITOL.

The rotunda of the Capitol is authorized to be used at any time on November 27, 2001, or December 4, 2001, for a National Day of Reconciliation where?

(1) the 2 Houses of Congress shall assemble in the rotunda with the Chaplain of the House of Representatives and the Chaplain of the Senate in attendance; and

(2) during this assembly, the Members of the 2
Houses may gather to humbly seek the blessings of Providence for forgiveness, reconciliation, unity, and charity for all people of the United States, thereby assisting the Nation to realize its potential as--

(A) the champion of hope;

(B) the vindicator of the defenseless; and

American Quotations.txt
(C) the guardian of freedom.

SEC. 2. PHYSICAL PREPARATIONS FOR THE ASSEMBLY.

Physical preparations for the assembly shall be carried out in accordance with such conditions as the Architect of the Capitol may prescribe.

Attest:
Secretary of the Senate.

Attest:
Clerk of the House of Representatives.

American Quotations - Conditions of Use. Permission is granted to duplicate up to 10,000 words provided acknowledgement is given to: AMERICAN QUOTATIONS by William J. Federer. For larger projects contact: William J. Federer, P.O. Box 4363, St. Louis, MO 63123, 1-888-USA-WORD voice/fax, www.amerisearch.net.

Editor's Dedication

To my wonderful, patient, supportive wife, Susan, who allowed me to undertake this lifetime study of the lifetime of our country, and whose commitment to stay by my side has been the joy of my life.

To my children: Jessica Joy, William Gabriel, Katharine Melody Faith and Richard Michael, whose names I hope will someday be written in a book for the contributions they will make for the world and for the Lord.

To my parents: Richard Louis and Tirzah Federer, whose sacrifice for all of us children equals that of those in this volume, and whose love and encouragement modeled the family I wish everyone could have.

To you, the reader, that somewhere in this compilation you will be inspired to attempt great things of eternal value.

To our posterity, may the reading of your ancestry be with a pride of great contributions made to the world, instead of from a place of regret from a squandered inheritance. If the latter be the case, be assured it is never too late to emulate the faith, courage and sacrifice of the men and women who preceded you.

. Magna Carta. 1215, signed by King John of England in the meadow of Runnymede. Richard L. Perry, ed., Sources of Our Liberties: Documentary Origins of Individual Liberties in the United States Constitution and Bill of Rights (Chicago: American Bar Foundation, 1978; New York: 1952). Charles E. Rice, The Supreme Court and Public Prayer (New York: Fordham University Press, 1964), p. 159.

. Magna Carta. 1215, signed by King John of England on the meadow of Runnymede. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 138. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 11, p. 4709.

. Magna Carta. 1215. Benjamin Hart, Faith & Freedom - The Christian Roots of American Liberty (Dallas, TX: Lewis and Stanley, 1988), p. 17.

. Aquinas, Thomas. In Pange, Lingua, a hymn for Vespers on the Feast of Corpus Christi, st. I, translated by Edward Caswall. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown & Company, 1855, 1980), p. 139.

. Aquinas, Thomas. In Verbum Supernum Prodiens, a hymn for Lauds on Corpus Christi,

- st. 5, O Salutaris Hostia, Translated by Edward Caswall. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown & Company, 1855, 1980), p. 139.
- . Aquinas, Thomas. 1273, in his work entitled, Summa Theologica. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown & Company, 1855, 1980), p. 140.
 - . Aquinas, Thomas. Statement. Nancy Gibbs, "The Message of Miracles" (New York: Time, April 10, 1995), Vol. 145, No. 15, p. 68.
 - . Eriksson II, Magnus. 1354, in a commission to Paul Knudsen authorizing an expedition to Greenland. Hjalmar R. Holand, A Pre-Columbian Crusade to America (New York: Twayne Publishers, 1962), p. 24; cf. Ingstad, Pole Star, p. 167. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 37.
 - . Wycliffe, John. General Prologue of the Wycliffe Translation of the Bible, 1384. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1863, 1955), p. 1021.
 - . Chaucer, Geoffrey. Canterbury Tales. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 82.
 - . Chaucer, Geoffrey. Canterbury Tales. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 82
 - . Chaucer, Geoffrey. 1387, Canterbury Tales, Prologue, l. 527. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 146.
 - . Chaucer, Geoffrey. Canterbury Tales, The Man of Law's Tale, l. 194. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 147.
 - . Chaucer, Geoffrey. Canterbury Tales, The Man of Law's Tale, l. 582. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 147.
 - . Chaucer, Geoffrey. Retraction inserted at the end of his Tales of Canterbury. Geoffrey Chaucer, The Canterbury Tales, Nevill Coghill, translator (Harmondsworth, Middlesex, England: Penguin Books Ltd.; New York: Viking Penguin, 1951, 1986), pp. 507-508.
 - . Hus, John. 1415, his last words. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 148.
 - . a` Kempis, Thomas. 1420, in his work, Imitation of Christ, book. I, ch. 16. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 149.
 - . a` Kempis, Thomas. 1420, in his work, Imitation of Christ, book. I, ch. 19. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 149.
 - . a` Kempis, Thomas. 1420, in his work, Imitation of Christ, book. III, ch. 5. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 149.
 - . a` Kempis, Thomas. Perry Tanksley, To Love is to Give (Jackson, Mississippi: Allgood Books, Box 1329; Parthenon Press, 201 8th Ave., South, Nashville, Tennessee, 1972), p. 51.
 - . Gutenberg, Johannes. Alphonse De Lamartine, Memories of Celebrated Characters, p. 277. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 202. Gary DeMar, God and Government (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1984), Vol. 2, p. vi. Also rendered from the German tongue as, "Religious truth is captive in a small number of little manuscripts, which guard the common treasures instead of expanding them. Let us break the seal which binds these holy things; let us give wings to truth that it may fly with the Word, no longer prepared at vast expense, but multiplied everlasting by a machine which never wears - to every soul which enters Life." Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 44.

. Gutenberg, Johannes. Alphonse De Lamartine, Memories of Celebrated Characters, p.

287. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 202.

. Hornbook. 1442-1800. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 8, p. 3526. Robert P. Gwinn, et. al., The New Encyclopedia Britannica - Micropaedia (Chicago: Encyclopedia Britannica, Inc., founded 1768, 15th edition), Vol. 6, p. 63-64. Gary DeMar, God and Government - A Biblical And Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), Vol. 1, p. 18.

. Columbus, Christopher. Book of Prophecies. Kay Brigham, translator, Christopher Columbus - His life and discovery in the light of his prophecies (Terrassa, Barcelona: CLIE Publishers, 1990; rendered from the original Spanish Language a compilation of passages from the Bible which the Admiral believed were pertinent to his mission of discovery, selected by Columbus himself with the help of his friend, Fray Gaspar de Gorricio, from Columbus' Libro de las profecias; also in Transcription of Interview, broadcast on the 700 Club, Virginia Beach: Christian Broadcasting Network, October 12, 1992), pp. 53, 61, 82, 85, 86, 115, 124, 125, 127, 129, 131, 167. Washington Irving, Life and Voyages of Christopher Columbus (NY: The Cooperative Publication Society, Inc., 1892), p. 41. August J. Kling, "Columbus-A Layman Christ-bearer to Uncharted Isles." (The Presbyterian Layman, October 1971). Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (NJ: Fleming H. Revell Co., 1977), pp. 31-

33. Gary DeMar, God and Government (Atlanta: American Vision Press, 1982), p. 126. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History

(Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 39. Steve Wilkins, America: The First 350 Years, Tape Album and Study Guide (224 Auburn Avenue, Monroe, LA. 71201, 1988), pp. 3-4. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green

Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 90-91. Rick Wood, Christopher Columbus (Pasadena, CA:

Mission Frontiers-U. S. Center for World Missions, 1992), Vol. 14, No. 9-12, September-

December. Another rendering reads:

At a very early age I began to sail upon the ocean. For more than forty years, I have sailed everywhere that people go.

I prayed to the most merciful Lord about my heart's great desire, and He gave me the spirit and the intelligence for the task: seafaring, astronomy, geometry, arithmetic, skill in drafting spherical maps and placing correctly the cities, rivers, mountains and ports. I also studied cosmology, history, chronology and philosophy.

It was the Lord who put into my mind (I could feel His hand upon me) the fact that it would be possible to sail from here to the Indies. All who heard of my project rejected it with laughter, ridiculing me.

There is no question that the inspiration was from the Holy Spirit, because he comforted me with rays of marvelous illumination from the Holy Scriptures, a strong and clear testimony from the 44 books of the Old Testament, from the four Gospels, and from the 23 Epistles of the blessed Apostles, encouraging me continually to press forward, and without ceasing for a moment they now encourage me to make haste.

Our Lord Jesus desired to perform a very obvious miracle in the voyage to the Indies, to comfort me and the whole people of God. I spent seven years in the royal court, discussing the matter with many persons of great reputation and wisdom in all the arts; and in the end they concluded that it was all foolishness, so they gave it up.

But since things generally came to pass that were predicted by our Savior Jesus Christ, we should also believe that this particular prophecy will come to pass. In support of this, I offer the gospel text, Matt. 24:25, in which Jesus said that all things would pass away, but not his marvelous Word. He affirmed that it was necessary that all things be fulfilled that were prophesied by himself and by the prophets.

I said that I would state my reasons: I hold alone to the sacred and Holy Scriptures, and to the interpretations of prophecy given by certain devout persons.

It is possible that those who see this book will accuse me of being unlearned in literature, of being a layman and a sailor. I reply with the words of Matt. 11:25: "Lord, because thou hast hid these things from the wise and prudent, and hast revealed them unto babes."

The Holy Scripture testifies in the Old Testament by our Redeemer Jesus Christ, that the world must come to an end. The signs of when this must happen are given by Matthew, Mark and Luke. The prophets also predicted many things about it.

Our Redeemer Jesus Christ said that before the end of the world, all things must come to pass that had been written by the prophets.

The prophets wrote in various ways. Isaiah is the one most praised by Jerome, Augustine, and by the other theologians. They all say that Isaiah was not only a prophet, but an evangelist as well. Isaiah goes into great detail in describing future events and in calling all people to our holy catholic faith. Most of the prophecies of Holy Scripture have been fulfilled already...

I am a most unworthy sinner, but I have cried out to the Lord for grace and mercy, and they have covered me completely. I have found the sweetest consolations since I made it my whole purpose to enjoy His marvelous presence.

For the execution of the journey to the Indies I did not make use of intelligence, mathematics or maps. It is simply the fulfillment of what Isaiah had prophesied. All this is what I desire to write down for you in this book.

No one should fear to undertake any task in the name of our Savior, if it is just and if the intention is purely for His holy service. The working out of all things has been assigned to each person by our Lord, but it all happens according to His sovereign will even though He gives advice.

He lacks nothing that it is in the power of men to give him. Oh what a gracious Lord, who desires that people should perform for Him those things for which He holds Himself responsible! Day and night moment by moment, everyone should express to Him their most devoted gratitude.

I said that some of the prophecies remained yet to be fulfilled. These are great and wonderful things for the earth, and the signs are that the Lord is hastening the end. The fact that the gospel must still be preached to so many lands in such a short time, this is what convinces me.

. Columbus, Christopher. Church of the Holy Trinity v. U.S., 143 U.S. 465-468 (1892).

. Columbus, Christopher. Queen Isabella's Commission to Christopher Columbus circa 1490-1492. Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 1.

. Columbus, Christopher. August 3, 1492, as recounted by Bartolome' de Las Casas. Samuel Eliot Morison, Admiral of the Ocean Sea (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1942), p. 149. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 106.

. Columbus, Christopher. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 107.

. Columbus, Christopher. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 107.

American Quotations.txt

. Columbus, Christopher. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 107.

. Columbus, Christopher. 1492, in the opening of the journal of his first voyage. Samuel Eliot Morison, Journals & Other Documents on the Life & Voyage of Christopher Columbus (New York: Heritage Press, 1963), pp. 47-48. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 84.

. Columbus, Christopher. October 8, 10, 12, 16, 28, November 6, 27, December 12, 16, 22, 24, 1492, in his Journal of the First Voyage (El Libro de la Primera Navegacion), as recounted in Bartolome' de Las Casas' abstract, translated into English by Samuel Eliot Morison, Journals & Other Documents on the Life & Voyages of Christopher Columbus (New York: Heritage Press, 1963), pp. 65, 72. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), pp. 150-151. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 85-86. Bjorn Landstrom, Columbus (New York: The Macmillan Co., 1966), pp. 66-75. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 42.

. Columbus, Christopher. Bjorn Landstrom, Columbus (New York: The Macmillan Co., 1966), pp. 66-75. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 41.

. Columbus, Christopher. Bjorn Landstrom, Columbus (New York: The Macmillan Co., 1966), pp. 66-75. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 43. Zvi Dor-Ner, Columbus and the Age of Discovery (New York: Morrow & Co., 1991), p. 150. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 108.

. Columbus, Christopher. Personal Log. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 1.

. Columbus, Christopher. The Random House Dictionary of the English Language - The Unabridged Edition (New York: Random House, Inc., 1966, 1973), p. 224.

. Columbus, Christopher. January 13, 1493, in his journal, as recounted by Bartolome' de Las Casas. Samuel Eliot Morison, Journals & Other Documents on the Life & Voyages of Christopher Columbus (New York: Heritage Press, 1963), p. 152. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 110.

. Columbus, Christopher. February 15, 1493, in a letter to Luis de Sant Angel, Treasurer of Aragon and Chancellor of the Exchequer, sent with correspondence to their Highnesses, King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella of Spain, from on board the ship

Caravel anchored off the Canary Islands. Samuel Eliot Morison, Journals & Other Documents on the Life & Voyages of Christopher Columbus (New York: Heritage Press, 1963), pp. 182-186. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 86-88, 108. J.M. Dickey, compiler, Christopher

Columbus and his Monument, p. 321. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 95. Also in another translation taken from the American History Leaflets, Professors Hart and Channing, editors. Charles W. Eliot, LL.D., ed., American Historical Documents 1000-1904 (New York: P.F. Collier & Son Company, The Harvard Classics, 1910), Vol. 43, pp. 22-28.

. Columbus, Christopher. March 15, 1493, in his Journal of the First Voyage (El Libro de la Primera Navegacion), as recounted in Bartolome' de Las Casas' abstract, translated into English by Samuel Eliot Morison, Journals & Other Documents on the Life & Voyages of Christopher Columbus (New York: Heritage Press, 1963), pp. 65, 72.

John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), pp. 150-151. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 85-86. Bjorn Landstrom, Columbus (New York: The Macmillan Co., 1966), pp. 66-75. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 42.

. Columbus, Christopher. In his letter to Gabriel Sanchez, Spain's General Treasurer 1493. Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 1.

. Columbus, Christopher. Samuel Eliot Morrison, "Christopher Columbus-Mariner" (American Heritage, December 1955), p. 93. Paul G. Humber, Columbus and His Creator (El Cajon, CA: Impact, Institute for Creation Research, October 1991), No. 220, p. ii.

. Columbus, Christopher. In a letter from Queen Isabella to the Pope. Cecil Jane, trans. & ed., The Voyages of Christopher Columbus (London: Argonaut Press, 1930), p.

146. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, Inc., 1991), 10.11.

. Columbus, Christopher. April 9, 1493, in a letter to King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella requesting permission for his second voyage. Samuel Eliot Morrison, Journals

& Other Documents on the Life & Voyages of Christopher Columbus (New York: Heritage Press, 1963), p. 200. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 112.

. Columbus, Christopher. May 29, 1493, permission granted Columbus for a second voyage by the Sovereigns, King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella. Samuel Eliot Morrison, Journals & Other Documents on the Life & Voyages of Christopher Columbus (New York: Heritage Press, 1963), pp. 204-204. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 112-113.

. Columbus, Christopher. November 1495. Michele de Cuneo in a letter to a friend. Samuel Eliot Morrison, Journals & Other Documents on the Life & Voyages of Christopher Columbus (New York: Heritage Press, 1963), pp. 211-220. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 113, 137-138.

. Columbus, Christopher. Letter of Dr. Diego Alvarez Chanca. Felipe Fernandez-Arnesto, Columbus and the Conquest of the Impossible (New York: Saturday Review Press, 1974), p. 118. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 136-137.

. Columbus, Christopher. Letter from Don Cristobal Colon to his son, Don Diego, published by the Duchess of Berwick y Alba. Maurice David, Who was Christopher Columbus? (New York: The Research Publishing Company, 1933), p. 92.

. Columbus, Christopher. October 18, 1498, in a letter to the Sovereigns of Spain while on his third voyage. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 151.

. Columbus, Christopher. Letter from Don Cristobal Colon to his son, Don Diego, published by the Duchess of Berwick y Alba. Maurice David, Who was Christopher Columbus? (New York: The Research Publishing Company, 1933), pp. 68-69.

. Columbus, Christopher. December 26, 1499, Christopher Columbus, as quoted by Ferdinand Columbus, The Life of the Admiral Christopher Columbus, trans. by Benjamin

Keen (New Brunswick, NJ: Rutgers University Press, 1959), p. 219. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992),

p. 117.

. Columbus, Christopher. October 1500, in letter to Dona Juana de Torres, as Columbus was being taken as a prisoner from the Indies to Cadiz. Samuel Eliot Morrison, Journals & Other Documents on the Life & Voyages of Christopher Columbus (New York: Heritage Press, 1963), pp. 290-296. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 118-119. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 151.

. Columbus, Christopher. Samuel Eliot Morrison, Admiral of the Ocean Sea (Boston: Little, Brown and Co., 1942), pp. 6, 206, 476, 494. Paul G. Humber, Columbus and His Creator (El Cajon, CA: Impact, Institute for Creation Research, 1991), No. 220, p. iv, October 1991.

. Columbus, Christopher. Simon Wiesenthal, Sails of Hope (New York: Macmillan Publishing Co., Inc., 1973), p. 122. Paul G. Humber, Columbus and His Creator (El Cajon, CA: Impact, Institute for Creation Research, 1991), No. 220, pp. iii-iv, October 1991.

. Columbus, Christopher. 1501, Christopher Columbus in his Book of Prophecies. Salvador de Madariaga, Christopher Columbus, Being the Life of the Very Magnificent Lord Don Cristobal (New York: Frederick Ungar, 1940, 1967), p. 361. Kay Brigham, Christopher Columbus - His Life and discovery in the light of his prophecies (Terrassa, Barcelona: CLIE Publishers, 1990; rendered from the original Spanish Language as a compilation of passages from the Bible which the Admiral believed were pertinent to his mission of discovery, selected by Columbus himself with the help of his friend, Fray Gaspar de Gorricio), pp. 53, 61, 82, 85, 86, 115, 124, 125, 127, 129, 167. Paul G. Humber, Columbus and His Creator (El Cajon, CA: Impact, Institute for Creation Research, 1991), No. 220, pp. iii-iv, October 1991. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 88.

. Columbus, Christopher. July 7, 1503, in his Lettera Rarissima to Sovereigns, written while shipwrecked on the coast of Jamaica. Samuel Eliot Morison, Journals & Other Documents on the Life & Voyages of Christopher Columbus (New York: Heritage Press, 1963), p. 378. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 122-124.

. Columbus, Christopher. July 7, 1503, in his Lettera Rarissima to the Sovereigns, while on his fourth and final voyage, as translated by Milton Anastos. Notarized English translation. Library of Congress Rare Manuscript Collection, Washington, D.C.

John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), pp. 151-152.

. Columbus, Christopher. Columbus, Libro de las profecias (Book of Prophecies). Kay Brigham, Christopher Columbus - His Life and discovery in the light of his prophecies

(Terrassa, Barcelona: CLIE Publishers, 1990), p. 97. Peter Marshall and David Manuel,

The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 10.13.

. Columbus, Christopher. Signature. Kay Brigham, Christopher Columbus's Book of Prophecies - Reproduction of the Original Manuscript with English Translation (Terrassa, Barcelona: CLIE Publishers, Quincentenary Edition), p. 23.

. Columbus, Christopher. Ferdinand Columbus, The Life of the Admiral Christopher Columbus, trans. by Benjamin Keen (New Brunswick, NJ: Rutgers University Press, 1959), pp. 4-5, 9. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 79-80, 95-96.

. Columbus, Christopher. Bartolome de Las Casas, Historie de las Indias. Samuel Eliot Morison, Admiral of the Ocean Sea (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1942), pp. 45-46. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 96-97.

. Columbus, Christopher. Ferdinand Columbus, The Life of the Admiral Christopher Columbus, trans. Benjamin Keen (New Brunswick, NJ: Rutgers University Press, 1959), pp. 284-285. Wilbur E. Garrett, Columbus and the New World (National Geographic, November 1986), p. 564. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 125.

. Isabella I, Queen of Castile and Aragon. 1490-1492, in her commission to Christopher Columbus. Church of the Holy Trinity v. U.S., 143 U.S. 465-468 (1892). "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 1.

. Isabella I, Queen of Castile and Aragon. In a letter to the Pope. Cecil Jane, trans. & ed., The Voyages of Christopher Columbus (London: Argonaut Press, 1930), p.

American Quotations.txt

146. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 10.11.

. Isabella I, Queen of Castile and Aragon. February 15, 1493, included in correspondence from Columbus on his return trip from having discovered America, to their Highnesses, King Ferdinand and Queen Isabella of Spain, from on board the ship

Caravel anchored off the Canary Islands, in a letter addressed to Luis de Sant Angel,

Treasurer of Aragon and Chancellor of the Exchequer. J.M. Dickey, compiler, Christopher Columbus and his Monument, p. 321. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 95. Also in another translation by Professors Hart and Channing, American History Leaflets. Charles W. Eliot, LL.D., ed., American Historical Documents 1000-1904 (New York: P.F. Collier & Son Company, The Harvard Classics, 1910), Vol. 43, pp. 22-28.

. de Las Casas, Bartolome'. 1530, in his Apologetic History of the Indies (Apologetica Historia de las Indias), ch. 48, translated by George Sanderlin. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 154.

. de Las Casas, Bartolome'. 1550-1563, in the prologue of his book, Historia de las Indias, translated by Rachel Phillips. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 154.

. Criss-Cross. 1475. Victoria Neufel dt, editor, Webster's New World Dictionary of American English (New York, NY: Simon & Schuster, Third College Edition, 1988), p. 328. Gary DeMar, God and Government - A Biblical And Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), Vol. 1, p. 18.

. Criss-Cross. 1475. John Keats, Life and Letters, I. 112, (1818). Robert K. Barnhart, editor, The Barnhart Dictionary of Etymology (Bronx, NY: H.W. Wilson Company, 1988), p. 235. J.A. Simpson and E.S.C. Weiner, editors, The Oxford English Dictionary (Oxford, England: Oxford University Press, Second Edition, 1989), Vol. 2,

p. 29.

. Criss-Cross. 1475. David B. Guralnik, General editor, Webster's New World Dictionary of the American Language - Concise Edition (New York: Rand McNally & Company, The World Publishing Company, 1966) p. 180. J.A. Simpson and E.S.C. Weiner, editors, The Oxford English Dictionary (Oxford, England: Oxford University Press, Second Edition, 1989), Vol. 2, p. 29. Victoria Neufel dt, editor, Webster's New World

Dictionary of American English (New York, NY: Simon & Schuster, Third College Edition, 1988), p. 328.

. Buonarroti, Michelangelo. In his Sonnet. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), pp. 154-155.

. Buonarroti, Michelangelo. In his Sonnet. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 155.

. Buonarroti, Michelangelo. Perry Tanksley, To Love is to Give (Jackson, Mississippi: Allgood Books, Box 1329; Parthenon Press, 201 8th Ave., South, Nashville, Tennessee, 1972), p. 19.

. Luther, Martin. April 18, 1521, in his famous speech at the Diet of Worms. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 155.

. Luther, Martin. Statement. Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), p. 127.

. Luther, Martin. Statement. William Neil, Ph.D., D.D., Concise Dictionary of Religious Quotations (Grand Rapids, MI: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, 1974). p. 9, No. 14.

. Luther, Martin. Statement. Gary DeMar, God and Government-A Biblical and Historical Study, (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1984), Vol. 1, p. viii.

. Luther, Martin. Statement. Ed Erlangen, Luther's Werke, Vol. 51, p. 37. Larry Christenson, The Christian Family (Minneapolis, MN: Bethany Fellowship, Inc., 1970), p. 25.

. Luther, Martin. Statement. Tryon Edwards, D.D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Cyclopedi a of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C.H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), p. 88.

. Luther, Martin. 1529, in his famous hymn, A Mi ghty Fortress (Ein 'Feste Burg). John Bartlett, Bartlett's Famili ar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 156.

. Luther, Martin. 1569, in his Table Talk, 353. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Famili ar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 156.

. Luther, Martin. Statement. Bless Your Heart (series II) (Eden Prairie, MN: Heartland Samplers, Inc., 1990), 4.8.

. Latimer, Hugh. October 16, 1555, spoke his last words to Nicholas Ridley as they were being brought to their execution in Oxford, England. J.R Green, A Short History of the English People (1874), ch. 7. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Famili ar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 158.

. Cortez, Hernando. February 10, 1519, in an address to his men as they embark for Mexico. Henry Morton Robinson, Stout Cortez: A Biograp hy of the Spanish Conquest (New York: Century Co., 1931), pp. 47-48. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 165-166.

. Cortez, Hernando. July 10, 1519, Hernando Cortez sent his First Di spatch to Queen Juana and her son, Charles V, from the city of Vera Cruz. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Famili ar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 156.

. Cortez, Hernando. 1519. Francisco Lopez de Gomara, Cortez: The Life of the Conqueror by His Secretary (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1552, 1964). Bernal Diaz del Castillo, The True History of the Conquest of New Spain by Bernal Diaz del Castillo, One of Its Conquerors (London: Hakluyt Society, 1568, 1908). John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 147-170.

. Cortez, Hernando. 1519, in Cozumel, Mexico. Francisco Lopez de Gomara, Cortez: The Life of the Conqueror by His Secretary (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1552, 1964), chap. 13, p. 33. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ

(Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 170.

. Cortez, Hernando. 1519, to the Tabascan tribe in Mexico. Francisco Lopez de Gomara, Cortez: The Life of the Conqueror by His Secretary (Berkeley: University of California Press, 1552, 1964), chap. 23, p. 51. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 173.

. Cortez, Hernando. 1519, in referring to the Cempoallan tribe. Bernal Diaz del Castillo, The True History of the Conquest of New Spain by Bernal Diaz del Castillo,

One of Its Conquerors (London: Hakluyt Society, 1568, 1908), Vol. I, chap. 51, p. 186. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 190.

. Cortez, Hernando. 1519, in fighting the Tlaxcalan tribe. Bernal Diaz del Castillo, The True History of the Conquest of New Spain by Bernal Diaz del Castillo,

One of Its Conquerors (London: Hakluyt Society, 1568, 1908), Vol. I, chap. 62, p. 228. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 192.

. Cortez, Hernando. 1519, in talking with Montezuma's ambassadors. Bernal Diaz del Castillo, The True History of the Conquest of New Spain by Bernal Diaz del Castillo,

American Quotations.txt

- One of Its Conquerors (London: Hakluyt Society, 1568, 1908), Vol. I, chap. 40, pp. 148-149. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 187.
- . Cortez, Hernando. In discoursing with Montezuma. Diaz, Bernal Diaz del Castillo, The True History of the Conquest of New Spain by Bernal Diaz del Castillo, One of Its Conquerors (London: Hakluyt Society, 1568, 1908), Vol. II, chap. 89, p. 54. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 200.
- . Cortez, Hernando. 1519. Maurice Collis, Cortez and Montezuma (London: Faber & Faber, 1954), pp. 56-57. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 184.
- . Cortez, Hernando. 1519 in a discourse with Montezuma. Bernal Diaz del Castillo, The True History of the Conquest of New Spain by Bernal Diaz del Castillo, One of Its Conquerors (London: Hakluyt Society, 1568, 1908), Vol. II, chap. 90, pp. 56-57. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 200-201.
- . Cortez, Hernando. 1519, in discoursing with Montezuma. Bernal Diaz del Castillo, The True History of the Conquest of New Spain by Bernal Diaz del Castillo, One of Its Conquerors (London: Hakluyt Society, 1568, 1908), Vol. II, chap. 92, p. 78. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 205.
- . Cortez, Hernando. 1519, at the death of Montezuma. Bernal Diaz del Castillo, The True History of the Conquest of New Spain by Bernal Diaz del Castillo, One of Its Conquerors (London: Hakluyt Society, 1568, 1908), Vol. II, chap. 126, p. 238. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 225.
- . Cortez, Hernando. December 26, 1520, in addressing his troop prior to marching to Mexico city the second time. Francisco Lopez de Gomara, Cortez: The Life of the Conqueror by His Secretary (Berkeley: University of California, 1552, 1964), chap. 120, pp. 241-242. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), pp. 236-237.
- . Cortez, Hernando. Inscription on his coat of arms. John Eidsmoe, Columbus & Cortez, Conquerors for Christ (Green Forest, AR: New Leaf Press, 1992), p. 265.
- . Pare', Ambroise. Favorite saying. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 162.
- . Knox, John. Inscription on the Reformation Monument in Geneva, Switzerland. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 162.
- . William I, Prince of Orange. 1584, his last words after being shot. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 166.
- . Elizabeth I, Queen of England. Her response to the question as to Christ's presence in the Sacrament of Eucharist. S. Clarke, Marrow of Ecclesiastical History [ed. 1675], pt. II, Life of Queen Elizabeth. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 164. Burton Stevenson, The Home Book of Quotations - Classical & Modern (New York: Dodd, Mead & Company, 1967).
- . Elizabeth I, Queen of England. Chamberlin, Sayings of Queen Elizabeth. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 163.
- . Elizabeth I, Queen of England. 1601, in The Golden Speech. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p.

164.

. Elizabeth I, Queen of England. Speaking to her Ladies regarding her epitaph. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 164.

. Raleigh, Sir Walter. 1584. United States Supreme Court, Church of the Holy Trinity v. U.S., 143 U.S 465-468 (1892), Justice David Josiah Brewer.

. Raleigh, Sir Walter. 1618, in a poem left in his Bible which was found in the Gatehouse at Westminster after his death. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 173.

. Bacon, Sir Francis. Statement. Henry M. Morris, Men of Science-Men of God (El Cajon, CA: Masters Books, A Division of Creation Life Publishers, Inc., 1990), pp. 13-15.

. Bacon, Sir Francis. In his work entitled, Essays: Of Goodness. Tryon Edwards, D.D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Cyclopedi a of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C.H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), p. 91. Burton

Stevenson, The Home Book of Quotations - Classical & Modern (New York: Dodd, Mead and Company, 1967), p. 265

. Bacon, Sir Francis. Statement regarding science. Encycl ope di a of Phi losophy, s.v. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 48.

. Bacon, Sir Francis. 1605, in his work entitled, The Advancement of Learning, book II, chapter xx, p. 8. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 179.

. Bacon, Sir Francis. 1605, in his work entitled, The Advancement of Learning, book II, chapter. xxii, p. 14. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 179.

. Bacon, Sir Francis. In his work entitled, Of Atheism. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 180.

. Bacon, Sir Francis. Literary and Religious Works of Francis Bacon, Vol. II, pp. 152-154. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 22.

. Bacon, Sir Francis. Benjamin Franklin Morris The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia, PA: L. Johnson & Co., 1863; George W. Childs, 1864), p. 228.

. Bacon, Sir Francis. 1626, statement in his Last Will and Testament. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 181.

. Galilei, Galileo. Sarah K. Bolton, Famous Men of Science, p. 16. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 165. Ken Curtis, Ph.D., et. al., "More Than Man Can Understand By Himself" (Worcester, PA: Glimpses, published by the Christian History Institute, 1995), p. 1.

. Galileo, Galilei. New Catholic Encycl ope di a, s.v. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 48.

. Galilei, Galileo. Sarah K. Bolton, Famous Men of Science, p. 18. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 165.

. Shakespeare, William. 1591, in King Henry the Sixth, Part II, act II, scene i, line 34. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 185.

. Shakespeare, William. 1591, in King Henry the Sixth, Part II, act II, scene i, line 66. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and

American Quotations.txt

- Company, 1855, 1980), p. 185.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1591, in King Henry the Sixth, Part II, act II, scene iii, line 55. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 185.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1591, in King Henry the Sixth, Part III, act V, scene v, line 7. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 186.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1592-1593, in King Richard the Third, act I, scene iv, line 2. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 187.
- . Shakespeare, William. Richard the Third, act I, scene 4. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 405.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1595-1596, in King Richard the Second, act IV, scene i, line 97. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 193. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 406.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1595-1596, in King Richard the Second, act IV, scene i, line 170. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 193.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1595-1596, in King Richard the Second, act IV, scene i, line 239. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 193.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1596-1597, in The Merchant of Venice, act I, scene ii, line 59. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 198.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1596-1597, in The Merchant of Venice, act I, scene iii, line 99. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 198. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 405.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1596-1597, in The Merchant of Venice, in act IV, scene i, line 184. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 200.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1598, in I Henry IV, Act i, sc. 1, l. 18. Burton Stevenson, The Home Book of Quotations (New York: Dodd, Mead & Company, 1967), p. 264. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 406.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1598-1600, in King Henry the Fifth, act III, scene vi, line 181. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 207.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1598-1600, in King Henry the Fifth, in act IV, scene i, line 309. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 208.
- . Shakespeare, William. Hamlet, act I, scene I. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 405.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1600-1691 in Hamlet, act III, scene i, line 150. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 221.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1600-1691 in Hamlet, act III, scene iv, line 149. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 223.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1600-1691 in Hamlet, act V, scene i, line 84. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 224.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1604-1605, in Othello, act I, scene i, line 108. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 229.
- . Shakespeare, William. 1604-1605, in Othello, act II, scene iii, line 106. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 230.

. Shakespeare, William. 1604-1605, in Othello, act II, scene iii, line 293. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 230.

. Shakespeare, William. 1613, in King Henry the Eighth, act III, scene ii, line 456. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 249.

. Shakespeare, William. 1613, in King Henry the Eighth, act V, scene v, line 51. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 249.

. Shakespeare, William. Bless Your Heart (series II) (Eden Prairie, MN: Heartland Sampler, Inc., 1990), 7.20.

. Shakespeare, William. 1616, first clause in his last will. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 405.

. Shakespeare, William. 1616, lines carved on his tombstone, Holy Trinity Church, Stratford-on-Avon, England. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 15, p. 7372.

. Florida, St. Johns River Settlement. June 30, 1564, as recorded by French Huguenot leader, Rene de Laudonniere. Diana Karter Appelbaum, Thanksgiving: An American Holiday, An American History (New York: Facts on File Publications, 1984), pp. 14-15. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 22.

. Quiros, Pedro Fernandez de. May 14, 1606, proclamation read on discovering island near Australia. Michael de Looper, "Pedro Fernandez de Quiros," Understanding

Our Christian Heritage 2 (1989), p. 34-37. Sir Clements Markham, ed, The Voyages of Pedro Fernandez De Quiros, 1595 to 1606 (Lessing-Druckerei -Wiesbaden: Hakluyt Society, 1904), 2 volumes, especially vol. 1, pp. 244-252. George Collingridge, The Discovery of Australia: A critical documentary, and historic investigation concerning the priority of discovery in Australia by Europeans before the arrival of Lieut.

James Cook, in the Endeavour, in the year 1770 (Sydney: Hayes Brothers, 1985), pp.

217-237. Elizabeth Rogers Kotlowski, Southland of the Holy Spirit - A Christian History of Australia (Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia; Publisher Dr. Graham McLennan, 1994), pp. 78-79.

. Brewster, William. 1644, as described in William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, from the original manuscript; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), pp. 314-319.

. Brewster, William. As described in William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, from the original manuscript; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), p. Verna M.

Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America -

Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 185. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaïne Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 69.

. Brewster, William. December 15, 1617, in a letter written from William Brewster and the congregation's pastor, John Robinson, from Leyden (Holland) to Edwin Sandys, a London financier. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D. C. ; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968;

American Quotations.txt

NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), pp. 34-35. Sacvan Bercovitch, ed., Typology and Early American Literature (Cambridge: University of Massachusetts Press, 1972), p. 104. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 11.16.

. Brewster, William. 1629, comment after a church was founded in the Massachusetts Bay Colony. Leonard Bacon, The Genesis of the New England Church (New York: Harper and Brothers, Publishers, 1874), p. 475. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), pp. 88-89.

. Brewster, William. 1643, in recounting the death of Mr. William Brewster. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, from the original manuscript; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), p. 314.

. Kepler, Johann. Sir David Brewster, biography. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 266. Henry M. Morris, Men of Science - Men of God (El Cajon, CA: Master Books, Creation Life Publishers, Inc., 1990), pp. 11-13.

. Kepler, Johannes. Harmony of Worlds. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 266.

. Kepler, Johannes. Homage to the Book, p. 84. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 266.

. Donne, John. 1624, Devotions upon Emergent Occasions, No. 17. John Donne, Poems (1633). John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 254.

. Donne, John. 1609-1617, in his Holy Sonnets, No. 14, Line 1. John Donne, Poems (1633). John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 254.

. Donne, John. Autumn 1622, in a message delivered to the Earl of Carlisle. John Donne, LXXX Sermons, (1640), No. 76. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), pp. 254-255.

. Donne, John. 1625, in a message delivered Christmas Day. John Donne, LXXX Sermons, (1640), No. 3. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 255.

. Donne, John. December 12, 1626, in a message delivered at the funeral of Sir William Cokayne. LXXX Sermons (1640), No. 80. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 255.

. Pory, John. July 30, 1619, in the first Representative Assembly at Jamestown, Virginia, in the House of Burgesses; recorded by John Pory, secretary of the Colony.

Marker outside original Church Tower, Jamestown Island, Virginia. Association for the Preservation of Virginia Antiquities. Collections of the New-York Historical Society, 2nd series, New York, 1857, Vol. III, Pt. 1, pp. 335-358: "Proceedings of the First Assembly of Virginia, 1619." The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. I, pp. 40, 43, 45.

American Quotations.txt

. Robinson, John. Verna H. Hall, Christian History of the Constitution (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1975), p. 200. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 85.

. Robinson, John. Robert Ashton, ed., The Works of John Robinson, Pastor of the Pilgrim Fathers (London: John Snow, 1851), Vol. 2, pp. 140-141. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), pp. 83-84.

. Robinson, John. Robert P. Gwinn, et. al., The New Encyclopedia Britannica - Micropaedia (Chicago: Encyclopedia Britannica, Inc., founded 1768, 15th edition, 1993), Vol. 10, p. 115.

. Robinson, John. July 22, 1620, in a sermon to the Pilgrims as they departed Delft Haven for England aboard the "Speedwell." John Robinson, Answer to a Letter inferring Public Communion in the Parish Assemblies upon private with godly persons there. Leyden, Holland, 1615. Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D. C.

. Bulkeley, Peter. 1651. The Gospel Covenant; or the Covenant of Grace Opened (London: 2nd edition, 1651), pp. 431-32. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. I, pp. 221-212. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 11. 23.

. Bulkeley, Peter. 1651. The Gospel Covenant; or the Covenant of Grace Opened (London: 2nd edition, 1651), pp. 431-32. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. I, p. 212.

. Grotius, Hugo. James Madison, Examination of the British Doctrine, 1806. Verna M. Hall, Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America: Christian Self-Government (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1966, 1980), p. 250. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 62.

. Grotius, Hugo. 1625. Hugo Grotius, The Rights of War and Peace, (Amsterdam, 1933), 1: 4. 1. 3. William Vasilio Sotirovich, Grotius' Universe: Divine Law and a Quest for Harmony (New York: Vantage Press, 1978), p. 51. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 63.

. Grotius, Hugo. 1625. Hugo Grotius, The Rights of War and Peace. Verna M. Hall, Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America - Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1962, 1979), p. 251. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 64.

. Grotius, Hugo. 1625. Hugo Grotius, The Rights of War and Peace, II: 23: 3. 4. William Vasilio Sotirovich, Grotius' Universe: Divine Law and a Quest for Harmony (New York: Vantage Press, 1978), p. 58. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House,

A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 64.

. Grotius, Hugo. Verna M. Hall and Rosalie J. Slater, Teaching and Learning America's Christian History (San Francisco, CA: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1975), p. 69. Gary DeMar, God and Government-A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1984), p. 12.

. Grotius, Hugo. 1625. Hugo Grotius, The Rights of War and Peace, (Amsterdam, 1933), III: 25. 8. William Vasilio Sotirovich, Grotius' Universe - Divine Law and a Quest for Harmony (New York: Vantage Press, 1978), pp. 7-8. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 65.

. Grotius, Hugo. Hugo Grotius, Commentary on the Law of Prize and Booty, (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1950), p. 8. William Vasilio Sotirovich, Grotius' Universe - Divine Law and a Quest for Harmony (New York: Vantage Press, 1978), p. 46. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 63.
. Grotius, Hugo. The Truth of the Christian Religion. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 200.
. Grotius, Hugo. Hugo Grotius, The Truth of the Christian Religion. William Vasilio Sotirovich, Grotius' Universe - Divine Law and a Quest for Harmony (New York: Vantage Press, 1978), p. 27. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 63.
. Cotton, John. 1636. Benjamin Fletcher Wright, Jr., American Interpretations of Natural Law (New York: Russell & Russell, 1962), pp. 17-18. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 32.
. Cotton, John. 1636. Benjamin Fletcher Wright, Jr., American Interpretations of Natural Law (New York: Russell & Russell, 1962), pp. 17-18. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 32.
. Cotton, John. Perry Miller and Thomas H. Johnson, The Puritans: A Sourcebook of Their Writings Vol. I (New York: Harper & Row, 1938, 1963), pp. 212-214. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), pp. 34-35.
. Cotton, John. Samuel Eliot Morison, "John Winthrop and the Founding of New England," Davis R. B. Ross, Alden T. Vaughan, and John B. Duff, eds., Colonial America: 1607-1763 (New York: Thomas Y. Crowell Co., 1970), p. 25. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell, 1977), p. 157. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 12.4.
. Cotton, John. Stephen Foster, Their Solitary Way (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1971), p. 58. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 12.11.
. Hooker, Thomas. Rush H. Limbaugh III, See, I Told You So (New York, NY: reprinted by permission of Pocket Books, a division of Simon & Schuster Inc., 1993), pp. 72-73.
. Hooker, Thomas. Clinton Rossiter, "Thomas Hooker," New England Quarterly, Vol. XXV, pp. 479-481. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell, 1977), pp. 207-208. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 7.7.
. Hooker, Thomas. 1638. Collections of the Connecticut Historical Society, 1:20. Benjamin Fletcher Wright, Jr., American Interpretations of Natural Law (New York: Russell & Russell, 1962), p. 23. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 35.
. Winthrop, John. May 15, 1629, in a letter to his wife. Appleton's Cyclopedia of American Biography, Vol. VI. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still - Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 516.

- . Winthrop, John. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 148.
- . Winthrop, John. 1630, "A Model of Christian Charity." Stewart Mitchell, editor, The Winthrop Papers, 1623-1630 (Boston: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1931), Vol. II, pp. 292-295. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 264. Perry Miller and Thomas H. Johnson, The Puritans: A Sourcebook of Their Writings, Vol. I (New York: Harper & Row, 1938, 1963), pp. 195-199. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 29-30. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), pp. 161-162. Francis W. Coker, ed., Democracy, Liberty, and Property: Readings in the American Political Tradition (NY: The Macmillan Co., 1942), pp. 18-20. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 80. Mark A. Noll, et al., eds., Eerdmans' Handbook to Christianity in America (Grand Rapids, MI: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, 1983), p. 38. Gary DeMar, The Biblical Worldview (Atlanta, GA: An American Vision Publication - American Vision, Inc., 1993), Vol. 9, No. 2, p. 13. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 5. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 2. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedi a Britannica, 1968), Vol. I, pp. 109-115. Charles H. Lippy, et als., Christianity Comes to the Americas, 1492-1776 (NY: Paragon House, 1989), p. 265.
- . Winthrop, John. 1598-1628, writing in his Journal. The Winthrop Papers (Boston: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1929), Vol. I, pp. 196, 201.
- . Winthrop, John. Winthrop Papers, Vol. II, pp. 292-295. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 3. 26.
- . Winthrop, John. 1645. Charles Hurd, ed., A Treasury of Great American Speeches (NY: Hawthorne Books, 1959), p. 18.
- . Winthrop, John. May 19, 1643, in the Constitution of the New England Confederation. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia, PA: L. Johnson & Co., 1863; George W. Childs, 1864), p. 56. William McDonald, ed., Documentary Source Book of American History 1606-1889 (NY: The Macmillan Company, 1909), p. 46. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), p. 26. Gary DeMar, God and Government (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1984), p. 112. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2.
- . Winthrop, John. 1645. Charles Hurd, ed., A Treasury of Great American Speeches (NY: Hawthorne Books, 1959), p. 17.
- . Bradford, William. 1650, in his famous work entitled, The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988).
- . Bradford, William. 1607, in his work entitled, The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the

American Quotations.txt

Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D. C. ; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988). Verna

M. Hall, comp., Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America

(San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 186. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 32.

. Bradford, William. 1650, in his work entitled, The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856;

Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D. C. ; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988). Verna

M. Hall, comp., Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America

(San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 185. Marshall

Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 62.

. Bradford, William. December 15, 1617, in a letter from John Robinson and William Brewster in Leyden, Holland, to Sir Edwin Sandys in London, England. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, from the original manuscript; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; San Antonio, TX:

American

Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), p. 28.

Sacvan Bercovitch, ed., Typology and Early American Literature (Cambridge: University of Massachusetts Press, 1972), p. 104. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 11. 16.

. Bradford, William. 1618, Church of Leyden Articles sent to the Counsel of England. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S.

Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), pp. 14-15.

. Bradford, William. July 1620, in a day of solemn humiliation prior to the Pilgrims' departure from Leyden, Holland. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, from the original manuscript; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), pp. 49-50.

. Bradford, William. 1617, describing the fate of a French ship wrecked off Cape Cod. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, from the original manuscript; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), p. 82.

American Quotations.txt

. Bradford, William. November 11, 1620, in the Mayflower Compact. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House,

Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), pp. 75-76. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. vii. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 3.

. Bradford, William. November 12, 1620, in recounting the Pilgrims' first full day in Cape Cod, Massachusetts, in his work entitled, The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), ch. 9, p. 64. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 265.

. Bradford, William. November 11, 1620, in his record of the Pilgrims' landing at Cape Cod, Massachusetts. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968;

NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), p. 66. Sacvan Bercovitch, ed., Typology and Early American Literature (Cambridge: University of Massachusetts Press, 1972), p. 104. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 11.28. (note: reference to these first settlers as "pilgrims" is owed to this passage.)

. Bradford, William. March 16, 1621. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare

Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), pp. 79-80. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, p. 66. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower

Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 28.

. Bradford, William. In describing the aid rendered by Squanto to the Pilgrims. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, from the original manuscript; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), pp. 85.

. Bradford, William. 1621, in his Thanksgiving Proclamation, as governor of the Plymouth Plantation. George Otis, The Solution to the Crisis in America, Revised and Enlarged Edition (Van Nuys, CA.: Fleming H. Revell Company; Bible Voice, Inc., 1970, 1972, foreword by Pat Boone), p. 66.

. Bradford, William. September of 1622, the account of Squanto's death. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, from the original manuscript; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), pp. 109-110.

. Bradford, William. November 29, 1623, in an official Thanksgiving Proclamation. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988). Herbert V. Prochnow, 5100 Quotations for Speakers and Writers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1992), p. 529.

. Bradford, William. 1643, in recounting the death of Mr. William Brewster. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, from the original manuscript; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), p. 314.

. Bradford, William. 1650, in his work entitled, The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), p. 21.

. Bradford, William. 1650, in his work entitled, The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), p. 21.

Jordan D. Fiore, ed., Mourt's Relation: A Journal of the Pilgrims of Plymouth

American Quotations.txt

(Plymouth, MA: Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1841, 1865, 1985), pp. 10-11. William T. Davis, ed., History of Plymouth Plantation (NY: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1908), p. 46. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, p. 66. Verna M. Hall, comp., Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 193. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 11. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), pp. 34-35.

. Bradford, William. 1650, in his work entitled, The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856;

Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), p. 236. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 265. Fleming, One Small Candle: The Pilgrim's First Year in America, p. 218. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 11.25. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 4.

. Bradford, William. 1650, in his work entitled, The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), pp. 22-35. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, New Jersey: Fleming H. Revell Co., 1977), p. 110.

. Bradford, William. 1650, in his work entitled, The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988).

. Bradford, William. 1657, engraving on William Bradford's grave at Burial Hill in Plymouth, Massachusetts.

. Pocahontas. 1614, John Rolfe asked the Jamestown officials for permission to marry Pocahontas. Kevin Dale Miller, The Real Pocahontas (Carol Streams, IL: The Christian Reader, a bimonthly publication of Christianity Today, Inc., July/August 1995), p. 39.

. Virginia, Colony of. 1614, the marriage of Pocahontas to John Rolfe. Historic Marker within reconstructed interior of original church, Jamestown Island, Virginia.

The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, pp. 6434-6435.

. Pocahontas. 1617, her last words. Kevin Dale Miller, The Real Pocahontas (Carol Streams, IL: The Christian Reader, a bimonthly publication of Christianity Today, Inc., July/August 1995), p. 39.

American Quotations.txt

- . Virginia, Colony of. 1613, Pocahontas, the Indian princess. The original painting of Pocahontas, National Portrait Gallery, Smithsonian Institution.
- . Winslow, Edward. Young's Chronicles, p. 350. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 10. 18.
- . Johnson, Edward. Edward Johnson, The Wonder-Working Providences of Si on's Savi our in New England, J. Franklin Jameson, ed., (pub. 1653; Barnes & Noble edition), p. 163. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encycl ope di a Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, p. 217-20.
- . Johnson, Edward. Edward Johnson, The Wonder-Working Providences of Si on's Savi our in New England, J. Franklin Jameson, ed., (pub. 1653; Barnes & Noble edition). Dumas Malone, editor, Dictionary of American Biography (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1933), Vol. V, p. 95.
- . Cromwell, Oliver. August 3, 1650, spoken before his defeat of the Royalist Scots at the Battle of Dunbar, September 3, 1650. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 272.
- . Cromwell, Oliver. September 12, 1654, in a message to Parliament. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 272.
- . Cromwell, Oliver. Hood's Cromwell, Chap. 17, p. 223. Knight's England, Vol. IV, p. 215. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 104.
- . Rutherford, Samuel. Samuel Rutherford, Lex, Rex, or The Law and the Prince, 1644 (reprinted Harrisonburg, Virginia: Sprinkle Publications, 1982), pp. 1, 6-7. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 24.
- . Rutherford, Samuel. John W. Whitehead, The Second American Revolution (Elgin, IL: David C. Cook, 1982), pp. 30-32. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 84-88. Gary DeMar, God and Government-A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), p. 99.
- . Rutherford, Samuel. Sir Leslie Stephen and Sir Sidney Lee, editors, The Dictionary of National Biography (London: founded in 1882 by George Smith, published since 1917 by the Oxford University Press, 1921; 1960), Vol. XVII, P. 498.
- . Williams, Roger. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 14, p. 6931.
- . Williams, Roger. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 18, pp. 8780-8781. Lynn R. Buzzard and Samuel Ericsson, The Battle for Religious Liberty (Elgin, IL: David C. Cook, 1982), p. 51.
- . Williams, Roger. Lynn R. Buzzard and Samuel Ericsson, The Battle for Religious Liberty (Elgin, IL: David C. Cook, 1982), p. 51. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 215, 243.
- . Williams, Roger. January 9, 1872, Senator Henry Bowen Anthony delivers the Eulogy of Roger Williams in Congress. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 16.
- . Tasman, Abel Janszoon. August 14, 1642, instructions from the Council at Batavia. Robert McNab, ed., Historical Records of New Zealand (HRNZ, Wellington: John Mackay, 1914), 2: pp. 4-13. J.E. Heere, ed., "Abel Janszoon Tasman's Journal of His Discovery of Van Diemen's Island and New Zealand in 1642 with Documents Relating to His Exploration of Australia in 1644..." in Sources of Australian History, ed., Manning Clark (Melbourne: Oxford University Press, 1977). Elizabeth Rogers Kotlowski, South and of the Holy Spirit - A Christian History of Australia (Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia; Publisher Dr. Graham McLennan, 1994), p. 80.

American Quotations.txt

. Tasman, Abel Janszoon. August 14, 1642, instructions from the Council at Batavia. Robert McNab, ed., Historical Records of New Zealand (HRNZ, Wellington: John Mackay, 1914), 2: pp. 18, 35. J.E. Heere, ed., "Abel Janszoon Tasman's Journal of His Discovery of Van Diemen's Island and New Zealand in 1642 with Documents Relating to His Exploration of Australia in 1644..." in Sources of Australian History, ed., Manning Clark (Melbourne: Oxford University Press, 1977). Elizabeth Rogers Kotlowski, Southland of the Holy Spirit - A Christian History of Australia (Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia; Publisher Dr. Graham McLennan, 1994), p. 80.

. Tasman, Abel Janszoon. August 14, 1642, instructions from the Council at Batavia. Robert McNab, ed., Historical Records of New Zealand (HRNZ, Wellington: John Mackay, 1914), 2: pp. 18, 35. J.E. Heere, ed., "Abel Janszoon Tasman's Journal of His Discovery of Van Diemen's Island and New Zealand in 1642 with Documents Relating to His Exploration of Australia in 1644..." in Sources of Australian History, ed., Manning Clark (Melbourne: Oxford University Press, 1977). Elizabeth Rogers Kotlowski, Southland of the Holy Spirit - A Christian History of Australia (Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia; Publisher Dr. Graham McLennan, 1994), p. 80.

. Eliot, John. 1633, in a letter to Sir Simonds D'Ewes; Manuscript in the British Museum. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1977), Vol. I, p. 130.

. Eliot, John. 1640, The Bay Psalm Book. Sydney E. Ahlstrom, A Religious History of the American People (New Haven, CT: Yale University Press, 1972), pp. 149-150. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), pp. 45-46.

. Eliot, John. 1659 John Eliot, The Christian Commonwealth: or, The Civil Policy of the Rising Kingdom of Jesus Christ, 1659. John Eliot, Massachusetts Historical Collections, 3rd ser., Vol. 9, pp. 133-134, 163. Benjamin Fletcher Wright, Jr., American Interpretations of Natural Law (NY: Russell & Russell, 1962), pp. 19-21. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), pp. 33-34. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), pp. 125-126.

. Virginia, First Charter of. April 10, 1606, was granted by King James I to the settlers of the "Jamestown Colony", the first permanent settlement; April 9, 1585, the Roanoke Settlement was begun, later to be called The Lost Colony; August 13, 1587, members of the colony converted an Indian named Manteo; August 18, 1587, the first child, Virginia Dare was born in America. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 12, p. 5732; Vol. 10, p. 4596.

. Virginia, First Charter of. 1606, granted by King James I. Ebenezer Hazard, editor, Historical Collections: Consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents; Intended as Materials for an History of the United States of America (Philadelphia: T. Dobson, 1792), Vol. I, pp. 50-51. Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 US 457, 458, 465-471, 36 L ed 226, (1892), Justice David Josiah Brewer. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), p. 8. Gary DeMar, God and Government - A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1984), p. 127. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), pp. 1, 6. Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America

American Quotations.txt

- (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), p. 46. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 37.
- . Virginia, Colony of. 1607. Historical Marker in front of the Cross at Cape Henry, Virginia quoted the 1607 settler's original words, "Set up a cross at Chesapeake Bay, and named that place Cape Henry." Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), p. 46.
 - . Virginia, Colony of. 1607. Inscription of original 1607 Settler's testimony engraved upon the bronze Robert Hunt Memorial, Jamestown Island, Virginia.
 - . Harvard, John. 1642. Old South Leaflets. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 9.28. "New England's First Fruits in Respect to the Progress of Learning in the College at Cambridge in Massachusetts Bay," in Verna M. Hall, comp., and Rosalie J. Slater, developer, Teaching and Learning America's Christian History (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1975), frontpiece. Peter G. Mode, ed., Sourcebook and Bibliography Guide for American Church History (Menasha, WI: George Banta Publishing Company, 1920), pp. 73-74. Pat Robertson, America's Dates With Destiny (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), pp. 43-44.
 - . Milton, John. Tryon Edwards, D.D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Cyclopedi a of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C.H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), p. 46.
 - . Milton, John. 1629, in On the Morning of Christ's Nativity, st. I, l. I. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 277.
 - . Milton, John. 1631, in Il Penseroso, l. 159. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), pp. 278-279.
 - . Milton, John. 1634, in Comus, l. 587. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotation (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 279.
 - . Milton, John. 1637, in Lycidas, l. 108. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 280.
 - . Milton, John. 1642 in Animadversions upon the Reply of Smectymnuus. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 320.
 - . Milton, John. 1644, in Tractate of Education. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 281.
 - . Milton, John. 1644, in Areopagica. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 281.
 - . Milton, John. 1655, in On the Late Massacre in Piedmont. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 282.
 - . Milton, John. True Religion, Heresy, Schism, Toleration. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 320.
 - . Milton, John. 1667, in Paradise Lost, bk. IV, l. 208. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 285. Lewis C. Henry, Best Quotations For All Occasions (Greenwich, CONN: Fawcett Publications, Inc., 1961), p. 104.
 - . Milton, John. 1667 in Paradise Lost, bk. IV, l. 918. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 286. Lewis C. Henry, Best Quotations For All Occasions (Greenwich, CONN: Fawcett Publications, Inc., 1961), p. 105.
 - . Milton, John. 1667, in Paradise Lost, bk. I, l. 1, 22, 34, 44, bk. II, l. 226. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), pp. 282-289.
 - . Virginia, Second Charter of. May 23, 1609. Ebenezer Hazard, editor, Historical Collections: Consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents; Intended as Materials for an History of the United States of America (Philadelphia: T. Dobson, 1792), Vol. I, p. 72. William McDonald, ed., Documentary Source Book of American History, 1606-1889 (NY: The Macmillan Company, 1909), pp. 1-2. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter From Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 1.

American Quotations.txt

. Virginia, Second Charter of. May 23, 1609, granted by King James I. Ebenezer Hazard, Historical Collection: Consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents: Intended as Materials for an History of the United States of America (Philadelphia: T. Dobson, 1792), Vol. I, p. 72. Perley Poore, ed., The Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the United States (Washington, 1877), Vol. II, p. 1893 ff. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol. I, pp. 10-11.

. Hale, Sir Matthew. Tryon Edwards, D.D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Cyclopedi a of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C.H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), p. 45.

. Hale, Sir Matthew. British Plutarch, Vol. IV, pp. 56, 70. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 205.

. Hale, Sir Matthew. 1679. Meditations Moral and Divine, published in London. The chapter entitled "The Great Audit With the Account of the Good Steward" was marked and studied by Mary Washington, mother of George Washington. Rosalie J. Slater, "Reflective Education: The Principle Approach" (San Francisco, CA: Principally Speaking, The Foundation for American Christian Education, November 1992), Vol. 2, No. 3, p. 1.

. Rich, Richard. October 1, 1610, in his narrative poem Newes from Virginia: The Lost Flock Triumphant recounting his voyage to Virginia with Captain Christopher Newport. Huth Library. Included in Lord Charlemont's collection, 1864; reprinted by James Orchard Halliwell [-Phillips], 1865; reprinted by Quaritch, London, 1874. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 261.

. Crashaw, Richard. 1652, in the Hymn of the Nativity, st. 6. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 292.

. Vane, Henry Sir. George Smith, Dictionary of National Biography 22 vols. (Oxford University Press, 1882; 1917), Vol. XX, p. 122.

. Vane, Henry Sir. Knight's England, Vol. IV, Chapter XVI, p. 260. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 471.

. Vane, Sir Henry. Jacob Sparks, Library of American Biography, p. 293. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 471.

. Baxter, Richard. 1681, in his work entitled, Poetical Fragments-Love Breathing Thanks and Praise. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 294.

. Virginia, Colony of. December 4, 1619, in the charter of the colonists who landed at Berkeley Hundred. Jim Dwyer, ed., "Strange Stories, Amazing Facts of America's Past" (Pleasantville, NY: Reader's Digest, The Reader's Digest Association, Inc., 1989), p. 189. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 16.

. Plymouth Council, Charter of the. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 1.

. Mayflower Compact. November 11, 1620. William Bradford (Governor of Plymouth Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts: Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909; NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), pp. 75-76. Ebenezer Hazard, Historical Collection: Consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents: Intended as Materials for an History of the United States of America (Philadelphia: T. Dobson, 1792), Vol. I, p. 119. Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States 143 US 457, 458, 465-471, 36 L ed 226, (1892), Justice David Josiah Brewer. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. vii. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 29. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 6. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 3. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 1. George Otis, The Solution to the Crisis in America, Revised and Enlarged Edition (Van Nuys, CA.: Fleming H. Revell Company; Bible Voice, Inc., 1970, 1972, foreword by Pat Boone), p. 56.

- . Virginia, Colony of. July 24, 1621, in the ordinances for the Colony. Richard L. Perry, ed., Sources of Our Liberties: Documentary Origins of Individual Liberties in the United States Constitution and Bill of Rights (Chicago: American Bar Foundation, 1978; New York: 1952). Charles E. Rice, The Supreme Court and Public Prayer (New York: Fordham University Press, 1964), p. 160.
- . Virginia, Colony of. March 22, 1622. Marker within reconstructed interior of original church, Jamestown Island, Virginia.
- . Vaughan, Henry. 1655, in Silex Scintillans, The Night, line 25. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 298.
- . Vaughan, Henry. 1655, in Silex Scintillans, Peace, st. I. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 299.
- . Virginia, Colony of. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2.
- . Pascal, Blaise. 1670, in Pensees, No. 556. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 300.
- . Pascal, Blaise. Wager of Pascal. Henry M. Morris, Men of Science - Men of God (El Cajon, CA: Master Books, Creation Life Publishers, Inc., 1990), pp. 15-16.
- . Pascal, Blaise. O.W. Wight, translator from the French language, Thoughts, Letters, and Opuscles, pp. 334-335. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 352-353.
- . Pascal, Blaise. 1662, in a writing of his found in his effects after his death. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 300.
- . Fox, George. 1694, in his journal. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 300.
- . Boyle, Robert. Statement. Allibone's Quotations, p. 104. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 43.
- . Boyle, Robert. In his work entitled, Some Considerations Touching the Style of the Holy Scriptures. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 43-44.
- . Ray, John. 1700. John Ray, A Persuasive to a Holy Life, 1700; and John Ray, The Wisdom of God Manifested in the Works of Creation, 1691. George Smith, Dictionary of

American Quotations.txt

National Biography 22 vols. (Oxford University Press, 1882; 1917), Vol. XVI, pp. 784-785.

Henry M. Morris, Men of Science - Men of God (El Cajon, CA: Master Books, Creation Life Publishers, Inc., 1990), pp. 17-18.

Ray, John. John Ray, The Wisdom of God Manifested in the Works of Creation. Henry M. Morris, Men of Science - Men of God (El Cajon, CA: Master Books, Creation Life Publishers, Inc., 1990), pp. 17-18.

Bunyan, John. 1678, John Bunyan, "Shepherd Boy's Song," The Pilgrim's Progress (1678), pt. II. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 302.

Winthrop, John. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 148.

Massachusetts, First Charter of. March 4, 1629. Ebenezer Hazard, Historical Collection: Consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents: Intended as Materials for an History of the United States of America (Philadelphia: T. Dobson, 1792), Vol. I, p. 252. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia: George W. Childs, 1864), p. 56. William McDonald, ed., Documentary Source Book of American History, 1606-1889 (NY: The Macmillan Company, 1909), p. 26. Frances Newton Thorpe, ed., Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the States, Territories, and Colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, 7 vols. (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1905; 1909; St. Clair Shores, MI: Scholarly Press, 1968). Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), p. 16, 18. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. II, pp. 101, 103. Gary DeMar, God and Government-A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), p. 112. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2.

Patroons, Charter Of Freedoms and Exemptions To. June 7, 1629, Article XXVII. E.B. O'Callaghan, ed., Documents Relative to the Colonial History of the State of New York (Boston: Old South Leaflets, published by the Directors of the Old South Work, Old South meeting House, n.d.), II:553 ff. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol. I, pp. 20, 26-27. The Annals of America 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, p. 106.

Cambridge Agreement. August 26, 1629. Thomas Hutchinson, A Collection of Papers Relative to The History of the Colony of Massachusetts Bay (London: 2nd ed., 1765), p. 25 ff. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol. I, p. 18.

Pufendorf, Samuel de. Alexander Hamilton, "The Farmer Refuted," 1775. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America: Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1962, 1979), p. 250. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 65.

Pufendorf, Samuel de. Samuel de Pufendorf, The Law of Nature and Nations. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America: Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1962, 1979), p. 270. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House,

American Quotations.txt

A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 65.
. Pufendorf, Samuel de. Samuel de Pufendorf, The Law of Nature and Nations. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America: Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1962, 1979), p. 279. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 65.
. Maryland, Charter of. June 20, 1632, issued by King Charles I to Cecilius Calvert, Second Lord Baltimore. Ebenezer Hazard, Historical Collection: Consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents: Intended as Materials for an History of the United States of America (Philadelphia: T. Dobson, 1792), Vol. I, pp. 327-328. William McDonald, editor, Select Charters and Other Documents (New York: The Macmillan Company, 1899), pp. 53-54. Frances Newton Thorpe, ed., Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the States, Territories, and Colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, 7 vols. (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1905; 1909; St. Clair Shores, MI: Scholarly Press, 1968), Vol. III, pp. 1677 ff. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol. I, p. 21. William McDonald, ed., Documentary Source Book of American History, 1606-1889 (NY: The Macmillan Company, 1909), p. 32. Charles E. Rice, The Supreme Court and Public Prayer (New York: Fordham University Press, 1964), pp. 160-161. Richard L. Perry, ed., Sources of Our Liberties: Documentary Origins of Individual Liberties in the United States Constitution and Bill of Rights (Chicago: American Bar Foundation, 1978; New York: 1952), p. 105. Pat Robertson, America's Dates With Destiny (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), pp. 31-32.
. Locke, John. Donald S. Lutz and Charles S. Hyneman, "The Relative Influence of European Writers on Late Eighteenth-Century American Political Thought," American Political Review 189 (1984): 189-197. (Courtesy of Dr. Wayne House of Dallas Theological Seminary.) John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 51-53. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 156. [1760-1805], Origins of American Constitutionalism, (1987).
. Locke, John. John Locke, Of Civil Government, Book Two, II:11, III:56; V:25, 55; XVIII:200. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 61.
. Locke, John. 1689, in his work Of Civil Government. John Locke, Two Treatises on Civil Government (London: George Routledge and Sons, 1903) Book 2, p. 262. John Locke, The Second Treatise Of Civil Government 1690 (Reprinted Buffalo, NY: Prometheus Books, 1986) p. 77. Frank Donovan, Mr. Jefferson's Declaration (New York: Dodd Mead & Co., 1968), p. 137. Pat Robertson, America's Dates with Destiny (Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), p. 66. Verna M. Hall, Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1975), pp. 58, 63-64, 91. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), pp. 111-112.
. Locke, John. August 23, 1689, in his work Of Civil Government. John Locke, The Second Treatise on Civil Government, 1690 (reprinted Buffalo, NY: Prometheus Books, 1986), p. 75. John Locke, Two Treatises on Civil Government (London: George and Sons, 1903), Book 2, p. 262. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America - Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 58. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 108.

Routledge

. Locke, John. 1690, John Locke, Of Civil Government, Book Two, XI:136n. John Locke, The Second Treatise on Civil Government, 1690 (reprinted Buffalo, NY: Prometheus Books, 1986), p. 76, n. 1. Richard Hooker, Of the Laws of Ecclesiastical Polity, Book 1, section 10. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 62.

. Locke, John. 1695, John Locke, A Vindication of the Reasonableness of Christianity. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 289-290. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Inc., 1987), pp. 51, 85-86.

. Locke, John. 1695, John Locke, A Vindication of the Reasonableness of Christianity, a paraphrase of the books of Romans, First and Second Corinthians, Galatians and Ephesians. John Churchill, The Works of John Locke, Esq., 3 Vol. (1714). Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America - Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), Vol. I, op cit, 56. Russ Walton, One Nation Under God (NH: Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1993), p. 22.

. Locke, John. Statement. Tryon Edwards, D.D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Cyclopedi a of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C.H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), p. 46.

. Pepys, Samuel. March 22, 1660, in his Diary. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 309.

. Pepys, Samuel. February 23, 1667, in his Diary. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 310.

. Pepys, Samuel. May 31, 1669, in the last entry of his Diary. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 310.

. Calvert, Cecilius, Second Lord Baltimore. March 25, 1634, in Father White's account of founding the Colony of Maryland. Joseph Banvard, Tragic Scenes in the History of Maryland and the Old French War (Boston: Gould and Lincoln, 1856), p. 32.

J. Moss Ives, The Ark and the Dove (NY: Cooper Square Publishers, Inc., 1936, 1969),

p. 119.

. Calvert, Cecilius, Second Lord Baltimore. 1650, in a vote passed by the Maryland Assembly in eulogy of Leonard Calvert. Spark's Library of American Biography, Vol. XIX, pp. 178, 227. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 69.

. Harvard, John. 1636. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 32.

. Harvard University. 1636. Old South Leaflets. Benjamin Pierce, A History of Harvard University (Cambridge, MA: Brown, Shattuck, and Company, 1833), Appendix, p.

5. Peter G. Mode, ed., Sourcebook and Biographical Guide for American Church History

(Menasha, WI: George Banta Publishing Co., 1921), pp. 74-75. Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), p. 41. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2. Pat Robertson, America's Dates With Destiny (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), pp. 44-45. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 40. Rosalie J. Slater, "New England's First Fruits, 1643," Teaching and Learning America's Christian History (San Francisco: Foundation for Christian Education, 1980), p. vii. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 3. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 4.

. Harvard University. 1636. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 91.

. Harvard University. 1636. Quoted in Nancy Leigh DeMoss, ed., "How Christians Started the Ivy League," The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia, PA: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), p. 41. Peter Gay, A Loss of Mastery: Puritan Historians in Colonial America (Berkeley, CA: University of California Press, 1966), p. 23. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 41.

. Harvard University. 1636. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2.

. Harvard University. 1636. Samuel Eliot Morison, "Harvard Seals and Arms," The Harvard Graduates' Magazine (Manesh, WI: George Barna Publishing Co.), September 1933, p. 8. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2.

. Harvard University. 1636. Samuel Eliot Morison, "Harvard Seals and Arms," The Harvard Graduates' Magazine (Manesh, WI: George Barna Publishing Co.), September 1933, p. 8. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 91.

. Harvard University. 1636. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 75. Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), p. 41. Also found in the catalog for the Harvard Divinity School. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 41.

. Harvard University. May 31, 1775, in the Election Day sermon, entitled "The Wall," delivered to the Provincial Congress of Massachusetts by Harvard President Samuel Langdon. A.W. Plumstead, ed., The Wall and the Garden, Selected Massachusetts Election Sermons, 1670-1775 (Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1968), pp. 364-373. Verna M. Hall, Christian History of the American Revolution - Consider and Ponder (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 506. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, New Jersey: Fleming H. Revell Co., 1977), p. 278. Lucille Johnston, Celebrations of a Nation (Arlington, VA: The Year of Thanksgiving Foundation, 1987), p. 77. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell, 1977), pp. 277-278. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 6.3.

. Massachusetts, General Court of. 1636. Massachusetts Colonial Records, 1:174. Benjamin Fletcher Wright, Jr., American Interpretations of Natural Law (New York: Russell & Russell, 1962), p. 33. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 32.

. Marquette, Jacques. The Jesuit Relations and Allied Documents - Travels and Explorations of the Jesuit Missionaries in New France, 1610-1791, Volume LIX, edited by Reuben Gold Thwaites (Cleveland, OH: Burrows Brother Company, 1900). Henry Steele

Commager and Allan Nevins, editors, The Heritage of America - Readings in American History (Boston: D.C. Heath and Company, 1939; 1949), pp. 14-19.

. Connecticut, General Court of. 1639, established under the Constitution of Connecticut. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia: George W. Childs, 1864), p. 68.

Gary

DeMar, God and Government - A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), p. 114. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 1.9. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One

Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 4.

. Connecticut, Fundamental Orders (Constitution) of. January 14, 1639. Old South Leaflets, No. 8. John Fiske, The Beginning of New England (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1889, 1898), p. 127-128.

. Connecticut, Fundamentals Orders (Constitution) of. January 14, 1639. Old South Leaflets, No. 8. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 3, p. 1675.

. Connecticut, Fundamental Orders (Constitution) of. January 14, 1639. John Wingate Thornton, The Pulpit of the American Revolution, 1860 (reprinted NY: Burt Franklin, 1970), p. XIX.

. Connecticut, Fundamental Orders (Constitution) of. January 14, 1639, Connecticut Towns of Hartford, Wethersfield, and Windsor. Old South Leaflets, No. 8. Connecticut

Colonial Records, Vol. 1, pp. 20-25. Old South Leaflets, Published by the Directors of the Old South Work, Old South Meeting House, Boston, n.d. The Code of 1650, Being a Compilation of the Earliest Laws and Orders of the General Court of Connecticut (Hartford: Silus Andrus, 1822), p. 2. Perley Poore, ed., The Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the United States (Washington, 1877), Part I: 249-251. Church of the Holy Trinity v. U.S., 143 U.S. 457, 458, 465-471, 36 L ed 226, (1892), Justice David Josiah Brewer. Charles W. Eliot, LL.D., ed., American Historical Documents 1000-1904 (New York: P.F. Collier & Son Company, The Harvard Classics, 1910), Vol. 43, pp. 63-69. Henry Steele Commager, ed.,

Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F.S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol. I, pp. 22-23. Paul M. Angle, ed., By These Words (NY:

Rand McNally & Company, 1954), pp. 6-7. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America (San Francisco, CA: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1960, 1980), pp. 253-257. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968, 1977), Vol. I, p. 157. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), pp. 2, 6. Michael P. Farris, Constitutional Law for Christian Students (Paeonian Springs, VA: Home School Legal Defense Association, 1991), p. 8. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 37. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 1.

. Connecticut, Fundamental Orders (Constitution) of. 1639, in the articles of the constitution of Connecticut drawn up in Quinipack (New Haven), Connecticut.

American Quotations.txt

Benjamin

Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia: George W. Childs, 1864), pp. 67-68. Gary DeMar, God and Government - A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), pp. 113-114.

. Connecticut, Fundamental Orders (Constitution) of. 1639, charge to the governor by Rev. Mr. Davenport. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia: George W. Childs, 1864), p. 114. Gary DeMar, God and Government - A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), p. 114.

. Mather, Increase. Lovejoy, Revolution, p. 154. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 6.21.

. New Hampshire, City of Exeter. August 4, 1639. Ebenezer Hazard, Historical Collection: Consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents: Intended as Materials for an History of the United States of America (Philadelphia: T. Dobson, 1792), Vol. I, p. 463. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 59. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va.

22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 2.

. Massachusetts, Body of Liberties of. 1641. Massachusetts Colonial Records, 1:174. Benjamin Fletcher Wright, Jr., American Interpretations of Natural Law (New York: Russell & Russell, 1962), p. 33. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 33. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2.

. Massachusetts Bay, Colony of. 1642. Old Deluder Satan Law. The Code of 1650 - Being a Compilation of the Earliest Laws and Orders of the General Court of Connecticut (Hartford: Silus Andrus, 1822), pp. 20-91, 92-94. The Laws and Liberties of Massachusetts, 1648 (reprinted Cambridge: 1929), cited in McColum v. Board of Education, 68 S.Ct. 461, 333 U.S. 203 (1948). Records of the Governor of the Massachusetts Bay in New England, II:203. Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 US 457, 458, 465-471, 36 L ed 226, Justice David Josiah Brewer. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol. I, p. 29. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 28. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. I, p. 203.

John Wilson Taylor, M.A., Ph.D., et al., The Lincoln Library of Essential Information

(Buffalo, New York: The Frontier Press Company, 1935), p. 1623. D.P. Duffine, Ph.D.,

One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 2.

. Newton, Sir Isaac. 1704, in Optics. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 313.

. Newton, Sir Isaac. Henry H. Morris, Men of Science-Men of God (El Cajon, CA: Master Books, A Division of Creation Life Publishers, Inc., 1988), pp. 23-26. Tryon Edwards, D.D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Cyclopedic of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C.H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards 1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), p. 47.

(1703-

Henry H. Halley, Halley's Bible Handbook (Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan Publishing House, 1927, 1965), p. 19. Charles E. Jones, The Books You Read (Harrisburg, PA: Executive Books, 1985), p. 118.

. Newton, Sir Isaac. Sir David Brewster, Memoirs of the Life, Writings, and Discoveries of Sir Isaac Newton. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses

(Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 338.

. Newton, Sir Isaac. T.H.L. Leary, Short Biographies of the People - Life of Sir Isaac Newton, Vol. VI. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland,

OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 338.

. Newton, Sir Isaac. The Encyclopedia of Philosophy, s.v. "Deism." John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 49.

. New England Confederation, Constitution of the. May 19, 1643. Ebenezer Hazard, Historical Collection: Consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents: Intended as Materials for an History of the United States of America (Philadelphia:

T. Dobson, 1792), Vol. II, p. 1. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia: George W.

Childs, 1864), p. 56. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol.

I,

pp. 26-27. William McDonald, ed., Documentary Source Book of American History, 1606-1889 (NY: The Macmillan Company, 1909), p. 46. William Bradford (Governor of

Plymouth

Colony), The History of Plymouth Plantation 1608-1650 (Boston, Massachusetts:

Massachusetts Historical Society, 1856; Boston, Massachusetts: Wright and Potter

Printing Company, 1898, 1901, from the Original Manuscript, Library of Congress Rare

Book Collection, Washington, D.C.; rendered in Modern English, Harold Paget, 1909;

NY: Russell and Russell, 1968; NY: Random House, Inc., Modern Library College edition, 1981; San Antonio, TX: American Heritage Classics, Mantle Ministries, 228

Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas, 1988), pp. 321-324. The Annals of America, 20 vols.

(Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, pp. 72-73. Gary DeMar, God and Government (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1984), p. 112. Lucille Johnston, Celebrations of a Nation (Arlington, VA: The Year of Thanksgiving Foundation, 1987), (part 1), p. 46. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2. D. P. Duffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 4. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), pp. 37-38.

. New Haven Colony, Charter of. April 3, 1644. John Fiske, The Beginnings of New England (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1898), p. 136. Russ Walton, Biblical Principles of Importance to Godly Christians (NH: Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1984),

p.

356. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2.

. Penn, William. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field

Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W. F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, pp. 6181-6183, 6192-6195.

. Penn, William. Treatise of the Religion of the Quakers. Stephen Abbott Northrop,

- D. D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 355.
- . Penn, William. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, pp. 6181-6183, 6192-6195.
- . Penn, William. No Cross, No Crown, 1668. Burton Stevenson, The Home Book of Quotations (New York: Dodd, Mead and Company, 1967), p. 267.
- . Penn, William. From his writing No Cross, No Crown, written while imprisoned in the Tower of London for 8 months. Thomas Pryn Cope, ed., Passages from the Life and Writings of William Penn (Philadelphia: Friends Bookstore, 1882).
- . Penn, William. Chambers' Cyclopeda of English Literature, Acme Edition, vol. III, p. 12. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D. D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 355.
- . Penn, William. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, pp. 6181-6183, 6192-6195.
- . Penn, William. Travels in Holland and Germany. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D. D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 355.
- . Penn, William. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, pp. 6181-6183, 6192-6195.
- . Penn, William. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, pp. 6181-6183, 6192-6195.
- . Penn, William. January 1, 1681. Peter G. Mode, Sourcebook and Bibliographical Guide for American Church History (Menasha, WI: George Banta Publishing Co., 1921), p. 163. Thomas Clarkson, Memoirs of the Private and Public Life of William Penn (London: Longman, Hunt, Rees, Orme, & Brown, 1813), Vol. I, p. 287.
- . Penn, William. January 1, 1681. Remember William Penn, 1644-1944, Tercentenary Memorial (Harrisburg, PA: The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and Pennsylvania Historical Commission, 1944). Thomas Clarkson, Memoirs of the Private and Public Life of William Penn (London: Longman, Hunt, Rees, Orme, & Brown, 1813), Vol. I, p. 280. Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), pp. 46-47.
- . Penn, William. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, pp. 6181-6183, 6192-6195.
- . Penn, William. August 18, 1681, in his letter to the Indians before his arrival. Pennsylvania Historical Society Collection, Philadelphia.
- . Penn, William. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, pp. 6181-6183, 6192-6195.
- . Penn, William. 1684. William Penn, Prayer for Philadelphia (Philadelphia, PA: Historical Society of Pennsylvania).
- . Penn, William. 1701, in his farewell to the Pennsylvania Colony. George Bancroft, History of the United States of America, 6 vols. (Boston: Charles C. Little and James Brown, Third Edition, 1838), Vol. 2, p. 393. Gary DeMar, "God and the Constitution" (Atlanta, GA: The Biblical Worldview, An American Vision Publication - American Vision, Inc., December 1993), p. 9.
- . Penn, William. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 62. Hildegard Dolson, William Penn: Quaker Hero (NY: Random House, 1961), p. 155. D. P. Duffine, Ph. D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 4. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. I, p. 189.

Charles Fadiman, ed., The American Treasury (NY: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1955), p. 116.

. Penn, William. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 10.14.

. Penn, William. Original Bible in the Penn Mutual Archives Collection, Philadelphia.

. Penn, William. In his sermon entitled, "A Summons or Call to Christendom - In an Earnest Expostulation with Her to Prepare for the Great and Notable Day of the Lord that is at the Door."

. Penn, William. In a letter to his wife and family. Thomas Pryn, editor, Passages from the Life and Writings of William Penn (Philadelphia: Friends Bookstore, 1882).

. Penn, William. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1966), p. 262A. George Bancroft, Bancroft's History of the United States (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1859), Vol. II, p. 385. Mason Locke Weems, The Life of William Penn (Philadelphia: Uriah Hunt, 1836), p. 121.

. Connecticut, Colony of. 1647. Old Deluder Satan Law. The Code of 1650 - Being a Compilation of the Earliest Laws and Orders of the General Court of Connecticut (Hartford: Silus Andrus, 1822), pp. 20-91, 92-94. The Laws and Liberties of Massachusetts, 1648 (reprinted Cambridge: 1929), cited in McCullum v. Board of Education, 68 S.Ct. 461, 333 U.S. 203 (1948). Records of the Governor of the Massachusetts Bay in New England, II:203. Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 US 457, 458, 465-471, 36 L ed 226, Justice David Josiah Brewer. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F.S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol. I, p. 29. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 28. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. I, p. 203. John Wilson Taylor, M.A., Ph.D., et al., The Lincoln Library of Essential Information (Buffalo, New York: The Frontier Press Company, 1935), p. 1623. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 2.

. Massachusetts Bay Colony, Cambridge Platform of. 1648, included the proposal of William Vassall and others, as recorded in the Plymouth Colony Records IX, 1663. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F.S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol. I, pp. 29-31. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, pp. 90-94.

. New England, Synod of Churches of. September 30, 1648. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia: George W. Childs, 1864), pp. 53-54. Gary DeMar, God and Government-A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), pp. 111-112.

. Maryland, Toleration Act of. April 21, 1649. Act of Toleration. W.H. Browne, ed., The Archives of Maryland, I:244ff. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F.S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol. I, p. 31. Lillian W. Kay, ed., The Ground on Which We Stand - Basic Documents of American History (NY: Franklin Watts., Inc, 1969), (portions), pp. 4-5. Samuel Wilberforce, A History of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America (Oxford, London: 1853). Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the American Revolution (San Francisco: Foundation for Christian Education, 1976), p. 159. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2. "An Act concerning Religion" issued by the Maryland Colonial Assembly. Anson Phelps Stokes and Leo Pfeffer, Church and State in the United States (NY: Harper and Row, Publishers, 1950, revised one-volume edition, 1964), p. 12.

American Quotations.txt

"Act

Concerning Religion," The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 11, p. 4833.

. Maryland, Toleration Act of. 1649, an oath prescribed in the Colony of Maryland, during Governor Stone's period. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 69.

. Maryland, Toleration Act of. 1649, Act of Toleration. Samuel Wilberforce, A History of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America (Oxford, London: 1853). Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the American Revolution (San Francisco: Foundation for Christian Education, 1976), p. 159.

. Connecticut, Code of the General Court of. 1650, in the Capital Laws Section of the Code, which stated offenses and their punishments. The Code of 1650 - Being a Compilation of the Earliest Laws and Orders of the General Court of Connecticut, etc., etc., (Hartford: Silus Andrus, 1822), complete work pages, pp. 20-94. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968, 1977), Vol.

I, p. 200.

. Phipps, Sir William. Lives of the Great Fathers of New England, pp. 240-241. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 359-360.

. Dampier, William. 1657, in his popular book, A New Voyage Around the World.

. Tate, Nahum. 1700, in his Christmas Hymn, st. 1. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 317.

. Defoe, Daniel. A Selection from the Works of Daniel Defoe, Vol. III, p. 187. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 116.

. Defoe, Daniel. A Selection from the Works of Daniel Defoe, Vol. III, p. 102. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp.

116-117.

. Defoe, Daniel. 1701, in his satirical poem, The True Born Englishman, Part I, Line 1. Lewis C. Henry, Best Quotations For All Occasions (Greenwich, CONN: Fawcett Publications, Inc., 1961), p. 38. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 318.

. Virginia, Commonwealth of. 1662. Benjamin Franklin Morris The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia, PA: L. Johnson & Co., 1863; George W. Childs, 1864), pp. 232-233.

. Carolina, Charter of. 1663. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 15, p. 7587; Vol. 12, p. 5732.

. Carolina, Charter of. 1663, 1727. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 12, p. 5732.

. Carolina, Charter of. 1663, issued by King Charles II to Sir William Berkeley and the seven other Lord proprietors, (initially granted by King Charles I to Sir Robert Heath in 1629). Frances Newton Thorpe, ed., Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the States, Territories, and Colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, 7 vols. (Washington: Government Printing

Office, 1905; 1909; St. Clair Shores, MI: Scholarly Press, 1968), Vol. 5, p. 2743. Hugh Talmage Lefler, editor, North Carolina History (Chapel Hill: University of North

Carolina Press, 1934, 1956), pp. 16, 26. Pat Robertson, America's Dates With Destiny

(Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), p. 32.

. Carolinas, Fundamental Constitutions of the. 1663, John Locke. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 12, p. 5736, Vol. 15,

p. 7591.

. Carolinas, Fundamental Constitutions of the. 1663. John Locke, A Collection of Several Pieces of Mr. John Locke Never Before Printed or Not Extant in His Works (London: J. Bettenham for R. Francklin, 1720), pp. 1, 45, 46. Supreme Court Justice David Josiah Brewer, who served 1890-1910, in his work, The United States - A Christian Nation (Philadelphia: The John C. Winston Company, 1905, Supreme Court Collection).

. Carolinas, Fundamental Constitutions of the. 1663. John Locke, A Collection of Several Pieces of Mr. John Locke Never Before Printed or Not Extant in His Works (London: J. Bettenham for R. Francklin, 1720), pp. 1, 45, 46.

. Carter, Robert "King". July 22, 1720, in a letter to Mr. Perry in England. Louis B. Wright, editor, Letters of Robert Carter, 1720-1727 (San Marino: The Huntington Library, 1940), p. 34.

. Carter, Robert "King". July 23, 1720, in a letter to his son John in England. Louis B. Wright, ed., Letters of Robert Carter, 1720-1727 (San Marino: The Huntington Library, 1940), p. 37.

. Carter, Robert "King". August 4, 1732, on his epitaph in Christ Church, Lancaster County, Virginia. Louis Morton, Robert Carter of Nomini Hall, pp. 23-24.

. Mather, Cotton. 1702, in the Magnalia Christi Americana, (The Great Achievement of Christ in America), introduction. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), pp. 319-320.

. Mather, Cotton. 1702. Cotton Mather, Magnalia Christi Americana, (The Great Achievement of Christ in America), 2 vols. (Edinburgh: The Banner of Truth Trust, 1702, 1979), 1:26. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 47.

. Mather, Cotton. Cotton Mather, Magnalia Christi Americana. Stephen Foster, Their Solitary Way (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1971) p. 121. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 2.14.

. Mather, Cotton. Advice given to the young Benjamin Franklin who was visiting in his parsonage. Emily Morison Beck, Sailor Historian: The Best of Samuel Eliot Morison (1977). John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 320.

. Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Charter of. July 1663. Rhode Island Colonial Records, Vol. II, pp. 3-20, 1644. Ebenezer Hazard, Historical Collection: Consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents - Intended as Materials for an History of the United States of America (Philadelphia: T. Dobson, 1792), Vol. II, p. 612. Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), p. 31.

. Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, Charter of. July 8, 1663, granted by King Charles II, in the 14th year of his reign, to Roger Williams, confirming the colonial patent of 1644; and continuing in effect until 1842. Rhode Island Colonial Records, Vol. II, pp. 3-20, 1644. Ebenezer Hazard, Historical Collection: Consisting of State Papers and other Authentic Documents - Intended as Materials for an History of the United States of America (Philadelphia: T. Dobson, 1792), Vol. II, p. 612.

The

Constitutions of the Several Independent States of America (Evans Collection, #17390). Benjamin Franklin Morris The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia, PA: L. Johnson & Co., 1863; George

- W. Childs, 1864), p. 236. William McDonald, ed., Documentary Source Book of American History, 1606-1889 (NY: The MacMillan Company, 1909), pp. 67-68. Richard Perry, ed., Sources of Our Liberties: Documentary Origins of Individual Liberties in the United States Constitution and Bill of Rights (Chicago: American Bar Foundation, 1978; New York: 1952), p. 169. Pat Robertson, America's Dates With Destiny (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), p. 32. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 6. Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), p. 31.
- . New York Colony, Colonial Legislature of the 1665, in an act passed by the Legislature. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia: George W. Childs, 1864), p. 88. Peter G. Mode, Sourcebook and Bibliographical Guide for American Church History (Menasha, WI: George Banta Publishing Co., 1921), p. 133. Gary DeMar, God and Government-A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), p. 116.
- . Harris, John. 1698, title of lectures. Henry M. Morris, Men of Science - Men of God (El Cajon, CA: Master Books, Creation Life Publishers, Inc., 1990), p. 30.
- . Virginia, Commonwealth of. 1668. Benjamin Franklin Morris The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia, PA: L. Johnson & Co., 1863; George W. Childs, 1864), p. 233.
- . Watts, Isaac. J. O. Wilson, Public Schools of Washington (Washington, D.C.: Columbia Historical Society, 1897), Vol. 1, p. 5. John W. Whitehead, The Second American Revolution (Elgin, IL: David C. Cook Publishing Co., 1982), p. 100.
- . Watts, Isaac. 1707, in Hymns and Spiritual Songs.
- . Watts, Isaac. Burton Stevenson, The Home Book of Quotations (New York: Dodd, Mead, & Co., 1967), p. 158.
- . Watts, Isaac. Burton Stevenson, The Home Book of Quotations (New York: Dodd, Mead, & Co., 1967), p. 158.
- . Watts, Isaac. Burton Stevenson, The Home Book of Quotations (New York: Dodd, Mead, & Co., 1967), p. 158.
- . Watts, Isaac. 1719, in Psalm 90, st. I. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 328.
- . Logan, James. Wilson Armstead, Memoirs of James Logan. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 288-289.
- . Bienville, Jean Baptiste LeMoyne SIEUR de. 1768, statement in his Last Will and Testament. Grace King, Makers of America Series-Jean Baptiste LeMoyne, Sieur de Bienville, p. 325. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 32.
- . Pennsylvania, Charter of. 1681, granted to William Penn by King Charles II. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W. F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, pp. 6181-6183, 6192-6195.
- . Pennsylvania, Charter of. 1681, granted to William Penn by King Charles II. A Collection of Charters and Other Public Acts Relating to the Province of Pennsylvania (Philadelphia: B. Franklin, 1740), p. 1. Frances Newton Thorpe, ed., Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the States, Territories, and Colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, 7 vols. (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1905; 1909; St. Clair Shores, MI: Scholarly Press, 1968), Vol. V, p. 2743. Pat Robertson, America's Dates With Destiny (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), p. 32.
- . Pennsylvania, Frame of Government of. April 25, 1682, in the preface of his Frame of Government of Pennsylvania. A Collection of Charters and Other Public Acts Relating to the Province of Pennsylvania (Philadelphia: B. Franklin, 1740), pp. 10-12. Thomas Clarkson, Memoirs of the Private and Public Life of William Penn (London:

American Quotations.txt

Longman, Hurst, Orme, & Grown, 1813; Richard Taylor and Co., 1813), Vol. I, pp. 299-305. William Wistar Comfort, William Penn and Our Liberties (Published in the Penn Mutual's Centennial Year in honor of the man whose name the company adopted at its founding in the year 1847.) Philadelphia: The Penn Mutual Life Insurance Company, 1947, n.p. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia: George W. Childs, 1864), pp. 82-83.

Frances Newton Thorpe, ed., Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the States, Territories, and Colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, 7 vols. (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1905; 1909; St. Clair Shores, MI: Scholarly Press, 1968), Vol. V, pp. 3052-3059. Charles E. Rice, The Supreme Court and Public Prayer (New York: Fordham University Press, 1964), pp. 163-164. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. I, pp. 265-267. Richard L. Perry, ed., Sources of Our Liberties - Documentary Origins of Individual Liberties in the United States Constitution and Bill of Rights (Chicago: American Bar Foundation, 1978; New York: 1952). Gary DeMar, God and Government - A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), p. 115. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va.

22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 1.

. Pennsylvania, Frame of Government of. April 25, 1682, Fundamental Constitutions written by William Penn. The Historical Society of Pennsylvania Collection, Philadelphia.

. Pennsylvania, Frame of Government of. April 25, 1682, Fundamental Constitutions written by William Penn, Article XXII. A Collection of Charters and Other Public Acts

Relating to the Province of Pennsylvania (Philadelphia: B. Franklin, 1740), pp. 10-12. Frances Newton Thorpe, ed., Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the States, Territories, and Colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, 7 vols. (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1905; 1909; St. Clair Shores, MI: Scholarly Press, 1968), Vol. V, p. 3059. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, p. 2271.

. Pennsylvania, Great Law of. December 7, 1682. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States, Developed in the Official and Historical Annals of the Republic (Philadelphia, PA: George W. Childs, 1864), p. 83. "Frame of Government." Charter to William Penn..., and Duke of Yorke's Book of Laws. Remember William Penn, 1644-1944, Tercentenary Memorial (Harrisburg, PA: The Commonwealth of Pennsylvania and Pennsylvania Historical Commission, 1944), p. 85-86. Gary DeMar, God and Government - A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), p. 115. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 2. D.P. Duffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 4. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 67. Gary DeMar, "God and the Constitution" (Atlanta, GA: The Biblical Worldview, An American Vision Publication - American Vision, Inc., December 1993), p. 9.

. Pennsylvania, Great Law of. December 7, 1682. Charter of William Penn, and Laws of the Province of Pennsylvania, passed between the Years 1682 and 1700 (Harrisburg:

1870), pp. 16-18. Anson Phelps Stokes and Leo Pfeffer, Church and State in the United States (NY: Harper and Row, Publishers, 1950, revised one-volume edition, 1964) p. 19.

. Handel, George Frederick. Messiah. Eliza Clark, The World's Workers. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 213.

. Handel, George Frederick. Eliza Clark, The World's Worker. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 212.

American Quotations.txt

. Handel, George Frederick. Messiah. Eliza Clark, The World's Workers. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 212.

. Bach, Johann Sebastian. In a cantata he composed entitled, Jesus, Meine Freude. Philip Spitta, His Work and Influence in the Music of Germany, Vol. III, pp. 601, 267. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 21.

. Bach, Johann Sebastian. Statement regarding music. G. Schirmer Music Publishing Catalogue.

. Bach, Johann Sebastian. Notations made in his personal Bible, which was a three volume set of the Calov Bible written in German by the noted 17th century Lutheran theologian Abraham Calov. The Bible was found in a Michigan farmhouse in 1934, where a family had owned it for over a century. A visiting pastor recognized Bach's monogram on the title page. The volumes were authenticated and donated to the Concordia Seminary in St. Louis, Missouri. Dr. Thomas R. Rossin, director of the professional chamber choir and orchestra Exultate, studied for Bach's Bible notations

for his doctoral dissertation. "Scholar Says Bach's Bible Shows He Was A Man Of Faith" (St. Louis, MO: The St. Louis MetroVoice, P.O. Box 220010, St. Louis, MO 63122, 314-965-5757, www.metrovoice.net, Jim Day, publisher, May 2002), p. 7.

. Bach, Johann Sebastian. Notations made in his personal Bible, which was a three volume set of the Calov Bible written in German by the noted 17th century Lutheran theologian Abraham Calov. The Bible was found in a Michigan farmhouse in 1934, where a family had owned it for over a century. A visiting pastor recognized Bach's monogram on the title page. The volumes were authenticated and donated to the Concordia Seminary in St. Louis, Missouri. Dr. Thomas R. Rossin, director of the professional chamber choir and orchestra Exultate, studied for Bach's Bible notations

for his doctoral dissertation. "Scholar Says Bach's Bible Shows He Was A Man Of Faith" (St. Louis, MO: The St. Louis MetroVoice, P.O. Box 220010, St. Louis, MO 63122, 314-965-5757, www.metrovoice.net, Jim Day, publisher, May 2002), p. 7.

. Bach, Johann Sebastian. Notations made in his personal Bible, which was a three volume set of the Calov Bible written in German by the noted 17th century Lutheran theologian Abraham Calov. The Bible was found in a Michigan farmhouse in 1934, where a family had owned it for over a century. A visiting pastor recognized Bach's monogram on the title page. The volumes were authenticated and donated to the Concordia Seminary in St. Louis, Missouri. Dr. Thomas R. Rossin, director of the professional chamber choir and orchestra Exultate, studied for Bach's Bible notations

for his doctoral dissertation. "Scholar Says Bach's Bible Shows He Was A Man Of Faith" (St. Louis, MO: The St. Louis MetroVoice, P.O. Box 220010, St. Louis, MO 63122, 314-965-5757, www.metrovoice.net, Jim Day, publisher, May 2002), p. 7.

. Pope, Alexander. 1711, in An Essay on Criticism, Part II, verse 525. M.H. Abrams, editor, et al., The Norton Anthology of English Literature, Major Authors Edition - Revised (New York: W.W. Norton & Company, Inc., 1962, 1968), p. 1013. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, p. 6495.

. Pope, Alexander. 1711, An Essay on Criticism, line 625. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, p. 6495. The Oxford Dictionary of Quotations (London: Oxford University Press, Second Edition, 1941, 1955), p. 383.

. Pope, Alexander. 1735, 1744, in Of the Character of Women. The Oxford Dictionary of Quotations (London: Oxford University Press, Second Edition, 1941, 1955), p. 381.

. Pope, Alexander. 1733, in An Essay on Man, Epistle I, line 95. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 13, p. 6495. The Oxford Dictionary of Quotations (London: Oxford University Press, Second Edition, 1941, 1955), p. 383.

. Pope, Alexander. 1733, in An Essay on Man, Epistle IV, line 247. The Oxford Dictionary of Quotations (London: Oxford University Press, Second Edition, 1941, 1955), p. 384.

. Montesquieu, Baron Charles Louis Joseph de Secondat. Donald S. Lutz and Charles S. Hyneman, "The Relative Influence of European Writers on Late Eighteenth-Century American Political Thought," American Political Review 189 (1984): 189-197. (Courtesy of Dr. Wayne House of Dallas Theological Seminary.) John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 51-53. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 156. [1760-1805], Origins of American Constitutionalism, (1987).

. Montesquieu, Baron Charles Louis Joseph de Secondat. 1748. The Spirit of the Laws (New York: Hafner, 1949, 1962), 1:1-3. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 54-55.

. Montesquieu, Baron Charles Louis Joseph de Secondat. 1748. Baron Charles Montesquieu, The Spirit of the Laws, 1748, Anne Cohler, trans. (reprinted Cambridge:

Cambridge University Press, 1989), p. 457.

. Montesquieu, Baron Charles Louis Joseph de Secondat. 1748. Baron Charles Montesquieu, The Spirit of the Laws, 1748, Anne Cohler, trans. (reprinted Cambridge:

Cambridge University Press, 1989), p. 457.

. Montesquieu, Baron Charles Louis Joseph de Secondat. 1748. Baron Charles Montesquieu, The Spirit of the Laws, 1748, Anne Cohler, trans. (reprinted Cambridge:

Cambridge University Press, 1989), p. 457.

. Montesquieu, Baron Charles Louis Joseph de Secondat. 1748. Baron Charles Montesquieu, The Spirit of the Laws, 1748, Anne Cohler, trans. (reprinted Cambridge:

Cambridge University Press, 1989), p. 157.

. Montesquieu, Baron Charles Louis Joseph de Secondat. 1748. The Spirit of the Laws (New York: Hafner, 1949, 1962), 24:27-29. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House,

A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 55-56. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D. D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 322.

. Montesquieu, Baron Charles Louis Joseph de Secondat. George Bancroft, Bancroft's History of the United States (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1859), Vol. V, p. 24.

. Connecticut, Colony of. 1690, law passed in the legislature. Edward Kendall, Kendall's Travels (New York: I. Riley, 1809), Vol. I, pp. 270-271.

. New England Primer. 1737. Alphabet of Religious Jingles, Dover Publications, Inc., New York, N.Y., Gary DeMar, God and Government, A Biblical and Historical Study

(Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1984), p. 19. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 75. D.P. Duffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 4.

. New England Primer. 1691, second edition advertised, 1737, oldest extant copy, 1784, date of primer which contained the referenced version of the prayer, Enchiridion Leonis, dated 1160 A.D. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 320.

American Quotations.txt

- . William and Mary, College of. Mary R. M. Goodwin, Wren Building Interpretative Research Report (Williamsburg, VA: College of William and Mary), p. 7.
- . William and Mary, College of. 1692, in the Original Charter of the College of William and Mary, Williamsburg, Virginia, granted to James Blair. Rare Book Collection, Swem Library. The Charter and Statutes of the College of William and Mary in Virginia (Williamsburg, VA: William Parks, 1736), p. 3. John Fiske, The Beginnings of New England (Boston: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1898), pp. 127-128, 136. Russ Walton, Biblical Principles of Importance to Godly Christians (NH: Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1984), p. 356.
- . William and Mary, College of. 1792, the requirements of the College of William and Mary. William and Mary Rules (Richmond, VA: Augustine Davis, 1792), p. 6.
- . Voltaire, Francois Marie Arouet. May 16, 1767, in a letter to M. Damiaville. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 343.
- . Voltaire, Francois Marie Arouet. Carroll E. Simcox, 3000 Quotations on Christian Themes (Grand Rapids, Michigan: Baker Book House 1989), p. 85.
- . New Jersey, Colony of. 1697. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia: George W. Childs, 1864), p. 91. Gary DeMar, God and Government-A Biblical and Historical Study (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Press, 1982), p. 116. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 61.
- . New Jersey, Seal of the Province of. 1697. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1989, 1994), p. 90.
- . Yale College. 1701, founded by ten Congregational ministers. Noah Webster, Letters to a Young Gentleman Commencing His Education (New Haven: Howe & Spalding, 1823), p. 237.
- . Yale College. 1701, in an act by the General Court. David A. Lockmiller, Scholars on Parade: Colleges, Universities, Costumes and Degrees (New York: MacMillan, 1969), p. 70. Pat Robertson, America's Dates With Destiny (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), p. 46. Yale College was renamed Yale University in 1887. The New American Desk Encyclopedia (New York, NY: Signet, The Penguin Group, 1989), p. 1360.
- . Yale College. November 11, 1701, Proceedings of the Trustees. Franklin B. Dexter, editor, Documentary History of Yale University (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1916), p. 27. Peter G. Mode, Sourcebook and Bibliographical Guide for American Church History (Menasha, WI: George Banta Publishing Co., 1920, 1921), p. 109. John Elliot, New England First Fruits, 1643. Pat Robertson, America's Dates With Destiny (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), p. 45.
- . Yale College. November 11, 1701, Proceedings of the Trustees. Franklin B. Dexter, editor, Documentary History of Yale University (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1916; NY: Amo Press & The New York Times, 1969), p. 32. Peter G. Mode, ed., Sourcebook and Bibliographical Guide for American Church History (Menasha, WI: G. Banta Publishing Company, 1920, pp. 109-110. Pat Robertson, America's Dates With Destiny (Nashville, TN: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), pp. 45-46.
- . Yale College. 1701, as stated by the founders. William C. Ringenberg, The Christian College: A History of Protestant Higher Education in America (Grand Rapids, MI: William B. Eerdmans Publishing Company, 1984), p. 38. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 42.
- . Yale College. 1720. Daniel Dorchester, Christianity in the United States (New York: Hunt and Eaton, 1890), p. 245. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 92.
- . Yale College. 1745, in the Yale Charter. Richard Hofstadter and Wilson Smith, eds., American Higher Education: A Documentary History (Chicago, IL: University of - Chicago Press, 1961), 1:49. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), pp. 43-44.

- . Yale College. 1755, instructions to students, given previously in 1743. The Catalogue of the Library of Yale College in New Haven (New London: T. Green, 1743), prefatory remarks. The Catalogue of the Library of Yale College in New Haven (New Haven: James Parker, 1755), prefatory remarks.
 - . Yale College. 1787, the requirements of Yale College. The Laws of Yale College in New Haven in Connecticut (New Haven: Josiah Meigs, 1787), pp. 5-6, Chapter II, Article 1, 4. Richard Hofstadter and Wilson Smith, eds., American Higher Education: A Documentary History (Chicago, IL: University of Chicago Press, 1961), 1:49. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 43.
 - . Yale College. In a writing of Yale faculty member Benjamin Silliman. Henry M. Morris, Men of Science - Men of God (El Cajon, CA: Master Books, Creation Life Publishers, Inc., 1990), p. 39.
 - . Pennsylvania, Charter of Privileges of. October 28, 1701, granted by William Penn. Philosophical Society of Pennsylvania Collection, Philadelphia. Frances Newton Thorpe, ed., Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the States, Territories, and Colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, 7 vols. (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1905; 1909; St. Clair Shores, MI: Scholarly Press, 1968), Vol. V, p. 3076 ff. Church of the Holy Trinity v. United States, 143 US 457, 458, 465-471, 36 L ed 226, Justice David Josiah Brewer. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), Vol. I, p. 40-41. Richard L. Perry, ed., Sources of Our Liberties: Documentary Origins of Individual Liberties in the United States Constitution and Bill of Rights (Chicago: American Bar Foundation, 1978; New York: 1952). Charles E. Rice, The Supreme Court and Public Prayer (New York: Fordham University Press, 1964), pp. 164-165. Rosalie J. Slater, Teaching and Learning America's Christian History (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1975), p. 202. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 98. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 6.
 - . Wesley, John. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 55.
 - . Wesley, John. May 24, 1738, Wednesday. John Wesley's Journal (Curnock). "From the Journal" (Carol Stream, IL: Christian History), Vol. II, No. I, pp. 30-32.
 - . Wesley, John. June 11, 1739, in his Journal. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 346.
 - . Wesley, John. February 12, 1772, in his Journal. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 346.
 - . Wesley, John. In his Rule. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 346.
 - . Wesley, John. Statement. For Mothers (Heartland Samplers, Inc., 5555 W. 78th St. Suite P, Edina, MN, 55439, 1994), 12. 16.
 - . Edwards, Jonathan. Marshall Foster, Winning the Battle for the 21st Century (Thousand Oaks, CA: Mayflower Institute, 1993), p. 39.
 - . Edwards, Jonathan. The Works of President Edwards (Isai ah Thomas, editor), Vol. III, pp. 14-19. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and The Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company), pp. 241-243.
 - . Edwards, Jonathan. Tryon Edwards, D. D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Cyclopedi a of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C.H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), p. 91.

American Quotations.txt

. Edwards, Jonathan. Perry Tanksley, To Love is to Give (Jackson, Mississippi: Allgood Books, Box 1329; Parthenon Press, 201 8th Ave., South, Nashville, Tennessee, 1972), p. 29.

. Edwards, Jonathan. Statement. For Mothers (Heartland Samplers, Inc., 5555 W. 78th St. Suite P, Edina, MN, 55439, 1994), 2.24.

. Edwards, Jonathan. Jonathan Edwards, in his sermon, entitled "The Latter-Day Glory Is Probably to Begin in America"; reprinted in Conrad Cherry, God's New Israel:

Religious Interpretations of American Destiny (Englewood Cliffs, N.J.: Prentice-Hall, 1971), pp. 55-59. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 31.

. Edwards, Jonathan. Sarah Edwards, in a letter to her brother. John Pollack, George Whitefield and the Great Awakening (Garden City New Jersey: Doubleday and Co., 1972), p. 164. Peter Marshall & David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 12.17.

. Alison, Francis. As described by Ezra Stiles. Allen Johnson, editor, Dictionary of American Biography XI vols. (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1927), Vol. 1, p.

181.

. Alison, Francis. May 27, 1759, in a letter to Ezra Stiles. Franklin Bowditch Dexter, ed., Extracts from the Itineraries and Other Miscellanies of Ezra Stiles, etc. (New Haven: 1916), p. 424. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 2, p. 47.

. Franklin, Benjamin. Poor Richard's Almanac. Carroll E. Simcox, comp., 4400 Quotations for Christian Communicators (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1991), p.

185.

. Franklin, Benjamin. 1733, in Poor Richard's Almanac. Raymond A. St. John, American Literature for Christian Schools (Greenville, SC: Bob Jones University Press, Inc., 1979), p. 126. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 347.

. Franklin, Benjamin. May 1757, in Poor Richard's Almanac. Carroll E. Simcox, comp., 4400 Quotations for Christian Communicators (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1991), p. 297. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 347.

. Franklin, Benjamin. In a comment to his wife. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 6, p. 2748.

. Franklin, Benjamin. 1728, in his "Articles of Belief and Acts of Religion." Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of Benjamin Franklin (Boston: Tappan, Whittemore and Mason, 1840), Vol. II, pp. 1-3. Carl Van Dorn, Benjamin Franklin (NY: Viking Press, 1938), p. 188. Carl Becker, Benjamin Franklin (New York: Cornell University, 1946), p. 81. Leonard Labaree, ed., The Papers of Benjamin Franklin (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1959), Vol. I, p. 103. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, pp. 373-74. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1987), p. 209. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN:

Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 118-122.

. Franklin, Benjamin. Carl Becker, Benjamin Franklin (New York: Cornell University, 1946), p. 81. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN:

- Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 122.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. 1728, in his "Articles of Belief and Acts of Religion." Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of Benjamin Franklin (Boston: Tappan, Whittemore and Mason, 1840), Vol. II, pp. 1-3. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1 pp. 373-74.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Leonard Labaree, ed., The Papers of Benjamin Franklin (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1959), Vol. I, pp. 104-105. Carl Becker, Benjamin Franklin (New York: Cornell University, 1946), p. 81. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 119, 122.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Leonard Labaree, ed., The Papers of Benjamin Franklin (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1959), Vol. I, p. 108. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 120.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Leonard Labaree, ed., The Papers of Benjamin Franklin (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1959), Vol. I, p. 109. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 120.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. William B. Wilcox, ed., The Papers of Benjamin Franklin (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1972), Vol. 15, p. 301. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 124.
- Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1955), p. 20.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Leonard Labaree, ed., The Papers of Benjamin Franklin (New Haven: Yale University Press, 1959), Vol. I, p. 213. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 120.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Tryon Edwards, D.D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Cyclopedi a of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C. H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), pp. 49, 338.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 3.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. "Readings for Americans - Articles of Lasting Interest" (Pleasantville, N.Y.: Reader's Digest, The Reader's Digest Association, Inc.), p. 106.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. List of Virtues. The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Personal Prayer. The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin.
- Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1955), p. 30.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. 1781, in his second Autobiography. Benjamin Franklin, Autobiography, II (1784). Carl Van Dorn, ed., Franklin's Autobiographical Writings, Carl Van Dorn, ed., (NY: Viking Press, 1945), p. 624. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1955), pp. 25-26. Raymond A. St. John, American Literature for Christian Schools (Greenville, SC: Bob Jones University Press, Inc., 1979), pp. 121-122. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), pp. 195-195.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. William S. Pfaff, ed., Maxims and Morals of Benjamin Franklin (New Orleans: Searcy and Pfaff, Ltd., 1927).
- . Franklin, Benjamin. 1742. Charles Fadi man, ed., The American Treasury (NY: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1955), p. 126. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, p. 439.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. July 28, 1743, in a letter to his sister, Jane Mecom. Carl Van Dorn, ed., The Letters of Benjamin Franklin & Jane Mecom (London: Princeton University Press, 1950), p. 38. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The

American Quotations.txt

Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1987), p. 199.
. Franklin, Benjamin. April 1747, in "The Speech of Polly Baker," printed in Gentleman's Magazine, Albert Henry Smyth, ed., The Writings of Benjamin Franklin, 10 vols. (NY: The Macmillan Co., 1905-07), Vol. 2, p. 267. Carl Van Dorn, Benjamin Franklin (NY: Viking Press, 1938), p. 154. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, p. 470. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1987), p. 211.
. Franklin, Benjamin. Carl Van Dorn, Benjamin Franklin (NY: Viking Press, 1938), p. 188. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1987), p. 209. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 1.17.
. Franklin, Benjamin. 1749, in Philadelphia, Proposals Relating to the Education of Youth in Pennsylvania (Philadelphia, 1749), p. 22.
. Franklin, Benjamin. August 23, 1750, in a letter to Dr. Samuel Johnson, President of King's College (now Columbia University). Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the American Revolution (San Francisco: Foundation for Christian Education, 1976), p. 221.
. Franklin, Benjamin. June 6, 1753, in a letter from Philadelphia to Joseph Huey. Jared Sparks, Works of Benjamin Franklin (Boston: 1840), Vol. VII. Albert Henry Smyth, ed., The Writings of Benjamin Franklin, 10 vols. (NY: The Macmillan Co., 1905-07), Vol. II, p. 144. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the American Revolution (San Francisco: Foundation for Christian Education, 1976), pp. 189-190. Perry Tanksley, To Love is to Give (Jackson, Mississippi: Allgood Books, Box 1329; Parthenon Press, 201 8th Ave., South, Nashville, Tennessee, 1972), p. 27. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 200.
. Franklin, Benjamin. 1751. Benjamin Franklin, Some Account of the Pennsylvania Hospital from its first rise, to the beginning of the fifth month, called May 1754 (Philadelphia: B. Franklin and D. Hall, Rare Book Collection, Library of Congress).
. Franklin, Benjamin. 1755, inscription he composed for the cornerstone of Pennsylvania Hospital.
. Franklin, Benjamin. 1754. Benjamin Franklin, Information on Those Who Would Remove to America (London: M. Gurney, 1754), pp. 22, 23. "Advice on Coming to America," George D. Youstra, ed., America in Person (Greenville, SC: Bob Jones University Press, 1975), p. 109. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc. 1987), p. 31. Benjamin Franklin, Works of the Late Doctor Benjamin Franklin Consisting of His Life, Written by Himself, Together with Essays, Humorous, Moral & Literary, Chiefly in the Manner of the Spectator, Richard Price, ed., (Dublin: P. Wogan, P. Byrne, J. Moore, and W. Jones, 1793), p. 289.
. Franklin, Benjamin. 1757, in The Way to Wealth. Raymond A. St. John, American Literature for Christian Schools (Greenville, SC: Bob Jones University Press, Inc., 1979), p. 128.
. Franklin, Benjamin. November 8, 1764, in a letter to his daughter, Sarah. Jared Sparks, editor, The Works of Benjamin Franklin (Boston: Tappan, Whittemore and Mason, 1838), Vol. VII, pp. 269-270. Albert Henry Smyth, ed., The Writings of Benjamin Franklin, 10 vols. (NY: The Macmillan Co., 1905-07), Vol. V, p. 286. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1955), p. 20. Andrew W. Allison, Cleon Skousen, and M. Richard Maxfield, The Real Benjamin Franklin (Salt Lake City, Utah: The Freeman Institute, 1982), p. 313. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), pp. 200-201.

American Quotations.txt

- . Franklin, Benjamin. January 1, 1769, in a letter to Lord James. Paul W. Connor, Poor Richard's Politics - Benjamin Franklin and His American Order (NY: Oxford University Press, 1965), p. 107. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 211.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. 1739. Benjamin Franklin, The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin (New York: Books, Inc., 1791), p. 146. Benjamin Franklin, Autobiography, 1771-75 (Reprinted Garden City, NY: Garden City Publishing Co., Inc., 1916), Vol. 1, pp. 191-192. John Pollack, George Whitefield and the Great Awakening (Garden City New Jersey: Doubleday and Co., 1972), p. 117. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1987), p. 204. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 116. Peter Marshall & David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 12.18.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. 1752, in a letter from George Whitefield. Frank Lambert, The Religious Odd Couple (Carol Stream, IL: Christian History), Vol. XII, No. 2, Issue 38, p. 31.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. 1764, in ending a letter written to George Whitefield. Frank Lambert, The Religious Odd Couple (Carol Stream, IL: Christian History), Vol. XII, No. 2, Issue 38, p. 31.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. 1769, in the last surviving letter from George Whitefield to Benjamin Franklin. Frank Lambert, The Religious Odd Couple (Carol Stream, IL: Christian History), Vol. XII, No. 2, Issue 38, pp. 31-32.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. In his last letter to George Whitefield. Frank Lambert, The Religious Odd Couple (Carol Stream, IL: Christian History), Vol. XII, No. 2, Issue 38, p. 31.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. August 14, 1776. Charles Francis Adams (son of John Quincy Adams and grandson of John Adams), ed., Letters of John Adams, Addressed to His Wife, (Boston: Charles C. Little and James Brown, 1841), Vol. I, p. 152. L.H. Butterfield, Marc Frielander and Mary-Jo Kings, eds., The Book of Abigail and John - Selected Letters from The Adams Family 1762-1784 (Cambridge, MA: Harvard University Press, 1975), p. 154.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Attributed, March 1778, in a letter to the French ministry. Charles E. Kistler, This Nation Under God (Boston: Richard G. Badger, The Gorham Press, 1924), p. 83. Burton Stevenson, The Home Book of Quotations-Classical & Modern (New York: Dodd, Mead and Company, 1967), pp. 151, 265. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (NJ: Fleming H. Revell Co., 1977; 1986), p. 370, n. 10. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 9. Sam Bartholomew, God's Role in America (Nashville, TN: Eggman Publishing Company, 1996), p. 39. Matthew Staver, Faith and Freedom (Wheaton, IL: Crossway Books, 1995), p. 18.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Treaty of Paris, September 3, 1783. W. Cleon Skousen, The Making of America (Washington: The National Center for Constitutional Studies, 1985), 139. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 115.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. September 3, 1783, signed the Treaty of Paris, officially ending the Revolutionary War with Great Britain; ratified by Congress January 14, 1784, under the Articles of Confederation. William M. Malloy, compiler, Treaties, Conventions, International Acts, Protocols and Agreements between the United States of America and Other Powers, 1776-1909, 4 vols. (New York: Greenwood Press, 1910, 1968), 2:1786. Charles W. Eliot, LL.D., ed., American Historical Documents 1000-1904 (New York: P.F. Collier & Son Company, The Harvard Classics, 1910), Vol. 43, pp. 185-

191. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 84.

. Franklin, Benjamin. In a toast at a dinner of foreign ambassadors in Versailles, France. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 348.

. Franklin, Benjamin. 1784, in a letter to Robert Livingston. William S. Pfaff, ed., The Pith of Franklin's Letter (New Orleans: Searcy and Pfaff, Ltd., 1927).

. Franklin, Benjamin. April 17, 1787, in a letter. Albert Henry Smyth, ed., The Writings of Benjamin Franklin, 10 vols. (New York: Macmillan Co., 1905-7), 9:569, reprinted (NY: Haskell House Publishers, 1970), Vol. IX, p. 569. Albert Henry Smyth, ed., The Writings of Benjamin Franklin 10 vols. (NY: The Macmillan Co., 1905-07), Vol. X, p. 50. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1955), p. 393. Andrew W. Allison, Cleon Skousen and M. Richard Maxfield, The Real Benjamin Franklin

(Salt Lake City, Utah: The Freeman Institute, 1982), p. 313. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1987), p. 211. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 196. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1,

p. 4.

. Franklin, Benjamin. June 28, 1787. James Madison, Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787 (NY: W.W. Morton & Co., Original 1787 reprinted 1987), Vol. I, p. 504, 451-21. James Madison, Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787 (Athens, Ohio: Ohio University Press, 1966, 1985), pp. 209-10. Henry D. Gilpin, editor, The Papers of James Madison (Washington: Langtree & O' Sullivan, 1840), Vol.

II, p. 985. George Bancroft, Bancroft's History of the Constitution of the United States vols. I-X (Boston: Charles C. Little & James Brown, 1838), Vol. II. Albert

Henry Smyth, ed., The Writings of Benjamin Franklin (New York: The Macmillan Company, 1905-7), Vol. IX, pp. 600-601. Gaillard Hunt and James B. Scott, ed., The Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787 Which Framed the Constitution of the United States of America, reported by James Madison (New York: Oxford University Press, 1920), pp.

181-182. Andrew M. Allison, W. Cleon Skousen, and M. Richard Maxfield, The Real Benjamin Franklin (Salt Lake City, Utah: The Freeman Institute, 1982, pp. 258-259.

John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993),

pp.

12-13, 208. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 122-124. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 159-160. D.P. Duffine, Ph.D., One

Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 8. Stephen

McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol.

9, No. 1, pp. 5-6.

. Franklin, Benjamin. June 28, 1787, records of General Jonathan Dayton. E.C.

M'Guire, The Religious Opinions and Character of Washington (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1836), p. 151. William Steele, in a letter to his son Jonathan, September 1825.

National Intelligencer.

. Franklin, Benjamin. James Madison, Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787 (1787; reprinted NY: W. W. Norton & Co., 1987), p. 210. Irving Brant, James Madison, Father of the Constitution, 1787-1800 (New York: Bobbs-Merrill, 1950), Vol.

III, p. 84. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 126.

. Franklin, Benjamin. June 28, 1787. James Madison, Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787 (1787; reprinted NY: W. W. Norton & Co., 1987), pp. 210-211.

. Franklin, Benjamin. E. C. M'Guire, The Religious Opinions and Character of Washington (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1836), p. 152.

. Franklin, Benjamin. Benjamin Franklin Morris, The Christian Life and Character of the Civil Institutions of the United States (Philadelphia: George W. Childs, 1864), pp. 253-254.

. Franklin, Benjamin. Billy Suggs, "Franklin's Prayer Request at the Constitutional Convention, 1787" (Aledo, TX: WallBuilders Inc.)

. Franklin, Benjamin. September 19, 1787, in a comment to a Mrs. Powell regarding the newly approved Constitution. James McHenry, aide to George Washington, in an entry in his diary, published in the American Historical Review, XI (1906), p. 618. Bartlett's Familiar Quotations, Sixteenth Edition, at 310:26, referenced under "A republic, if you can keep it."

. Franklin, Benjamin. 1788, in a speech. Albert Henry Smyth, ed., The Writings of Benjamin Franklin, 10 vols. (NY: The Macmillan Co., 1905-07), Vol. I, p. 339. Andrew

W. Allison, Cleon Skousen, and M. Richard Maxfield, The Real Benjamin Franklin (Salt Lake City, Utah: The Freeman Institute, 1982), p. 449. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and

The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1987), p. 212.

. Franklin, Benjamin. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 57. Billy Suggs, "Franklin's Prayer Request at the Constitutional Convention, 1787" (Aledo, TX: WallBuilders Inc.)

. Franklin, Benjamin. March 9, 1790, in a letter to Ezra Stiles, President of Yale University. Jared Sparks, editor, The Works of Benjamin Franklin (Boston: Tappan, Whitmore and Mason, 1838), Vol. X, p. 424. Tryon Edwards, D. D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Cyclopaedia of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C. H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), p. 91. Albert Henry Smyth, ed., The Writings of Benjamin Franklin (New York: MacMillan, 1905-7), Vol. 10, p. 84.

John Bigelow, Complete Words of Benjamin Franklin. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D. D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 159. Carl Van Dorn, ed., The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin (NY: Viking Press, 1945), p. 783. Norman Cousins,

In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1955), p. 42. Frank B. Carlson, Our Presbyterian

Heritage, (1973), p. 25. Raymond A. St. John, American Literature for Christian Schools (Greenville, SC: Bob Jones University Press, Inc., 1979), p. 131. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 116. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1987), p. 210. D. P. Duffine, Ph. D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 8.

Henry M. Morris, "Sweet Land of Liberty" (El Cajon, CA: Institute for Creation Research, Back to Genesis, No. 91, July 1996), p. a.

American Quotations.txt

- . Franklin, Benjamin. March 9, 1790, in his letter to Ezra Stiles, President of Yale College. Frank B. Carlson, Our Presbyterian Heritage, (1973), pp. 23-25.
- Lucille Johnston, Celebrations of a Nation (Arlington, VA: The Year of Thanksgiving Foundation, 1987), p. 70.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin (Note: Franklin's Epitaph, written by himself in 1728, is engraved on his gravestone), p. 401. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 121. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. I, p. 374.
- . Franklin, Benjamin. Christ Church, plaque on Franklin's family pew.
- . Fielding, Henry. 1742, in Joseph Andrews, book III, chapter 5. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 349.
- . Linnaeus, Carolus. Inscribed over the door of his bedchamber. Benjamin Daydon Jones, Biography of Linnaeus, ch. 15. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 350.
- . Wesley, Charles. 1739, in his Hymns and Sacred Poems, Christ, the Lord, Is Risen Today. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 350.
- . Wesley, Charles. In Temptation. Burton Stevenson, The Home Book of Quotations (New York: Dodd, Mead & Company, 1967), p. 264.
- . Wesley, Charles. 1742, in Gentle Jesus, Meek and Mild. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 350.
- . Wesley, Charles. 1749, in Soldiers of Christ, Arise. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 350.
- . Wesley, Charles. 1753, Hark the Herald Angels Sing. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 350. Herbert V. Prochnow, 5100 Quotations for Speakers and Writers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1992), p. 519.
- . Johnson, Samuel. 1755, Dictionary of the English Language. William McAulay Hosmer, "Of Divine Providence in Our Declaration of Independence" (Hosmer Enterprises: P.O. Box 846, San Carlos, California 94070, 1980), pp. 14-15. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 85.
- . Johnson, Samuel. Dr. Johnson, Oriental Eloquence of Collins. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 256.
- . Johnson, Samuel. Prayer before writing The Rambler. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 256.
- . Johnson, Samuel. Extracts from a birthday prayer, transcribed June 26, 1768. Arthur Murphy, Prayers and Meditations; The Works of Samuel Johnson, with an Essay on His Life and Genius Vol. II. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 256.
- . Johnson, Samuel. Perry Tanksley, To Love is to Give (Jackson, Mississippi: Allgood Books, Box 1329; Parthenon Press, 201 8th Ave., South, Nashville, Tennessee, 1972), p. 37.
- . Johnson, Samuel. 1763. James Boswell, Life of Johnson (1791, edited by G.B. Hill, revised by L.F. Powell, 1934). John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 354.
- . Johnson, Samuel. 1772. James Boswell, Life of Johnson (1791, edited by G.B. Hill, revised by L.F. Powell, 1934). John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 354.
- . Johnson, Samuel. December 13, 1784. James Boswell, Life of Johnson (1791, edited by G.B. Hill, revised by L.F. Powell, 1934). John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar

American Quotations.txt

Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 357.

. Trumbull, Jonathan. October 12, 1770, A Proclamation given from New Haven by the Honorable Jonathan Trumbull, Esq., Governor of the English Colony of Connecticut, in New England. David Barton, Original Intent (Alledo, TX: WallBuilder Press, 1996), p. 138.

. Trumbull, Jonathan. A Proclamation by His Excellency Jonathan Trumbull, Esq., Governor and Commander in Chief in and over the State of Connecticut (Hudson and Goodwin, 1807).

. Trumbull, Jonathan. 1773. Charles E. Kistler, This Nation Under God (Boston: Richard G. Badger, The Gorham Press, 1924), p. 56. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 2.16.

. Trumbull, Jonathan. Hezekiah Niles, Principles and Acts of the Revolution in America (Baltimore: William Ogden Niles, 1822), p. 198. Cushing Stout, The New Heavens and New Earth (NY: Harper and Row, 1974), p. 59. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 2.17.

. Trumbull, Jonathan. April 19, 1775, as Governor of the Connecticut Colony proclaiming a day of fasting and prayer. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the American Revolution (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 407. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 3.22. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 120.

. Trumbull, Jonathan. July 13, 1775, in a letter to General Washington. Verna M. Hall and Rosalie J. Slater, The Christian History of the American Revolution - Consider and Ponder (San Francisco, CA: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 511. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 7.13. Jared Sparks, ed., Correspondence of the American Revolution - being Letters of Eminent Men to George Washington from the time of his Taking Command of the Army to the End of his Presidency, 4 vols. (Boston:

Little, Brown and Co., 1853), Vol. I, pp. 2-3. Douglas Southall Freeman, George Washington, 6 vols. (NY: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1948-1954), Vol. III, pp. 503-504.

. Trumbull, Jonathan. August 1776, appeal sent out in response to General Washington's plea for reinforcements. Isaac W. Stuart, Life. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 467. George Bancroft, Bancroft's History of the United States vols. I-X (Boston: Charles C. Little & James Brown, 3rd edition, 1838), Vol. IX, p. 79. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 312.

. Muhlenberg, Henry Melchior. Henry Melchior Muhlenberg, The Notebook of a Colonial Clergyman, translated and ed., by Theodore G. Tappert and John W. Doberstern

(Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1975), p. 195. Lucille Johnston, Celebrations of a Nation (Arlington, VA: The Year of Thanksgiving Foundation, 1987), p. 87. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 323.

. Rousseau, Jean Jacques. Emilius and Sophia (English Edition, 1767), Vol. III, Book IV, pp. 136-139. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland,

Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 385-386. Frank Ballard, The Miracles of Unbelief (Edinburgh: T

& T Lark), p. 251. Willard Cantelon, New Money or None? (Plainfield, NJ: Logos

- International, 1979), p. 247. Tryon Edwards, D. D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Encyclopedia of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C. H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), p. 47.
- . Rousseau, Jean Jacques. 1762, in his work Emile; ou, De l'Education, I. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 358.
 - . Rousseau, Jean Jacques. 1762, in his work Emile; ou, De l'Education, I. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 358.
 - . Rousseau, Jean Jacques. 1762, in his work Emile; ou, De l'Education, V. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 359.
 - . Vattel, Emmerich de. 1758. Emmerich de Vattel, The Law of Nations, 1758. Verna
 M. Hall, Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America:
 Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1962, 1979), p. 293. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House,
 A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 67.
 - . Shipley, Jonathan. H. Niles, Principles and Acts of the Revolution in America
 (Baltimore: 1822), p. 164. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America
 (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 1.28.
 - . Shipley, Jonathan. George Smith, founder, Sir Leslie Stephen, editor, The Dictionary of National Biography 22 vols. (London: Oxford University Press, 1882; 1917), Vol XVIII, p. 111.
 - . Whittfield, George. 1733, spoken at his conversion. John Pollock, George Whittfield and the Great Awakening (Garden City, NY: Doubleday and Co., 1972), p.
 19.
 - . Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 12.16.
 - . Whittfield, George. J. L. Packer, The Startling Puritan (Carol Stream, IL:
 Christian History), Vol. XII, No. 2, Issue 38, p. 40.
 - . Whittfield, George. J. L. Packer, The Startling Puritan (Carol Stream, IL:
 Christian History), Vol. XII, No. 2, Issue 38, p. 39.
 - . Whittfield, George. In a letter from Sarah Edwards to her brother. Pollock, Whittfield, p. 164. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America
 (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 12.17.
 - . Whittfield, George. Benjamin Franklin, The Autobiography of Benjamin Franklin
 (New York: Books, Inc., 1791), p. 146. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 116. Pollock, Whittfield, p. 117.
 - . Whittfield, George. 1752, in a letter to Benjamin Franklin. Frank Lambert, The Religious Odd Couple (Carol Stream, IL: Christian History), Vol. XII, No. 2, Issue
 38, p. 31.
 - . Whittfield, George. 1764, in ending a letter from Benjamin Franklin. Frank Lambert, The Religious Odd Couple (Carol Stream, IL: Christian History), Vol. XII,
 No. 2, Issue 38, p. 31.
 - . Whittfield, George. 1769, in his last surviving letter to Benjamin Franklin.
 Frank Lambert, The Religious Odd Couple (Carol Stream, IL: Christian History), Vol.
 XII, No. 2, Issue 38, pp. 31-32.
 - . Whittfield, George. In the last letter from Benjamin Franklin. Frank Lambert,
 The Religious Odd Couple (Carol Stream, IL: Christian History), Vol. XII, No. 2, Issue 38, p. 31.
 - . Whittfield, George. 1770, spoken at his death. John Pollock, George Whittfield and the Great Awakening (Garden City, NY: Doubleday and Co., 1972), p. 19. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 12.16.
 - . Nicholas, Robert Carter. May 24, 1773, in a proposal for a Day of Prayer and Fasting in response to the British closing of the port at Boston. (H. B. Journal,

American Quotations.txt

- 1773-76, 124). Douglas Southall Freeman, George Washington, 6 Vol. (NY: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1948-54), Vol. III, p. 350. Dumas Malone, editor, Dictionary of American Biography (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1934), Vol VII, p. 485.
- . Mayhew, Jonathan. 1775. Clinton Rossiter, Seedtime of the Republic (New York: Harcourt, Brace & World, Inc., 1953), p. 241. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 2.18.
- . Mayhew, Jonathan. 1749, to the Council and House of Representatives in Colonial New England. Dorothy Dimmick, Why Study the Election Sermons of Our Founding Generation? (San Francisco, CA: The American Christian Prompter, Winter 1993), Vol. 4, No. 2, p. 3. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1975), pp. 374-375. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), pp. 14-15.
- . Mayhew, Jonathan. January 30, 1750, in the sermon "A Discourse Concerning Unlimited Submission and Non-resistance to the Higher Powers, etc., etc." The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 1, pp. 482-483.
- . Sherman, Roger. June 28, 1787. James Madison, Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787 (1787; reprinted NY: W.W. Norton & Co., 1987), p. 210.
- . Sherman, Roger. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 58. Christopher Collier, Roger Sherman's Connecticut (Middletown, CT: Wesleyan University Press, 1971), p. 185.
- . Sherman, Roger. Lewis Henry Boutell, The Life of Roger Sherman (Chicago: A.C. McClure & Co., 1896), p. 213. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 137. Edwin Gaustad, Faith of Our Fathers (San Francisco: Harper & Row, 1987), p. 158.
- . Sherman, Roger. February 1776, in a directive for the embassy to Canada. Christopher Collier, Roger Sherman's Connecticut (Middletown, CT: Wesleyan University Press, 1979), p. 129. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Baker Book House, 1987), p. 325.
- . Sherman, Roger. M.E. Bradford, A Worthy Company - Brief Lives of the Framers of the United States Constitution (Marlborough, NH: Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1982), p. 25.
- . Sherman, Roger. Annals of the Congress of the United States - First Congress - The Debates and Proceedings in the Congress of the United States with an Appendix Containing Important State Papers and Public Documents and All the Laws of a Public Nature - with a Copious Index, 1789-1791 42 vols. (Washington, D.C.: Gales & Seaton, 1834-56), Vol. I, p. 914.
- . Sherman, Roger. Christopher Collier, Roger Sherman's Connecticut (Middletown, CT: Wesleyan University Press, 1971), p. 185.
- . Sherman, Roger. John Eidsmoe, Constitution, p. 321. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 8.23.
- . Sherman, Roger. Lewis Henry Boutell, The Life of Roger Sherman (Chicago: A.C. McClure & Co., 1896), p. 269. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 135-136.
- . Sherman, Roger. Lewis Henry Boutell, The Life of Roger Sherman (Chicago: A.C. McClure & Co., 1896), pp. 272-273. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 136-137.
- . Sherman, Roger. 1789, in A Short Sermon on the Duty of Self-Examination Preparatory to Receiving the Lord's Supper. Christopher Collier, Roger Sherman's Connecticut (Middletown, CT: Wesleyan University Press 1979), p. 320. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Baker Book House, 1987), p. 321.
- . Sherman, Roger. circa 1789-91, in a letter to the Congregational minister of Newport, Rhode Island, Samuel Hopkins. Timothy Dwight, Statistical Account of the City of New Haven (New Haven, Connecticut: Connecticut Academy of Arts and Sciences, 1811). Roger Sherman Boardman, Roger Sherman - Signer and Statesman (NY: DaCapo Press, 1971), pp. 318-319. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Baker Book House, 1987), p. 322.

. Sherman, Roger. 1777, comments about Sherman by Benjamin Rush. George W. Corner, ed., Autobiography of Benjamin Rush - His "Travels Through Life" together with His Commonplace Book for 1789-1813 (Princeton, N.J.: Published for The American Philosophical Society by Princeton University Press, 1948), pp. 139-156. Henry Steele

Commager, ed., The Great Declaration - A Book for Young Americans (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Co., Inc., 1958), p. 26. Henry Steele Commager and Richard B. Morris, eds., The Spirit of 'Seventy-Six (NY: Bobbs-Merrill Co., Inc., 1958, reprinted, NY: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1967), p. 275.

. Sherman, Roger. Charles Francis Adams (son of John Quincy Adams and grandson of John Adams), Familiar Letters of John Adams with his wife Abigail Adams - during the Revolution (NY: Hurd and Houghton, 1876), p. 251. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 134.

. Sherman, Roger. Epitaph engraved on Roger Sherman's tomb, New Haven, CT. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 135.

. Adams, Samuel. 1750, statement. William V. Wells, The Life and Public Services of Samuel Adams (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1865). Rosalie J. Slater, Teaching and Learning America's Christian History (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1975). Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 11.3. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1,

p. 5.

. Adams, Samuel. November 20, 1772, in his work, The Rights of the Colonists (Boston: Old South Leaflets), Vol. VII, 1772. William V. Well, Life of Samuel Adams (1865). Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va.

22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 2.

. Adams, Samuel. November 20, 1772, in a report for the Committees of Correspondence, entitled, The Rights of the Colonists, in the section: "The Rights of the Colonist as Subjects." Old South Leaflets. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. I, p. 219. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America - Christian Self-Government (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 36. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 112.

. Adams, Samuel. November 20, 1772, in a report for the Committees of Correspondence, entitled, The Rights of the Colonists; in the section: "The Rights of the Colonist as Men." Old South Leaflets. David C. Whitney, Signers of the Declaration of Independence - Founders of Freedom (1964), p. 49. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 2, p. 217. Lucille Johnston, Celebrations of a Nation (Arlington, VA: The Year of Thanksgiving Foundation, 1987), p. 79.

. Adams, Samuel. November 20, 1772, in his pamphlet entitled, The Rights of the Colonists, in section: "The Rights of the Colonist as Christians." The Rights of the Colonists (Boston: Old South Leaflets), Vol. VII, 1772. Adams, Writings. Selim H.

Peabody, ed., American Patriotism - Speeches, Letters, and Other Papers Which Illustrate the Foundation, the Development, the Preservation of the United States of America (NY: American Book Exchange, 1880), p. 34. Charles E. Kistler, This Nation Under God (Boston: Richard T. Badger, 1924), p. 73. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 2, pp. 218-219. Verna M. Hall, The

Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America - Christian Self-Government (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. xiii. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold

Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 112. Pat Robertson, America's Dates with Destiny (Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), p. 91. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 254. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), pp. 2, 4. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 1.19. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 5.

. Adams, Samuel. September 6, 1774, in a proposition for prayer given the second day of the Continental Congress. Key Paton, "Notable Chaplains," Eternity (November 1986), p. 28. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 51.

. Adams, Samuel. 1775, in reply to an entreaty by British General Gage. Lucille Johnston, Celebrations of a Nation (Arlington, VA: The Year of Thanksgiving Foundation, 1987), p. 79.

. Adams, Samuel. April 16, 1776, in a letter written from Philadelphia to James Warren. Henry Steele Commager, ed., The Great Declaration - A Book for Young Americans (Indianapolis: Indiana, The Bobbs-Merrill Co., Inc., 1958), pp. 54-56.

. Adams, Samuel. April 30, 1776, in a letter to John Scollay of Boston. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), pp. 351-352. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles

"Providential Perspective" (The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, VA. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 2.

. Adams, Samuel. 1776, statement made while the Declaration of Independence was being signed. Charles E. Kistler, This Nation Under God (Boston: Richard G. Badger, The Gorham Press, 1924), p. 71. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (NJ: Fleming H. Revell Co., 1977), p. 309. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 8. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 6.

. Adams, Samuel. 1776, statement made following the public reading of the Declaration of Independence. Charles E. Kistler, This Nation Under God (Boston: Richard T. Badger, 1924), p. 73. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, New Jersey: Fleming H. Revell Co., 1977), p. 310.

. Adams, Samuel. August 1, 1776, in a speech addressing the Continental Congress assembled at the State House in Philadelphia. Frank Moore, ed., American Eloquence (NY: D Appleton and Company, 1876), pp. 324-330. Charles Hurd, ed., A Treasury of Great American Speeches (NY: Hawthorne Books, 1959), p. 32. George C. Bedel, Leo Sandon, and Charles T. Wellborn, Religion in America (NY: Macmillan Publishing, Co., Inc., 1975), pp. 38-40.

. Adams, Samuel. August 1, 1776, in an address to the Continental Congress assembled in Philadelphia. Charles Hurd, ed., A Treasury of Great American Speeches (NY: Hawthorne Books, 1959), p. 33.

. Adams, Samuel. November 22, 1780, to T. Wells, his daughter's fiancée. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p. 354. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America - Christian Self-Government (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 71. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 11.15. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 5.

. Adams, Samuel. November 27, 1780, in a letter to Elbridge Gerry. James Trecothick Austin, Life of Elbridge Gerry, 2 vols. (Boston: Wells, 1828-1829), pp. 361-362. Henry Steele Commager and Richard B. Morris, eds., The Spirit of 'Seventy-Six (NY: Bobbs-Merrill Co., Inc., 1958; reprinted, NY: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1967), p. 408.

. Adams, Samuel. October 4, 1790, in a letter to his cousin, Vice-President John Adams. Four Letters: Being an Interesting Correspondence Between... John Adams... and Samuel Adams (Boston: Adams & Rhoades, 1802). Charles Francis Adams (son of John Quincy Adams and grandson of John Adams), ed., The Works of John Adams-Second President of the United States (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1854) Vol. VI, p. 414. William V. Wells, The Life and Public Services of Samuel Adams (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1865), Vol. III, p. 301. Verna M. Hall, comp., Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. XIV. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. xvi. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 3.

. Adams, Samuel. October 18, 1790, Vice-President John Adams wrote his reply to his cousin, Samuel Adams. Four Letters Being an Interesting Correspondence Between... John Adams... and Samuel Adams (Boston: Adams & Rhoades, 1802). Charles Francis Adams (son of John Quincy Adams and grandson of John Adams), ed., The Works of John Adams-Second President of the United States (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1854), Vol. VI, p. 414. William V. Wells, The Life and Public Services of Samuel Adams (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1865), Vol. III, p. 304.

. Adams, Samuel. 1794, in an address to the State Legislature of Massachusetts, having recently risen from Lieutenant Governor to Governor, following the death of Governor John Hancock. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 4.

. Adams, Samuel. January 17, 1794, in an address to the Massachusetts Legislature, while serving as Governor. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), pp. 354-55.

. Adams, Samuel. October 14, 1795, as Governor of the State of Massachusetts, in a Proclamation for a Day of Public Thanksgiving and Praise. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), pp. 355-57. The Plain Dealer (Cleveland, Ohio: November 1, 1984), 8-B. Public service paid for by the Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania.

. Adams, Samuel. March 20, 1797, as Governor of Massachusetts, in a Proclamation of a Day of Fast. Cushing, ed., The Writings of Samuel Adams, Vol. II, pp. 355-56. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 254.

. Adams, Samuel. 1800, as described by Dr. Benjamin Rush. George W. Corner, ed., Autobiography of Benjamin Rush - His "Travels Through Life" together with His Commonplace Book for 1789-1813 (Princeton, N.J.: Published for The American Philosophical Society by Princeton University Press, 1948), pp. 139-156. Henry Steele Commager, ed., The Great Declaration - A Book for Young Americans (Indianapolis: The Bobbs-Merrill Co., Inc., 1958), p. 24. Henry Steele Commager and Richard B. Morris, eds., The Spirit of 'Seventy-Six (NY: Bobbs-Merrill Co., Inc., 1958; reprinted, NY: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1967), p. 274.

. Adams, Samuel. In his last known letter to Thomas Paine. William V. Wells, The Life and Public Services of Samuel Adams (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1865), Vol. II, pp. 372-373. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), p. 256.

. Adams, Samuel. February 12, 1779, in a letter to James Warren. Harry Alonzo Cushing, editor, The Writings of Samuel Adams (New York: G.P. Putnam's Sons, 1905), Vol. IV, p. 124. Rosalie J. Slater, Teaching and Learning America's Christian Heritage (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, American Revolution Bicentennial edition, 1975), p. 251. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America - Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 4. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), pp. 148, 179. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 9.27. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 4.

. Adams, Samuel. Statement made in a political essay, printed in The Public Advisor, p. 1749. William V. Wells, The Life and Public Service of Samuel Adams (Boston: Little, Brown, & Co., 1865), Vol. I, p. 22. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 196.

Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 4.

. Adams, Samuel. Statement. William V. Wells, Life and Public Services of Samuel Adams, Vol. III, pp. 378, 366. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 5. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 1.14.

. Adams, Samuel. Statement in his Last Will and Testament. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 5. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 10.2.

. Langdon, Samuel. May 31, 1775, address as Harvard President to the Provincial Congress of Massachusetts. May 31, 1775, in "The Wall," Election Day sermon, A.W. Plumstead, The Wall and the Garden, Selected Massachusetts Election Sermons, 1670-1775 (Minneapolis: University of Minnesota Press, 1968), pp. 364-373. Verna M. Hall, Christian History of the American Revolution - Consider and Ponder (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 506. Lucille Johnston, Celebrations of a Nation (Arlington, VA: The Year of Thanksgiving Foundation, 1987), p. 77. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell, 1977), pp. 277-278. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 6.3.

. Witherspoon, John. 1768-1794. Martha Lou Lemmon Stohlman, John Witherspoon: Parson, Politician, Patriot (Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1897), p. 172. John

Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 83.

. Witherspoon, John. 1768-1794. Varnum Lansing Collins, President Witherspoon (New York: Arno Press and The New York Times, 1969), II:229. M.E. Bradford, A Worthy Company (Marlborough, New Hampshire: Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1982). John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 83, 87.

Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 100.

. Witherspoon, John. May 17, 1776, in his sermon entitled, "The Dominion of Providence over the Passions of Men" delivered at The College of New Jersey (Princeton). Varnum Lansing Collins, President Witherspoon (New York: Arno Press and

The New York Times, 1969), I:197-98. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution

- The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media

Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 85. William W. Woodward, The Works of the Rev. John Witherspoon (Philadelphia: 1802), Vol. III, p. 46. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p.

296. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va.

22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 7. William Safire, ed., Lend Me Your Ears - Great Speeches in History (NY: W.W. Norton & Company 1992), p. 429.

. Witherspoon, John. May 17, 1776, in his sermon entitled, "The Dominion of Providence over the Passions of Men." Varnum Lansing Collins, President Witherspoon (New York: Arno Press and The New York Times, 1969), I:197-98. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 85. The Works of the Rev. John Witherspoon (Philadelphia, William W. Woodward, 1802), Vol. III, p.

46. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va.

22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 7. William Safire, ed., Lend Me Your Ears - Great Speeches in History (NY: W.W. Norton & Company 1992), p. 430. Rosalie Slater, Teaching and Learning America's Christian Heritage (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, American Revolution Bicentennial Edition, 1975), p. 249.

. Witherspoon, John. John Witherspoon, Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, pp. 113, 124. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 90-91.

. Witherspoon, John. Martha Lou Lemmon Stohlman, John Witherspoon: Parson, Politician, Patriot (Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1897), p. 105. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 87.

. Witherspoon, John. John Witherspoon, "Address to the Natives of Scotland residing in America." Varnum Lansing Collins, President Witherspoon (New York: Arno Press and The New York Times, 1969), I:223-227. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 86.

. Witherspoon, John. John Witherspoon, "Pastoral Letter." Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 90-91.

House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 86.

. Witherspoon, John. John Witherspoon, "Pastoral Letter." Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's

Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, p. 106. John

Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers
(Grand

Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 91.

. Witherspoon, John. Edward Frank Humphrey, Nationalism and Religion (Boston: Chipman Law Publishing Co., 1924), p. 85. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 2.5.

. Witherspoon, John. John Witherspoon, "Thanksgiving Sermon." Roger Schultz,
"Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, p. 119. John

Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers
(Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp.

91-92.

. Witherspoon, John. John Witherspoon, "The Absolute Necessity of Salvation through Christ," delivered in a sermon while pastor of Laigh Kirk in Paisley, Scotland, 1757-1768. Martha Lou Lemmon Stohlman, John Witherspoon: Parson,
Politician, Patriot (Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1897), p. 41. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 82.

. Witherspoon, John. John Witherspoon, "The Absolute Necessity of Salvation
through Christ," delivered in a sermon while pastor of Laigh Kirk in Paisley, Scotland, 1757-1768. Martha Lou Lemmon Stohlman, John Witherspoon: Parson,
Politician, Patriot (Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1897), p. 41. John Eidsmoe,
Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 82.

. Witherspoon, John. John Witherspoon, "The Absolute Necessity of Salvation
through Christ," delivered in a sermon while pastor of Laigh Kirk in Paisley, Scotland, 1757-1768. Martha Lou Lemmon Stohlman, John Witherspoon: Parson,
Politician, Patriot (Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1897), p. 41. Varnum Lansing
Collins, President Witherspoon (New York: Arno Press and The New York Times, 1969),
I: 47. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 82.

. Witherspoon, John. Ashabel Green, The Life of the Rev. John Witherspoon (Princeton: Princeton University Press, reprinted 1973, p. 173. Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, p. 93. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers
(Grand

Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 92.

. Witherspoon, John. Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School,
Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, p. 104. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution -

The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 89.

. Witherspoon, John. Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School,
Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, p. 111. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution -

The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 89.

. Witherspoon, John. John Witherspoon, "Sermon on the Dominion of Providence."
William McAulay Hosmer, "Of Divine Providence in Our Declaration of Independence" (Hosmer Enterprises: P.O. Box 846, San Carlos, California 94070, 1980), p. 15. John

Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 86.
. Witherspoon, John. John Witherspoon, Lectures on Divinity. Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, p. 132. John

Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 89.
. Witherspoon, John. Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, pp. 136-137. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 88.
. Witherspoon, John. Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, pp. 95-96. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 88-89.
. Witherspoon, John. New Jersey Archives, I Ser., Vol. XXVI, p. 306; Varnum Lansing Collins, President Witherspoon (New York: Arno Press and The New York Times, 1969), I:112-113. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 84.
. Witherspoon, John. Ashabel Green, The Life of the Rev. John Witherspoon (Princeton: Princeton University Press, reprinted 1973), p. 173. Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, p. 16. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 92.
. Witherspoon, John. John Adam, after attending church at the College of New Jersey. Martha Lou Lemmon Stohlman, John Witherspoon: Parson, Politician, Patriot (Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1897), pp. 101-102. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 86.
. Witherspoon, John. Martha Lou Lemmon Stohlman, John Witherspoon: Parson, Politician, Patriot (Philadelphia: Westminster Press, 1897), p. 129. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 86.
. Witherspoon, John. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 87.
. Witherspoon, John. John Adams. Roger Schultz, "Covenanting in America: The Political Theology of John Witherspoon," Master's Thesis, Trinity Evangelical Divinity School, Deerfield, Illinois, 1985, p. 149. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 92.
. Blackstone, Sir William. 1826-1830, as cited in a work written by Chancellor James Kent of New York entitled, Commentaries on American Law, (1826-1830). Hon. Robert K. Dornan and Csaba Vedlik, Jr., Judicial Supremacy: The Supreme Court on Trial (Massachusetts: Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1986), p. 10.

American Quotations.txt

. Blackstone, Sir William. 1760-1805, being the second most frequently quoted author by the framers of the Constitution; cited by Donald S. Lutz and Charles S. Hyneman, "The Relative Influence of European Writers on Late Eighteenth-Century American Political Thought," American Political Science Review 189 (1984): 189-197. (Courtesy of Dr. Wayne House of Dallas Theological Seminary.) John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), pp. 51-53. Origins of American Constitutionalism, (1987). Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 156.

. Blackstone, Sir William. 1821, Thomas Jefferson approval of Sir William Blackstone's work entitled, Commentaries on the Laws of England, (1765-1770). Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1962, 1979), pp. 140-146. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), pp. 57-58.

. Blackstone, Sir William. 1765-1770, in his work entitled, Commentaries on the Laws of England, Robert Bell, ed., (Philadelphia: Union Library, 1771), p. 39. William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England, Tucker, ed., (1803), p. 39.

Sir William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England (Philadelphia: J.B. Lippincott and Co., 1879), Vol. I, p. 39. Verna M. Hall, Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1962, 1979), pp. 140-146. John Whitehead, The Second American Revolution (Elgin, IL: David C. Cook; Wheaton, Illinois: Crossway Books, 1982), pp. 30-32. Pat Robertson, America's Dates with Destiny (Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), p. 66. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987) pp. 86-87. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), pp. 57-58.

. Blackstone, Sir William. 1765-1770, in his work entitled, Commentaries on the Law of England (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1769). Sir William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England (Philadelphia: J.B. Lippincott and Co., 1879), Vol. I, pp. 39,

41, 42. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America - Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1962, 1976, 1979), pp. 140-146. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), pp. 57-58.

. Blackstone, Sir William. 1765-1770, in his work entitled, Commentaries on the Laws of England (Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1769). Sir William Blackstone, Commentaries on the Laws of England (Philadelphia: J.B. Lippincott and Co., 1879), Vol. I, pp. 39,

41, 42. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the Constitution of the United States of America - Christian Self-Government with Union (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1962, 1976, 1979), pp. 140-146. John Whitehead, The Second American Revolution (Elgin, IL: David C. Cook, 1982), pp. 30-32. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987) pp. 86-87. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987; 6th printing, 1993), pp. 57-58.

. Blackstone, Sir William. 1765-1770, in his work entitled, Commentaries on the Laws of England (Philadelphia: J.B. Lippincott and Co., 1879), Vol. II, p. 59; as cited in the case Updegraph v. The Commonwealth, 11 Ser. & R. 396 (1824).

American Quotations.txt

- . Blackstone, Sir William. 1765-1770, in his work entitled Commentaries on the Laws of England. Hon. Robert K. Dornan and Csaba Vedlik, Jr., Judicial Supremacy: The Supreme Court on Trial (MA: Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1986), p. 10.
- . Blackstone, Sir William. 1765-1770, in his work entitled Commentaries on the Laws of England. Wendell's Blackstone's Commentaries, Vol. IV, p. 59. Stephen Abbott
- Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 33.
- . Blackstone, Sir William. 1765-1770, in his work entitled, Commentaries on the Laws of England. Wendell's Blackstone's Commentaries, Vol. IV, p. 43. Stephen Abbott
- Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 33.
- . Livingston, William. Vincent Wilson, Jr., The Book of the Founding Fathers (Brookeville, MD: American History Research Associates, 1974), p. 44. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 169.
- . Livingston, William. William Livingston, The Independent Reflector-No. 46. Life and Letters of William Livingston, reprinted by Theodore Sedgwick, Jr.. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 288.
- . Livingston, William. 1768. The World Book Encyclopedia (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 18 vols., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989). Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 11.30.
- . Livingston, William. Vincent Wilson, Jr., The Book of the Founding Fathers (Brookeville, MD: American History Research Associates, 1974), p. 44. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 170.
- . Livingston, William. March 16, 1776, in a resolution passed in the Continental Congress declaring May 17, 1776, as a National Day of Humiliation, Fasting and Prayer, presented by General William Livingston. Journal of Congress, Vol. II, p. 93.
- Carl E. Prince, ed., The Papers of William Livingston, 5 vols. (Trenton: New Jersey Historical Commission, 1979), Vol. I, pp. 43-44. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 287-288. M.E. Bradford, Religion &
- The Framers - The Biographical Evidence* (Marlborough, NH: Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1991), p. 5.
- . Livingston, William. September 1776, in his Inaugural Address as the Governor of the State of New Jersey. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 5.
- . Livingston, William. Livingston's Familiar Letters to a Gentleman, upon a variety of seasonable and important Subjects in Religion. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 287-288.
- . Backus, Isaac. In his work entitled, "A Declaration of the Rights of the Inhabitants of the State of Massachusetts-Bay in New England." Charles Colson, Kingdoms in Conflict (Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan Publishing House, 1987), p. 19.
- . Backus, Isaac. September 1775, in addressing the Massachusetts Assembly, in behalf of the Warren Association, on the subject of taxing religious dissenters. A Church History of New-England (Providence, 1784), p. 305. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 2, p. 366.
- . Kant, Immanuel. Henry H. Halley, Halley's Bible Handbook (Grand Rapids, MI: Zondervan Publishing House, 1927, 1965), p. 19.
- . Kant, Immanuel. An Inquiry into the Existence of God, Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987;

American Quotations.txt

- Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 263.
- . Mason, George. June 12, 1776, Virginia Bill of Rights, Article XVI. Frances Newton Thorpe, ed., Federal and State Constitutions, Colonial Charters, and Other Organic Laws of the States, Territories, and Colonies now or heretofore forming the United States, 7 vols. (Washington: Government Printing Office, 1905; 1909; St. Clair Shores, MI: Scholarly Press, 1968), Vol. VII, p. 3814. Henry Steele Commager, ed., Documents of American History, 2 vols. (NY: F. S. Crofts and Company, 1934; Appleton-Century-Crofts, Inc., 1948, 6th edition, 1958; Englewood Cliffs, NJ: Prentice Hall, Inc., 9th edition, 1973), pp. 103-104. Anson Phelps Stokes and Leo Pfeffer, Church and State in the United States (NY: Harper and Row, Publishers, 1950, revised one-volume edition, 1964), p. 42. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 2, p. 433. Charles Fadiman, ed., The American Treasury (NY: Harper & Brothers, Publishers, 1955), p. 121. Pat Robertson, America's
- Dates with Destiny (Nashville: Thomas Nelson Publishers, 1986), pp. 80-81. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 3. Kate Mason Rowland, The Life of George Mason, Vol. I, p. 435.
- . Mason, George. In an address before the General Court of Virginia. Russ Walton, Biblical Principles of Importance to Godly Christians (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1984), p. 358.
- . Mason, George. Russ Walton, Biblical Principles of Importance to Godly Christians (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1984), p. 358.
- . Mason, George. August 22, 1787, in addressing the Continental Congress. James Madison, Notes of Debates in the Federal Convention of 1787 (1787, reprinted NY: W. W. Norton Co., 1987), p. 504. Robert A. Rutland, ed., The Papers of George Mason, 3 vols. (Chapel Hill, NC: The University of North Carolina Press, 1970), 3:1787.
- Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 142. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 1.31.
- . Mason, George. In his proposal for the wording of the First Amendment. Kate Mason Rowland, The Life of George Mason (New York: G. P. Putnam's Sons, 1892), Vol. I, p. 244.
- . Mason, George. March 9, 1773, writing in their Family Bible of his wife's death. George Mason, Eulogy on Ann Mason (Lorton, VA: Gunston Hall Plantation, inscribed in original 1759 Family Bible).
- . Mason, George. In his last Will and Testament. Robert C. Mason, George Mason of Virginia - Citizen, Statesman and Philosopher (New York: Oscar Aurelius Mоргnor, An address Commemorative of the Launching of the S. S. Gunston Hall at Alexandria, Virginia, January 1919), p. 10.
- . Otis, James. 1764, in "The Rights of the British Colonies Asserted and Proved" (London: 3rd Edition, 1766), complete text, pp. 52-77. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 2, pp. 104, 111.
- . Otis, James. Tryon Edwards, D.D., The New Dictionary of Thoughts - A Cyclopedi a of Quotations (Garden City, NY: Hanover House, 1852; revised and enlarged by C. H. Catrevas, Ralph Emerson Browns and Jonathan Edwards [descendent, along with Tryon, of Jonathan Edwards (1703-1758), president of Princeton], 1891; The Standard Book Company, 1955, 1963), p. 328.
- . Newton, John. Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), pp. 178-179.
- . Wythe, George. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 249.
- . Wythe, George. Christopher Collier, Roger Sherman's Connecticut (Middletown, CT: Wesleyan University Press, 1979), p. 129.
- . Prescott, William. 1774, in writing to the citizens on the occasion of the

American Quotations.txt

British blockade. George Bancroft, History of the United States of America, 6 vols. (Boston: Charles C. Little and James Brown, Third Edition, 1838), Vol. VII, p. 99.

Lucille Johnston, Celebrations of a Nation (Arlington, VA: The Year of Thanksgiving Foundation, 1987), p. 76. Peter Marshall & David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 7.27.

. Bowdoin, James. Abiel Holmes, A Discourse Delivered Before the Society for Propagating the Gospel Among the Indians and Others, November 3, 1808 (Boston: Farrand, Mallory, and Co., 1808), p. 66.

. Bowdoin, James. A Constitution or Frame of Government Agreed Upon By the Delegates of the People of the State of Massachusetts (Boston: Benjamin Edes & Sons, 1780), p. 7, "Declaration of Rights," Part the First, Article III.

. Bowdoin, James. November 8, 1780, in an address he delivered as president of the American Academy of Arts and Sciences entitled, A Philosophical Discourse, Addresses to the American Academy, of Arts and Sciences, etc., etc., (Boston: 1780). The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 2, p. 543.

. Warren, James. June 16, 1775, in a Resolution of the Provincial Congress of Massachusetts, James Warren, president. Copied from original, printed courtesy Essex Institute, Salem, Massachusetts. Verna M. Hall, The Christian History of the American Revolution (San Francisco, CA: Foundation For American Christian Education, 1976), p. 410.

. Johnson, William Samuel. M.E. Bradford, A Worthy Company (Marlborough, NH: Plymouth Rock Foundation, 1982), p. 30. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 158.

. Johnson, William Samuel. John Irving, A Discourse of the Advantages of Classical Learning (New York: G. & C. & H. Carvill, 1830), pp. 141-143. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 159-160.

. Stiles, Ezra. Verna M. Hall, Christian History of the Constitution (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1975), p. 382. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 134.

. Stiles, Ezra. May 8, 1783, in an election sermon, entitled "The United States elevated to Glory and Honor," delivered before the Governor and the General Assembly of the State of Connecticut. John Wingate Thornton, The Pulpit of the American Revolution (Gould & Lincoln, 1860). Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 7. John Wingate Thornton, The Pulpit of the American Revolution (Boston: D. Lothrop & Co., 1876). Perry Miller, The Life of the Mind in America (London: Victor Gollanz, 1966).

. Stiles, Ezra. 1783, in an address before the Assembly of Connecticut. Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), p. 45.

. Cook, James. Manning Clark, A History of Australia (Melbourne: Melbourne University Press, 1979), Vol. 1, p. 45. Voyages Round the World (London: A.M. Gardner & Co. Ltd.), pp. 308-312. Elizabeth Rogers Kotolwski, Southland of the Holy Spirit (Orange, NSW: Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia, 1994), p. 88.

. Cook, James. John Cawte Beaglehole, ed, The Endeavour Journal of Joseph Banks, 1768-1771 (Sydney: Angus & Robertson, 1962), 1: pp. 277-79, Journal entries dated May 14, 21, 1769. Elizabeth Rogers Kotolwski, Southland of the Holy Spirit (Orange, NSW: Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia, 1994), p. 88.

. Cook, James. Graham McLennan, ed, "Additional Notes," Understanding Our Christian Heritage, 1, (Orange, NSW: A Journal of the Christian History Research Institute, 1987), p. 25. Elizabeth Rogers Kotolwski, Southland of the Holy Spirit (Orange, NSW: Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia, 1994), p. 88.

. Cook, James. August 4, 1770, the Endeavour navigating through the "Providential Channel." John Cawte Beaglehole, ed, The Journals of Captain James Cook: The Life of James Cook (London: The Hakluyt Society, 1974), pp. 236-446. Elizabeth Rogers Kotolwski, Southland of the Holy Spirit (Orange, NSW: Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia, 1994), pp. 90-91.

. Cook, James. August 4, 1770, the Endeavour navigating through the "Providential Channel." Statement by Richard Pickersgill, the master's mate. G. B. and F. M. Bladen, eds, Historical Records of New South Wales (HRNSW, 1889-95): Cook, 1762-80 (Sydney: Charles Potter, 1893), Vol. 1, pt. 1, pp. 228-9. Elizabeth Rogers Kotolwski, Southland of the Holy Spirit (Orange, NSW: Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia, 1994), p. 91.

. Cook, James. August 16, 1770, the Endeavour navigating through the "Providential Channel," entry made by Captain James Cook. G. B. and F. M. Bladen, eds, Historical Records of New South Wales (HRNSW, 1889-95): Cook, 1762-80 (Sydney: Charles Potter, 1893), Vol. 1, pt. 1, pp. 72. Elizabeth Rogers Kotolwski, Southland of the Holy Spirit (Orange, NSW: Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia, 1994), p. 91.

. Cook, James. 1775, in a letter to Sir John Pringle, President of the Royal Society. Historical Records of New South Wales (HRNSW), p. 392. Elizabeth Rogers Kotolwski, Southland of the Holy Spirit (Orange, NSW: Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia, 1994), pp. 92-93.

. Cook, James. February 14, 1779, account of the death of Captain James Cook at Karakakoa Bay on Hawaii Island. Alistair MacLean, Captain Cook (New York: Doubleday, 1972), pp. 178-80. Voyages Round the World (London: A. Am Gardner & Co., Ltd.), pp. 308-11. John Cawte Beaglehole, The Journals of Captain James Cook: The Life of Captain James Cook (London: The Hakluyt Society, 1974), pp. 472-688. Elizabeth Rogers

Kotolwski, Southland of the Holy Spirit (Orange, NSW: Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia, 1994), p. 93.

. Cook, James. February 14, 1779, account of the death of Captain James Cook at Karakakoa Bay on Hawaii Island. F. B. Goodrich, History of the Sea (Chicago: Hubbard Bros., 1890), p. 507. Elizabeth Rogers Kotolwski, Southland of the Holy Spirit (Orange, NSW: Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia, 1994), pp. 93-94.

. Cook, James. Graham McLennan, ed, "Additional Notes," Understanding Our Christian Heritage, 1, (Orange, NSW: A Journal of the Christian History Research Institute, 1987), p. 25. Elizabeth Rogers Kotolwski, Southland of the Holy Spirit (Orange, NSW: Christian History Research Institute, 81 Woodward St., Orange, NSW 2800, Australia, 1994), p. 94.

. Burke, Edmund. March 22, 1775, in an address to Parliament, entitled Second Speech on the Conciliation with America-The Thirteen Resolutions. Sidney Carelton Newsom, ed., Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America (New York: The Macmillan Company, 1899; 1913), pp. 28-29. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 372. Ernest R. Clark, ed., Burke's Speech on the Conciliation with the American Colonies (New York, American Book Company, 1895; 1911) p. 34. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 67.

. Burke, Edmund. March 22, 1775, in an address to Parliament, entitled Second Speech on the Conciliation with America-The Thirteen Resolutions. Sidney Carelton Newsom, ed., Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America (New York: Macmillan Company, 1899; 1913). John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 373.

American Quotations.txt

- . Burke, Edmund. March 22, 1775, in an address to Parliament entitled Second Speech on the Conciliation with America-The Thirteen Resolutions. Sidney Carelton Newsom, ed., Burke's Speech on Conciliation with America (New York: The Macmillan Company, 1899; 1913), p. 32. Ernest R. Clark, ed., Burke's Speech on the Conciliation with the American Colonies (New York, American Book Company, 1895; 1911) p. 36.
- . Burke, Edmund. The Works and Correspondence of the Right Honorable Edmund Burke. Vol. VI, p. 90. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 64.
- . Burke, Edmund. 1790, in his Reflections on the Revolution in France. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 373.
- . Burke, Edmund. 1791, in "A Letter to a Member of the National Assembly." Theodore Roosevelt, "Fifth Annual Message to Congress," December 5, 1905. A Compilation of the Messages and Papers of the Presidents 20 vols. (New York: Bureau of National Literature, Inc., prepared under the direction of the Joint Committee on Printing, of the House and Senate, pursuant to an Act of the Fifty-Second Congress of the United States, 1893, 1923), Vol. XIV, p. 6986. Keith Fournier, In Defense of Liberty (Virginia Beach, VA: Law & Justice, 1993), Vol. 2, No. 2, p. 5. Rush H. Limbaugh III, See, I Told You So (New York, NY: reprinted by permission of Pocket Books, a division of Simon & Schuster Inc., 1993), pp. 73-76.
- . Burke, Edmund. May 28, 1794, in the Impeachment of Warren Hastings. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 373.
- . Burke, Edmund. January 9, 1795, in a letter to William Smith. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown & Co., 1863, 1980), p. 374. Edward L.R. Elson, D.D., Lit.D., LL.D., America's Spiritual Recovery (Westwood, N.J.: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1954), p. 174. Carroll E. Simcox, comp., 4400 Quotations for Christian Communicators (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1991), p. 124. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 20.
- . Burke, Edmund. 1797, Letters on a Regicide Peace. Carroll E. Simcox, comp., 4400 Quotations for Christian Communicators (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, 1991), p. 52.
- . Burke, Edmund. Robert Bissel, Life of Edmund Burke, Vol. II, p. 441. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 64.
- . West, Samuel. 1776, speaking in Boston. John Wingate Thornton, The Pulpit of the American Revolution (Boston: D. Lothrop & Co., 1876), p. 311. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), pp. 296-297.
- . Stockton, Richard. In his Last Will and Testament. Edward J. Giddings, American Christian Rulers, p. 463. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 431-432. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 7.
- . Cowper, William. 1785, in The Task, Vol. VI, "Winter Walk at Noon," l. 223. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 377.
- . Georgia, Colony of. 1732. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 7, p. 2950, Vol. 12, p. 5857.
- . Georgia, Colony of. 1732. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's

American Quotations.txt

Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 55.
. Georgia, Colony of. 1732, Charter of Georgia was granted by King George II to James Edward Oglethorpe. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 55.
. Georgia, Colony of. 1732. Stephen K. McDowell and Mark A. Beliles, America's Providential History (Charlottesville, VA: Providence Press, 1988), p. 55.
. Marion, Francis. General Horry and Mason Locke Weems, Life of General Francis Marion. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 317-318.
. Blair, John. In a letter to his sister at the time of her husband's death. Frederick Horner, History of the Blair, Banister and Braxton Families (Philadelphia: J.B. Lippincott Co., 1898), pp. 68-69. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 149-151.
. Lee, Richard Henry. Journals of Congress, Volume III, pp. 467-468. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 279-280.
. Washington, George. An inscription on a tablet with the Ten Commandments that John Washington, the great-grandfather of George Washington, left, in his Last Will and Testament, as a gift to the church of the parish of Washington. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 16.
. Washington, George. April of 1732, the baptism of George Washington, as recorded by his father, Augustine Washington, in the family Bible. James Walter, Memorials of Washington and Mary, His Mother, and Martha, His Wife (1887), p. 123. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 18.
. Washington, George. April 12, 1743, the last words of his father, Augustine Washington. William H. Wilbur, The Making of George Washington (Caldwell, ID.: 1970, 1973), p. 92. Benjamin Hart, Faith & Freedom - The Christian Roots of American Liberty (Dallas, TX: Lewis and Stanley, 1988), p. 127.
. Washington, George. 1745, in some verses copied on "Christmas Day," at thirteen years of age. W. Herbert Burk, Washington's Prayers (1907), p. 12. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 21.
. Washington, George. 1745. 110 Rules of Civility and Decent Behavior in Company and Conversation - copied in his own handwriting. Moncure D. Conway, George Washington's Rules of Civility (1890), pp. 178, 180. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 20. 110 Rules of Civility and Decent Behavior in Company and Conversation (Bedford, MA: Apple Books, 1988, distributed by The Globe Pequot Press, Chester, CT.), p. 30.

. Washington, George. 1747, 1748, 1751, 1760, serving as a godfather in baptismal ceremonies. John Stockton Littell, D.D., George Washington: Christian (1913), p. 7. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p.

21.

. Washington, George. November 11, 1751, in a journal kept of his trip accompanying his brother Lawrence Washington to the West Indies. J.M. Toner, M.D., Washington's Barbadoes Journal (1823), p. 49. William J. Johnson, George Washington -

The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 22.

. Washington, George. Daily Sacrifice, a devotional book credited to have been prepared by Washington for his own use. This book, along with remarkable items belonging to George Washington, Bushrod C. Washington (his nephew who became a U.S. Supreme Court Justice and vice-president of the American Sunday School Union), Lawrence Washington, Thomas B. Washington, and J.R.C. Lewis were sold at an auction in Philadelphia on April 21, 22, 23, 1891. W. Herbert Burk, Washington's Prayers (1907), p. 13. Experts in Washington City, Philadelphia and New York are satisfied that it is Washington's handwriting without a doubt. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February

23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 23, 277.

. Washington, George. 1752, Daily Sacrifice, a 24 page devotional book credited to have been prepared by Washington for his own use. This book, along with remarkable items belonging to George Washington, Bushrod C. Washington (his nephew who became a

U.S. Supreme Court Justice and vice-president of the American Sunday School Union), Lawrence Washington, Thomas B. Washington, and J.R.C. Lewis were sold at an auction in Philadelphia on April 21, 22, 23, 1891. J.M. Toner, Washington's Barbados Journal, 1751-2. W. Herbert Burk, B.D., Washington's Prayers (Norristown, PA: Published for the Benefit of the Washington Memorial Chapel, 1907), pp. 13, 87-95. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam

Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI:

Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West

Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 23-36. William Evarts Benjamin, The Daily Sacrifice, (New York). Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of

Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 484-487. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers

(Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 111-113. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revel

Company, 1977), pp. 284-285. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 130-131. Peter Marshall & David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 2. 26.

. Washington, George. 1752, Daily Sacrifice, a 24 page devotional book credited to have been prepared by Washington for his own use. This book, along with remarkable items belonging to George Washington, Bushrod C. Washington (his nephew who became a

American Quotations.txt

U. S. Supreme Court Justice and vice-president of the American Sunday School Union), Lawrence Washington, Thomas B. Washington, and J.R.C. Lewis were sold at an auction in Philadelphia on April 21, 22, 23, 1891. J.M. Toner, Washington's Barbados Journal, 1751-2. W. Herbert Burk, B.D., Washington's Prayers (Norristown, PA: Published for the Benefit of the Washington Memorial Chapel, 1907), pp. 87-95. William J. Johnson,

George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 23-36. William Evarts Benjamin, The Daily Sacrifice, (New York). Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of

Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 484-487. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers

(Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 111-113. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revel

Company, 1977), pp. 284-285. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 130-131. Peter Marshall & David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 2.26.

. Washington, George. 1752, Daily Sacrifice, a 24 page devotional book credited to have been prepared by Washington for his own use. This book, along with remarkable items belonging to George Washington, Bushrod C. Washington (his nephew who became a U. S. Supreme Court Justice and vice-president of the American Sunday School Union), Lawrence Washington, Thomas B. Washington, and J.R.C. Lewis were sold at an auction in Philadelphia on April 21, 22, 23, 1891. J.M. Toner, Washington's Barbados Journal,

1751-2. W. Herbert Burk, B.D., Washington's Prayers (Norristown, PA: Published for the Benefit of the Washington Memorial Chapel, 1907), pp. 87-95. William J. Johnson,

George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 23-36. William Evarts Benjamin, The Daily Sacrifice, (New York). Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of

Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 484-487. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers

(Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 111-113. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revel

Company, 1977), pp. 284-285. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 130-131. Peter Marshall & David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 2.28.

. Washington, George. 1752, Daily Sacrifice, a 24 page devotional book credited to have been prepared by Washington for his own use. This book, along with remarkable items belonging to George Washington, Bushrod C. Washington (his nephew who became a U. S. Supreme Court Justice and vice-president of the American Sunday School Union), Lawrence Washington, Thomas B. Washington, and J.R.C. Lewis were sold at an auction in Philadelphia on April 21, 22, 23, 1891. J.M. Toner, Washington's Barbados Journal, 1751-2. W. Herbert Burk, B.D., Washington's Prayers (Norristown, PA: Published for the Benefit of the Washington Memorial Chapel, 1907), pp. 87-95. William J. Johnson,

American Quotations.txt

George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 23-36. William Evarts Benjamin, The Daily Sacrifice, (New York). Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of

Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 484-487. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers

(Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 111-113. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell

Company, 1977), pp. 284-285. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 130-131.

. Washington, George. 1752, Daily Sacrifice, a 24 page devotional book credited to have been prepared by Washington for his own use. This book, along with remarkable items belonging to George Washington, Bushrod C. Washington (his nephew who became a U. S. Supreme Court Justice and vice-president of the American Sunday School Union), Lawrence Washington, Thomas B. Washington, and J.R.C. Lewis were sold at an auction in Philadelphia on April 21, 22, 23, 1891. J.M. Toner, Washington's Barbados

Journal,

1751-2. W. Herbert Burk, B.D., Washington's Prayers (Norristown, PA: Published for the Benefit of the Washington Memorial Chapel, 1907), pp. 87-95. William J. Johnson,

George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 23-36. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 111-113.

. Washington, George. 1752, Daily Sacrifice, a 24 page devotional book credited to have been prepared by Washington for his own use. This book, along with remarkable items belonging to George Washington, Bushrod C. Washington (his nephew who became a U. S. Supreme Court Justice and vice-president of the American Sunday School Union), Lawrence Washington, Thomas B. Washington, and J.R.C. Lewis were sold at an auction in Philadelphia on April 21, 22, 23, 1891. J.M. Toner, Washington's Barbados

Journal,

1751-2. W. Herbert Burk, B.D., Washington's Prayers (Norristown, PA: Published for the Benefit of the Washington Memorial Chapel, 1907), pp. 87-95. William J. Johnson,

George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 23-36. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 111-113.

. Washington, George. 1752, Daily Sacrifice, a 24 page devotional book credited to have been prepared by Washington for his own use. This book, along with remarkable items belonging to George Washington, Bushrod C. Washington (his nephew who became a U. S. Supreme Court Justice and vice-president of the American Sunday School Union), Lawrence Washington, Thomas B. Washington, and J.R.C. Lewis were sold at an auction in Philadelphia on April 21, 22, 23, 1891. J.M. Toner, Washington's Barbados

Journal,

1751-2. W. Herbert Burk, B.D., Washington's Prayers (Norristown, PA: Published for the Benefit of the Washington Memorial Chapel, 1907), pp. 87-95. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park,

American Quotations.txt

February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 23-36. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 111-113.

. Washington, George. 1752, Daily Sacrifice, a 24 page devotional book credited to have been prepared by Washington for his own use. This book, along with remarkable items belonging to George Washington, Bushrod C. Washington (his nephew who became a U. S. Supreme Court Justice and vice-president of the American Sunday School Union), Lawrence Washington, Thomas B. Washington, and J.R.C. Lewis were sold at an auction in Philadelphia on April 21, 22, 23, 1891. J.M. Toner, Washington's Barbados Journal,

1751-2. W. Herbert Burk, B.D., Washington's Prayers (Norristown, PA: Published for the Benefit of the Washington Memorial Chapel, 1907), pp. 87-95. William J. Johnson,

George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 23-36.

. Washington, George. 1752, Daily Sacrifice, a 24 page devotional book credited to have been prepared by Washington for his own use. This book, along with remarkable items belonging to George Washington, Bushrod C. Washington (his nephew who became a

U. S. Supreme Court Justice and vice-president of the American Sunday School Union), Lawrence Washington, Thomas B. Washington, and J.R.C. Lewis were sold at an auction in Philadelphia on April 21, 22, 23, 1891. J.M. Toner, Washington's Barbados Journal,

1751-2. W. Herbert Burk, B.D., Washington's Prayers (Norristown, PA: Published for the Benefit of the Washington Memorial Chapel, 1907), pp. 87-95. William J. Johnson,

George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 23-36.

. Washington, George. November 1753, in his parting words from his mother, Mrs. Mary Washington. John N. Norton, Life of General Washington (1870), p. 34. Marion Harland, The Story of Mary Washington (1892), p. 87. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 36. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p.

285.

. Washington, George. 1754, in a letter from Mr. Fairfax, the father-in-law of George's deceased brother Lawrence. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. II, p. 54. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 37.

. Washington, George. June 10, 1754, in a letter to Governor Dinwiddie. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. II, p. 43. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 38-39.

. Washington, George. In a letter to his mother during the French and Indian War.

American Quotations.txt

Marion Harland, The Story of Mary Washington (1892), p. 91. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 39.

. Washington, George. July 13, 1754, at the funeral service for General Braddock.

E. C. McGuire, The Religious Opinions and Character of Washington (1836), p. 137.

(E. C. McGuire was the son-in-law of Mr. Robert Lewis, Washington's nephew and private secretary.) William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 40.

. Washington, George. July 18, 1755. George Washington, in a letter to his brother. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837, NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. II, p. 89.

Joseph Banvard, Tragic Scenes in the History of Maryland and the Old French War (Boston: Gould and Lincoln, 1856), p. 153. George Washington, Programs and Papers (Washington: U. S. George Washington Bicentennial Commission, 1932), p. 33. William J.

Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 40. John F. Schroeder, ed., Maxims of Washington (Mt. Vernon: Mt. Vernon Ladies' Association, 1942), p. 275.

Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 102-104.

. Washington, George. 1770. George Washington Parke Custis, Recollections and Private Memoirs of Washington, Benson J. Lossing, editor, (1860), p. 303; narrative, told by Dr. Craik to Mr. George Washington Parke Custis, first published in 1828. [Mr. George Washington Parke Custis (1781-1857), was the son of John Parke Custis, and the grandson of Daniel Parke and Martha Dandridge Custis. After Daniel Parke Custis' death, George Washington married Martha in 1759. After Martha's son, John Parke Custis, died November 5, 1781, of a violent case of camp fever while serving as an aide-de-camp during the siege of Yorktown, George Washington, who had no children of his own, adopted the fatherless children, Eleanor Parke "Nellie" Custis and George Washington Parke Custis, as his own. They lived at Mount Vernon with George and Martha Washington as their children. Mr. George Washington Parke Custis, who was nineteen years old when George Washington died, lived to the age of 77 and is considered one of the most reliable authorities on George Washington's private life.

He later built a mansion, which stands on the site of the present Arlington National Cemetery; and in 1831, his daughter, Mary Ann Randolph Custis, married a young West Point graduate, by the name of Robert E. Lee. Lee's father was the Revolutionary War hero, "Light-Horse Harry" Lee, who authored the famous epitaph of George Washington,

"First in war, first in peace, first in the hearts of his countrymen."] William J.

Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI:

Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 41-42. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company,

1977), p. 285-286. Denise Williamson, "Wilderness Fight" (Colorado Springs, CO: Focus on the Family Clubhouse, July 1994), p. 14; referencing the testimony of Billy Brown, who in 1825, at the age of 93 recounted the incident with a historian.

. Washington, George. 1770. David Barton, The Bulletproof George Washington (Aledo, TX: WallBuilder, Inc., Winter, 1993), p. 49.

. Washington, George. 1770. Report of Mary Draper Ingels of Draper Meadows, Virginia, as recounted in her biography. David Barton, The Bulletproof George Washington (Aledo, TX: WallBuilder, Inc., Winter, 1993), p. 49.

. Washington, George. February 2, 1756, in a letter to Governor Dinwiddie written from Alexandria, Virginia. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol.

II, p. 132. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 42.

. Washington, George. April 18, 1756, in a letter to Governor Dinwiddie written from Winchester, Virginia. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol.

II, p. 141. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 43.

. Washington, George. June of 1756, in an order issued while at Fort Cumberland. Extract from Orderly Book, written at Fort Cumberland. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. II, p. 167. William J. Johnson, George Washington

- The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 44.

. Washington, George. 1756, in his orders. Jared Sparks, The Writings of George Washington, 12 vols. (American Stationer's Company, 1837), Vol II, p. 141. William J.

Johnson, George Washington, the Christian (Nashville: Abingdon Press, 1919, reprinted, Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976) p. 42.

. Washington, George. July 1756, in a letter to Governor Dinwiddie from Winchester, Virginia. E. C. McGuire, The Religious Opinions and Character of Washington (1836), p. 70. (E. C. McGuire was the son-in-law of Mr. Robert Lewis, Washington's nephew and private secretary.) William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 45.

. Washington, George. September 23, 1756, in a letter to Governor Dinwiddie written from Mount Vernon. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol.

II, p. 188. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 45.

. Washington, George. November 9, 1756, in a letter to Governor Dinwiddie. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. II, p. 200. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 45-46.

. Washington, George. November 9, 1756, in a letter to Governor Dinwiddie. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. II, p. 203. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 46.

. Washington, George. April 17, 1758, in a letter from Fort Loudoun to the President of the Council after Governor Dinwiddie was recalled. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. II, p. 278. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 46-47.

. Washington, George. July 20, 1758, in a letter written from Fort Cumberland to his fiancée, Martha Dandridge Custis. Benson J. Lossing, Mary and Martha Washington (1886), p. 99. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 47.

. Washington, George. October 25, 1762, in an entry in the vestry book of the Pohick Church in Truro Parish, Virginia. W.M. Clark, Colonial Churches (1907), p. 126. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J.

Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p.

49.
. Washington, George. February 15, 1763, in the records of the Fairfax County Court. W.M. Clark, Colonial Churches (1907), p. 126. (Washington's position as a vestryman was again recorded on a leaf from the Pohick Church record, August 19, 1765; manuscripts in the library of the New York Historical Society. Benson J. Lossing, The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution, 2 vols. (1860), Vol. II, p. 215). William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J.

Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 49-50.

. Washington, George. 1768-1774, attendance at various Church and Vestry meetings recorded in his diary. W.M. Clark, Colonial Churches (1907), pp. 121-126. Rev. Randolph H. McKim, D.D., Rector of the Church of the Epiphany, Washington, D.C., New York Tribune (May 26, 1902), p. 7. E.C. McGuire, The Religious Opinions and of Washington (1836), p. 143. (E. C. M'Guire was the son-in-law of Mr. Robert Lewis, Washington's nephew and private secretary.) William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 51-57, 66-67.

Character

. Washington, George. June 19, 1773, at the death of his stepdaughter, Martha "Miss Patsey" Custis. Paul Leicester Ford, The True George Washington (1903), p. 29.

William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 60-61.

. Washington, George. June 1, 1774, in a Day of Fasting and Prayer issued by the Colonies, following the Committee of Correspondence report of the passage of the Boston Port Bill. Verna M. Hall and Rosalie J. Slater, The Bible and the Constitution of the United States of America (San Francisco: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1983), p. 31.

. Washington, George. June 1, 1774, in an entry in his diary. E. C. M'guire, The Religious Opinions and Character of Washington (1836), p. 142. (E. C. M'Guire was the son-in-law of Mr. Robert Lewis, Washington's nephew and private secretary.) William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 62.

John

Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Baker Book House, 1987), p. 136.

. Washington, George. 1774, in a letter written by Martha Dandridge Custis Washington. Appleton's Cyclopedi a of American Biography (1889), Vol. VI, p. 383.
William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p.

67. Lucille Johnston, Celebrations of a Nation (Arlington, VA: The Year of Thanksgiving Foundation, 1987), p. 110.

. Washington, George. Comment when informed that the British fired at the men of Lexington on April 19, 1775. Mason L. Weems, The Life of General Washington (1808), p. 182. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p.

68.

. Washington, George. June 1775, in a diary entry of Amos Farnsworth. Page A. Smith, A New Age Now Begins (NY: McGraw Hill, 1776), p. 508. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, New Jersey: Fleming H. Revell Co., 1977), p. 277.

. Washington, George. June 17, 1775, diary entry of Amos Farnsworth. Amos Farnsworth, "Diary," Dr. Samuel A. Greene, ed., Massachusetts Historical Society Proceedings, 2nd Series, Vol. XII (1899), p. 84. Henry Steele Commager and Richard B.

Morris, eds., The Spirit of 'Seventy-Six (NY: Bobbs-Merrill Co., Inc., 1958, reprinted, NY: Harper & Row, Publishers, 1967), p. 122. Peter Marshall & David

American Quotations.txt

Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 6.17.
. Washington, George. June 18, 1775, in a letter to his wife. Jared Sparks, ed.,
The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 2. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February
23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media,
1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 68. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 113. William Barclay
Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty
Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 41.
John
Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944). Charles Wallis, ed., Our American Heritage (NY: Harper
&
Row, Publishers, Inc., 1970), p. 126.
. Washington, George. June 23, 1775, in a letter to his wife. Saxe Commins, ed.,
The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 116. Douglas Southall Freeman, George Washington, 6 Vol. (NY: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1948-1954)
Vol. III, p. 459. From a text belonging to E.L.R. Smith, Luthersville, Maryland.
John
N. Norton, Life of General Washington (1870), p. 145. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February
23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media,
1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 69.
. Washington, George. July 4, 1775, in his General Orders from the Headquarters at Cambridge. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837, NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 491.
William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J.
Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp.
69-70. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. III, p. 309. William Barclay Allen, ed.,
George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), pp. 42-43. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p. 50. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 289. Saxe
Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p.
122. The American Vision - 360 Years Later (Atlanta, GA: The American Vision, Inc., 1980), p. 10-11. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 116. Peter Marshall & David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), p. 7.5.
. Washington, George. July 4, 1775, as recorded by William Emerson. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's

American Quotations.txt

Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 491. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 69-70. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, New Jersey: Fleming H. Revell

Co., 1977), p. 289.

. Washington, George. July 13, 1775, in a letter from Jonathan Trumbull to General Washington. Verna M. Hall and Rosalie J. Slater, The Christian History of the American Revolution - Consider and Ponder (San Francisco, CA: Foundation for American Christian Education, 1976), p. 511. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 7.13. Jared Sparks, ed., Correspondence of the American Revolution - being Letters of Eminent Men to George Washington from the time of his Taking Command of the Army to the End of his Presidency, 4 vols. (Boston: Little, Brown and Co., 1853), Vol. I, pp. 2-3. Douglas Southall Freeman, George Washington, 6 vols. (NY: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1948-1954), Vol. III, pp. 503-504.

. Washington, George. July 20, 1775, in the general orders to the troops under his command. Orderly Book. Elizabeth Bryant Johnston, George Washington, Day by Day (1894), p. 107. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN:

William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 69-70. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 289. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 116.

. Washington, George. Inscription on Washington's Cruisers. U. S. Marine Corps, How to Respect & Display Our Flag (Washington: U. S. Government Printing Office, 1977), pp. 11, 16.

. Washington, George. September 6, 1775, in writing to the inhabitants of the island of Bermuda from his camp at Cambridge, 3 miles from Boston. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), pp. 45-46.

John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D. C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

. Washington, George. September 8, 1775, in a circular sent to the major and brigadier-generals, from the camp at Cambridge. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 80. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 70.

. Washington, George. September 14, 1775, in an order to Colonel Benedict Arnold prior to his campaign against Quebec. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 86. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 71. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 172-173. Saul Padover, ed., The Washington

Papers (New York: Harper and Bros., 1955), pp. 410-411. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p. 50. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 122. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN:

Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 108-109.

. Washington, George. September 14, 1775, in a personal letter to Colonel Benedict Arnold. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 91.

William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p.

71. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 122-123.

. Washington, George. September 1775, in a handbill written from the headquarters at Cambridge to be distributed in Canada prior to the arrival of Colonel Benedict Arnold. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 92. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p.

72. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250,

1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), pp. 46-48. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

. Washington, George. October 2, 1775, orders issued. Elizabeth Bryant Johnston, George Washington, Day by Day (1894), p. 146. William J. Johnson, George Washington

- The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 72.

. Washington, George. Sunday, November 26, 1775, from his headquarters at Cambridge to the superintendent of his plantation at Mount Vernon, Lund Washington. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 171. William J.

Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam

Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI:

Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 73.

. Washington, George. December 31, 1775, in a prayer offered by Colonel William Palfrey in Christ Church, Cambridge, Massachusetts, at Martha Washington's request, as recorded in the diary of Dorothy Dudley, January 1, 1776. Dorothy Dudley, The Cambridge of 1776, with the Diary of Dorothy Dudley (1876), p. 49. William J.

Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 74-75. Sid Moody, "Seventy Six" (The Associated Press, 1975), p. 84.

. Washington, George. January 14, 1776, in a letter to Joseph Reed. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837, NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 240. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 60. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944). William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 76.

. Washington, George. February 26, 1776, in the record of his issued orders entitled Orderly Book. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 296. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 76-77.

. Washington, George. March 6, 1776, from the headquarters at Cambridge, in his command for a Day of Prayer, Fasting, and Humiliation. Dorothy Dudley, The Cambridge of 1776, with the diary of Dorothy Dudley, (1876), p. 59. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 77. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Baker Book House, 1987), p. 139.

. Washington, George. March 17, 1776, in reply to an address from the General Assembly of Massachusetts regarding the recent evacuation of Boston. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837, NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. IX, p. 337. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 77-78.

. Washington, George. April 9, 1776, account of the Thanksgiving Service requested by General Washington following the withdrawal of the British troops from Boston. Pennsylvania Evening Post, Philadelphia, April 9, 1776. James Thacher, M.D.,

Military

Journal during the American Revolutionary War, from 1775-1783 (1823), request of service noted in journal on March 23, 1776, p. 51. Elizabeth Byrant Johnston, George Washington, Day by Day (1894), p. 41. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 78-79.

. Washington, George. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837, NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol.

III, p. 341. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 80.

. Washington, George. May 15, 1776, in his issued orders. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 392. William J. Johnson, George Washington

- The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 81.

. Washington, George. May 31, 1776, in a letter written from Philadelphia to John Augustine Washington. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 404. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William editor), p. 70. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp.

81-82. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250,

1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick,

. Washington, George. July 2, 1776, from his Head Quarters in New York the General Orders were issued to his troops. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837, NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 449. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston:

Little, Brown and Company, 1863, 1980), p. 379. William J. Johnson, George Washington

- The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 82. William Barclay Allen, ed., George

Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 71. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944). Henry Steele Commager and Richard B. Morris, ed., Spirit of '76

American Quotations.txt

(New York: The Bobbs - Merrill Co., Inc., 1958), p. 32. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart'N Home, Inc., 1991), 11.18.

. Washington, George. July 9, 1776; previously $20.00 a month, approved July 1775. American Army Chaplaincy - A Brief History (prepared in the Office of the Chief of Chaplains: 1946), p. 6. Anson Phelps Stokes and Leo Pfeffer, Church and State in the United States (NY: Harper and Row, Publishers, 1950, revised one-volume edition, 1964), p. 35. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. V, pp. 244-245. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 3.

. Washington, George. July 9, 1776, order issued to the army in response to the reading of the Declaration of Independence by the Continental Congress. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. III, p. 456. Writings of George Washington, (Sparks ed.), Vol. XII, p. 401, citing Orderly Book; also orders of August 3, 1776, in ibid., IV, 28 n. Abraham Lincoln quoted this order of Washington's on November 15, 1862, to have his troops maintain regular sabbath observances.

Abraham Lincoln, Letters and Addresses and Abraham Lincoln (NY: Unit Book Publishing Co., 1907), p. 261. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 83. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. V, p. 245. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 73.

John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944). John F. Schroeder, ed., Maxims of Washington (Mt. Vernon: Mt. Vernon Ladies' Association, 1942), p. 299. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 236. Anson Phelps Stokes and Leo Pfeffer, Church and State in the United States (NY: Harper and Row, Publishers, 1950, revised one-volume edition, 1964), p. 35. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p. 50. Paul F. Boller, Jr., George Washington and Religion (Dallas: Southern Methodist University Press, 1963), p. 69. Frank Donovan, Mr. Jefferson's Declaration (New York: Dodd Mead & Co., 1968), p. 192. A. James Reichley, Religion in American Public Life (Washington, D.C.: The Brookings Institute, 1985), p. 99. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 120-121. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 108.

. Washington, George. August 3, 1776, in orders issued to the Continental Army. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. IV, p. 26. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 83-84. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p. 51.

American Quotations.txt

. Washington, George. August 8, 1776, in a communication to the Officers and Soldiers of the Pennsylvania Association. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 238-239. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 74. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

. Washington, George. August 1776, Governor Jonathan Trumbull sent out the appeal in response to General Washington's desperate for reinforcements. Isaac W. Stuart, Life. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, Oregon: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 467. George Bancroft, Bancroft's History of the United States vols. I-X (Boston: Charles C. Little & James Brown, 3rd edition, 1838), Vol. IX, p. 79. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 312.

. Washington, George. August 27, 1776. John Fiske, The American Revolution, 2 vols. (Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1898), Vol. I, p. 212. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 41. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), pp. 312-316.

. Washington, George. August 27, 1776. John Fiske, The American Revolution, 2 vols. (Boston and New York: Houghton, Mifflin & Co., 1898), Vol. I, p. 212. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 41. George F. Scheer & Hugh F. Rankin, Rebels and Redcoats (New York: The World Publishing Co., 1957), p. 171. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 315.

. Stiles, Ezra. May 8, 1783, as president of Yale College, in an Election Address before the Governor and General Assembly of Connecticut, entitled "The United States Elevated to Glory and Honor." Robert Flood, The Rebirth of America (Philadelphia: Arthur S. DeMoss Foundation, 1986), p. 45.

. Washington, George. February 14, 1777, from Morristown to an unidentified correspondent. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 86. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

American Quotations.txt

. Washington, George. May 26, 1777, in a circular to the brigadier-generals. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. IV, p. 436. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 98.

. Washington, George. July 4, 1777, from Morristown, New Jersey, in a message to General Armstrong. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. IV, p.

482. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J.

Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p.

99.

. Washington, George. October 7, 1777, in his issued orders. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. V, p. 88. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 99-100.

. Washington, George. October 18, 1777, in communicating to his brother, John Augustine Washington, the capitulation of British General Burgoyne's army at Saratoga. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. V, p. 103. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p.

100.

. Washington, George. Sunday, October 19, 1777, in a letter to Major-General Putnam. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. V, p. 105. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p.

100.

. Washington, George. October 27, 1777, in a letter to Landon Carter of Sabine Hall, Richmond, Virginia. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol.

V, p. 120. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 101.

. Washington, George. December 17, 1777, in a general order to his troops. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. V, p. 524. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 101. Saxe Commins, ed.,

Stationer's

The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 301.

. Washington, George. In a letter written from Valley Forge to John Banister, dated April 21, 1778. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 103. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944). Douglas S. Freeman, George Washington - A Biography vols. I-VII (New York: Charles Scribner's Sons, 1948), Vol. IV, p. 621. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 322. (The following was reprinted by Jim and Charlene Ammerman in the monthly newsletter of the Chaplaincy of Full Gospel Churches, 2715 Whitewood Drive, Dallas, TX 75233-2713, www.chaplaincyfullgospel.org,

Vol. 17, No. 8, August 2000)

George Washington's Vision

For many years we have been familiar with reprints of George Washington's vision, the earliest being published in 1859 A.D. The vision itself is self-explanatory and, as it will be seen, rests upon the testimony of two individuals - Anthony Sherman and Wesley Bradshaw.

It will be noticed that Anthony Sherman was the only living person at that time to whom George Washington had told the vision. Calculations shows that Sherman was then about eighteen years old and that he lived to attain the age of 99 years to tell about it just before the opening of the Great Rebellion, the second peril mentioned by the angel.

The Great Rebellion was, of course, the Civil War between the States of the Union, which was shown to be the most serious peril because the conflict that split the Republic asunder was brother pitted against brother.

This reprint of George Washington's vision is taken from Professor C.A.L. Totten's Our Race Leaflet for September 1898. Professor Totten emphasized in his commentary:

"Notice also that the description would seem to show that the third peril was the greatest, while the interpretation declares the second to be. What means this but that, by united action and a work of righteousness, the nation may escape the third peril, or lessen its force."

Following is the vision itself, related in a statement by Wesley Bradshaw, as it was told to him by Anthony Sherman:

The last time I ever saw Anthony Sherman was on the fourth of July 1859, in Independence Square. He was then ninety-nine years old, and becoming very feeble. But although so old, his dimming eyes rekindled as he gazed upon Independence Hall, which he had come to look upon once more before he was gathered home.

"Let us go into the Hall" he said, "I want to tell you an incident in Washington's life - one which no one knows of except myself; and, if you live, you will before long see it verified. Mark the predictions you will see it verified.

"From the opening of the Revolution, we experienced all phases of fortune, now good and now ill, one time victorious, and another conquered. The darkest period we had, I think, was when Washington, after several reverses, retreated to Valley Forge, where he resolved to pass the winter of '77. Ah! I have often seen the tears coursing down our dear old Commander's careworn cheeks as he would be conversing with a confidential officer about the condition of his poor soldiers.

"You have doubtless heard the story of Washington going to the thicket to pray. Well, it was not only true, but he used often to pray in secret for aid and comfort from God, the interposition of whose Divine Providence brought us safely through those dark days of tribulation.

"One day - I remember it well - the chilly winds whistled through the leafless trees, although the sky was cloudless and the sun shone brightly. He remained in his quarters nearly all the afternoon alone. When he came out, I noticed that his face was a shade paler than usual, and there seemed to be something on his mind of more than ordinary importance.

"Returning just after dusk, he dispatched an orderly to the quarters of the officer I mention, who was presently in attendance. After a preliminary conversation of about half hour, Washington, gazing upon his companion with that strange look of dignity which he alone could command, said to the latter:

"I do not know whether it is owing to the anxiety of my mind, or what, but this afternoon, as I was sitting at this very table engaged in preparing a dispatch, something in the apartment seemed to disturb me. Looking up, I beheld, standing opposite to me, a singularly beautiful female. So astonished was I, for I had given strict orders not to be disturbed, that it was some moments before I found language to inquire the cause of her presence. A second, a third, and even a fourth time, did I repeat my question, but received no answers from my mysterious visitor except a slight raising of the eyes.

"By this time I felt strange sensations spreading through me. I would have risen, but the rivet gaze of the being before me rendered volition impossible. I essayed once more to address her, but my tongue had become powerless. Even thought itself suddenly became paralyzed. A new influence, mysterious, potent, irresistible, took possession of me. All I could do was to gaze steadily, vacantly, at my unknown visitor.

"Gradually the surrounding atmosphere seemed as though becoming filled with sensations, and grew luminous. Everything about me seemed to rarefy; the mysterious visitor herself becoming more airy, and yet more distinct to my sight than before. I now began to feel as one dying, or rather to experience the sensations which I have sometimes imagined accompany dissolution. I did not think; I did not reason; I did not move; all were alike impossible. I was only conscious of gazing fixedly, vacantly, at my companion.

"Presently I heard a voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn.' At the same time my visitor extended her arm eastwardly. I now beheld a heavy white vapor at some distance, rising fold upon fold. This gradually dissipated and I looked upon a strange scene. Before me, spread out in one vast plain, lay all the countries of the world: Europe, Asia, Africa and America. I saw, rolling and tossing between Europe and America, the billows of the Atlantic Ocean, and between Asia and America lay the Pacific Ocean.

"'Son of the Republic,' said the same mysterious voice as before, 'look and learn.' At that moment I beheld a dark, shadowy being, like an angel, standing, or rather floating, in mid-air between Europe and America. Dipping water out of the ocean in the hollow of each hand, he sprinkled some upon America with his right hand, while, with his left hand, he cast some on Europe. Immediately a dark cloud raised from these countries, and joined in mid-ocean. For awhile it remained stationary and then moved slowly westward, until it enveloped America in its murky folds. Sharp flashes of lightning gleamed through it at intervals, and I heard the smothered groans and cries of the American people.

"A second time the angel dipped water from the ocean, and sprinkled it as before. The dark cloud was then drawn back to the ocean, in whose heaving billows it sank from view.

"A third time I heard the mysterious voice saying 'Son of the Republic, look and learn.' I cast my eyes upon America and beheld villages and towns and cities springing up, one after another, until the whole land, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, was dotted with them.

"Again I heard the mysterious voice say, 'Son of the Republic, the end of the century cometh, look and learn.' At this the dark, shadowy angel turned his face southward, and from Africa I saw an ill-omened spectre approach our land. It flitted slowly and heavily over every town and city of the latter. The inhabitants presently set themselves in battle array against each other.

"As I continued looking, I saw a bright angel, on whose brow rested a crown of light on which was traced the word "Union," bearing the America flag, which he placed between the divided nation and said, 'Remember ye are brethren.' Instantly the inhabitants, casting from them their weapons, became friends once more, and united around the National Standard.

"And again I heard the mysterious voice say, "Son of the Republic, look and learn.' At this the dark, shadowy angel placed a trumpet to his mouth and blew three distinct blasts; and taking water from the ocean, he sprinkled it upon Europe, Asia and Africa.

"Then my eyes beheld a fearful scene: From each of these countries arose thick, black clouds which were soon joined into one. And throughout this mass there gleamed a dark red light by which I saw hordes of armed men, who moving with the cloud marched by land and sailed by sea to America, which country was enveloped in the volume of the cloud. I dimly saw these vast armies devastate the whole country and burn the villages, towns and cities that I had beheld springing up.

"As my ears listened to the thundering of the cannon, clashing of the swords and shouts and cries of millions in mortal combat, I again heard the mysterious voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn.' When the voice ceased, the dark, shadowy angel placed his trumpet once more to his mouth and blew a long and fearful blast.

"Instantly a light, as of a thousand suns, shone down from above me and pierced and broke into fragments the dark cloud which enveloped America. At the same moment, the angel upon whose head still shone the word 'Union,' and who bore our national flag in one hand and a sword in the other, descended from heaven, attended by legions of bright spirits. These immediately joined the inhabitants of America, who, I perceived, were well-nigh overcome, but who, immediately taking courage again, closed up their broken ranks and renewed the battle.

"Again, amid the fearful noise of the conflict, I heard the mysterious voice saying, 'Son of the Republic, look and learn.' As the voice ceased, the shadowy angel, for the last time, dipped water from the ocean and sprinkled it upon America. Instantly the dark cloud rolled back, together with the armies it had brought, leaving the inhabitants of the land victorious.

"Then once more I beheld villages, towns and cities springing up where they had been before, while the bright angel, planting the azure Standard he had brought into the midst of them, cried with a loud voice: "While the stars remain, and the heavens send down dew upon the earth, so long shall the Republic last.' And taking from his brow the crown on which was blazoned the word 'Union,' he placed it upon the Standard while the people, kneeling down, said, 'Amen.'

"The scene instantly began to fade and dissolve and I at last saw nothing but the rising, curling vapor I at first beheld. This also disappearing, I found myself once more gazing upon my mysterious visitor who, in the same voice I had heard before, said 'Son of the Republic, what you have seen is this interpreted: Three great perils will come upon the Republic. The most fearful is the second, passing which the whole world united shall not prevail against her. Let every child of the Republic learn to live for his God, his land and union.'

"With these words the vision vanished, and I started from my seat and felt that I had seen a vision wherein had been shown me the birth, progress and destiny of the United States."

"Such, my friends," concluded the venerable narrator, "were the words I heard from Washington's own lips, and America will do well to profit by them."

-Wesley Bradshaw

. Washington, George. Winter of 1777, Washington's Prayer at Valley Forge as observed by Isaac Potts, recounted by his wife, Ruth Anna Potts. William Herbert Burk, D. D., The Washington Window in the Washington Memorial Chapel of Valley Forge,

p. 25. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp.

102-107. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 323. J.T. Headly, The Illustrated Life of Washington, pp. 307-308. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), pp. 487-488. Mason Locke Weems, The Life of George Washington; with Curious Anecdotes, Equally Honourable to Himself, and Exemplary to His Young Countrymen (Cambridge, Massachusetts: Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, 1800, 1809 edition; reprinted 1962), pp. 181-182: "In the winter of '77, while

Washington, with the American army lay encamped at Valley Forge, a certain good old friend, of the respectable family and name of Potts, if I mistake not, had occasion to pass through the woods near headquarters. Treading his way along the venerable grove, suddenly he heard the sound of a human voice, which as he advanced increased on his ear, and at length became like the voice of one speaking much in earnest. As he approached the spot with a cautious step, whom should he behold, in a dark natural bower of ancient oak, but the commander in chief of the American armies on his knees at prayer! Motionless with surprise, friend Potts continued on the place till the general, having ended his devotions, arose, and with a countenance of angel serenity, retired to headquarters: friend Potts then went home, and on entering his parlour called out to his wife, 'Sarah, my dear! All's well! all's well! George Washington will yet prevail!' "'What's the matter, Isaac?' replied she; 'thee seems moved.' "'Well, if I seem moved, 'tis no more than what I am. I have this day seen what I never expected. Thee knows that I always thought the sword and the gospel utterly inconsistent; and that no man could be a soldier and a Christian at the same time. But George Washington has this day convinced me of my mistake.' "He then related what he had seen, and concluded with this prophetic remark - 'If George Washington be not a man of God, I am greatly deceived - and still more shall I be deceived if God does not, through him, work out a great salvation for America.'" Rev. E.C. McGuire (son-in-law of Mr. Robert Lewis, the nephew and private secretary of Washington), The Religious Opinions and Character of Washington (1836), pp. 158-159: records that in 1832, Devault Beaver, who was 80 years old, claimed to have received the account directly from Isaac Potts; Dr. James Ross Snowden, whose father knew Isaac Potts, gave a similar account; Benson J. Lossing also gave a confirming account; General Knox, Washington's associate at Valley Forge, mentioned that Washington frequently used a grove in the area for prayer. Theodore Wm. John Wylie, Washington - A Christian (1862), pp. 28-29. Benjamin J. Lossing, The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution, 2 vols. (1860), Vol. II, p. 130. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House,

A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), pp. 113-114. Peter Marshall & David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 3.1. . Washington, George. Theodore G. Tappert and John W. Doberstern, trans. and ed., Henry Melchior Muhlenberg, The Notebook of a Colonial Clergyman (Philadelphia: Fortress Press, 1975), p. 195. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 323.

. Washington, George. 1775, in a sermon by John Peter Muhlenberg on Ecclésiastes 3:1. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. 11, p. 5324. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, Inc., 1991), 6.25.

. Washington, George. John Joseph Stouder, Ordeal at Valley Forge (Philadelphia: University of Pennsylvania, 1963), p. 146. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 325.

American Quotations.txt

. Washington, George. Sunday, March 1, 1778, in his orders issued from the Headquarters at Valley Forge. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 96. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

. Washington, George. March 10, 1778. The Writings of George Washington - Bicentennial Edition (March 1 through May 31, 1778, 11: 83-84, published by the U.S. Government Printing Office, 1934. Howard Phillips, The Howard Phillips Issues and Strategy Bulletin (March 31, 1993, Vienna, Virginia 22182). Gary DeMar, The Biblical Worldview (Atlanta, GA: An American Vision Publication - American Vision, Inc., May 1993), Vol. 9, No. 5, p. 8. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. XI, p. 83-84.

. Washington, George. April 12, 1778, in orders issued from his headquarters at Valley Forge. Henry Whiting, Revolutionary Orders of General Washington, selected from the MSS. of John Whiting (1844), p. 58. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 111-112.

. Washington, George. May 2, 1778, orders issued to his troops at Valley Forge. George Washington, General Orders (Mount Vernon, VA: Archives of Mount Vernon). Henry Whiting, Revolutionary Orders of General Washington, selected from MSS. of John Whiting (1844), p. 74. Benson J. Lossing, The Pictorial Field-Book of the Revolution (1886), Vol. II, p. 140. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. XI, p. 343. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 112. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p. 51. Peter Marshall & David Manuel, The Glory of America (Bloomington, MN: Garborg's Heart 'N Home, 1991), 9.5. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 8.

. Washington, George. May 5, 1778, orders issued from the headquarters at Valley Forge upon receiving intelligence that France had joined the War on the side of the Colonies. Henry Whiting, Revolutionary Orders of General Washington, selected from MSS. of John Whiting (1844), p. 77. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 112-113. Charles E. Kistler, This Nation Under God (Boston: Richard G. Badger, The Gorham Press, 1924), pp. 74-75. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 326.

. Washington, George. May 30, 1778, from his headquarters at Valley Forge, to Landon Carter. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. V, p. 388.

American Quotations.txt

William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 113-114.

. Washington, George. July 4, 1778, written from Brunswick, New Jersey, to his brother John Augustine Washington. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. V, p. 432. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 119. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from

The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 105. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

. Washington, George. August 20, 1778, in a letter written from White Plains, New York, to Brigadier-General Thomas Nelson of Virginia. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. VI, p. 36. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 119-120. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. XII, p. 343. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 332. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p.

54. Paul F. Boller, Jr., George Washington and Religion (Dallas: Southern Methodist University, 1963), p. 106. Edmund Fuller, and David E. Green, God in the White House

- The Faiths of American Presidents (NY: Crown Publishers, Inc., 1968), p. 14. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and The Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Baker Book House, 1987), p. 137. "Our Christian Heritage," Letter from Plymouth Rock (Marlborough, NH: The Plymouth Rock Foundation), p. 4. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p.

332. George Otis, The Solution to the Crisis in America, Revised and Enlarged Edition

(Van Nuys, CA.: Fleming H. Revell Company; Bible Voice, Inc., 1970, 1972, foreword by Pat Boone), p. 46.

. Washington, George. October 20, 1778. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. VII, p. 118-119.

. Washington, George. May 12, 1779, from his "Address to Delaware Chiefs Indian Chiefs," John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington from the Original Manuscript Sources: 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, DC: Bureau of National Literature and Art, 1907), 1:64. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. XV, p.

55. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), pp. 132-133. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 356. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p. 51. Paul F. Boller, Jr., George Washington and Religion (Dallas: Southern Methodist University Press, 1963), p. 68. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 120. Gary DeMar, The Biblical Worldview (Atlanta, GA: An American Vision Publication - American Vision, Inc., 1992), Vol. 8, No. 12, p. 8. Gary DeMar, America's Christian History: The Untold Story (Atlanta, GA: American Vision Publishers, Inc., 1993), p. 76. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va. 22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 8.

. Washington, George. June 1779, near his headquarters on the Hudson River, in a private prayer. E.C. McGuire, The Religious Opinions and Character of Washington (1836), pp. 162-167. (E.C. McGuire was the son-in-law of Mr. Robert Lewis, Washington's nephew and private secretary.) William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 126-127. Stephen Abbott Northrop, D.D., A Cloud of Witnesses (Portland, OR: American Heritage Ministries, 1987; Mantle Ministries, 228 Still Ridge, Bulverde, Texas), p. 484.

. Washington, George. April 6, 1780, in orders concerning the actions of Benedict Arnold. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 386-387.

. Washington, George. June 1780. W.P. Breed, Presbyterians and the Revolution (Philadelphia: Presbyterian Board of Publication, 1876), pp. 80-82. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p. 291. Milton Hadley, Great Americans and Their Noble Deeds (San Antonio, TX: Mantle Ministries, 1992, originally published 1901).

. Washington, George. September 26, 1780, Tuesday, in his General Orders from his headquarters in Orangetown. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. XX, pp. 94-95. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 410. Richard Wheeler, Voices of 1776 (Greenwich: Fawcett Premier Book, 1972), p. 382. Peter Marshall and David Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), pp. 328-329.

. Washington, George. January 5, 1781, from the Head Quarters at New Windsor, in a circular letter to the New England States. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), pp. 180-181. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

. Washington, George. February 13, 1781, in a report from British Commander-in-Chief Henry Clinton. William Hosmer, Remember our Bicentennial - 1781 (Foundation for Christian Self-Government Newsletter - June 1981), p. 5. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR: Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), p. 166.

. Washington, George. March 9, 1781, from Newport, Rhode Island, to William Gordon. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. VII, p. 449. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p.

133.

. Washington, George. March 26, 1781, in a letter to Major-General Armstrong. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. VII, p. 462.

. Washington, George. October 20, 1781, in an order to his troops after the capitulation of Yorktown. Horace W. Smith, Orderly Book of the Siege of Yorktown (1865), p. 47. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 134. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis,

Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 198. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944). Peter Marshall and David

Manuel, The Light and the Glory (Old Tappan, NJ: Fleming H. Revell Company, 1977), p.

332.

. Washington, George. November 5, 1781, George Washington's step-son and aide-de-camp at the siege of Yorktown, died of a violent case of campfever at the home of his uncle Colonel Bassett in Eltham, Virginia. His two small children, Eleanor Parke "Nellie" Custis and George Washington Parke Custis, were adopted by George and Martha Washington as their own. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 134-135. The World Book Encyclopedia, 18 vols. (Chicago, IL: Field Enterprises, Inc., 1957; W.F. Quarrie and Company, 8 vols., 1917; World Book, Inc., 22 vols., 1989), Vol. III, p. 1834; Vol. X, p. 4353; Vol. XVIII, p. 8635.

. Washington, George. November 15, 1781, in a letter written from Mount Vernon to the President of the Continental Congress, Thomas McKean. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. 23, p. 343. William Hosmer, Remember our Bicentennial - 1781 (Foundation for Christian Self-Government Newsletter - June 1981), p. 5. Marshall Foster and Mary-Elaine Swanson, The American Covenant - The Untold Story (Roseburg, OR:

American Quotations.txt

Foundation for Christian Self-Government, 1981; Thousand Oaks, CA: The Mayflower Institute, 1983, 1992), pp. 150, 167. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837, NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), ed., Vol. VIII, p. 207. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 133-136.

. Washington, George. January 31, 1782, from Philadelphia, in a "Circular to the States," addressed to Meshech Weare, President of New Hampshire. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. VIII, p. 234. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February

23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 137-138.

. Washington, George. May 16, 1782, in orders issued from his headquarters at Newburgh, New York. Henry Whiting, Revolutionary Orders of General Washington, selected from MSS. of John Whiting (1844), pp. 205-206. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 136-137.

. Washington, George. February 6, 1783, writing from Newburgh to Major General Nathanael Greene. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 208. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

. Washington, George. Saturday, February 15, 1783, in orders issued from his encampment at Newburg, New York, taken from the "Orderly Book." William S. Baker, Washington after the Revolution 1784-1799 (1897), p. 288. William J. Johnson, George

Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February

23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 138.

. Washington, George. March 22, 1783, from Newburg, New York, as recorded in the Orderly Book. Elizabeth Bryant Johnston, George Washington - Day by Day (1894), p. 44. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 138-139.

. Washington, George. March 31, 1783, to Major General Nathanael Greene. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 229.

John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

. Washington, George. April 18, 1783, in orders to the Chaplains for a day public

American Quotations.txt

thanksgiving to commemorate the end of the war. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. VIII, p. 567. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The

Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 139. William Barclay Allen, ed., George

Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 236. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944). Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 464-465.

. Washington, George. May 2, 1783 in a letter to Alexander Hamilton. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 472.

. Washington, George. June 11, 1783, in a letter to Reverend John Rodgers. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p. 56.

. Washington, George. June 14, 1783, in a "Circular Letter Addressed to the Governors of all the States on Disbanding the Army." Old South Leaflets, No. 51. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837, NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. VIII, pp. 440, 444, 452.

Selim Peabody, ed., American Patriotism: Speeches, Letters, and Other Papers Which Illustrate the Foundation, the Development, the Preservation of the United States of America (NY: American Book Exchange, 1880), p. 142. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February

23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 139-141. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944), Vol. 26, p. 483-496. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), pp. 240, 241, 249. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), p. 493. Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the American Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p. 55. The Annals of America, 20 vols. (Chicago, IL: Encyclopedia Britannica, 1968), Vol. 2, p. 60. D.P. Diffine, Ph.D., One Nation Under God - How Close a Separation? (Searcy, Arkansas: Harding University, Belden Center for Private Enterprise Education, 6th edition, 1992), p. 8. Stephen McDowell and Mark Beliles, "The Providential Perspective" (Charlottesville, VA: The Providence Foundation, P.O. Box 6759, Charlottesville, Va.

22906, January 1994), Vol. 9, No. 1, p. 4.

. Washington, George. June 8, 1783, original source of prayer is the concluding paragraph in Washington's farewell circular letter sent to the governors of the thirteen states from his headquarters in Newburgh, New York. This version is used at

Pohick Church, Fairfax County, Virginia, where Washington was a vestryman from 1762-1784. It also appears on a plaque in St. Paul's Chapel in New York City. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. xi-xii. John F. Schroeder, ed., Maxims of Washington (Mt. Vernon: Mt. Vernon Ladies' Association, 1942), p. 299. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), pp. 108-109. George Otis, The Solution to the Crisis in America, Revised and Enlarged Edition (Van Nuys, CA.: Fleming H. Revell Company; Bible Voice, Inc., 1970, 1972, foreword by Pat Boone), p.

55. "STILL STANDING-A chapel spared stirs talk of miracle," By David Abel, Globe Staff, 9/26/2001, NEW YORK - All around it, once-mighty buildings are either in a heap of rubble, charred black and windowless, or still smoldering, with smoke rising through giant gashes scarring their facades and wrecking their foundations. Yet somehow St. Paul's Chapel, Manhattan's oldest public building and the house of worship George Washington visited in 1789 after his inauguration at nearby Federal Hall, is intact. A block away from the World Trade Center, the small, ornate chapel doesn't even have a broken window. When the Rev. Lyndon F. Harris began traversing the maze of checkpoints set up after the Sept. 11 attack, he was certain his 235-year-old chapel would be in ruins. "My heart was beating so loudly, you could hear it in my chest," said Harris, who was nearly crushed by falling rubble when he rushed to help in the rescue operation after the first jet hit the Twin Towers. He imagined the destruction of some of the earliest relics of American history that have remained in St. Paul's over the years - the oldest known oil painting depicting the Great Seal of the United States; the 200-year-old, cut-glass chandeliers from Waterford, Ireland; and an array of monuments and tombstones depicting and commemorating some of the country's earliest heroes. Early in the morning on Sept. 12, police escorted him to the chapel, and Harris still can't believe his eyes. "It's hard to say this isn't a miracle, the fruit of some divine intervention," he said. "I think it stands as a beacon of hope and a metaphor of good standing in the face of evil." Other houses of worship were not so lucky. A few blocks away, among the mounds of twisted steel and pulverized concrete, is what remains of St. Nicholas Greek Orthodox Church. What happened to St. Nicholas has left many of St. Paul's nearly 200 congregants uneasy. "I don't know why it was us and not them," said Nancy Nind, 55, a parishioner at St.

Paul's for the past three decades. "I think our fate means we have a mission to do something." Part of that mission, she said, is to help out as much as possible with the rescue operation. In addition to serving as a depot for air filters, medical supplies, and bottled water, the chapel's pews over the past two weeks have been beds for droves of police officers, firefighters, and soldiers taking a break from shifts often lasting as long as 20 hours. Hundreds of rescue workers have been fed in the chapel. "It's amazing how peaceful this place can be, given how much is going on around it," said David Capellini, a police officer who had walked by St. Paul's for years without entering. "This church will always mean something to me, especially now that I know its history." He took solace in a prayer by Washington, etched in bronze a few feet away. It begins: "Almighty God we make our earnest prayer that thou wilt keep the United States in thy holy protection." In a speech before thousands of New Yorkers at a prayer service on Sunday at Yankee Stadium, Mayor Rudolph Giuliani described the unblemished brownstones and Ionic pillars of St. Paul's as the "miracle of September 11." "The presence of that chapel, standing defiant and serene amid the ruins, sends an eloquent message about the strength and resilience of the people of New York City and the people of America," he said. That's also how Roy Henry, the church's 68-year-old head of security, felt when he first returned to St. Paul's after running for his life from the chapel during the attack. Chunks of steel, a blizzard of paper, and assorted rubble were scattered all around the chapel. Ash several inches thick coated the Georgian masonry and drifted through an open window, dusting much of the sanctuary inside. But everything was intact. "Just look around," Henry said. "If this isn't a miracle, I don't know what is." (David Abel can be reached by e-mail at dabel@globe.com. This story ran on page A12 of the Boston Globe on 9/26/2001. Copyright 2000 Globe Newspaper Company.

. Washington, George. July 8, 1783, from his headquarters at Newburgh to the Reverend William Gordon. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), p. 258. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944).

. Washington, George. August 26, 1783, in addressing Congress in session at Princeton, New Jersey. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols.

(Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. VIII, p. 475. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William

J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 141-142.

. Washington, George. November 27, 1783, in a letter to the ministers, elders, deacons, and members of the Reformed German Congregation of New York. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), pp. 270-271. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944). Norman Cousins, In God We Trust - The Religious Beliefs and Ideas of the Founding Fathers (NY: Harper & Brothers, 1958), p. 58.

. Washington, George. Comments near the close of his military career. E. C. M'guire, The Religious Opinions and Character of Washington (1836), p. 125. (E. C. M'Guire was the son-in-law of Mr. Robert Lewis, Washington's nephew and private secretary.) William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 142-143.

. Washington, George. November 2, 1783, in his Farewell Orders to the Armies of the United States issued from Rock Hill, near Princeton. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837; NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. VIII, pp. 492-496. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February

23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 143-144. William Barclay

Allen, ed., George Washington - A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty

Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), pp. 266-271. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39 vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944). Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), complete work, pp. 499-502. Charles Wallis, ed., Our American Heritage (NY: Harper & Row, Publishers, Inc., 1970), p. 130.

. Washington, George. December 23, 1783, in a letter to Baron Steuben written from the Maryland Capitol at Annapolis. William Herbert Burk, D.D., The Washington Window in the Washington Memorial Chapel of Valley Forge, p. 27. John F. Schroeder, ed., Maxims of Washington (Mt. Vernon: Mt. Vernon Ladies' Association, 1942), pp. 280-281.

Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 105. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington

12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837, NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. VII, p. 504-505. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian (St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), p. 145. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 117. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), complete work, pp. 503-504.

. Washington, George. December 23, 1783, from the Maryland Capitol at Annapolis, in an address to Congress regarding the official resignation of his military commission. Jared Sparks, ed., The Writings of George Washington 12 vols. (Boston: American Stationer's Company, 1837, NY: F. Andrew's, 1834-1847), Vol. VIII, p. 504-505. William Herbert Burk, D.D., The Washington Window in the Washington Memorial Chapel of Valley Forge, p. 27. William J. Johnson, George Washington - The Christian

(St. Paul, MN: William J. Johnson, Merriam Park, February 23, 1919; Nashville, TN: Abingdon Press, 1919; reprinted Milford, MI: Mott Media, 1976; reprinted Arlington Heights, IL: Christian Liberty Press, 502 West Euclid Avenue, Arlington Heights, Illinois, 60004, 1992), pp. 144-145. William Barclay Allen, ed., George Washington -

A Collection (Indianapolis: Liberty Classics, Liberty Fund, Inc., 7440 N. Shadeland, Indianapolis, Indiana 46250, 1988; based almost entirely on materials reproduced from vols. (Washington, D.C.: United States Government Printing Office, 1931-1944). John F. Schroeder, ed., Maxims of Washington (Mt. Vernon: Mt. Vernon Ladies' Association, 1942), pp. 280-281. Saxe Commins, ed., The Basic Writings of George Washington (NY: Random House, 1948), complete work, pp. 503-504. Tim LaHaye, Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Brentwood, TN: Wolgemuth & Hyatt, Publishers, Inc., 1987), p. 105. John Eidsmoe, Christianity and the Constitution - The Faith of Our Founding Fathers (Grand Rapids, MI: Baker Book House, A Mott Media Book, 1987, 6th printing 1993), p. 117.

The Writings of George Washington from the original manuscript sources, 1745-1799/John Clement Fitzpatrick, editor), pp. 272-273. John Clement Fitzpatrick, ed., The Writings of George Washington, from the Original Manuscript Sources 1749-1799, 39

. Washington, George. 1783, in a toast given by Benjamin Franklin at a dinner for foreign ambassadors in Versailles, France. John Bartlett, Bartlett's Familiar Quotations (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1855, 1980), p. 348.

